Q. The original list is the one we want. They are all here but one, and that is the barbed-wire case?—A. No, the Roberts torpedo case.

Q. Was not that the one where they desired the Government to intervene in a suit pending between the parties?—A. I cannot say. My knowledge of the case is only what I find from looking at the papers, and my impression is that there is but one letter actually upon the records of the Department. We now have in the files a number of letters and papers which were returned there.

Q. Won't you show me the files in the torpedo case?—A. That is not there, because it was one of the ten cases where suits went on. It is not one where it was refused. I can produce all those papers here when I produce the others.

Q. Can you give me a paper to show on what ground it was based?—A. I do not know. I could not answer that question now without examining the records whether it simply states "after consultation with the Secretary of the Interior or Commissioner of Patents you are authorized," &c.

Q. Well, I would like all the papers in that torpedo case?—A. There are a mass of papers in that case returned there by General Walker, and I think General Butler.

Q. I see you produce certified copies here. Are they letters of the Attorney-General?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And have you produced a copy of the letter of the Attorney-General in all other cases where the application was granted?—A. No, sir; those are the letters in the cases in which the application was refused.

Q. You haven't those in?—A. There had been no request for the papers to be furnished in the cases where the application had been granted; only those in which it had been refused.

Q. You have not papers here to show on what ground the application was based and on what ground it was granted?—A. No, sir; I have none of the papers here concerning granted applications; only those concerning refused applications.

Q. I do not know that my request covered the others. Have you the original papers in the cases in which it was granted?—A. At the Department we have.

Q. Well, I would thank you to bring me the original papers in all of them.

The WITNESS. In each of the cases?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes, sir. Be sure and bring all the papers in the torpedo case.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You have stated all the cases were referred but one—the torpedo case?—A. I think all but one.

Q. Was the barbed-wire case referred?—A. I do not remember. By running down that list I could tell. All these were cases before my coming into the office, and I cannot answer from memory.

Q. Could you have a better list made than this, giving all the facts?—A. Oh, yes. That was a memorandum gotten up giving the title of the cases.

The CHAIRMAN. That has been mislaid. Probably some member of the committee has it.

The WITNESS. The original list appears in print, I think.

The CHAIRMAN. I was not aware of that.

The WITNESS. I think it does.

The CHAIRMAN. I offered it a few days ago, but upon suggestion it was withheld until we could have a complete list. [To the committee.] Gentlemen, I have a letter here to Mr. Ranney from Judge Lowell, dated on the 28th of April, which he desired to have read to the committee. [To Mr. Ranney.] Do you desire to have it go into the printed record?

Mr. RANNEY. I have no request to make about it. It was sent to me to hand to the committee. The committee can take such action as it sees fit. It was sent to me.

The CHAIRMAN. I see no objection to it going in.

Mr. RANNEY. The committee can take such action as it thinks proper.

The CHAIRMAN. I will put it in.

The letter is as follows:

3 PEMBERTON SQUARE, BOSTON, April 28, 1886.

DEAR MR. RANNEY: I observe in to-day's dispatch to The Boston Daily Advertiser, that in the investigation before the committee of which you are a member (on telephone matters), it was said that my father, brother, and son have or had shares of stock of the Bell Telephone Co., and that I made a decision on the patent.

I did make a decision 27 June, 1881, which has been approved by other courts. If any person of my name had shares in the co. at that time I was not aware of it. My only brother is now in California, but I have inquired of his son, who, in his absence, has the custody of his books and my father's book.

I find that my father never owned a share of the co.; though, as trustee, having considerable sums to lend, he has lent to solvent persons, taking Bell telephone as collateral.

My brother and his two sons own some shares; how many or when bought I did not inquire, except that none were bought during 1881.

I did not know until to-day that my nephews had any stock, nor until this year (1886) that my brother had any.

It is hardly necessary to tell you that no son of mine ever owned a share of this stock. Such is the fact. It is well known to patent lawyers that my eldest son, who was admitted to the bar two or three years before my retirement, never took a retainer in a patent case, tho' some were offered him.

I may add that my father (who died Nov. 1, 1881) was a business man, and so is my brother, and I am not. For this reason they had no occasion to talk to me about any of their investments, and never did, except in the most casual and incidental way. The Bell Telephone Co. was not exceptional at all in this respect. I do not recollect that I ever exchanged a word with either of them about that company, or anything connected with it, until my brother, in 1886, speaking of the suit by the Gov't vs. the Bell Co., mentioned that he had some shares, which, up to that time, I had neither known nor suspected.

Yours, very truly,

JOHN LOWELL.

Hon. A. A. RANNEY,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

I will ask you kindly to read this letter to the committee, or, as we say at the bar, to state the substance of it.

At this point the committee adjourned until Tuesday next, the 4th proximo, at 12 m.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Tuesday, May 4, 1886.

The committee was called to order at 12.30 p. m.

Hon. LEWIS BEACH was recalled and further examined.

By the CHAIRMAN (Mr. Boyle):

Question. Have you the letters called for at the time of your last examination?—
Answer. I have them with me, and now produce them; I produce the original letter, written by J. W. Rogers under date of January 10, 1884.

Mr. RANNEY. Will you read them in order?

The witness read as follows:

315 FOUR-AND-A-HALF STREET, N. W.,

Washington, D. C., January 10, 1884.

MY DEAR SIR: I hand you herewith my last poem and $10,000 to repay you for reading it.

Yours, &c.,

J. W. ROGERS.

P. S.—Dr. Hassel left last night for N. Y. He is greatly interested in the American Postal.

In response to that letter I sent a letter—

Mr. RANNEY. Before you read that, was there any poem with that letter?

The WITNESS. There was no poem.

Mr. RANNEY. What was there?

The WITNESS. Accompanying the letter and in a different envelope or cover, as I now remember, there was some literature relating to the postal telegraph business.

Mr. RANNEY. A pamphlet?

The WITNESS. A pamphlet, I think it was; and I supposed that the word "poem," in that letter, referred to that literature.

Mr. MILLARD. What is the date?

The WITNESS. This is dated January 10, 1884, and my answer to it is dated January 11, 1884.

Mr. RANNEY. You say there was a pamphlet; was there any stock?

The WITNESS. There was inclosed in this a certificate for 100 shares of the American Postal Telegraph Company.

Mr. RANNEY. That you mentioned the other day. That you understood to be the poem?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; this is my reply:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.,
Washington, D. C., January 11, 1884.

SIR: In my mail of this morning I find a letter from you dated yesterday, covering a certificate for 100 shares of the capital stock of the American Postal Telegraph Company of the par value of $100 each, which certificate is as signed in blank by J. W. Rogers (presumably yourself).

Herewith I return the certificate. I cannot accept anything for which I have not paid, and I most assuredly would not hold stock in any corporation which is seeking legislation of a body of which I am a member.

LEWIS BEACH.

To J. W. ROGERS,
315 Four-and-a-half street N. W., Washington, D. C.

In the margin of this letter I find the following words and initials: "Compared—T. S., L. B., 11th January, 1884, 7 p. m."

That refers to the authentication of the letter, as I stated in my previous testimony. I took the stock and the original letter up to the room of Mr. Spriggs, my colleague, and we compared the letter I sent with this draft, and put our initials at the bottom. I do not know whether my brother Spriggs has any middle initial in his name or not.

Mr. RANNEY. That is of no consequence. You meant those initials as evidence of having authenticated the draft retained as being an exact copy of the letter that was sent?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir. My object was to show that I had inclosed the stock in the letter. Then Mr. Spriggs went with me to the mail box and saw me deposit it in the mail box, and that ended the transaction.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Do you know whether during that Congress there was anything pending before Congress relating to a postal telegraph company, where it was supposed that the Government would establish or buy some telegraph lines?—A. I have no distinct recollection on that subject. I have an indistinct recollection that the question of establishing a postal telegraph, to be under the control of the Government, was being agitated at that time, and that I took considerable interest in it.

Q. Dr. Rogers says that the pamphlet he sent you stated that the Government would make some purchase of telegraph lines.—A. I do not remember anything about that.

Q. Did you keep that pamphlet or return it?—A. I did not keep it; it probably found its way to the tomb of pamphlets.

Q. I believe he testified to having sent it to you as an inclosure. You heard nothing more about it?—A. Nothing more.

Q. Did you know anything about any project to get young Mr. Rogers appointed as electrician of the House?—A. I never knew Dr. Rogers, and never knew anything concerning any application for the appointment of young Rogers or of Dr. Rogers to any position whatever.

Mr. RANNEY. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Does any other member of the committee desire to examine Mr. Beach?

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. A single question: You say in your letter, "I cannot accept anything for which I have not paid, and I most assuredly would not hold stock in any corporation which is seeking legislation of a body of which I am a member." How came you to use such an expression as that?—A. When I opened the letter from Dr. Rogers that was in my mail that morning, and which contained this certificate of stock, I looked upon it as an attempt to influence me in my legislative action—as an attempt to bribe and corrupt, and I made that disposition of it.

I will ask the chairman of the committee whether he desires to retain these letters.

Mr. RANNEY. Give them to the stenographer, so that he may take a copy of them.

The WITNESS (to the stenographer). You can authenticate your copies of them, and then I would like to have the originals returned to me.

The CHAIRMAN. Assistant Secretary Muldrow has been requested to be present; he is present and ready to be examined.

Hon. H. L. MULDROW sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What position under the Federal Government do you hold?—A. I am now the First Assistant Secretary of the Interior Department.

Q. When were you appointed?—A. I was appointed Assistant Secretary March 26, 1885, and First Assistant July 1, 1885, and confirmed January 18, 1886.

Q. Have you any recollection of an application, made by W. Van Benthuyzen to the Department of Justice for the use of the name of the United States in a suit to be brought against the American Bell Telephone Company, having been submitted to the Interior Department by the Attorney-General?—A. I only know what I find of record, from an examination I have made since receiving a subpoena to appear here and testify. I have no personal recollection of it in the world.

Q. Have you the original application with you?—A. I have with me the only paper in the Department pertaining to that subject, and that is a communication from the Attorney-General, dated at the Department of Justice, Washington, July 14, 1885, and addressed to the Secretary of the Interior:

SIR: I have the honor to send you, for your consideration and for an expression of your views thereon, a letter of the 12th instant from Mr. Van Benthuyzen asking the institution of a suit against the Bell telephone patents.

Please return Mr. Van Benthuyzen's letter with your reply.

Very respectfully,

A. H. GARLAND,
Attorney-General.

That is the only paper I found bearing upon the inquiry and which seemed to be desired, from the subpoena that I received, and that was in relation to this communication of Mr. Van Benthuyzen's in relation to bringing a suit. That paper has this indorsement on it:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
July 15, 1885.

Respectfully referred to the Commissioner of Patents for report.

H. L. MULBROW,
Acting Secretary.

There is also this further indorsement:

On request of writer and on assurance that it is in accordance with the views of the Attorney-General this paper is returned to such writer without report.
July 31, 1885.

M. V. MONTGOMERY,
Commissioner of Patents.

There is also a still further indorsement, reading as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, October 23, 1885.

Finding that the law referred to in the within letter to General Garland has not been adopted, and being informed that the bill had been stolen from the Senate after being adopted by the House of Representatives, and being advised by my attorney to pursue another course, consent to withdraw the letter was obtained, and the letter was withdrawn by H. Von Briesen, esq., my attorney.

W. VAN BENTHUYSEN.

I will say that there was one other communication at one time in the possession of the Interior Department, which was the letter referred to in that communication.

Q. The letter from Mr. Van Benthuyzen?—A. Yes, sir. But that letter was returned to the office of the Attorney-General, and I haven't it in my possession now. I see by this receipt, taken from the Department of Justice, that it was returned to that Department:

"Letter from Van Benthuyzen to Attorney-General, dated July 12, 1885, requesting that suit be brought against Bell telephone patents on account of fraud."

That receipt is dated January 21, 1886, and signed by Cecil Clay, who is chief clerk of the Department of Justice, as I understand; I do not know it.

Mr. MILLARD. Will you not read that again?

The WITNESS. I say that the letter referred to in the communication which I have just read was at one time in the Interior Department, but it has been returned to the Department of Justice, as is shown by this receipt of the chief clerk of the Department of Justice, acknowledging the return of certain papers which were forwarded to that Department.

Mr. RANNEY. That is the letter which was published in the first volume of proceedings before the Secretary of the Interior?

The WITNESS. I do not really know about that.

Q. Is that a copy of the letter from Mr. Van Benthuyzen to the Attorney-General?—A. That is the letter from Mr. Van Benthuyzen to the Attorney-General referred to in that receipt.

Q. You have no copy of the letter?—A. I have not; I do not think there is one in the Department; I could not find it.

Q. It was returned by request of the Attorney-General contained in the letter communicating it to your Department?

The WITNESS. The letter of Mr. Van Benthuyzen?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any personal recollection of the receipt of the Van Benthuyzen letter in your Department?—A. None whatever.

Q. Did it come within your knowledge at the time?—A. If I saw it I have no recollection about it at all, and I do not remember making that indorsement on that paper, which I find I did make, referring it to the Commissioner of Patents. Frequently there are several hundred papers that pass under my pen during the day.

Q. Have you any knowledge of the withdrawal of the letter?—A. I have not; I know nothing about that personally.

Q. Have you any knowledge whatever of the letter except as mentioned in this receipt?—A. That is all.

Q. Do you know whether the letter was in your Department at the date of the indorsement on the Attorney-General's letter, that is to say, on the 31st of July, 1885?—A. I do not know whether it was or not. As I tell you, I have no recollection about it; I did not even know that I had made that indorsement on that paper until I examined it the other day, after getting your subpoena, but I find my signature in my handwriting.

— By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. It seems that this receipt of Mr. Clay's is dated January 21, 1886, and appears to be a receipt for the papers and documents which were furnished and used in the hearing before the Interior Department?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That occurred subsequent to the bringing and dismissal of the first Government suit and after the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior in regard to recommending the second suit?—A. Yes, sir; it was all subsequent. I want to say in that connection, however, that that receipt does not embrace all the papers that were returned to the Department of Justice.

Q. When the original application of Mr. Van Benthuyzen came, under the reference which appears in the first paper you have read, were there any other documents accompanying it?—A. I cannot say whether there were or not; I have no recollection about it. As I remarked awhile ago, I do not even remember seeing the paper which I find I did see, and that is the letter of the Attorney-General.

Q. By the letter of the Attorney-General it would seem that he referred to the Secretary of the Interior the application of Mr. Van Benthuyzen.—A. I presume that that accompanied the letter of the Attorney-General, but I do not recollect it.

Q. It would seem to be so from the letter.—A. I infer that from the indorsement I made upon the paper; I am satisfied that it was in that letter.

Q. That was the paper withdrawn. So that this indorsement on Mr. Garland's letter seems not to have been an indorsement on the application of Mr. Van Benthuyzen, but on the letter.—A. I do not recollect, but I take it that the letter of Mr. Van Benthuyzen was probably inclosed in that letter of the Attorney-General's, and the indorsement on the letter of the Attorney-General was intended to refer the whole matter to the Commissioner of Patents.

Q. Do you know what has become of that application of Mr. Van Benthuyzen's?—A. Only by hearsay; I do not know personally. Mr. Montgomery has told me what became of it; but he will be here to testify.

Q. I only wanted to call your attention to that fact. In the printed record of proceedings before the Secretary of the Interior these endorsements, as there set out, purport to have been made on the application of Mr. Van Benthuyzen itself, do they not?—A. I did not understand the question.

The CHAIRMAN. They purport to have been made on the letter of the Attorney-General.

Q. Do you know how it happened that Mr. Van Benthuyzen had an opportunity to make this endorsement, which has been read, on the letter of Mr. Garland?—A. I do not, except from hearsay. Mr. Montgomery knows about that, and will tell you; the only information I have about it was obtained from him.

Q. His endorsement purports to have been made in "N. O.," New Orleans?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he have this letter of the Attorney-General's in New Orleans?—A. I do not know; I am so informed.

Q. He took the letter away, as well as his own application?—A. I am so informed; I do not know; Mr. Montgomery will tell you about that, and the circumstances connected with it.

Q. You had nothing to do with that withdrawal by Mr. Van Benthuyzen?—A. Nothing whatever.

Q. Do you know anything about an application for a Government suit, coming from Rochester, New York, to the Attorney-General, and by the Attorney-General referred to the Interior Department on the 23d of July, 1885?—A. I have no recollection of that now.

Q. Do you remember having acted upon it?—A. I do not remember to have acted upon it, though I may have done so.

Q. Have you looked at the records to see?—A. I have not, in that case.

Q. It is the case of Sargent and Warren, referred by the Attorney-General to the Interior Department, by a letter, a copy of which we have.—A. Since you mentioned the names of the parties I have some recollection of those parties being there for that purpose.

Q. If I remember the names correctly they were Sargent and Warren, of Rochester, New York.—A. I recollect that there were some parties of that name there who were seeking some action of that kind, but precisely what I do not remember, and I do not remember what action was taken.

Mr. RANNEY. I will tell you sufficiently to identify it to you, and I would like to see the papers in your Department in relation to it. It came from Rochester, N. Y., with an application of Mr. Townsend, district attorney, and Mr. Beckley, city attorney of Rochester, relating to a patent issued to Sargent and Warren, jointly, and there was an application for a Government suit to have it vacated because it was obtained by fraud. That application was referred to your office—

The WITNESS. I remember there was a letter.

Mr. RANNEY. Wait until I get through. On July 23, 1885, that application was referred to your Department by the Attorney-General, was acted upon and reported upon by the Commissioner of Patents, and by Mr. Lamar, Secretary of the Interior, on the 30th of July, 1885.

The WITNESS. Now what is the question you ask me?

Mr. RANNEY. I wanted to see what record there was in your office.

The WITNESS. I could not tell you here; I would have to examine and see.

Mr. RANNEY. I am sorry; I supposed you were informed of that. It is my fault, undoubtedly, that you were not. I wanted to know what papers and records there are, and to get copies of them.

The WITNESS. There will be no trouble about getting whatever is there. I do not really know what is there.

Q. After Mr. Van Benthuyzen withdrew those papers did he come to your office?—A. Not to my office.

Q. By "those" I refer now to the Van Benthuyzen application.—A. I think not. I do not remember ever to have seen him in my office at that time.

Q. Did you ever see him there?—A. Yes, sir; I have seen him there several times, but I do not recollect of his being there at that particular time.

Q. When do you recollect his being there first?—A. I saw him there last summer or fall; he came to my office several times.

Q. That is, during the summer of 1885?—A. In the summer or fall, I do not recollect which; it made no special impression upon me, except that I think I have seen him in there.

Q. Do you recollect seeing him in there at any other time, or how many times do you remember his being there?—A. It is very difficult to answer that question, for I don't recollect; I think I have seen him in my office, but how often I do not recollect.

Q. Do you recollect what he was there for?—A. I think he came there once to make an inquiry about what time a decision might be expected in the telephone case.

Q. That is in his case?—A. A case that was before the Secretary. I do not think I ever saw him in my office before the commencement of the telephone investigation in the Interior Department.

Q. I want you to distinguish between the application which he made in July, 1885, which has been referred to the Secretary of the Interior, and the one that was subsequently referred and where there was a long hearing.

The WITNESS. Will you repeat the question, I did not understand you?

Mr. RANNEY. There were two occasions when he was in the Interior Department. One under the first application and one under the second application.

The WITNESS. If I ever saw him in the Interior Department on the first application, I do not remember it. I do not think I saw him at all in the Department on the pendency of the first application.

Q. Do you remember how he came to inquire whether he could get a report in regard to the first reference of the Attorney-General on the first application?—A. No, sir; I say that the time I saw him I recollect was when he wanted to know when the Secretary of the Interior would probably render a decision in the case that was pending before him.

Q. You spoke about the summer; your first impression was that it was in the summer of 1885?—A. Yes; well, I do not recollect; I do not remember to have seen him during that time, if you are inquiring about him now.

Q. Do you remember that you did not?—A. No; I would not be positive one way or the other, but I say if I saw him I do not recollect it.

Q. Did you have anything to do with what occurred in the Interior Department—and by that I mean by the Secretary's office and the Commissioner of Patents as well—on his first application?—A. No, sir; I do not know what occurred. In fact, I never knew anything about that matter until this committee summoned me, and I had looked over these papers and found this endorsement on this paper.

Q. Can you explain how it happened that between the 14th of July and the 28th of July, 1885, no report had been made on Mr. Van Benthuyzen's application?—A. I cannot; I do not know.

Q. Do you know of any reason why action on that application should have been delayed from the 14th of July, 1885, to the 29th of July, 1885, when the application from New York (Rochester), which came in on the 23d of July, was reported on the 30th?—A. I do not know. I only know that that application was made, as shown by that paper, and was referred to the Commissioner of Patents.

Q. Were you aware that they decided in the case which came from New York that no Government suit would be instituted; or rather, that the cases were very rare and exceptional indeed where a Government suit could be instituted, and that they declined to do it in that case, although the ground alleged was fraud purely?—A. I remember that there was a case, but I do not even recollect now what the decision was. I do not recollect the purport of the decision.

Q. Have you any knowledge whether Mr. Van Benthuyzen ascertained, before he withdrew his application from the office of the Secretary of the Interior, that the two Departments, the Secretary of the Interior (embracing Mr. Lamar and the Commissioner of Patents) and the Attorney-General, had decided that they had not authority to institute a Government suit in that Rochester case, where it was purely a question of fraud?

The WITNESS. Do you ask me if I know that they did not?

The CHAIRMAN. My recollection is that there is no evidence that there was such a decision.

Mr. RANNEY. I beg your pardon.

The CHAIRMAN. It was decided that the facts in that case did not warrant the use of the name of the Government.

Mr. RANNEY. I allude to the facts of the case as presenting purely a question of fraud, as appearing on the papers. Will you read my question, Mr. Stenographer? Perhaps it is not intelligible.

The stenographer read as follows:

“Q. Have you any knowledge whether Mr. Van Benthuyzen ascertained, before he withdrew his application from the office of the Secretary of the Interior, that the two Departments, the Secretary of the Interior (embracing Mr. Lamar and the Commissioner of Patents) and the Attorney-General, had decided that they had not authority to institute a Government suit in that Rochester case, where it was purely a question of fraud?”

Mr. RANNEY (to the stenographer). Leave out the last expression “in that Rochester case.”

A. I do not know. If that fact had ever been communicated through Mr. Van Benthuyzen I never heard of it.

Q. That was not a matter within your special province, I suppose?—A. Sometimes matters that have been referred to the Commissioner of Patents come back to me when I happen to be acting as Secretary in the absence of the Secretary, and then I act upon them myself, but when the Secretary is there he acts upon them himself.

Q. You keep copies in your office of letters sent to the Attorney-General, do you not?—A. I presume we do, sir.

Q. Will you be kind enough, when you are looking up the other things to which I have referred, to look at the letter which we have had produced here by the chief clerk of the Department of Justice from your Department, wherein the first date, which was July 30, 1885, had been erased, and August 3 substituted? Look at the recorded letter on the books, and give us a copy of it as it appears on the books.

The WITNESS. In relation to what matter?

Mr. RANNEY. In relation to the Rochester case. The original letter has been produced, purporting to have come from the Interior Department, and it appears that the original date was July 30, 1885, and that that had been erased and August 3 substituted. I would like to see the copy that is on your books, of the original, if you are willing.

The WITNESS. I see no objection whatever to your seeing it.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not mean to intimate that there is anything wrong about it, but as a matter of fixing the date I desire to see what the original letter was and its date. That is all.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. This letter or application from Mr. Van Benthuyzen was received by you on the 14th of July, as I understand it?—A. That is the date of the indorsement on the back of it.

Q. It is indorsed July 14, referred on the 15th, and withdrawn on the 31st of July. Do you know of any action having been taken by the Department during that time?—A. If any was taken I have no knowledge of it.

Q. Your indorsement is for an expression of views of your Department in regard to bringing the suit. Did not the withdrawal of the letter forestall any action of the Department?—A. Will you please repeat your question, Mr. Millard?

Q. Did not the withdrawal of the letter on the 31st of July forestall any action of the Department?—A. I should think so. I think that when the letter was withdrawn the Department considered that that matter was at an end, and that is shown by the indorsement of Mr. Montgomery on the paper.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Is it usual to give up an original letter to the Department to the party himself?—A. No, sir; that is unusual to give up an official letter.

Mr. MILLARD. That is the very question I was going to ask.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Was your attention called to this particular passage of the letter, about returning it?

The WITNESS. Do you mean the letter of Mr. Van Benthuyzen?

Mr. MILLARD. Yes; the letter from the Attorney-General.

A. As I told you a while ago, I have no recollection of what is contained in the letter of Mr. Van Benthuyzen.

Q. In the letter is contained this passage: "Please return Mr. Van Benthuyzen's letter with your reply."

The WITNESS. Reply to the Attorney-General?

Mr. MILLARD. Yes.

A. I do not know whether we replied to the Attorney-General or not; I do not think we did. I did not look especially for that, but in looking over the papers I found no reply to the Attorney-General. I think it is likely we did not, because we were waiting to hear from the Commissioner of Patents to get his report before replying to the Attorney-General, and it seems that the paper was withdrawn and was afterwards brought back in some way, as shown by the indorsement of Mr. Van Benthuyzen.

Q. Do you know why there should have been this delay from the 14th to the 31st of July?

The WITNESS. In the office of the Commissioner of Patents?

Mr. MILLARD. Yes, sir.

A. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. We have gone through that.

Q. You say you do not know of any action having been taken?

The WITNESS. In the mean time?

Mr. MILLARD. Yes, sir.

The WITNESS. From the 14th to the 31st?

Mr. MILLARD. Yes, sir.

A. I think there was none. If there was any I do not know it. I know I took none; or if I did, I have no recollection of it.

Q. Have you looked to ascertain whether there was any action taken?—A. No, I have not; but I am satisfied there was none.

Q. When you have referred a letter, as you did this, and received your reply or report, do you keep a copy of that report or reply?—A. Yes, sir; we copy all official papers that go out of the office. That is the habit of the Department, and if it is not done, it is an accident.

Q. In regard to the report made by the Commissioner, the question I put to you is this: Whether if you had a report from him in this particular case you would have made a copy of it?—A. That would have been put on file.

Q. Only put upon file and not recorded?—A. And it would be usual to transmit his report to the Attorney-General in cases like that, I should think—either the report itself or a copy.

Mr. RANNEY. I would like that to be copied in the record.

The CHAIRMAN. The paper is already in the record.

The WITNESS. That paper belongs to the files of the Department.

Mr. OATES. Did you not take it down, Mr. Stenographer?

The STENOGRAPHER. If it has been read I took it down; I do not know what paper it is.

Q. Did you know that this letter was to be withdrawn before it was withdrawn?—
A. I did not; if I did, I have forgotten it.

By Mr. HALE:

Q. Did you take part in this investigation before the Interior Department when this last suit was brought?—A. Yes, sir; I sat with the Secretary and heard the evidence.

Q. I do not remember whether there was a written opinion filed as given by the Secretary in that case; was there or not?—A. I delivered an opinion to the Secretary of the Interior, yes, sir.

Q. Did he deliver a written opinion giving the reasons for recommending the institution of a suit?

The WITNESS. Who?

Mr. HALE. The Secretary of the Interior?

A. He did.

Mr. OATES. His opinion is in evidence.

Mr. HALE. Then that is all.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You have been asked whether it is unusual on the part of the Attorney-General or any other head of a Department to request the return of a letter submitted to your Department?

The WITNESS. Do you say I was asked if that was unusual?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

The WITNESS. I do not remember that question.

The CHAIRMAN. I think you were asked the question as to whether the request contained in this letter of the Attorney-General to your Department, covering the Van Benthuyzen letter, that the Van Benthuyzen letter should be returned with your reply was unusual. I want to know whether such a request is unusual?

A. It seems to me that is the usual form of communication from the office of the Attorney-General in such cases.

Q. To request the return of the paper submitted?—A. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. To request it to be returned to him. Can you tell any instance where the letter of the Attorney-General to the Interior Department, referred to the Commissioner of Patents or otherwise, has been returned to the party applicant?—A. No, sir.

Q. There are no other instances that you know of?—A. I understood that to be your question, as to whether it was usual for the letters to be returned to the parties applicant, which letters had been sent down in an official way.

Q. The ordinary course of business would be to return Mr. Van Benthuyzen's letter with your reply to the Attorney-General, and you know of no instances where such a letter was delivered to another party than to the head of the Department preferring it to you?—A. I know of no other, and I did not know of this until the other day.

Q. It would not have been the ordinary course of business to do so?—A. I think not.

Q. If you did it you would ordinarily require the written assent of the Attorney-General?

The CHAIRMAN. He has not stated that.

Mr. RANNEY. Perhaps it is unnecessary to speculate as to what he would do when he knows his duty.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all.

MARTIN V. MONTGOMERY then came before the committee and was duly sworn.

By the CHAIRMAN (Mr. BOYLE):

Q. What office do you hold?—A. I am Commissioner of Patents.

Q. When were you appointed?—A. I think my appointment bears date the 21st of March, 1885.

Q. Have you looked at the letter of the Attorney-General addressed to the Secretary of the Interior, which has been referred to?—A. Yes, sir; I have seen it.

Q. Have you any recollection of the reference to you, by the Secretary, of the Van Benthuyzen letter?—A. I cannot say that I have a distinct recollection of receiving it. I have a distinct recollection of its being there and of writing Mr. Van Benthuyzen's attorneys in relation to it. That is my first and present recollection about the letter.

Q. At what time did you write his attorney?—A. On the 25th of July.

Q. Have you a copy of your letter?—A. Yes, sir; I have.

Q. Will you allow us to see it?

The WITNESS. Shall I read it, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. After we have looked at it.

The WITNESS. It is in my letter-book, and I had better read it so that stenographer can take it. This letter bears date the 25th of July, but my recollection is it was written on the following day, for I recollect it was written on Sunday. I will read it:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 25, 1885.

Messrs. BRIESEN & STEELE,
No. 229 Broadway, New York:

GENTLEMEN: A communication dated July 12 instant, addressed to Attorney-General Garland, signed by Mr. Van Benthuyzen, was referred by the Attorney-General to the Secretary of the Interior, and by the Secretary of the Interior to me. In this letter Mr. Van Benthuyzen says that you are his attorneys. He refers to a "law passed last session of Congress making it incumbent on the Attorney-General to proceed against patents issued fraudulently, or having fraudulent claims, at the request of any citizen." Before making my report to the Secretary I should be glad to be referred to the statute indicated by Mr. V. If you are aware of it you will kindly cite me, that I may consult it, and greatly oblige

Yours, respectfully,

M. V. MONTGOMERY,
Commissioner of Patents.

Q. Have you a reply to your letter?—A. I got no reply in writing. This letter with its inclosure, the letter from Mr. Van Benthuyzen to the Attorney-General, reached me on the 16th of July. The letter I have just read was written on the 25th, or more properly on the 26th, Sunday. On the 30th or the 31st, I think the 31st, Mr. Von Briesen, one of the gentlemen to whom my letter is addressed, called at the office, and that was the time that this indorsement was made on this letter, and the two returned to him, and he then stated to me orally that his client was mistaken; that there was no such statute, a thing I had supposed was so before.

Q. Had any other action been taken in your office on the application, between the receipt of the Van Benthuyzen letter and the withdrawal of it on the 31st of July?—

A. Nothing, except the letter I had written to Mr. Von Briesen.

Q. You say that Mr. Von Briesen came there when?—A. On the 31st of July, I think it was.

Q. Did he state to you at that time that he had authority to withdraw the letter?—

A. He did.

Q. What did he say?—A. I recollect it was a very hasty interview. He came and said that he had called in response to my letter of the 25th to say to me that Mr. Van Benthuyzen was mistaken; that there was no such statute. I said to him that I thought that was so, but I had delayed writing for some time, with a view to looking at the statute myself, and then I thought I would ask him to refer me to it if there was one. He said there was no such statute, "And besides that," he said, "it is not desired to prosecute this matter any further, and I desire, at Mr. Van Benthuyzen's indication, to withdraw the request." This was attached to it, and I said to him, "I do not know about allowing you to withdraw this document that came from the Attorney-General"; and he then assured me that it was in accordance with Mr. Garland's views, or Mr. Garland had directed him, or something, and thereupon I made this indorsement on this paper and returned both to him.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. That it was according to his own views that the letter of the Attorney-General should be returned to him?—A. I think I was a little careless about that; I think that is the fact. I do not think I should do that now. But I understood Mr. Von Briesen to say that Mr. Garland was willing that the whole thing should be withdrawn, and that they did not desire to prosecute it any further. I had never heard of it before, and I never expected to again.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did Mr. Von Briesen make any mention of the Attorney-General's letter?

The WITNESS. Especially?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

A. I could not say as to that; I presume not; it was one of the documents; they were fastened together. I have, gentlemen, a copy of that letter if you desire it.

Q. What letter?—A. The letter from Mr. Van Benthuyzen to the Attorney-General.

Q. We have that in the record.—A. You inquired of Mr. Muldrow about it.

Q. You say you delivered both of those letters to Mr. Von Briesen?—A. Yes, sir; to Mr. Von Briesen.

Q. Was any person with him at the time you delivered them?—A. I think not; I think he was alone.

Q. Have you any recollection of Mr. Van Benthuyzen calling upon you about that time?—A. I do not think I ever saw Mr. Van Benthuyzen in my life until after the hearing on the other petition had commenced.

Q. Under what circumstances were these letters returned to your office? You seem to have possession of them now.—A. About six or seven weeks after I had done this stupid thing, the chief clerk of my bureau called one day and told me that somebody wanted a copy of a letter that had been sent by Mr. Van Benthuyzen to the Attorney-General, and by him referred to the Secretary of the Interior, and thence referred to me. The whole thing had passed out of my mind; I hadn't the remotest recollection about it. I commenced to look for data in relation to it, and after quite a search I then was able to recall the facts by finding this letter and various other things that I have found in the way of data. I think I had already dictated a letter to Mr. Von Briesen (I did it at once, within two hours after Mr. Duryea, my chief clerk, came to me), asking him to see to it that these letters were returned to me, as a call had been made upon me for a copy of them. Before the letter left the office Mr. Von Briesen, who lives in New York, happened in the office, and I then told him there had been a call made for a copy of that letter, and I wanted him to see that it was at once returned to me, which he promised to do, and after three or four letters had been sent, I succeeded in getting back that letter with the indorsement Mr. Muldrow has read on it.

Q. By whom was it returned?—A. I could not tell you; I have no personal recollection about it. Whether it came to me by the mail, or came to the Secretary and was sent to me by him, or was handed to me, I could not tell. I only know it came back. First a copy of it was sent. Mr. Van Benthuyzen either sent himself, or caused to be sent, a copy of it to me, and I wrote to his attorney that I did not want the copy, but I wanted the original.

Q. And that original letter, as I gather from the receipt produced here, was returned to the Department of Justice?—A. My recollection is that the original letter went back to the Department of Justice with the report made by the Secretary of the Interior on the second petition.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Was Mr. Van Benthuyzen a gentleman known to you?—A. I never knew or heard of him in my life until I saw that letter.

Q. He was not a man accustomed to practice in your office, since you have been there?—A. No, sir; he is not a lawyer, not a patent solicitor.

Q. Did he come into your office without an introduction?—A. That I cannot recollect. If I was going to guess, I should say not. My recollection would be that he called there, perhaps, in company with Col. Casey Young, or some of those gentlemen concerned in that Bell litigation.

Q. Is it your recollection that Casey Young was with him?—A. I could not say it was my recollection, because I haven't any recollection on the subject. I could not tell you who introduced me to Mr. Van Benthuyzen.

Q. Do you remember whether he had an introduction to you at that time?—A. I do not.

Q. Anybody to indorse him?—A. I do not. I have no doubt that somebody introduced me to Mr. Van Benthuyzen, but I could not tell you who, when, or where.

Q. You would not have been likely to deliver up an original paper like that from the Attorney-General to an entire stranger.

The WITNESS. Is that a question?

Mr. RANNEY. You would not have been likely, I judge, to deliver up to Mr. Von Briesen the original letter of the Attorney-General when he was an entire stranger to you, would you?

A. I haven't said any such thing. I didn't deliver it to an entire stranger; I delivered it to Mr. Von Briesen, as I told you.

Q. I understood you to say that he was a stranger to you when he called.—A. I did not say Mr. Von Briesen was a stranger to me; I said that Mr. Van Benthuyzen was a total stranger to me.

Q. Were you and Mr. Von Briesen acquainted?—A. He was a practitioner before my office, and I had met him several times as a New York lawyer who had been in the habit of appearing before the bureau in litigations.

Q. He was then acquainted with the business of your office?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Von Briesen, then, was not a stranger to you?—A. No, sir; he was not a stranger.

Q. He had been accustomed to practice in your office?—A. Yes, sir; and besides that Mr. Van Benthuyzen's letter referred to him as his attorney.

Q. Certainly. I thought I said Mr. Von Briesen instead of Mr. Van Benthuyzen. He had no order from the Attorney-General?—A. He had not; no order in writing.

Q. And you took his word for it that it was by the assent of the Attorney-General?—A. I did.

Q. Without a query?—A. I never had any doubt about it. I do not think I shall do it now with anybody, but I did hastily do it.

Q. Do you remember whether prior to that date Mr. Von Briesen had been in there?

The WITNESS. Mr. Von Briesen or Mr. Van Benthuyssen?

Mr. RANNEY. Mr. Von Briesen.

A. Not about this matter. I do not think I ever heard of this matter in my life until I got the letter, and never knew until I wrote the parties. Mr. Von Briesen had been there many times on patent business connected with the Department, but not on this business.

Q. Did you ever talk with him upon this application?

The WITNESS. Before this time?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

A. Never in the world. I did not know about it or care anything about it.

Q. What had you done in relation to the matter before you wrote to Von Briesen and Steele?—A. I had set down to wait. The fact is this, as all lawyers know, when we are not ready to do a thing we wait. I had been waiting to get time to look at this business, and besides I was pretty well persuaded there was no such statute. Mr. Van Benthuyssen's letter started out on that allusion to the statute passed by the last Congress, and I kept saying to myself, I will look up that statute when I get time, and I kept waiting, and waited nine days, from the 16th to the 25th, and then I said I will write these gentlemen and ask them to cite me the statute, which I do not think they can do.

Q. You had the statute in the Department here before you, hadn't you?—A. It was in the office; it was not exactly before me.

Q. Did you look to see if there was any?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Had you looked over the papers?—A. I had not spent five minutes on the whole business.

Q. If the law, independent of the statute, permitted the bringing of a Government suit, did you think it made any difference whether this application was based on the particular act or the act in general?—A. I think it made just this difference. If the right existed at common law that was a right; there was no duty imposed by it. But these gentlemen said, in substance, that there was a statute passed by the last Congress making it the duty of the Attorney-General, and directing him to bring these suits, and I thought there was quite a distinction. I had no doubt at all that the right existed independent of the statute.

Q. But taking the application just as it was, although it referred to a statute that had passed, yet if it was true that the law as it stood independent of the act, the special act of Congress, authorized the bringing of the suit, could not one have been brought on the application?—A. One could be, but it was not imperative that it should be. That is the difference.

Q. The common law left it (that was the difference) discretionary, and the act that he referred to made it imperative, you claim?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What papers, if you remember, came with that letter of the Attorney-General and the application of Mr. Van Benthuyssen?—A. I think I am perfectly safe in saying that no papers came. Those were the only ones, the two letters fastened together. They bear marks now of having been fastened together. It was a letter somewhat formal.

Q. Do you remember the case of Sargent & Warren?—A. Very well.

Q. When did that come in?—A. I could not have told you when except that I heard your interrogatories to Mr. Muldrow. It was probably about the time you suggest, in July or the last of June.

Q. We have your opinion in that case?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I see that came in on the 23d of July and was acted on by the 30th of July?—A. Very likely. The counsel came right along with it and pressed it, and I had two or three hearings with them.

Q. So that you had these two cases under consideration at the same time?—A. I should not have known that but it seems so. The one I gave attention to because the counsel were there present, and the other I simply postponed until I could get time to attend to it.

Q. And you had not taken any action on this one of the two, that is Mr. Van Benthuyssen's, and had considered to a final conclusion and disposition the other?—A. I presume that is so.

Q. They both involved, I see, the question of the right and propriety of the Government to bring a suit to vacate a patent on the alleged ground of fraud?—A. I have not thought of the Sargent-Warren case for months, but my recollection is there was quite a different question involved. My recollection is that while there was no doubt whatever in my mind and in the opinion expressed about the right to bring the suit, I did have grave doubt about the propriety of bringing suit in that case. It was not claimed in that case, if I remember rightly, that nobody was entitled to the patent. It was admitted somebody was, and these gentlemen wanted us to settle the question of who was, and I thought that was not a good thing to do.

Q. It was a patent issued to two jointly, they having sworn that they were the joint inventors, and the fraud alleged was in that false allegation?—A. That is my recollection, although I have not thought of it for months.

Q. And in the case of Mr. Van Benthuisen, where fraud was alleged, the claim was that the patent should have been issued to Mr. Gray, when he was the original inventor, and not to Mr. Bell?—A. I did not quite understand that so.

Q. As the application reads?—A. I understand that the complaint always was in this case that nobody was entitled to the patent at all; that the monopoly ought not to exist at all, whereas in the Sargent-Warren case it was simply an inquiry of who should have it.

Q. Have you looked at Mr. Van Benthuisen's application?

The WITNESS. Which one do you mean; this letter?

Mr. RANNEY. The first one.

A. Oh, I have read it several times. I have not read it lately.

Q. I do not care to enter into any discussion of the law, but only to show that you had two kindred subjects under consideration at the same time.—A. That is undoubtedly so.

Q. And the one you decided on before the 30th of July, you decided adversely upon it?—A. I reported adversely upon it. I reported against the bringing of the suit.

Q. I understand that your decision was not final; that it was only a recommendation. Did you have any knowledge of the second application coming through a district attorney to the Attorney-General's office on the 2d of September?—A. I cannot tell you about the date. The first knowledge I had about it, or the first suspicion I had about it, was when it was referred to me in the regular way from the Secretary of the Interior.

Q. It was not referred to you before the first Government suit which was ordered, which was brought at Memphis?—A. Oh, I do not know anything about that, except what the newspapers said. I know nothing about it at all.

Q. The application that was acted upon by the Acting Attorney-General never came into your office at all?—A. The suit brought at Memphis never came into my office at all.

Q. Did any one confer with you about it?—A. Never.

Q. Did Mr. Von Briesen come and confer with you about it?—A. If he did, I have no recollection about it.

Q. Did Mr. Van Benthuisen?—A. No, sir; I do not think he ever did.

Q. Did Casey Young?—A. No, sir; I think not.

Q. Was Casey Young in the habit of visiting your office?—A. He used to drop in occasionally. I think I am safe in saying that I never saw Casey Young until after the institution of the proceedings in which I sat with the Secretary of the Interior.

Q. Who was the party to whom you alluded as being introduced possibly by Casey Young?—A. Mr. Van Benthuisen. Some of those folks introduced me to these men. He was in probably several times, and my recollection is that, during that time, I was introduced to Mr. Van Benthuisen.

Q. When was that, if you remember?—A. If you could tell me when that hearing was begun, I could tell you about when, probably.

Q. If it was after the proceedings before the Secretary of the Interior, I do not care anything about it.—A. I should say this: I met those gentlemen every day and sat all through that hearing and sometime during the progress of it, and probably early in the hearing, somebody introduced me to Mr. Van Benthuisen.

Q. Is there any other correspondence of which you kept copies in relation to the Von Briesen application?—A. Not that I am aware of; nothing else in the world, that I know of.

Q. Let me look at the letter once more.—A. It is not very legible writing; it is written with a pen; it was written on Sunday. [The witness exhibited the letter-book containing the letter in question to Mr. Ranney.]

Q. It was written on Sunday and not copied on a type-writer?—A. No, sir; I wrote it, my brother was with me, and I had him copy it. This is the copy; I sent the original.

Q. He was there on Sunday?—A. Yes, sir; he was with me.

Q. Was it done at the office?—A. Yes, sir; it was done at the office. I got there and found a lot of letters and things that I wanted to clear up.

Q. Have you the reply to it?—A. I got no reply. On the 31st Mr. Von Briesen called—

Mr. RANNEY. Have you a copy—I do not want to take the liberty of looking through your books—but have you a copy of the letter written by you in the Sargent-Warren matter in there?

The WITNESS. I presume so.

Mr. RANNEY. It must have been about the 28th?

The WITNESS. To whom was it addressed; can you tell me that?

Mr. RANNEY. It would be addressed to the Secretary of the Interior.

The WITNESS. I will take great pleasure in furnishing you that. I do not think I have it now.

The CHAIRMAN. We have a copy of it in evidence.

The WITNESS. I do not call to mind what there was about it; I simply remember there was such a case.

Mr. RANNEY. Just look on the 28th or 30th of July and see if there is any such case referred to.

The WITNESS (after making a search). Here is the letter you refer to.

Mr. RANNEY. I only want to verify it.

(The witness read the letter in question, with Mr. Ranney, from his letter-book.)

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Did Mr. Von Briesen come alone when he came to take up the letter?—A. Of course my recollection is somewhat indistinct, but I should say that he did; I have no recollection of anybody being with him; I may be wrong about it, but I have no recollection.

Q. I see that in your letter of July 25, 1885, you called the attention of Mr. Von Breisen to the statute cited in his letter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Up to this time did you know of any authority for bringing such a suit except as provided by statute?

The WITNESS. Did I know of any authority?

Mr. MILLARD. Yes.

A. I had had that question before me once or twice. I had recommended the bringing of one suit, I think, in Boston, I had no doubt about the authority, but I had no knowledge of a statute, and did not think there was any. But from the fact that Mr. Van Benthuyzen's letter opened with the statement that there was such a statute, I thought I would end the whole controversy by asking his counsel to cite it.

Mr. RANNEY. The Boston suit was reported afterwards.

Q. Do I understand that you had reported in favor of bringing such a suit prior to this time?—A. My impression is that I had, but I won't be certain. Mr. Ranney says the Boston suit was reported afterwards; perhaps that is so. It was certainly reported before the proceedings were brought asking the institution of the suit against the Bell Company; I think some time previous to the time that was received.

Q. But prior to the withdrawal of that letter?—A. No, sir; after the withdrawal of that letter, if Mr. Ranney is right, and I have no doubt that he is.

Mr. RANNEY. I only know from what Mr. Clay, of the Department of Justice, says.

The WITNESS. I presume you are right about it.

Q. Did you have any communication with the Attorney-General before the withdrawal of the letter?—A. No, sir; not a word except what Mr. Von Briesen told me.

Q. And of course the withdrawal of this letter forestalled any report or opinion?—A. Yes, sir. I think, to be exact about it, Mr. Von Briesen had said that he had seen Mr. Garland, and he was willing, or had given him permission, to withdraw the whole matter.

Mr. MULDROW. Certain requests were made of me for copies of letters. I wish the committee would give me a memorandum of what they desire.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Ranney can indicate them to you.

Mr. RANNEY. The testimony of the Commissioner of Patents will probably relieve you of the necessity of seeing whether you had any letter from him on the subject of Mr. Van Benthuyzen. Probably there is none, because he says that he had not acted on it.

Mr. MULDROW. I will have search made.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not think of anything else; what I wanted to get was that letter dated July 30, where the date was subsequently changed to August 3.

Hon. BENJAMIN LE FEVRE then came before the committee and was duly sworn.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Question. You are a member of this House. Of how many Congresses have you been a member?—Answer. I have been a member since the Forty-sixth Congress.

Q. Dr. Rogers, in the course of his testimony, has spoken of having sent or offered to you by letter, or otherwise, a certain amount of stock in one of these Pan-Electric companies, or some of them. I called you in so that you might state yourself the facts. He says that you did not keep them, but returned them. If you will state the facts and produce the correspondence, if you have any, we will be obliged to you.—

A. I received probably three or four communications from Dr. Rogers, inviting me to be present at meetings at his house on Four-and-a-half street, in regard to his inventions. I did not answer them, nor did I attend the meetings. Later on I received the stock; I don't remember the amount now, but $10,000 or $20,000 worth of stock. When I received that I dictated a letter in reply and inclosed the stock and returned it to him. I never have met Dr. Rogers; have had no communication with him since then. I dictated a short letter stating that I could not accept the stock, and returned the stock to him. That is all I know about it.

Q. Have you preserved the letter?—A. I have; but it would be difficult to get. All my letters of that period have been sent to my home, boxed up, and it would be some trouble to get them. I have the letters, and the gentleman who did my work then, and to whom I dictated the letter, is here, and he would probably remember it more distinctly than I would. I simply returned the stock.

Q. My inquiry was in regard to the letter from Dr. Rogers to you—the letter which you received.—A. I received three or four letters from Dr. Rogers, and they are filed away with other letters at my home in Ohio. I sent home last year all my letters, up to, I think, last fall.

Q. The letter which enclosed the stock—can you tell us what that was?—A. No, sir; I could not tell you; I don't remember. I just took the stock and returned it with a short letter. I remember very little connected with it.

Q. Was it a proposition to make you a present of the stock, or did he want you to buy it?—A. The proposition was to give me the stock if I would become interested in the development of their company.

Q. What company?—A. All his inventions. I don't remember which, but I think it was postal telegraph stock. I don't remember distinctly about it; I paid but little attention to it at the time. I simply took the stock, the amount, and dictated a short letter—the letter was very short—and returned the stock to Dr. Rogers.

Q. Did he say anything about wanting your influence?—A. I think there was something said about that. He referred to the importance of having influential men connected with it, and mentioned the names of a number of men in connection with it. I remember that he mentioned in his communication a number of prominent gentlemen that were to be interested in it.

Q. Who?—A. I recall John G. Thompson as one of the names, and Father Rochfort, I believe. He referred to those two persons specially in his communication, as those whom I knew personally, and a number of others.

Q. Did he refer to any members of Congress?—A. I do not think he did; possibly he did; I didn't pay much attention to it.

Q. How much was the stock in amount, according to your best recollection?—A. I think it was $10,000 or $25,000. I don't remember just now with regard to it, but I think my clerk would know about it.

Q. Is your clerk here?—A. He is in the city here.

Q. Would it be too much trouble for you to get that letter?—A. I will see if I can get it.

Q. Have you a copy of your reply?—A. I have not; I did not keep a copy.

Q. You reinclosed the stock?—A. Yes, sir; simply reinclosed the stock. It was a short letter.

Q. Are you sure it was not Pan-Electric stock?—A. I will not be sure about it. I paid but little attention to it; I simply returned it.

Q. Do you know anything about the attempt to get young Rogers appointed electrician of the House?—A. Not a thing; I never heard anything about it. I never met Dr. Rogers or his son. I have stated now all the connection I had with the matter. I do not know anything about it and never heard of it.

Q. Can you recall or fix more definitely the date when this stock was sent to you?—A. I could not. I was very busy and the invitations to be present at the meetings at his office I did not reply to. Those I just put aside, and I never did attend any of their meetings. I think I was invited three or four times to attend. But when that stock came, I instantly took it and inclosed it with a short letter and returned it.

Q. The meeting that you were invited to attend was a meeting with whom?—A. I could not recall. He said persons interested in his inventions, in several of his inventions, and he inclosed circulars at the time.

Q. Don't you remember that Casey Young was among them?—A. Yes, sir; I think Casey Young was one of them.

Q. And Senator Harris?—A. Yes, sir; I think I also recall Senator Harris.

Q. And Mr. Garland?—A. Yes, sir; Mr. Garland and General Atkins and Father Rochfort.

Q. And General Johnston?—A. I don't remember General Johnston.

Q. The meetings to which you were invited were with those gentlemen?—A. I think so; I paid so little attention to it that I know very little about it at all.

Q. Was it after that time that you were invited to attend the meeting of these gentlemen that this stock came?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long after?—A. I could not recollect, but some three or four months or two or three months; I could not recollect exactly.

Q. Did your clerk see the stock?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is he here in the Capitol?—A. No, sir; he is in the city, though.

Q. He wrote your reply?—A. Yes, sir; I dictated the reply to him.

Q. Have you a copy of that?—A. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. He said he had not.

Q. What is the name of your clerk?—A. Mr. Charles Eisenstein.

Q. For whom is he now acting?—A. He is still with me.

Q. Can you send him in here now?—A. I could not to-day; I can another day.

CHARLES A. DANA then came before the committee and was duly sworn.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. What is your relation to the New York Sun?—Answer. I am the editor of the New York Sun.

Q. Has the Sun taken part in the discussion of the matters out of which this investigation has grown—the matters relating to the Pan-Electric Telephone Company?—A. Perhaps the best way to answer that question would be to produce a letter which I have here, which I received the first part of November from Mr. E. N. Hill, along with a long account of the affairs of the Pan-Electric Company, identical substantially—I think verbally also—with the publication in the New York World some time later. If the committee please, I will read Mr. Hill's letter:

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 9, 1885.

Hon. C. A. DANA:

SIR: Inclosed I send you a full history of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, which I wrote some time ago, not for publication at the time. I furnished the Tribune correspondent with the original information, upon which it has acted. Every allegation in this article except the one that Mr. Garland attended the meeting at 1327 G street is upon my own knowledge (that is italicised), and not upon hearsay. If you think this is news, or worth publishing, send me a check for what you think it is worth. If not, you can give it to the office cat.

Respectfully,

E. N. HILL.

P. S.—I shall not offer it to any other paper.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. What is the date of that?—A. November 9, 1885.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did you make reply to that?—A. I did not myself; I directed a reply to be sent to Mr. Hill that we did not wish to publish it, or words to that effect; that Mr. Dana had concluded not to publish it.

Q. Had you published any of the matter relating to the Pan-Electric Company before that?—A. I am not certain. I may have made some extract from the publication in the Tribune, but I rather think not. I made some comment on it, but of a very mild and gentle nature. The reason why I declined to publish Mr. Hill's communication was not that it did not seem to be news; it was quite interesting and a good deal in it was fresh; a good deal in it might require confirmation, but that might possibly have been procured by investigation. But I was not willing to take any lead in attacking the Administration or any member of it, and that was the reason why Mr. Hill's communication was not used.

Q. Was any information furnished or offered to you afterwards by Mr. Hill?—A. Never.

Q. Or any other person?—A. No.

Q. Has the Sun published news in regard to this matter?—A. When the World some time later—I do not now remember when, but I should say in December, perhaps—perhaps a month after this, printed Mr. Hill's statement, and a day or two afterwards, or shortly afterwards, printed some letters that Dr. Rogers furnished—Dr. Rogers's letters corroborating Mr. Hill's statement—I copied a portion, not the whole.

Q. As I understand you, then, the Sun has gathered none of this information itself; has procured none of the original news.—A. None.

Q. You say you declined Mr. Hill's offer because you did not wish to take the lead in an attack upon the Administration?—A. That reason was not given to Mr. Hill. No reason was given to him.

Q. But you say that was the reason?—A. Yes, sir; that was the reason.

Q. Did you regard Mr. Hill's letter as an attack upon the Administration?—A. Most decidedly. I regarded it as a scandal most injurious, if true, to the Administration.

Q. And has the Sun since that time taken part in the discussion of the matter from that standpoint?—A. Always; and I have endeavored to influence public opinion and to influence the action of the Administration against any prosecution of the original Pan-Electric scheme of making the United States Executive a party to a patent suit.

Q. I will come to that.—A. For the same purpose.

Q. Did you subsequently change your mind in regard to attacking this Administration or any member of it?—A. I found that it was necessary to criticise the Administration, not to attack it in the sense of publishing any scandalous report.

Q. You discriminate between the publishing of reports or information and editorial comments?—A. I discriminate very strongly between sending out and publishing allegations and facts of a scandalous nature, of an injurious character, which are yet to be verified and established, which may possibly not be true, and commenting upon facts which are notorious, public, and unquestioned.

Q. You say that you have endeavored to influence the Administration against the prosecution of the Government suit, as I understand you, in behalf of the Pan-Electric Company, or for the benefit of the Pan-Electric Company?—A. Not particularly, but against the Government becoming a party to any private patent suit; it seems to me fatal blindness and inexpressible folly.

Q. For the Government to allow its name to be used to promote a private suit?—A. For the President of the United States to engage as a party in a private controversy.

Q. That would be a controversy between parties?—A. It was a controversy between individuals.

Q. Your view then has been, I presume, that it would be improper for the Government to become a party to litigation looking to the revocation of a patent alleged to have been obtained by fraud?—A. Where the question is one sure to be decided in the ordinary action of the courts, without the Government being a party, I see no reason for the President to be involved in it, and still less when the proceeding originates with a lot of dead beats who ought not to be tolerated in any respectable political combination.

Q. To whom do you refer as "a lot of dead beats"?—A. I refer to the originators of the Pan-Electric scheme.

Q. Do you refer to the Attorney-General of the United States?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you refer to Senator Harris?—A. No, sir.

Q. Perhaps you refer to the Rogerses; they were the originators.—A. They are poets.

Q. I understand your view to be, then, that the use of the name of the Government in suits of that kind is not necessary; that the relief sought might be obtained in a suit between parties?—A. It is sure to be obtained in a suit between parties.

Q. Do you know of any case in which it has been held that a patent might be revoked, on the ground of its having been obtained by fraud, in a suit between parties?—A. I do not see any practical difference between the revocation of Professor Bell's patent, for instance, on the ground that he procured it by fraud, and a decision of the Supreme Court that the rightful patentee should be Mr. Drawbaugh, Professor Gray, or anybody else, and that Bell had no right to it.

Q. Can you conceive of that question being raised without involving a claim under an adverse patent, or under any other patent? Suppose it were alleged that the Bell patent had been obtained by fraud, and that no other patents had been granted, might not the question be raised there as to the Bell patent having been obtained by fraud?—A. I do not know; would it be necessary then for the Government to be a party to it?

Q. Not necessarily; but you spoke of it as a controversy between claimants for patents.—A. Here in this case there was a controversy between Pan-Electric speculators and poets and the Bell Company, and the Pan-Electric speculators had been beaten, I understand it, in all of their side issues, and they finally got the United States—

Q. Why do you distinguish between the two companies, styling one the Pan-Electric speculators and the Bell people the Bell Company? You speak of the one as Pan-Electric speculators and the other as the Bell Company.—A. The Bell Company was an organized company having rights that had been recognized by a great many of the courts of the United States, while the Pan-Electric people were attempting to get recognition and were selling stock and giving it away in various manners for that purpose.

Q. Have you any knowledge that the Bell Company was once in like condition?—A. I don't know anything about the Bell Company.

Q. And that the Bell Company had a beginning very like the Pan-Electric Company?—A. I do not. I don't know anything about its history.

Mr. MILLARD. You do not mean by that, beginning similarly, do you?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, very much alike, as I understand the evidence before this committee. [To the witness.] So I understand that your course and the course of the Sun has been controlled by your views upon the legal aspect of the question?—A. Mainly upon the political question, Mr. Chairman.

Q. And the political question?—A. Yes, sir; and the political question.

Q. Law and politics then have prompted the course of the Sun in the attacks made, if they were attacks, upon the persons who were concerned in the Pan-Electric enterprise; is that it?—A. Well, that is a general statement.

Q. Has the Sun published some discussion from a legal standpoint as to the right to use the Government's name to bring a suit of that character?—A. I cannot say, I should not think, that it had published any elaborate discussion. I have repeatedly myself expressed the opinion that without a special statute the Government could not do it. The President could not do it.

Q. Has not the question been discussed in articles of some length in the Sun?—A. Not that I recollect. I have written them myself, and I do not remember any article of any length discussing that question. My own opinion is quite strong about it, but it is not worth much, because I am not a lawyer.

Q. Have any articles been published in the Sun at the instance of the Bell Telephone Company?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or any officer of it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or any individuals?—A. Not that I am aware of at all.

Q. In the interests of the Bell Company?—A. No articles have been published at anybody's instance. I have published them without any solicitation from any quarter.

Q. And without suggestion from any one?—A. Without suggestion from any quarter.

Q. It is hardly necessary to ask you, then, whether anything has been paid for their publication.—A. Nothing has been paid. Nobody has ever suggested the thing as practicable.

Q. Has the Sun paid anything for the republication of any of its articles in any of the other newspapers?—A. I don't know whether any have been published. It has not paid anything; it does not need to, for our articles are republished a great deal without that.

The CHAIRMAN. Your articles are sometimes very interesting.

Mr. RANNEY. And generally so on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; it is very lively reading. [To the witness.] Have you had any conferences with the lawyers of the Bell Company upon this legal question?—A. I have had conferences with Mr. Dickerson as to the scientific question. Mr. Dickerson and I are very old friends, and have been intimate these many, many years, and I am in the habit of going to him when I have any scientific question of an interesting nature.

Q. Have you discussed the question with Mr. Dickerson?

The WITNESS. Which question do you refer to now, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The question as to the suit being brought in the name of the Government for the revocation of the patent.

A. Oh, yes; I have had quite a dispute with him on the subject.

Q. A dispute?—A. Yes, sir; a dispute.

Q. Your views seem to be very much alike so far as you have gone.—A. They are more alike now than they were. After the hearing before the Secretary of the Interior I went to see Mr. Dickerson and asked him about it, and he said that a Government suit would certainly be brought, and we had a very lively dispute on that question. I said it was not possible that a President endowed with good sense and a consciousness of uprightness would allow such a suit to be brought.

Q. I suppose Mr. Dickerson did not disagree with you as to that?—A. He disagreed with me. He said the suit was certainly going to be brought.

Q. But you said to him that you did not think a President endowed with good sense, and so on, would allow a suit to be brought. Did he disagree with you in that statement?—A. We did not go into that. He said the suit was going to be brought, and I told him it would not be brought, and was improper.

Q. (By Mr. RANNEY.) Perhaps he stated why. State all that he said.—A. No; he did not say.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. So that the dispute was not a serious one?—A. It was not a quarrel, but there was a good deal of difference in opinion.

Q. Not as to what ought to be done, but as to what was likely to be done?—A. As to what would be done.

Q. Mr. Dickerson is a lawyer in New York, is he?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of more than one Mr. Dickerson who is a lawyer in New York?—A. I know of two, the father and son; they are partners.

Q. This must be the same gentleman, then, referred to by Mr. Reid, of the Tribune, who seems to have had several consultations with him upon the same subject. Do you know of any other lawyer by that name?—A. I do not know; I presume it is the same. The son is an able young man, but the father is a very eminent and distinguished man.

Q. We will identify him as suggested. Is he in the employ of the Bell Telephone Company?—A. I presume he is. Indeed, I know that he argued their case at New Orleans.

Q. Do you know of his having any consultations or conferences with the editors of any other New York papers?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any stock in the Bell Company yourself?—A. No, sir; I have not.

Q. Are there any stockholders in the Sun?—A. Yes, sir; there are stockholders in the Sun. I see one of the most valued of them before me now [referring to Mr. U. H. Painter]. He may have stock in the Bell Company. He has not as much stock in the Sun as he wishes he had. The stockholders of the Sun have nothing whatever to do regarding the conduct of the paper.

Q. Do you know if any of them holds stock in the Bell Telephone Company?—A. I do not think there is one who holds any; and if they held a great deal, it would not make any difference.

Q. Do you know of any one of them who has stock in the Western Union Telegraph Company?—A. No; I do not.

Q. Has the Sun any stock in the Western Union Telegraph Company?—A. Not a cent. The Sun is a customer of the Western Union, and fights them in order to get the bills down.

Q. It is not peculiar in that respect?—A. Not particularly.

Q. Have you had offers of articles or information respecting the Pan-Electric Company from anybody besides Mr. Hill?—A. No, I do not think we have heard from that side since Mr. Hill wrote.

Q. Had you been acquainted with Mr. Hill before that?—A. I think I had seen Mr. Hill once or twice. He came into my office and I bought one or two things of him. He was a great anti-monopoly man, a virtuous man, and brought me articles against the land-grant railroads and things of that sort. I had seen him once or twice, and I should say I bought one or two things from him in the course of the last five or six years.

Q. Are you acquainted with Mr. Storrow, of the Bell Company?—A. I was introduced to Mr. Storrow the other evening in the lobby of a theater as we were all going out; I never saw him before and have not since.

Q. That was only the other evening, you say?—A. I think within a week past; last week.

Q. Have you an acquaintance with Mr. Forbes, president of the Bell Telephone Company?—A. No, sir; I never saw him to know him.

Q. Do you know Mr. Hubbard?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know Professor Bell?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you had any communication with any person connected with the Bell Company besides Mr. Dickerson, to your knowledge, in relation to this matter?—A. No, sir; and all those communications I have sought.

Q. Where did the conferences or conversations take place?—A. The last one took place on the Third avenue elevated railroad going up town.

Q. Were any of them at your office?—A. Yes, sir; I think Mr. Dickerson has been once in my office, and I have been once or twice in his office. Our offices are pretty near together.

Q. How near is your office to the Tribune office?—A. The two buildings join; they are adjoining.

Q. And Mr. Dickerson is in that immediate neighborhood?—A. Mr. Dickerson is one block distant.

Q. Is the World in the same neighborhood?—A. The World is a little further off, but in the same general neighborhood. It is a pretty good neighborhood.

Q. From what the Sun says of the World and the Tribune, the Sun must make it so.—A. And the Times is there, too.

Q. Your strictures upon the gentlemen who are said to be associated with the Pan-Electric Company have been somewhat severe, have they not?—A. I presume so.

Q. I see in the Sun of the 22nd of March, an article entitled "A Haunted Telephone;" have you any recollection of that?—A. Yes, sir; that is a story; that is a work of the imagination intended to illustrate a principle; but yet a work of the imagination.

Q. Was it intended to illustrate the Pan-Electric enterprise?—A. To illustrate rather the general situation. You will find it very good reading.

Mr. RANNEY. You had better put it into the record.

The WITNESS. I did not write it.

Mr. MILLARD. Who did write it?

The WITNESS. It was written by one of the young men in the office, a very brilliant young man.

The CHAIRMAN. I should judge so. I observe in the Sun of April 8th an article headed "A New Cabinet Member." Have you any recollection of that article?

The WITNESS (after examining the paper). Yes; I remember that.

Q. Neither of these articles is a discussion of the legal aspect of the question?—A. No, sir; they are rather views of the political and moral aspect of it.

The CHAIRMAN. I lay them before the committee. I do not care about them going into the record. [To the witness.] You say they were not written by you?

A. Those two were not written by me. I wish they were.

Q. I understand you to say that you wish you had written those?—A. Yes, I wish I had the faculty to write such things.

Q. Do you regard them as very severe attacks upon the parties referred to?—A. Quite severe; yes, sir.

Q. Do you think they were justifiable?—A. Entirely so.

Q. I have no objection, so far as I am concerned, to your stating to the committee your view of this Pan-Electric enterprise, if you care to.—A. I do not know that there is anything that I particularly wish to add. I will answer with pleasure any questions. I think it is generally a kind of swindle, to which the Executive of the United States is made ancillary.

Q. Do I understand you then that the articles furnished by you are intended as criticisms and attacks upon the Administration?—A. Not upon the Administration as a whole. There are certain parts of the Administration that seem to me ought to be excinded. The Administration as a whole I desire to support in every available and practical manner.

Q. Including the President?—A. Including the President. I support him where he is right.

Q. You support everybody where they are right, I presume. In other words, you do not oppose people who are right?—A. That may be. Still I should support a Democratic President where he was right a great deal more earnestly than I should a Republican President where he was right.

Q. I am glad to hear you say it. Had you not found some reason for disapproving the course of the Administration before the discussion of the Pan-Electric matters in the Sun?—A. I had never been able to approve Mr. Cleveland's civil service practices, but there was nothing about that of a scandalous or destructive nature. It was bad politics, it seemed to me, and bad patriotism, but it was sincere, earnest, and well meant. But the Pan-Electric scandal is of a different nature.

Q. I will ask you whether your course upon the Pan-Electric scandal is not induced or influenced to some extent by your disapproval of the Administration in other respects?—A. I should think not. No man, you know, can answer entirely and say that he is perfectly free from influences of that sort. No Presbyterian can say that he is perfectly fair towards an Episcopalian, but yet he means to be.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. I understand you to say that you have charge of the editorial department of the Sun?—A. Yes, sir; entire control of it.

Q. And the stockholders have no control of that?—A. The duty of the stockholders is to receive their dividends.

Q. And for you to earn them?—A. Yes, sir; for me to earn them.

Q. You have been asked in regard to Mr. Dickerson and yourself disputing or differing as to the prospect of the Government ordering a suit after the hearing before the Secretary of the Interior; that you thought they never could or would, and he thought it would be done. Do you mean to say that he made that remark based upon an opinion that it should be done under the law?—A. No, sir; based on the facts that had appeared and his general opinion as to the probabilities of the case. He still held that it could not legally be done; that such a prosecution could not be brought without a special statute.

Q. I will not ask you in detail what he based his speculation on if he told you?—A. I do not remember; I should not be able to state it.

Mr. RANNEY. I have nothing more to ask.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. Will you inform the committee wherein and in what respects you consider the organization or association known as the Pan-Electric Association and the Pan-Electric Telephone Company as scandalous?—A. They are not necessarily scandalous. I have never been able to imbibe much respect for the poets who originated the operation. The scandal consists, in my judgment, in using the Attorney-General of the United States, making him a stockholder and then using the Department of Justice to promote the purposes of this private speculation. That I think is scandalous.

Q. Are you aware of the fact that the Attorney-General became a member of these associations or companies long before he was Attorney-General?—A. He became a member of them, as I understand, while he was a Senator of the United States, and instead of imitating the example of General Le Fevre and Mr. Beach, who sent back this gratuity, he took it, and that I think is not a proper proceeding.

Q. Are you aware of the fact that that which they received was stock in a different company and incorporation from that which the Attorney-General is interested in?—

A. Nominally. I understand that the stock which they declined was issued in the same interest, and was the same essentially, although it was different. The Postal Telegraph Company was a branch of the same general concern, was it not?

The CHAIRMAN. No; it preceded the Pan-Electric Telephone Company.

Mr. RANNEY. They had made a combination.

The CHAIRMAN. The Postal Telegraph Company?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Postal Telegraph Company was another association.

The WITNESS. It is a matter of discussion whether a public officer should be interested in an establishment which may be affected by his public action.

Q. Were you aware of the fact that the Attorney-General when approached by the representatives of other telephone companies to direct the bringing of a suit declined to do so.

The WITNESS. Do you mean by the Van Benthuyzen Company?

Mr. OATES. Yes.

A. I am perfectly aware of that fact; yes, sir.

Q. And also by a representative of the Globe Telephone Company, and he declined to have anything to do with it.—A. I understand that is so; yes, sir.

Q. Do you not know that under the law the Solicitor-General acts as Attorney-General in the absence of that officer?—A. I think I am perfectly aware of that; yes, sir.

Q. Not as Deputy Attorney-General?—A. But as the head of the Department? Yes, sir; I think a scrupulous man would not have been away to let such a thing be done.

Q. Suppose he had no intimation that such a thing was to be done?—A. Well, he ought to have known there was a mighty smart set of fellows around.

Q. Suppose he had been present in his office, could he have prevented the Solicitor-General from ordering the suit or acting in the matter where the law invests that officer with authority to act wherever the Attorney-General is under any disability?—

A. The Attorney-General should not have allowed it.

Q. How could he have prevented it?—A. He should have resigned rather than have anything to do with it.

Q. That is a pretty high standard, is it not?—A. It is not too high a standard for an officer of the American Government.

Q. According to that standard, then, if a judge of a court was interested, as he might lawfully be, as a stockholder in a well-regulated institution, chartered and authorized by law and of good repute, if one should bring a suit in the court over which he presided, I suppose he should resign?—A. Oh no, no. That is not a parallel case at all, in my judgment.

Q. I fail to observe the difference. Will you point it out?—A. I think it hardly worth while for us to engage in a discussion of these fine points of legal morals.

Q. I am seeking to obtain for the committee the points that you make against the gentlemen concerned in these companies.—A. The case seems to me entirely similar to the old Credit Mobilier case, where members of Congress took stock in an establishment on which they were going to vote, and whose interests their votes were to promote.

Q. Can you point out any instance in which either one of these parties ever originated or promoted any bill or any kind of legislation to forward their interests in either one of these corporations in which they were connected?—A. I do not know that they did. I do not know whether they did or not.

Q. Then, if there was nothing in that view of it with reference to legislating, nor with reference to practicing any well-known fraud upon the Government, how would it be immoral for them if they entered into the developing of inventions and enterprises with a view of making them useful to the public and popular with the public and remunerative to themselves? How could that be wrong, even though they were officers of the Government?—A. It seems to me there is no parallel between the case you put and the case the committee is considering.

Q. You stated awhile ago your surprise that the President should not have had more sense than to permit a suit to be brought in the name of the Government to annul a patent. You, I believe, did not think very highly of that gentleman's ability before his election, did you?—A. I thought very highly of his ability in some respects, but I thought him a very bad Democrat. I did my best to defeat his election because he was a bad Democrat—and came pretty near doing it, too; mighty near doing it. It was a very tight squeak, wasn't it? A plurality of a thousand in the State of New York! And Burchard did that. But for Burchard the Democratic party would have been a great deal better off to-day, in my judgment.

Q. Did you not get your idea of the distribution of stock which seemed to have been given for the purpose of affecting the results, from the conduct of the Messrs. Rogers, or Dr. Rogers, rather than either of those other gentlemen?

The WITNESS. The poet?

Mr. OATES. Yes.

A. The facts did not seem to be disputed that this stock was distributed around. Rogers furnished the evidence of it principally.

Q. Are you not aware of the fact that none of the gentlemen connected ever gave away any stock or sold any stock except the Rogerses?—A. They all got dividends.

Q. They got dividends from what source?—A. Dividends from the sale of stock and local rights and the organization of local companies, as I understand.

Q. Are you aware of the fact that the Bell Company also sold local rights and retained an interest in the local companies—in their stock?—A. Oh, I don't know, but I presume that is so.

Q. All over the United States?—A. I don't know anything about the Bell Company except that it charges an extravagant price for its telephones, and the telephones don't work very well always.

Q. Do you know which of the stockholders and organizers of the Pan-Electric Company, and the Pan-Electric Telephone Company were officers of the Government of the United States or connected with it in an official capacity at that time of the organization?—A. I don't remember distinctly except that Senator Garland, I believe, was one, and I think Senator Harris was one, and there were also some members of the other House of Congress. I think Mr. Casey Young was a retiring member of Congress. I am not sure whether General Johnston was or not. I don't remember about that. Mr. Atkins perhaps was also a member, although I do not pretend to know that.

Q. Have you read the evidence that has been taken before this committee?—A. No, sir; I have read only the brief reports that have appeared occasionally in the New York papers. I understand there are three thousand pages of evidence. I have not had an opportunity to read it all.

The CHAIRMAN. You do us injustice. The fact is bad enough.

Mr. RANNEY. There are some eight or nine hundred pages, and we are likely to get the others.

The WITNESS. The prospect is fair.

Mr. OATES. It depends on how long the committee lasts.

Mr. RANNEY. We will probably get the remainder before we are through calling on the editors. They are making valuable contributions to the committee, and we are very glad to have them.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Have you any personal acquaintance with Attorney-General Garland?—A. I never saw him.

Q. So that your attacks, or rather criticisms, on the Administration do not arise from any personal hostility?—A. Not the slightest. I have always had a very high opinion of Mr. Garland as a Senator, and I understand he is a very distinguished and eminent lawyer, but I have never seen him or spoken to him or had any communication with him.

Q. How about the other parties connected with the Pan-Electric scheme? Are you acquainted with Senator Harris?—A. I have never seen him to know him; I may have seen him, but I do not know him.

Q. Do you know Colonel Young?—A. Colonel Young was pointed out to me to-day in this room; I never had seen him before, to my knowledge.

Q. If I get your opinion correctly you think that no one occupying official position under the Government should be connected with the Pan-Electric Company?—A. Not if the Government is going to be brought in as an ancillary prosecutor on behalf of the Pan-Electric Company. I do not see any objection to an officer of the Government owning stock in a bank or a railroad.

Q. But you think the Government should not be used for any private purpose?—A. I think it should not be used for any private purpose.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. I wish to put one or two questions just there. Are you aware of the difference in effect between a judgment of court against a patent in a suit ordered by the Government and a judgment in a controversy between two individuals?

The WITNESS. The effect as regards the patent?

Mr. OATES. Yes.

A. I understand that if the judgment is adverse to the patent in a case of fraud, the patent is annulled. If, for instance, I am a claimant and Mr. Ranney is a patentee, and I got judgment that Mr. Ranney's patent is not sound, and that I am entitled to the patent, his patent is destroyed by that judgment.

Q. In a suit between individuals?—A. In a suit between individuals. What is his patent worth after the Supreme Court has decided the invention is not his, but mine? The distinction is a very nice one, but I don't see that it amounts to anything, practically, at all.

Mr. RANNEY. You seem to be a sound lawyer.

The WITNESS. Thank you, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You are not in entire accord with the Judiciary Committee of the House.

The WITNESS. Perhaps I am not.

Mr. OATES, And Mr. Ranney is a member of that committee.

Mr. RANNEY. I beg leave to differ about that. Lawyers differ with each other. I did not give that opinion and I do not stand by it.

Q. Do you not know that wherever the Interior Department, on reference to it for advice by the Department of Justice, on allegations that a patent was obtained improperly or fraudulently, believed from the evidence before it that such was the case, and that it was used as a great monopoly and was wrong, and as so reported to the Department of Justice, that it has been the practice of the Department of Justice to order suit to be brought in the name of the Government for the annulment of such patent?—A. I do not think the question whether or not it is a great monopoly is a question of the slightest importance. The question is: Is the patent good? If a monopoly is built upon it, that is nothing. It is incidental. You have a monopoly in your horse, and the patentee has a monopoly in his patent. If the patent is void it should be declared to be void. I do not understand that there has been any such practice of the Government, or that any number of suits are reported which the Government has brought to annul patents.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Are you aware that since 1871 ten such suits have been ordered by the Department of Justice?—A. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That is in evidence before this committee.

Mr. MILLARD. I object to that comment.

Mr. RANNEY. I object. If the chairman is going to put in his statement the rest of us may want to put in our statements, too.

Mr. MILLARD. There has been no such suit as this, Mr. Chairman, and you will not claim that there has been a suit under just such circumstances.

The CHAIRMAN. No; not the same parties nor companies of the same name; but suits ordered by the Government in the name of the Government for the purpose of avoiding patents alleged to have been obtained by fraud.

Mr. RANNEY. I beg you will leave that question for our determination hereafter. If you insist upon going on record on the subject the rest of the committee may have to do the same thing.

Mr. OATES. I suggest that that is a matter for executive session.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not recognize the propriety of the comment. I ask this witness, who has been allowed to give his opinion, and who bases his opinion upon the assumption that this power does not exist, if he knows that ten such suits have been ordered.

The WITNESS. I gave my opinion with great modesty, saying I was not a lawyer.

The CHAIRMAN. With becoming modesty.

Mr. MILLARD. He was asked his opinion.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; and I called his attention to a fact which might possibly modify that opinion, by asking him if he knew that ten such suits had been ordered since 1871.

The WITNESS. I did not know it.

Q. Assuming that this right and power do exist in the Government to bring a suit against the holder of a patent on the allegation that the patent was obtained fraudulently—whether true or false is not material—and Mr. Garland had become Attorney-General before any such application was made, and that the application was afterwards made while he was Attorney-General, do I understand it to be your view that he should have resigned on account of that application?—A. If it was impossible for him to prevent such a suit being brought in the name of the Department of which he was the head, he should have done what any Cabinet minister should do who is required to allow something to be done by his Department and in his name that he regards as entirely improper.

Q. If the law had made provision for just such a case by devolving the duties of the Attorney-General upon another officer in cases in which the Attorney-General was interested, do you still think he should have resigned rather than allow that other officer to discharge the duty the law imposed upon him?—A. I think in the Pan-Electric case he should not have allowed the prosecution to be commenced, and should not have gone away for the purpose of having it commenced.

Q. I do not understand you to answer my question.—A. I think he should have resigned sooner than allow the Pan-Electric prosecution to be commenced by the Department of Justice.

Mr. OATES. Just there permit me to ask a question.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. You assume that he went away for a purpose. What would be your position if you were to hear Mr. Garland testify most emphatically and positively that he did not do any such thing?—A. I should believe what he said.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not think you answered my last question.

The WITNESS. Will you kindly repeat it?

The CHAIRMAN. The reporter will read it.

The reporter read as follows:

“Q. If the law had made provision for just such a case by devolving the duties of the Attorney-General upon another officer in cases in which the Attorney-General was interested, do you still think he should have resigned rather than allow that other officer to discharge the duty the law imposed upon him.”

A. Oh, on such a statement as that, of course, there was no need of his resigning, because in that case nothing was secret or hidden or suspicious. That was a case that the law had clearly provided for, as in the case of a judge who owns bank stock. It would not be necessary for him to resign, of course.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Is not that this case precisely?—A. I do not understand that it is.

The CHAIRMAN. I will venture to say, at the risk of encountering objection, that all the evidence in this case, so far as I am aware of it, is to the effect that the Attorney-General refused from the beginning to have any connection whatever with the application for a suit in the name of the Government, and that he left the city—

Mr. MILLARD. If this is to be taken down in the minutes, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Wait until I get through before you make your objection.

Mr. MILLARD. I do not think your statement should go into the minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Everything has gone into the record. If my statement is wrong it will appear by the record to be wrong. I suggest to the gentlemen that now and hereafter the objection should come after the question.

Mr. MILLARD. I object to your views of the evidence going into the record.

The CHAIRMAN. I stated that—

Mr. MILLARD. I insist that such a statement should not go into the record.

The CHAIRMAN. I have a right to put a hypothetical case.

Mr. RANNEY. If you put a hypothetical case, nobody will object to it.

The CHAIRMAN. I am stating it as my recollection of the testimony in the case. If there is anything to the contrary I do not now recall it, although there may be, as we have had a great deal of testimony. It has been testified to, at all events, that the Attorney-General refused to have anything to do with the bringing of the Government suit, or to allow any person to talk to him about it. It has been testified by the Attorney-General, and by the Solicitor-General, that suit was ordered by the Solicitor-General without any previous conversation whatever with the Attorney-General; that the application came to the Solicitor-General after the Attorney-General's departure, and that the suit was ordered by the Solicitor-General upon his own motion, because of the Attorney-General's absence.

Q. If these things be true, do you regard the Attorney-General as culpable in permitting the suit to be brought?—A. I think the Attorney-General should have protected his Department.

Q. Without knowledge of any application that was to be made?—A. He knew the application had been made to him.

Mr. RANNEY. He said he expected another application.

The WITNESS. He should have protected his Department.

Q. You think he should?—A. He should have protected it.

Q. And he should have prevented the application being allowed even under the circumstances I have mentioned?—A. He should have prevented its being allowed at all.

Q. Even if similar applications had been allowed in ten other cases within the last fifteen years?—A. I do not know about the ten cases.

Q. I say assuming that to be true.

Mr. RANNEY. You do not mean to say such a suit was ever ordered where the Attorney-General was one of the chief parties in interest?

The CHAIRMAN. I am sorry the gentlemen are so nervous about this matter. I am only stating what has been proved here, without pretending to say whether it is true or false.

Mr. MILLARD. I object to the premises on which you base your question. I claim the evidence does not substantiate anything of the sort.

Mr. RANNEY. I see no special nervousness.

The CHAIRMAN. There has been a great deal of it.

Mr. HANBACK. I admire the coolness of the chairman. It is refreshing.

Mr. MILLARD. My objection is not to your examining the witness, but to your assuming facts that do not appear upon the record.

The CHAIRMAN. What fact have I assumed that does not appear?

Mr. MILLARD. You have assumed certain facts which the committee may be called upon to find after they have heard the whole case. It seems to be an improper time for such an assumption.

The CHAIRMAN. I think you will find some difficulty in making good your declaration that I have assumed any fact in this examination that does not fully appear by the record. I do not say whether it is true or false, and I do not say what may be the conclusion upon an examination of the whole testimony. I only say that such testimony has been given, and I make that the basis of an inquiry.

Mr. MOFFATT. I understood you spoke of quite a number of similar suits. I do not suppose you mean that any suit has been ordered without proper reference to the Interior Department.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not say similar suits, but suits in the name of the Government.

Mr. OATES. It does not make any difference whether the hypothesis be true or false.

The CHAIRMAN. The question and the hypothesis must go together.

Mr. MILLARD. He claims that the facts he stated to the witness are established by the record.

Mr. OATES. It makes no difference whether the evidence is true or not. That is a question to be decided hereafter. The chairman is simply stating a hypothetical case.

Mr. MILLARD. The chairman states that the facts are established by previous examination.

The CHAIRMAN. Is not that the fact assumed in every hypothetical case?

Mr. MILLARD. A hypothetical question is proper providing you do not assume false premises, or make a false statement of facts. If you do, it is not proper.

The CHAIRMAN. Every hypothetical case is based upon the assumption on the part of the examiner that the facts have appeared as he states them. Whether they have so appeared or not is not material.

Mr. RANNEY. The only objection I have to your question is that you are accompanying it with a statement of your own convictions and belief, as a matter of statement. Perhaps you are not aware of it.

The CHAIRMAN. I am not aware of it, and I did not intend to state my own conclusions, but only that these things had appeared in evidence. I do not recall at this time any evidence to the contrary. I would not have gone so far as I did if there had been objection. I put an ordinary case.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not object to a hypothetical question if you do not accompany it by your own assertion.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not say what the fact is, only that there has been sufficient evidence given of that kind to warrant the hypothetical case.

Mr. HALE. I have not been present during the examination. I would like to inquire whether the witness has been called on or allowed to give his opinion about the propriety of this suit?

Mr. RANNEY. Oh, yes; the chairman has done that already.

Mr. MILLARD. And Mr. Oates, too.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is entirely incorrect. The chairman has done nothing of the kind.

Mr. MILLARD. Perhaps it was so long ago the chairman has forgotten it.

The CHAIRMAN. I have a reasonably good memory.

Mr. RANNEY. The chairman has put questions that calls for opinions, and they have been expressed on questions of law, morals, &c.

The CHAIRMAN. I believe that is all.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. I will ask you a question suggested by the chairman's question. It is this: If Mr. Garland had found upon his return that advantage had been taken of his absence to get such a suit brought, should he not have required the discontinuance of that suit, or should he not have gone out of the Department?—A. That is my opinion.

Q. He still had it in his power to control his own Department?—A. And he should have smashed it.

Q. He should have smashed it or gone out?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do you know the suit was discontinued immediately upon his return?—A. It was discontinued, as I understand, by direction of the President.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; after consultation with Mr. Garland, and hearing Mr. Garland's statement,

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. I suppose you have not read the evidence so as to know what facts there are in the case, independently of the testimony of any one particular witness?—A. No, sir.

Q. Which tend to show whether Mr. Garland was cognizant of what was to be done?—A. No, sir; I have not had an opportunity.

Q. Nor what the parties themselves who did it understood?—A. No, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not mean to give any opinion I have on the subject one way or the other until we get through with the case.

The WITNESS. Is there anything further?

The CHAIRMAN. No, sir.

Thereupon, at 2.50 p. m., the committee adjourned until to-morrow, May 5, 1886, at 12 m.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Wednesday, May 5, 1886.

The committee met at 12.40 p. m.

GEORGE JONES came before the committee and was duly sworn.

By the CHAIRMAN (Mr. Boyle):

Question. Are you connected with the New York Times?—Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. What is your relation to it?—A. As an owner and a partaker in the business of the office.

Q. Do you control its editorial management?—A. I can hardly say that I do; I have a voice in it.

Q. Who is the editor?—A. There are a great many editors.

Q. I believe you distinguish one over another?—A. Is it necessary that you should go into the interior of the office and ask those questions?

Q. Is there any objection to answering?—A. I do not know that there is, only I should like to know where the limit is that you propose to fix.

The CHAIRMAN. Whenever a question is asked which you think is improper you can so state to the committee, and the committee will then consider it.

The WITNESS. I do not suppose that the interior management of the office is a matter that has anything to do with this inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. We will see if we can get what we want in another way. I do not feel disposed to press the question unnecessarily.

Q. Has the Times participated in the discussion of the matters growing out of the organization of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company?—A. I believe it has; yes, sir.

Q. Can you state which side of the question it has taken, generally?—A. I think the course taken by the Times has been that an inquiry into the manner in which the patent was issued, and its validity, considering its immense value and the fact that probably it is the most valuable and productive monopoly there is on the face of the earth, that a proper examination of the manner in which this franchise was given is entirely correct; and that if it is a perfectly legitimate patent there certainly can be no objection to having it examined into.

Q. You speak of the Bell patent?—A. I speak of the Bell patent.

Q. And the inquiry you speak of is what particular inquiry?—A. The manner in which it was rushed through the Patent Office, which somebody characterized as "like a streak of greased lightning," and leaving old suitors there for patents with their mouths wide open to see this thing go through with a rush.

Q. Do you speak of the investigation by means of a suit in the name of the Government?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Has the Times received any suggestions from the Bell company or any persons connected with it; in other words, has there been any attempt to influence the course of the Times by the Bell company or by any persons connected with it?—A. Not to my knowledge directly, except in one instance.

Q. State what instance it was.—A. I received a letter from John M. Forbes, of Boston, an old friend of mine, whom I have known a great many years, telling me that his son was a large owner—

Mr. MILLARD. I object.

Q. Have you that letter?—A. I have not, and it does not exist. The letter was such that I tore it up without answering it.

Q. You may state the contents of it.—A. The letter asked me to address a letter to the President of the United States, asking his intervention in favor of the patents. I considered it an improper thing to do, and I did not answer the letter. I could not find the letter when I came away, although I looked for it. I presume it was thrown away.

Q. Was there anything in the letter looking to the influencing of the Times as a public journal?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you had any suggestion from any other person connected with the Bell company in that direction?—A. Not to my personal knowledge, although I believe there has been.

Q. Can you give us any information which would enable us to ascertain whether such efforts have been made with any other persons connected with the Times?—

A. While I was absent—I was away for some weeks—I understood a lawyer by the name of Dickinson called there——

Mr. RANNEY. That is not competent.

The CHAIRMAN. I am merely trying to get a lead, to see if we cannot find some one who does know about it.

A. (Continuing) And that matter was offered——

Mr. MILLARD. If the witness has no personal knowledge of the transaction I object to his testimony.

The WITNESS. I have not, and so stated; but the chairman asked me to go on and state what I was told, and I am doing so.

The CHAIRMAN. It was not with a view of proving the fact, but of getting some person who can prove the fact.

Mr. RANNEY. He can name anybody who told him.

Q. Who told you Mr. Dickerson called?—A. It was told to me by several people in the office; I can't tell who, now.

Q. Can't you name one of them so that he may be subpoenaed?—A. I think a gentleman named Miller, connected with the office, told me that.

Q. What is his full name?—A. Charles R. Miller.

Q. What is his position in the Times establishment?—A. He is one of the editors, sir.

Q. You say it was Mr. Dickerson?—A. It was Mr. Dickinson.

Q. Where does he reside?—A. In New York, I believe. I do not know the gentleman.

Q. What is his profession?—A. Patent lawyer, I am told. I don't know him at all.

Q. Do you know whether he is the attorney or counsel for the Bell company?

The WITNESS. Do you mean to ask if I know that of my own knowledge?

The CHAIRMAN. Have you heard that he is?

A. I have heard so.

Q. Have you any other information as to an effort having been made to control or to influence the Times by any person associated or connected with the Bell company?—A. I do not know of any other.

Q. Has any person connected with the Pan-Electric company or any other telephone company endeavored to control or influence the Times as to this controversy?—

A. I do not know that they have, except, I believe, we had some advertisements in the paper.

Q. Do you recall what advertisements?—A. That I could not tell you. I have not looked it up. I am not very certain about it. Will you allow me to ask you a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

The WITNESS. Does Mr. Van Benthuyzen in any way represent the Pan-Electric company?

The CHAIRMAN. No, sir; he is understood to be the president of the National Improved Telephone Company.

Mr. RANNEY. With a written agreement of association or combination.

The WITNESS. Then I will change my answer. I do not think they ever have. Mr. Van Benthuyzen had some advertisements in the paper.

Q. When was that?—A. That was while I was absent. It was some time in March—no; it was earlier than that.

Q. What kind of advertisement was it?—A. I have not read it. I could not tell you, really.

Q. Do you know of any one else connected with the Pan-Electric company or the National Improved or the Globe Telephone Company having undertaken to influence the course of the Times?—A. I do not know of any. I do not know that anybody has done so.

The CHAIRMAN. I used the word "else". Perhaps I ought not to have done so.

Q. An article appeared in the Times of January 1 which I will show to you. [Exhibits paper to witness.] Was the arrangement for the publication of that article made with you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you know of its being made at the time?—A. I knew that there was a general paper to be made up which was to be called "New York City's Growth and the Commercial Development of the American Metropolis," and that ninety-six different kinds of business had articles in it, all of which are marked with three stars which the printers would recognize as indicating advertisements.

Q. Are there three stars at the end of that article?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say that indicates it was an advertisement?—A. Yes, sir; I will show you that other papers use it in the same way. It is a known mark. [Exhibiting copy of New York World to chairman.] Those little advertisements at the bottom all have stars.

Q. Do you know how much was paid for the insertion of that article?—A. I know that it is stated at $1,200. It was so much a column; three hundred lines to a column, and a dollar a line.

Q. It has appeared that two thousand copies of the paper containing this article were furnished to the Bell company?—A. They probably purchased two thousand copies. All the parties purchased more or less copies containing their business notices.

Q. Would the copies be paid for in addition to the $1,200?—A. Certainly.

Q. Have any articles on the legal aspect of this controversy, as to the bringing of the Government suit, been contributed to the Times?

The WITNESS. By outside parties?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

A. Not to my knowledge; no, sir.

Q. You say there has been none?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Has any money been paid to the Times besides what was paid for advertising?—A. No, sir; I might say, by the way, that we paid out for information, telegraphing, and reporting twice or three times the amount we got for that advertisement.

Q. How was that paid, and to whom?—A. That was for getting general information by telegraph, &c.

Q. Were any articles paid for?—A. No; we sent reporters and got telegrams, &c. I received a letter this morning stating the amount that was paid out, and I can tell you. [Refers to letter.] This letter speaks of Mr. Van Benthuyzen and the National Improved Company. The New York Times has paid out not less than $2,500, probably, in telegrams and payments to reporters and correspondents while getting and presenting the facts against the company in the interests of the people.

Mr. RANNEY. In the interests of whom?

The WITNESS. In the interests of the people.

Mr. RANNEY. You dropped your voice and I did not hear the last word.

Q. Do you know of any money or other consideration having been paid to any other of the New York papers for publications in regard to this controversy affecting the Bell patents?

The WITNESS. From personal knowledge?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

A. No, sir.

Q. Can you give us any information which would enable us to learn if any such money has been paid?—A. I can only say that after the visit of Mr. Dickinson there was a large number of articles occupying large space in three or four newspapers, and containing almost the same arguments, dressed up in a different form; and that led up to the suspicion that there was some influence. You can judge as well as I can what influence it was that induced those publications.

Q. The Times is said to have stated on various occasions that other of the New York papers had been or were controlled in the interest of the Bell company. Have you any knowledge of that fact?—A. Only as I stated to you, the evidence of the great interest taken by these papers simultaneously and containing very much the same line of argument. It seemed as if the subject had become interesting to three or four newspapers at the same time. This, I say, led up to a suspicion that there was a motive. There might not have been.

Q. The Times has spoken of certain of the New York papers, including the Sun, as allies of the Bell company. Can you state what was meant by that?—A. I think I covered that in what I stated.

Q. In its issue of the 3rd of February there was this very short article:

"The Pan-Electric scandal, involving certain public men at Washington, is a small matter in comparison with the Bell Telephone scandal, involving certain newspaper editors in the city of New York."

Have you any information other than you have already stated?—A. I have not any more than I have stated to you—the suspicion brought out by the fact that there was a crusade made simultaneously, like the advance of a Chinese army, beating all the gongs and blowing all the whistles.

Q. What papers do you speak of as having come out simultaneously?

The WITNESS. Is it necessary for me to name them?

The CHAIRMAN. If you prefer not to do so, I do not think——

Mr. RANNEY. I think he ought to mention them.

The WITNESS. I have no objection, if you say so.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

The WITNESS. The Sun, the Tribune, the World, and the Evening Post. I know that after that period, after the general explosion was over, the very elaborate articles, arguments, &c., the publications were confined to very small space.

Q. After what period was that?—A. After the idea was mooted that they might have had some personal interest.

Q. Do you know anything about the date at which Mr. Dickerson visited your office?—A. No, sir; I was absent at the time, I think.

Q. Have you any stock or interest in any of the companies supposed to have conflicting interests with the Bell company?—A. I have no interest in any telegraph company.

Q. Or any telephone company?—A. Or any telephone company.

Q. You say you have no interest in any telegraph company?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know of any person connected with the Times having any such interest?—A. No; I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. I believe that is all.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You spoke of Mr. Forbes who wrote you a letter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What Forbes was it?—A. John M.

Q. The old gentleman?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. A man you have known how long?—A. Oh, I could hardly tell how long I have known him; a great many years. It is the Mr. Forbes who was on the national committee last year.

Q. Not the young Mr. Forbes who is the president of the Bell Telephone Company?—A. No; he is the son.

Q. Mr. Forbes, sr., wrote you a letter, did he?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You know he was not an officer in the Bell Telephone Company?—A. I did not know anything about it.

Q. He did not write you as such, did he?—A. He wrote me his son had large interests.

Q. Could you give us the language of that letter?—A. He said, as near as I can remember, that he should consider it a very friendly act if I would write to Mr. Cleveland to take action to stop this suit, or something like that. I was surprised to get such a letter from him, and I did not reply to it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Can you recall the date of that letter?—A. I cannot.

Q. Had the Times spoken out on this matter before that?—A. I think it was earlier than that.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Can you not fix the date approximately?—A. No; I cannot. I think it was before the 1st of January.

Q. That is very indefinite.—A. I am sorry I cannot fix it much more definitely. It was some time during the fall of the year, perhaps.

Q. Do you know whether it was before or after the first suit brought by the Government in Memphis was dismissed?—A. No; I do not.

Q. Can you not state a little more definitely the language of that letter, and as to what he asked you to do?—A. He asked me, as a friend, to write to the President. What I gathered from it was that I should—

Q. I would like the language, not what you gathered from it.—A. I could not give you the language. He would consider it a friendly act if I would do so.

Q. Do you mean he made any improper proposition to you?—A. Not at all. It was on the ground of our old acquaintance and friendship.

Q. You did not understand Mr. Forbes to ask you to do anything improper, did you?—A. I thought it was an improper thing for me to write to the President, at least in that way.

Q. Or on the subject at all?—A. Or on the subject at all. I believe he has no more to do with it than the Emperor of Russia.

Q. Were you aware that the Pan-Electric people and Mr. Van Benthuyzen were writing and telegraphing him abundantly at the same time?

The WITNESS. Writing to whom?

Mr. RANNEY. To the President.

A. Oh, I did not know anything about it at all.

Q. Had you not seen published telegrams and articles of Mr. Van Benthuyzen's, written to the President of the United States on the subject?—A. No, sir.

Q. You were not aware of the fact?—A. I hadn't enough interest to follow out in detail all that there was in the newspapers.

Q. Have you looked at your paper to see what articles were published on that subject?

The WITNESS. About that time?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes, sir.

The WITNESS. Editorial articles?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes, sir.

A. I generally had read them; yes, sir.

Q. Do you know Mr. Van Benthuyzen?—A. I do not.

Q. You do not know him at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know Mr. C. P. Huntington, of Mississippi?

The WITNESS. Of Mississippi?

Mr. RANNEY. I believe he hails from there. He was the vice-president of the National Improved Company.

A. I do not. I thought you meant C. P. Huntington, president of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad Company. I know him; I do not know the other man.

Q. There are two men of the same name. You do not know this man?—A. I do not know him at all.

Q. Have you not published in your paper articles written by him?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Or telegrams?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or from Van Benthuyzen?—A. There were some advertisements that were sent on to me to day.

Q. Have you looked to see how much he has paid for the advertisements?—A. He has not paid us a dollar.

Q. Did you do his advertising for nothing?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then what do you mean by his not having paid you?—A. Because he would not respond to the bills. (Laughter.) He beat us on the execution.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. How much was the bill?—A. I do not know.

Mr. RANNEY. Let us see the bill.

The WITNESS. You shall have it.

Mr. MILLARD. I have no doubt but that it was a just bill.

The WITNESS. Beating on execution is a bad beat.

Mr. RANNEY. Let us have all the bills.

The WITNESS (handing paper to Mr. Ranney). It is all on that paper.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Is this an itemized bill?—A. That is the basis on which the bill was made. That is the clerk's estimate of what it would come to. I imagine Mr. Van Benthuyzen has the bill.

Q. Where is the itemized bill you sent him?—A. I suppose he has that. There is the order and the calculation of what the amount is.

Q. How long had the advertisement been inserted?—A. I don't think it was inserted more than once. It is stated on that paper, I think.

Mr. RANNEY. I haven't looked sufficiently to ascertain that.

The WITNESS. I can tell you if you will allow me to look at it.

Q. I see an article purporting to be signed by W. Van Benthuyzen, and dated New Orleans, February 1. Is that this year?—A. Yes, sir; I suppose so.

Mr. RANNEY (reading). "In the World of January 28 the following statement appeared in the special dispatches from Washington, D. C."—

The CHAIRMAN. Do you want this to go into the record?

Mr. RANNEY. Perhaps not; I will see.

"Dr. Rogers was the originator of the National Improved Telephone Company, from which he and his son had made a modest fortune.

"There is not one word of truth in this statement. This man Rogers has never been connected with the National Improved Telephone Company in any manner, shape, or form, nor is he known to the originators of the National Improved Company. That company was formed here, and in the course of business bought, together with a large number of other patents, a few invented by J. Harris Rogers, which he had sold. Subsequently Rogers made a slight alteration, and obtained a patent for a transmitter for what he calls an improvement on his previous devices, which no longer belong to him, for which, I am informed, the parties who had bought the previous patents refused to pay him $5. As soon as the National Improved Telephone Company became the owner of these patents and saw that the Pan-Electric Company was using the so-called improvement from Rogers, we notified that company that we would not permit them to use this transmitter and the receiver they were using, as both infringed patents owned by this company, and the leading members of the Pan-Electric Company now realize that this is a fact, and that they cannot use the devices without our consent. As a matter of fact, we never used any of the Rogers patents. We don't consider them of any value compared with others, but we do not intend that others shall use our property without our consent.

"All the fuss being made about the Pan-Electric Company is no doubt paid for by the Bell Company, as the Pan-Electric is a company without a telephone patent that they can use, and this fuss has nothing to do with the right of the whole people to institute a suit to annul that which is believed to have been obtained fraudulently or in the face of previous inventions by others. Your attention is also called to the fact that in the Tribune of January 30 it is stated that I am a member of the Pan-Electric Company, and had said that with others I had secured the passage of a bill authorizing the Attorney-General to institute suit under certain circumstances. The writer of this knew that he lied when he wrote it."

That is characteristic.

"I never had an interest in the Pan-Electric, and never knew of the bill referred to until informed of it, and I afterwards found that no such bill had been adopted, and I never had made any such statement.

"W. VAN BENTHUYSEN."

Q. Did your suspicion that other papers were getting pay for what they published have its origin in this statement of Mr. Van Benthuyesen?—A. No, sir; for I never read it, and did not know of its contents until you read it now.

Q. You published it, did you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And sent in your bill for it?—A. Yes, sir. I do not read all the advertisements that are put in the paper. It would be a tedious business.

Q. You did not put three stars at the bottom of it, I see?—A. It was in the advertising column.

Q. It is headed "Special notices"?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And was published as a special notice?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I see the manuscript is the same as the print. Is that the only thing you ever put into your paper?—A. I cannot say that.

Q. The only thing coming from Mr. Van Benthuyesen or the National Improved Company?—A. I cannot say. I don't know anything about it.

Q. Have you looked to see whether there was not a series of articles in that line coming from other sources?—A. I don't know of any.

Q. You have not looked to see, have you?—A. No.

Q. The bill you sent him for this was, as I see by the paper, $58.75?—A. And returned nulla bona—no good.

Mr. RANNEY. It was returned protested?

Mr. MILLARD. Nulla bona.

The WITNESS. Or words to that effect.

Q. Did you insert that advertisement more than once?—A. It says there we did not. It is marked and you can see what it does say.

Q. I don't see any mark here as to the number of insertions in the printed paper; possibly it may be in the manuscript. You can find that easier than I can.—A. (Referring to paper). "Special notices; 5th page; once; inserted February 2."

Q. Of this year?—A. Of this year. Here is the number of lines and the computation of what it comes to per line.

Q. I suppose Mr. Van Benthuyesen's statement that the Bell company was to pay for it did not influence your mind any or create any suspicion?—A. I did not know that he made such a statement. As I told you, I never read it and did not know its contents until I heard it read here.

Q. Did you read the other newspapers on the subject that you have alluded to?—A. Yes, sir; some of them.

Q. The articles that came out simultaneously that you spoke of?—A. I did not read them carefully. I saw them.

Q. What were those articles; can you describe them?—A. Defending the Bell patent, I suppose; I didn't read them carefully.

Q. Do you mean the history of the Pan-Electric company, with the Roger's letters?—A. Yes, sir; I didn't read them carefully.

Q. Are those the articles you referred to as having been published in the other papers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which gave you the impression that they were publishing them in the interest and for the pay of the Bell company?—A. I did not say that.

Q. Were those the articles that awakened your suspicions, and from which you drew that inference?—A. Yes, sir; and the editorial utterances as well. They were in the same line.

Q. Connected with those articles?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I only want to identify them. Did you ever publish in your paper any of the letters or correspondence purporting to come from the Messrs. Rogers?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. Did you ever yourself publish any of what purported to be a history of the Pan-Electric scheme?—A. Not that I know of. I wish to say that the whole subject possessed no interest for me, and it was very voluminous, and I did not read what I felt no interest in.

Q. Did you ever take any pains to ascertain the truth of that story or history as published in the World, the Tribune, the Sun, and the Post, and of what was stated in the correspondence given out by Dr. Rogers or obtained from him?

The WITNESS. Did I ever take any interest in it?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

A. I did not.

Q. Did you ever take any interest in it far enough to take pains to ascertain about it?—A. No; not a particle of interest.

Q. Did you ever take enough pains to have the matter investigated?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you have a reporter in Washington?—A. Yes, sir; several.

Q. Did you instruct him in any way to look into the matter to see if it could be verified?—A. I do not instruct reporters; that is done by the editor.

Q. So far as you know, was the reporter or anybody ever authorized or requested to investigate the facts purported to be disclosed by that history and correspondence published in the other papers?—A. I have made no inquiry about it.

Q. You were not aware, probably, that those papers which published the history and correspondence took extra pains to verify them before they published them, were you?—A. I was not aware of it; no, sir.

Q. You did not seek to ascertain whether they published them because they deemed them to be interesting matters of news to the public? [Witness shakes his head.] The reporter has no mark for the shake of the head. Please say yes or no.—A. I don't know of anything of the kind.

Q. So that you published none of those yourself?—A. If you call me the paper, I did. If you don't call me the paper, I did not. I don't suppose I am either one or the other.

Q. I mean by you the paper you represent, of course.—A. I cannot say I represent it entirely. I represent part of it.

Q. Did the New York Times to your knowledge publish any of them?

The WITNESS. Any of those articles?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Or any of that correspondence?—A. I think not. I do not know. It may have.

Q. Do you not know that your paper preserved a studied solemn silence on the subject?—A. No; I do not know it preserved anything of the kind.

Q. And you had not the curiosity, or your paper did not care enough about it, to ascertain whether it was true or not?—A. I did not make any attempt to investigate it whatever.

Q. Had you any reason to doubt the authenticity of the letters of the various Pan-Electric people coming from Dr. Rogers?—A. I don't know that I ever entertained the question whether I doubted or did not doubt it. I told you the thing possessed no interest for me whatever. I did not read it.

Q. Did you ever read them sufficiently to see whether they were interesting reading?—A. I did not.

Q. Or whether they indicated anything wrong on the part of the parties engaged in the matter?—A. I did not read them.

Q. Did you have any one do it with a view of seeing whether they should go into the paper?—A. Ah, that is another thing. You say "Did you have any one?" It is the business of the special people in a newspaper to go over all such matter, and I try to get men who will do that carefully, honestly, and faithfully.

Q. Was there any one that you know of that ever for your paper examined and scrutinized that history and that correspondence to see whether there was anything in it worth giving to the public?—A. Undoubtedly there was.

Q. Who was it?—A. I cannot tell you. There are perhaps a hundred men who are at work at night on the paper for the coming morrow. If you ask me what men did this work or what men did that work, it is utterly impossible for me to reply.

Q. Certain it is that whoever did it did not find enough of interest in it to have the matter go into the New York Times?—A. No, sir. I trust that to them.

Q. The New York Times has from the beginning discouraged this investigation and taken very little notice of it, has it not?—A. I don't know. I suppose we have given as much space to the matter as we considered it was worth.

Q. That was not my question. We do not ask you to estimate its value.—A. I did not mean to estimate its value, but what we considered as interesting to our people. I suppose they gave all they thought was necessary. I did not mean to make an impertinent remark. You will excuse me.

Q. Has your paper taken any notice of it, or published anything about it, or given any evidence to the public?—A. I read Mr. Dana's evidence this morning in the Times.

Q. Mr. Dana's?—A. Yes, sir; you had him here yesterday.

Q. Is that the first you have read?—A. No; I think I read something in relation to Mr. Pulitzer's evidence.

Q. Anything else?—A. I don't especially remember that we published anything else interesting.

Q. Your interest in the investigation has seemingly been confined to the newspapers?—A. Yes, sir; very naturally.

Q. Have you had a reporter that has reported for your newspaper any of the other evidence that has been given in this investigation?—A. I suppose we have. I have taken it for granted that they have attended the sessions of this committee.

Q. Are you aware whether they have or not?—A. I have not asked the question.

Q. Is it or not true, so far as you have seen in your paper, and have had the direction of it, that you have spoken slightly of this investigation from the outset?—

A. I doubt whether there has been anything of the sort. I said at first that I thought we had given all the space the thing was worth.

Q. I suppose from your remark you did not deem it worth anything, or likely to disclose anything, or that it had disclosed anything?—A. I beg you to make a distinction between what I think and what the people who provide for the paper think. That is a wide difference.

Q. When I say you, you are to understand me as meaning your paper.—A. I cannot answer questions addressed to me in that sense, because I am not the New York Times.

Q. Have you not taken interest enough in the editorial columns of the Times to see what course the Times has pursued in relation to this investigation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then will you please tell us how much they have noticed it and how much they have ever published about it?—A. I have seen that they favor the examination into the validity of the Bell telephone, and I cannot see how anybody can object to it.

Q. Be kind enough to repeat that.—A. I have seen that they favor an examination and legal investigation of the manner in which the Bell Telephone Company received its patent, and its being a legal instrument.

Q. Who favors it?—A. The paper. I see that by the editorial articles.

Q. In other words, it has been uniformly against the Bell Telephone Company, and in favor of the Pan-Electric people, has it not?—A. Not at all. To support an investigation where there is a doubt about the legality of a thing is not to be against it, as I understand it.

Q. If there has been anything in the columns of the New York Times saying or intimating that there might be anything in this transaction now under investigation damaging to the Pan-Electric people, I would thank you to tell us where to find it. A. I will leave you to find it; there is the paper.

Q. Do you know of anything?—A. I should not be able to answer that question until I had gone through an investigation that I prefer to leave to you to make. You have a file of the Times here in Washington that you can look at.

Q. Are you aware of anything?—A. I cannot reply to that question directly. There is the evidence in itself, and I invite you to look.

Q. Have you not seen so that you are aware whether that is so or not?—A. Do you want me to express an opinion that we have been unfavorable to this patent?

Q. I only want your understanding of the general nature and character of the matter.—A. I reply to that by saying we have favored this examination.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. You mean an examination of the patent, not this investigation?—A. Of the patent and its legality.

Mr. MILLARD. He is asking about this investigation.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You have favored the Government suit?—A. We have favored the Government suit.

Q. Has not the Times dealt in some very severe strictures and criticisms on the Bell telephone patent?—A. Very possibly.

Q. Have you dealt in anything else in that paper; have you ever put anything into that paper that you know of that either intimates or implies that there is or might be found to be anything damaging to the Pan-Electric people, or to the officers of the Government who had any connection with it?—A. I will have to invite you to make that examination from the files of the paper. I told you that I have been away from home a portion of the time. I have not seen the paper at all times.

Q. They say doctors do not take their own medicines. Is it true that editors do not read their own papers?—A. To a certain extent I think it is true.

Q. Are you aware of anything of that kind in the Times from the beginning down to now?—A. If there has been anything favorable—

Q. Are you aware that there has been anything said or intimated unfavorable to the people engaged in the Pan-Electric scheme, or the officers of the Government whose names have been connected with the matter?—A. I am quite well aware that we published a letter from General Johnston in reply to an invitation to take some of the Pan-Electric stock, in which he said it was a swindle, and he should be considered a swindler if he did it. What do you think of that?

Q. Let me understand that.—A. He said he declined.

Q. You published a letter from General Johnston?—A. From General Johnston.

Q. It was one of the letters that you found in the columns of the other papers, was it not?—A. That might be considered as unfavorable, might it not?

Q. You published that?—A. We published that.

Q. Did you publish any other letters?—A. I believe we did; yes.

Q. What ones?—A. I couldn't name them. I think there were several.

Q. Have you ever published in your paper that you know of or have ever seen anything indicating that there was or that there might possibly be discovered to be anything unfavorable to the Pan-Electric people or to the officers of the Government connected with the Government suit?—A. I think when we published statements that it is a swindle and all that sort of thing, it might be considered unfavorable.

Q. Have you published an article saying the Pan-Electric company was a swindle?—A. We published this letter of General Johnston's.

Q. Was that all?

The WITNESS. Was that all!

Mr. RANNEY. That was not a comment of yours.

The WITNESS. Not ours.

Q. Did you understand that letter to say that the Pan-Electric company was a swindle, or that they had not been swindlers in the management of it?—A. I understood General Johnston's language in the letter.

Q. To be what; that the Pan-Electric scheme was a swindle?—A. He so stated; that he would consider himself a swindler if he accepted any of the stock without payment.

Q. He did?—A. You know what it is as well as I do.

Q. Is that your recollection of it?—A. I think it is.

Q. Do you recollect that he refused to accept any stock in it?—A. The letter will tell. You say you have it. Suppose you have it read.

Q. If that was your idea of it—A. If you are going to test my memory in that way, what is the use, when you have the document here? I shall insist on reading the document.

Q. I am only trying to ascertain whether you had in mind the same letter I had.—A. Oh, very well.

Q. Where did you get the letter that was published?—A. I do not know. It came in the regular course of other news.

Q. From where?—A. I do not know.

Q. Was it one you took out of the other newspapers?—A. From your questions you seem to suppose one man edits a whole newspaper and knows everything that goes into it from the advertisements to the editorials. If you will consult your own good judgment, you will see it is an impossibility, and yet you ask me to do that very thing.

Q. I am only endeavoring to ascertain how far you do know what you publish?—A. I suppose you will get my knowledge in a very short time. It is not extensive.

Q. You know of nothing else published in the line of my previous inquiry?—A. No; I do not. I will give you everything I have got with the greatest pleasure and without any reservation, or without any attempt to damage anybody else.

Q. Certainly. I do not question it at all. All I want is to understand you. All you know that has ever been published in the damaging line is a letter of Gen. Johnston's, which, according to your recollection, held that anybody that took a gift of the Pan-Electric stock was a swindler?—A. I said in addition I thought there were a number of other statements.

Q. Had your paper, to your personal knowledge, ever had offered to it any articles for publication on behalf of the Bell Telephone Company except the article published on January 1st?—A. Not to my knowledge; I did not know that was offered until I saw it in print.

Q. Do you know who solicited and got that?—A. An advertising agent.

Q. Have you any means of determining what was paid to your paper for the other advertisements relating to other industries contained in the same paper?—A. They were paid for at exactly the same rate per line.

Q. You have a fixed rate, then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the article furnished by the Bell Telephone Company was paid for at that fixed rate?—A. At the same rate the other ninety-five articles were paid for, covering pianofortes, sewing-machines, and every conceivable industry.

Q. Have you ever personally written any article for the Times on this subject?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who attends to the editorial work?—A. There are a great many people, as I said before; a great many.

Q. Did I ask you how much you charged Mr. Van Benthuisen?—A. The rate on special notices I think is fifty cents a line.

Q. I see it is minuted in pencil something like $60?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. I desire that statement to go into the record. It is a statement that affects Mr. Van Benthuisen's testimony.

Mr. EDEN. As we are not investigating Mr. Van Benthuisen, I don't think the paper is material.

The WITNESS. That is a voucher, I wish to say, of our having performed that work, and if we should sue him it would be valuable.

Mr. RANNEY. It is an article signed personally by Mr. Van Benthuisen.

Mr. EDEN. We are not investigating him.

Mr. RANNEY. He has been a witness in the case and his credibility is involved.

Mr. EDEN. You did not ask him about it. You ought to ask him about it, if you want to put it in and see what he has to say about it, according to all the rules of evidence.

The WITNESS. I wish to say that that is a voucher for his indebtedness to us.

Mr. RANNEY. It is a statement of his under his own hand, and is competent evidence, under the rule, to affect his testimony.

Mr. MILLARD. There is another ground of competency—the combination between these two companies.

Mr. EDEN. It has nothing to do with this investigation. It is simply a private matter between him and the editor of the Times.

Mr. RANNEY. Suppose Mr. Van Benthuisen had been a witness in court, and had been examined on one side or the other and had sworn to certain things, and you should then find a statement of his in his own handwriting and over his own signature that contradicted him?

The CHAIRMAN. You would be required to call his attention to it if you wanted to contradict him.

Mr. EDEN. You must call his attention to it and let him give his version of it before you can contradict him.

Mr. RANNEY. That is not a rule of evidence in all cases. In some States it is and in others it is not. That only applies where a man has stated a thing verbally. I say it should go in, and I want a vote of the committee upon it.

The WITNESS. I have no objection to your retaining it.

Mr. EDEN. I don't think it is of sufficient importance to have a vote on it.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not care to discuss it. I think it is competent evidence, and I ask that it go into the record. If it is objected to, I want a vote of the committee.

Mr. EDEN. It is wholly immaterial.

Mr. HANBACK. I suppose that declaration might run against the thousand names of stockholders in the Bell Telephone Company.

Mr. OATES. I think we ought to let it go in as the shortest way. It may possibly be worth something.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any objection.

Mr. EDEN. I do not insist on my objection. It is an immaterial matter.

Mr. RANNEY. There is something very material there.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. I show you the letter from Gen. Johnston to Dr. J. W. Rogers, dated December 23, 1883. Please state if that is the letter to which you have referred.—A. That is it.

Q. Since looking at that letter, do you desire to make any further statement?—A. No. I only remembered it in general terms. It is worded a little different from what I expected to find it as relating to Mr. Harris. That is the only difference.

Q. Do you find instead of his saying that a person who would accept without paying for it some of this stock would be a swindler, that he says if they put their stock on the market and it did not prove to be valuable they would be regarded as swindlers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You compared the attack (I suppose I may so term it) of several newspapers contemporaneously upon the Pan-Electric company to the advance of a Chinese army?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you say that the similarity of the matter in them and the simultaneousness of the attack, together with other matters coming to your attention, impressed you with the idea that there was some improper motive behind it that impelled it. Was that what you intended to say?—A. I did not say that. I said it probably impressed the person who wrote that paragraph—who it was I don't know—and that was probably the cause of his writing it in that shape. I argued that the reason was as I supposed.

Q. There were several paragraphs in the Times. The general course of the paper was indicated, I believe, only by one article, read by the chairman?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that course in those editorials brought forth in the Times before or after the date at which you were informed Mr. Dickerson visited the office and proposed some sort of business?—A. I think it was after that.

Q. Was that visit a circumstance connected with the matter?—A. Yes, sir; and the fact that the matter, as I am told, that he offered to us, and we declined, appeared in the other papers.

Q. Did the receipt of the letter by you from the father of the president of the Bell company have anything to do, also, with bringing about that conclusion?—A. No, sir; not at all.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. The chairman has handed me an article purporting to come from the Times of February 3, 1886, headed "The telephone conspiracy." It reads:

"The impropriety of Attorney-General Garland's and Senator Harris's course in accepting gifts of telephone stock is in no wise lessened by the fact that the newspaper outcry about the Pan-Electric scandal is promoted and for the most part paid for by the Bell Telephone Company. * * * But it will be well for the people of the United States to understand the precise limits of the 'Pan-Electric scandal,' and to be on their guard against the efforts of the Bell Telephone Company and its newspaper organs to use this miserable Pan-Electric business to undo what has been done by the Government in the proceedings to test the validity of its patents."

Q. Do you know anything about that?—A. No, sir. What is the date of it?

Q. February 3, 1886.—A. I was away from home at that time.

Q. That is intimating a little more than a suspicion. That is making a direct charge; is it not?—A. Well—

Q. Do you know who wrote that?—A. I do not.

Q. Under date of February 4 is the following:

"We trust that the Evening Post will promptly express its pleasure at finding that here is 'something in the state of the law, or in the practice of the courts, which has made Mr. Lamar's action imperative;' and we are sure that the Sun, if it really feels for Mr. Jay Gould the deep respect it professes, will cease to impugn the motives of the Secretary of the Interior in prescribing a remedy to which that gifted"—

The remainder of the sentence is omitted. Do you know anything about that?—A. No, sir.

Q. I read on further:

"We will cite but a single precedent for the course taken by Secretary Lamar, but it is a case so closely parallel to the Bell telephone case that the force of the analogy will be at once admitted, and the Sun at least will bow in unquestioning assent to its authority, for it is a case in which Mr. Jay Gould, through the Western Union Telegraph Company, besought the Government of the United States to intervene for his protection against a greedy fellow who was fattening upon the proceeds of a fraudulently-obtained patent."

Do you know anything about that?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Again, under date of February 6:

"The adherents and advocates of the Bell telephone monopoly are making a great ado about what may be done by means of the private suits now pending, which involve to a greater or less degree the right to use the telephone. Full justice, they say, can be done to all concerned in these private suits, and there is no use of a suit being brought by the Attorney-General in the name of the people. The attitude of these Bell agents is precisely the same as was that of the Gould-Field-Sage clique in the elevated railway litigation in this city and State."

Do you know anything about that?

The WITNESS. Is that about the same period of time?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

A. No, sir.

Q. Another part of it:

"At this trial material witnesses and papers"—

The CHAIRMAN. If he was not there, he cannot state.

Mr. RANNEY. I will put this general question to you, with all respect:

Q. Do not those articles fairly indicate the spirit and tone of the articles which have appeared in the New York Times?—A. I do not know that I am called upon to judge of the articles. Perhaps you might say I was a partial judge. I would prefer to let somebody else pass upon it.

Q. I ask without regard to the truthfulness or correctness of them, but simply to show the general tone.—A. I do not think you should ask me to pass judgment on them, because you might say I was unduly prejudiced.

Q. I do not ask whether in your judgment they were true or not, but whether they do not indicate fairly the tone and spirit of your comments.—A. I do not think I am called upon to answer.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. Can you name who it was connected with the Times to whom Mr. Dickerson at the time of his visit made any proposition or communication?—A. I did not inquire. He called at the editorial room, I believe, and saw several of the editors. There were a dozen of them there.

Q. Did you learn that from one of the editors?—A. I learned of it after I came back from my vacation.

Q. From one of the editors?—A. That this matter had been brought there. I don't remember who told me. They told me it was brought there and refused.

Q. Can you name the person?—A. I cannot name the person.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Can you name any person in the office to whom it would be likely to be presented?—A. There are certain nights, Mr. Chairman, when one man is on and in charge, and on other nights another man is in charge. How could I? It is impossible, unless you take a scoop-net and drag them all down here.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Who is responsible for what goes in the paper in your absence?—A. Well, the responsibility is very much divided. It is not any one man. The news columns are in charge of one man, and the editorial page in charge of one man, perhaps, to-night, and another man, perhaps, to-morrow night.

Q. Can you not cover the entire ground by mentioning two or three persons?—A. I don't think you have a right to go into the interior of my office.

Q. The question is suggested by the articles read by Mr. Ranney that seem to have gone into your paper in your absence.—A. They go in every time I am absent. Something or other always gets in. We are like the woman at church; we are talking all the while.

Q. You know we are required to investigate the newspapers, and I want to ascertain the name of some responsible man.—A. When you assume to get hold of one man that knows everything about the newspaper and all that goes in, you are barking up a very high tree. It is not a possibility; you can see that as well as I can. I could not answer, nor could any other man.

Q. Would you rather not give us the names of the men?—A. I do not think you have a right to go into the interior of the office.

Mr. MILLARD. I think under the resolution we are directed to do so, but I will not insist upon the question.

The WITNESS. I don't think you have a right to do it. That is private business. I have told you everything I know in regard to the matter.

Q. Can you give me the name of any party who had charge of that particular part of the paper at the time these articles went in?—A. I do not propose to give you any of those names, and I could not do it definitely if I wanted to.

Q. Who of the Pan-Electric directors are you personally acquainted with?—A. I do not know that I know a soul.

Q. Have you not had an interview with Casey Young this morning?—A. Yes, sir. I did not know him from Adam. I had an interview with him. He came and said a few words to me.

Q. Before you were sworn?—A. Yes. Do you want to know what he said?

Mr. MILLARD. No.

The CHAIRMAN. I think the witness had better state what he said.

Mr. EDEN. He had better state.

The WITNESS. He suggested that he was supposed to be a continuous witness during the entire progress of this matter.

Mr. MILLARD. Speak a little louder.

The WITNESS. He wanted to furnish me information, and I didn't propose to take information second hand from anybody.

Q. He proposed to furnish you information?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do I understand you to say he told you that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he call you out of the room for the purpose of telling you that?—A. I don't know what his purpose was. That was what he said.

Q. Did he call you to one side?—A. Yes.

Q. And then make that statement to you?—A. Yes.

Q. What else did he say?—A. That is all there was about it. I told him I had nothing to do with that sort of thing. I cut it very short.

Q. Did he tell you who he was?—A. No. He was pointed out to me.

Q. Were you here last Thursday?—A. No, sir; this is my first appearance.

Q. I will ask you substantially the question that was asked you by the chairman, and I will call your attention to the particular articles that he read to you. I will ask you whether it is not a fact that the Times, as a newspaper, has been hostile or opposed to this investigation?—A. I submit that the Times is able to speak for itself. You have it, and you can form your own judgment. That would be fairer probably than to ask for mine, for I might not be considered an impartial witness in that case. Is not that common sense?

Mr. MILLARD. I had an idea that you were about all there was of the New York Times. I gave you credit for that.

The WITNESS. It is a great mistake.

Q. What position has the Times taken with reference to Gen. Garland owning a million and a half of Pan-Electric stock at the time of the commencement of the suit?—A. It has condemned it throughout.

Q. Upon what grounds?—A. Those articles were written by other people; I cannot tell you. I suppose they thought they had good grounds.

Q. Do you think there is any impropriety in his holding stock and this suit being commenced by direction of his Department?—A. I am a layman. I am not a lawyer; and I do not know that I am prepared to state.

Mr. EDEN. I think it is improper to ask his opinion about the conduct of Gen. Garland.

Mr. MILLARD. You were not here yesterday?

Mr. RANNEY. What do you think of the line of inquiry yesterday?

Mr. MILLARD. I ask because the question has been asked of every other New York editor. I want to be entirely courteous.

The WITNESS. Certainly I will answer every question you ask me that I think you have a right to ask. Indeed, I have answered some questions that I think you hadn't any right to ask.

Q. Do you remember the fact that this exposure was made substantially as now proved, although not to such an extent, as early as last September, and that it appeared in most of the New York papers?—A. I do not remember it.

Q. Were you not in New York last September?—A. I believe I was; yes, sir; but, as I told you, this subject possessed very little attraction to me.

Q. Do you not remember that as early as September last these facts, this scandal, and this Pan-Electric scheme appeared in nearly all the leading journals of the country, particularly the leading papers in New York City, with the exception of your own, as early as September?—A. I don't remember; it is a subject I took no interest in whatever, as I told you.

Q. That leads to another question. You say you have taken no interest in this matter. Don't you think this is a matter that the people should know about and that the facts should go to the people if the facts are as substantially conceded?

Mr. OATES. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Don't answer that question for the present.

Mr. MILLARD. Don't you think it is a legitimate matter for the people?—A. I do not think it is right to put me in judgment in that way.

Q. Is it not a fact that while this matter did appear in the other papers it did not appear in the New York Times?—A. I do not know that is a fact; if you state it as a fact, I would ask if you had examined the papers.

Mr. MILLARD. I do not know.

The WITNESS. I do not, and so we are in the same category.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. You say the matter was presented to some one of the employes of the Times by Mr. Dickerson and refused?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What matter was that?—A. As I understood it, it was matter that appeared afterwards in the other papers.

Mr. RANNEY. He cannot testify to that, because he only knows it by hearsay.

The WITNESS. You refused to let me—

Mr. RANNEY. Unless you tell who the man was, I don't think you should state your information.

Mr. HANBACK. I understood him to say he made up his judgment from that.

Mr. RANNEY. Oh, no.

Mr. OATES. That was one of the circumstances.

The WITNESS. I did not say I made up my judgment from that.

Mr. RANNEY. He has no personal knowledge, as I understand, about Mr. Dickerson?

The WITNESS. All the things together caused a suspicion.

Q. I understood you to say you read the article?—A. I did not, and if I had been there I should not.

Q. It appeared simultaneously, you say, in the other papers?—A. Yes, sir; I saw the headings and saw they had great similarity, but I was not condemned to read them, and therefore I did not.

Q. Do you not know of your own knowledge, then, that they were similar?—A. I saw the general tone of them by reading a few paragraphs. I did not read them all.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. A single question further. In the Times, under date of February 10, is the following:

"The public may rest assured that in spite of the outcry kept up by certain newspapers in the pay of the Bell Telephone Company, the Government suit will be brought to trial."

Do you know whether the Times or any one connected with the Times had any information upon that subject?—A. No; I do not. That appeared in the Times when I was absent. I probably would not have known if I had been at home. If you are going to investigate quarrels between newspapers, you will have a pretty busy time.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Before you go I want to know if you have any lawyer connected with the office of the Times?—A. We have two or three lawyers that try libel suits for us, but they are not in the office.

Q. They are numerous, I suppose.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are Messrs. Briesen & Steele among them?—A. No, sir.

Q. What lawyer furnished the legal argument that was published in the Times as to the history of the litigations of the Bell Telephone Company?—A. I do not know.

Q. It must have been some one from the outside.—A. Yes. You may have discovered one thing: That I have not universal knowledge.

Mr. RANNEY. Some witnesses are not so willing as you are to acknowledge their limitations.

The WITNESS. I am quite willing.

Q. I would like to know, if you can tell us, who the lawyer was who furnished the argument on the legal aspect of this case?—A. I do not know, sir.

Q. You have no lawyer employed regularly?—A. Yes, we have; but they don't do editorial work. We employ them in the courts.

Q. Are those libel lawyers the ones that wrote these articles?—A. I don't know anything about it; it might be so and it might not. Speaking of libel suits, I would like to tell you that in thirty-five years we have never had an anti-judgment but once, and that we reversed.

Mr. RANNEY. The New York courts are very uncertain?

The WITNESS. Yes.

Mr. RANNEY. In libel suits at least.

The witness then left the stand.

Mr. RANNEY. I see you have printed a list of the stockholders in the Bell company.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; at the organization of the American Bell company, and at the present time; the two lists submitted by Mr. Driver.

Mr. RANNEY. You put them in without Mr. Driver's attention being called to any particular names.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Driver's attention was called to a number of names.

Mr. RANNEY. My attention was called at the time to the name of Mary Ella Ranney, who has one share. You ought to have asked him about that.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a small matter.

Mr. RANNEY. I asked him and he said it was somebody that lived in Framingham. It ought to appear that it was a lady who lived at Framingham; no relation or acquaintance of mine or my family.

The CHAIRMAN. I have a letter from Mr. Driver, the treasurer of the Bell company, furnishing certain information which he was requested to give when he was on the stand. I will submit it as a part of his testimony.

Mr. RANNEY. I don't see any objection to putting it in.

The letter and inclosure is as follows:

Hon. C. E. BOYLE,

*Chairman of a committee of the House of Representatives appointed to investigate certain telephone subjects,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:*

DEAR SIR: In the examination of Mr. Forbes, president of this company, on the 27th instant, you asked that a statement of the capital of licensed companies should be forwarded to you. I have the honor to inclose herewith the statement of the capital of companies in the United States licensed to do a telephone business under the patents owned or controlled by this company.

Yours, very truly,

WM. R. DRIVER,
Treasurer.

"Companies incorporated under the laws of various States, doing a telephone business under license from the American Bell Telephone Company, and in which said American Bell Telephone Company is interested as a stockholder, have issued stock representing capital of $42,502,320.

"Companies incorporated under the laws of various States, doing a telephone business under license from the American Bell Telephone Company, but in which said American Bell Telephone Company is not interested as a stockholder, have issued stock representing capital of $11,906,390.

"In addition to licenses granted to companies, the American Bell Telephone Company has licensed individuals in many cases to do a telephone business under its patent, but said company has no interest in the business done by them, except as such licensor, and is not informed as to the amount of capital employed by them in this business.

"Companies incorporated under the laws of various States, and licensed by the American Bell Telephone Company to manufacture instruments and apparatus under its patents, $1,150,000.

"WM. R. DRIVER,
"Treasurer.

"BOSTON, MASS., April 30, 1886."

S. N. CLARK then came before the committee and was duly sworn.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Are you the representative of the New York Tribune in Washington?—
Answer. I am one of its representatives, yes, sir.

Q. Were you last summer and before that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you the correspondent of the Tribune who has furnished the matter relating to the Pan-Electric company and the other matters growing out of it to that paper?—A. I have written a great deal about it.

Q. Do you recall the date of the first publication in the Tribune upon the subject?—A. I do not, exactly; I tried this morning to ascertain. The first dispatch I wrote was some two years ago.

Q. Have you that dispatch?—A. I have not. I tried this morning to find it. I looked over the files of the paper, but did not find it. It was at the time there was some trouble about the appointment of an electrician to the House.

Q. The time it was attempted to have J. Harris Rogers appointed?—A. I didn't know so much about who they wanted appointed, but I knew who they wanted to dismiss.

Q. You say you have not been able to find that?—A. I looked over the files for a couple of hours this morning, but I didn't strike it. It was just a short dispatch stating something about the Pan-Electric company, and was not material, I suppose, to this investigation. The only material fact in it was that the application or resolution had been referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, of which Casey Young was a member.

Q. Do you recall any subsequent publications?—A. Oh, yes, sir.

Q. The first I have here is that of the 24th of September last.—A. I think that was the very next dispatch that I wrote on that subject. I brought together some material two years ago, which I did not have occasion to use.

Q. Did you write the dispatch of the 24th of September?—A. I did.

Q. Where did you get the information given in that dispatch?—A. I derived that information from several sources. I got some of it from an advertisement which had been standing in one of the Washington newspapers for some time, and which you will find in the scrap-book you have there. Some of it I had in hand two years, I think.

Q. Did you get any of it from a Mr. E. N. Hill?—A. Not at that time. I got none of the information for that original publication from Mr. Hill.

Q. Were you present when General Sypher was examined before this committee?—
I was not.

Q. I will say to you that General Sypher spoke of an article having been prepared by Hill or by Hill and himself jointly—I don't remember just now what he says about it—which was published in the Tribune, and my recollection is that he identified the article of the 24th of September as the one which had been so prepared?—A. That is very probable; he might have thought it was, because the facts were the same. Nevertheless Mr. Sypher was mistaken.

Q. Did not Mr. Hill furnish an article?—A. Mr. Hill furnished several articles, or brought in several pieces of manuscript, none of which I ever used. I think, Mr. Chairman, that I have in my pocket the first thing that Hill brought me. I keep most of those things. Here is a manuscript written in pencil, and I know it to be in Mr. Hill's handwriting, about this Pan-Electric matter (producing a manuscript).

Q. What is the date of that?—A. There is no date on it, and I have not indorsed it, as I usually do matters of that sort.

Q. Did you have that before writing the article of the 24th of September?—A. No, sir; it came in, I think, within a day or two afterwards. Subsequently he brought me an article written with a type-writer, which I have not been able to lay my hands on, and which I recognized when it was subsequently published.

Q. Did you make Mr. Hill's article, which you have produced here, the basis of an article for the Tribune?—A. No, sir; I did not. Mr. Hill gave me some information which I did use, as, for example, he told me how much stock each one of these gentlemen held.

Q. Did you know that fact before?—A. I had a pretty good reason to know. I ought to say right here that I got some of my information about that company and its stockholders from a couple of patent attorneys in this city, but as they have relations with the Patent Office I would not like to disclose their names.

Q. We should like to have you give us their names if they furnished information that went into your paper. I would like to have their names.—A. Well, as they have relations with the Patent Office, and it might prejudice them in their business, and as the information was given to me in confidence, I do not think that I ought to give their names.

Q. Do you know whether they were in the employ of the Bell company?—A. I know decidedly that they were not.

Q. Or in the employ of any other telephone company?—A. I do not think they were attorneys for any telephone company at all. Their business is in an entirely different line.

Q. Can you state what information you obtained from them?—A. It was some time ago, but this is the information I obtained: That Mr. Garland's share in the Pan-Electric Telephone Company was not less than a million dollars. I have not read my dispatch of the 24th of September since it was written, I think. I do not know whether I stated any specific amount in that dispatch, but I built it up from the information I obtained from these attorneys, and I think one of the gentlemen I speak of gave me the amounts that he thought one or two other gentlemen held.

Q. Was not the information which Mr. Hill gave you as to the amount of stock?—A. Subsequently he gave me definite information about the amount held by each stockholder, and subsequently I obtained the articles of incorporation of the company, which showed how much each one received.

Q. I see that you state in this article that Mr. Garland subscribed for not less than $500,000?—A. Yes, sir; and there is where my caution came in. It was stated to me at a million. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, if it is at all important about Mr. Hill, that within a day or two after the first publication he came into my office and talked about it.

Q. Will you let us have the article that he furnished you?—A. This article; certainly. That I presume was furnished to me within three or four days from the time of the publication of the article of September 24. The type-written article was furnished at a later date, and I have not that.

Q. Did you use the information given you by Mr. Hill?—A. I have not looked at that manuscript; it is possible I may have used some of the facts stated in that. I found that manuscript in my desk this morning, and thought you might like to look at it. I have not looked at it for months. I obtained some valuable information from Mr. Hill.

Q. Was this the first article that you received from Mr. Hill?—A. Yes, sir; I think it was the first thing submitted in writing. I think I had some conversation with him a day or two after the first article was published.

Q. You say this was furnished within a day or two after the first article was published?—A. I will not be positive about the time; I know the sequence of it.

Q. Had you any conversation with him before the first article appeared?—A. Not about this matter. Mr. Hill brought matter before that containing an attack on Mr. Garland, but it was of a different nature entirely, and had no relation to that.

Q. An attack on Mr. Garland?—A. It might be so construed. He furnished me several things of that description.

Q. Did you use them?—A. I used one of them, but the paper did not print it. I used it to the extent of sending it to the paper.

Q. You say Mr. Hill did not furnish the material for this article of the 24th of September. From whom did you learn that Mr. Garland had subscribed for $500,000 worth of stock?—A. I did not learn that specifically from any one. As I said before, I learned several things from a couple of patent attorneys here. I knew two years ago that Mr. Garland was interested in this company. I knew it at the time that an effort was being made, as I supposed, to dismiss the electrician of the House. I learned that Mr. Garland's share was not less than a million dollars, or something of that sort—a million dollars was mentioned by these attorneys—and I think Senator Harris's name was mentioned by them, too. If you will read that dispatch I can start you up on it.

Q. I will give a part. I am not going to read all, but only quote from it as I go along. You state here that the Pan-Electric company "has been engaged in protracted and unsuccessful legal contests with the Bell company."—A. Exactly.

Q. From whom did you learn that?—A. I learned that from the newspapers.

Q. What contests were they?—A. There was the contest in Baltimore; that was the first thing that drew my attention really to this matter.

Q. Did you learn that fact or get any information in regard to it from the two patent attorneys?—A. No, sir; I got that from the Baltimore newspapers.

Q. You state in this article that "an extraordinary course has recently been adopted, under the authority of the Attorney-General himself, in his official capacity, to break down the Bell company."—A. Exactly.

Q. From whom did you learn that?—A. From the Baltimore Sun, or one of the Baltimore newspapers which contained the proceedings before Judge Bond, in Baltimore, on the 15th of September. The district attorney was represented as appearing, and as appearing by direction of the Attorney-General. That, I may say, was what attracted my attention to this thing last September.

Q. You also say that the Bell company "is now suing the Pan-Electric Telephone Company in some of the Southern courts."—A. Exactly.

Q. Where was that?—A. In Tennessee, as I understood.

Q. How did you get that information?—A. I think that came in the same way, from the Baltimore newspapers, or else from some inquiries I made as soon as I saw this thing in the Baltimore Sun.

Q. If it was the result of inquiries, from whom did you make the inquiries?—A. I think I got that from the patent lawyers here. I certainly went to what I considered to be every available source of information.

Q. You also say this: "Just before the time arrives when the injunction is to be moved for against the Pan-Electric company and the other companies that are its licensees, the Government suit is begun, in which all the old claims against the Bell patent that have been overruled in the litigated cases are again set up on the part of the United States, and a United States district attorney actually appears in court when the injunction motion against the Pan company comes on for a hearing, and urges the court that it ought not to issue the injunction while the Government suit is pending." Where did you get that?—A. The fact of the business is, telephone litigation to every intelligent reader of the newspapers has been one of the foremost subjects for the past few years.

Q. Where did you get the particular facts stated here in regard to the course pursued in attempting to bring the Government suit in Memphis, and the attempt to use it for the purpose of forestalling the injunction which was about to be issued in Baltimore?—A. I think that came from what I learned in the Baltimore newspapers.

Q. Didn't you get that from some patent lawyer?—A. I do not think I did get it from any patent lawyer. It might have come out in some of the inquiries that I made. I will say that I went to two or three of the best patent attorneys in Washington, men of long practice and high standing.

Q. You state that the Government suit was brought directly under the authority of the Attorney-General himself. Where did you get that information?—A. That is the inference I drew from what took place in Baltimore, where the district attorney, according to the newspapers, appeared, to ask for a stay of proceedings because this Government suit had been brought.

Q. Did you not know at that time that the suit had been actually ordered by the Solicitor-General?—A. I did not. I did not know when that suit was ordered. I knew that it had been ordered and that it had been begun on a certain date, I think, but I did not know by whom, nor by whom it was actually ordered.

Q. I will call your attention to this: "Although no mention is made of the fact that he [that is, the Attorney-General] is a very heavy stockholder in the chief company sought to be enjoined, it is openly stated that he has authorized the Government suit, and that fact is itself used as an additional argument to persuade the court not to proceed against the defendant companies." Is that correct?—A. That is correct.

Q. Is it a fact that the Attorney-General himself authorized the Government suit, and that that fact was used as an argument to persuade the court not to proceed against the defendant companies?—A. According to the Baltimore newspapers, it was.

Q. Have you that Baltimore newspaper?—A. I have not. I think if you will look at the Baltimore Sun of about that date you will find everything there, and it may have been in the Baltimore American, too. But I am in the habit of reading the Sun more than the American, and so I refer to that specifically.

Q. You seem to have been able, about that time, to give nearly all the names of parties who were interested.—A. I knew that two years ago.

Q. I mean last September.—A. Yes, sir; and I knew that two years ago.

Q. Did you know the names of all of them?—A. I think nearly all.

Q. Then you did not obtain that information from Mr. Hill?—A. Why, the information was contained in a Sunday newspaper published here, which I read every Sunday. The advertisement, if you will turn to the proper page, will show you the names of the stockholders and the officers of the company. It also contains Mr. Garland's opinion. There is set out in that advertisement the names of the officers and directors of three companies.

Q. You were able to state at that time that soon after the incorporation of the Pan-Electric company, it "began to sell territory in which the exclusive right to use its telephones was given and the licensees or purchasing companies were guaranteed against loss by legal interference." Where did you get that information?—A. I don't recollect exactly where I got that information. I got it from somebody who was interested in this Washington Telephone Company, or who had been interested in it; I cannot tell you.

Q. You were able to state the terms almost of the contract?

Mr. RANNEY. What contract?

The CHAIRMAN. The contract in regard to the sale of territory.

The WITNESS. I think I said in there that they sold territory in four or five different States.

The CHAIRMAN. I was going on to state that. You give here the substance of the contract. Can you state where you got that?—A. I think I obtained it from some one who had been an investor in this Washington Telephone Company, but I could not tell you.

Q. You say, "One was organized in Saint Louis, one in Memphis, one in New Orleans, one in Dallas, Tex., all of which paid considerable sums in cash besides giving the parent company a percentage of stock and a royalty for all telephones used." Those are more facts out of those several contracts. Can you tell where you got that?—A. I cannot state where I got any particular information on that subject. It is my impression that I had seen in the Memphis Avalanche an advertisement which threw some light on the subject. [To Col. Casey Young.] Didn't the advertisement in the Avalanche contain some information in regard to that?

Colonel YOUNG. No, I think not.

The WITNESS. I cannot state more definitely.

Q. You proceed to state that "Two companies were also formed in Baltimore and Washington, with Bradley T. Johnson at their head to control the States of Maryland and Virginia and the District of Columbia." Where did you get that?—A. That was my information. I say I do not recollect now from whom I received it. It was from some business man in Washington.

Q. It seems, as it has turned out now, that you had it pretty accurately.—A. Well, I try to get things pretty accurately, with a possibility of libel suits ahead.

Q. You say, "A company was formed in Pennsylvania, in the establishment of which Congressman Klotz was prominent."—A. Exactly, and you will find from that advertisement—I will find it for you.

Q. What paper was that advertisement in, the Republic?—A. Yes, sir; the Sunday Republic, a paper published in this city. I had been in the habit of seeing it, I suppose, every Sunday for a year or so. The advertisement in the Avalanche, I think, was somewhat more in detail. I think that threw some light on those local companies in Texas.

Q. I see that you not only knew all about the Pan-Electric company, but you also understood about the National Improved Telephone Company. You say that it was formed in New Orleans upon some of Rogers's patents. Where did you get that?—A. I think I got that from some members of the Washington Telephone Company. When I speak of the Washington Telephone Company, I may confound it with a local telephone company here called the Long Telephone Company. It was from some members of one or the other companies.

Q. Here is something that you did not get from the advertisement: "The proceeding of the Bell company against that company—(that is the National Improved Telephone Company)—for an injunction was brought to a hearing before Judge McKennon, at Pittsburgh. Ex-Congressman Casey Young, who is an able lawyer, and Colonel George Gantt, of Memphis, after a meeting of the directors of the Pan Telephone Company, went by their authority to Pittsburgh to watch the progress of that case and to aid in the fight against the Bell company." Where did you get that?—A. That is all inference only. I knew that they had gone there, because I saw it in the Pittsburgh papers.

Q. It was pretty good guessing.—A. If you had been in the newspaper business while, you would find out how to guess pretty well.

Q. What did you know about George Gantt?—A. Well, sir, I will tell you what I knew.

Q. I don't want you to go into his history, but how you happened to know about him, and that he had gone there by direction of the Pan-Electric company.—A. This is not strictly testimony; but it was very hot weather here last summer, and I was one of the Can't-get-away Club. There were several eminent gentlemen stopping at the Ebbitt House, right near my office, and I didn't suppose they were here for fun, and I saw Colonel Gantt's name on the register and knew that he was there with Casey Young, whom I have known for a number of years. That is all I knew about it, except that I might have asked one of the bell-boys or one of the clerks at the hotel what they were here for, and was told they were here on some telephone business; but that is an indistinct recollection, and I would not testify to it. In some way or other I obtained it.

Q. You say there were several men here. Was Colonel Gantt one of them?—A. Yes, sir; Colonel Gantt was one of them.

Q. Who else?—A. Mr. Huntington was here.

Q. And Mr. Van Benthuyzen?—A. That I do not recall.

Q. You say Mr. Huntington was here?—A. Yes, sir; I thought Mr. Huntington was the National Improved Telephone man; that was my impression at the time; I confounded him at that time with the more celebrated C. P. Huntington.

Q. How did the fact of their being here give you any knowledge as to Col. Young and Col. Gantt having been in Pittsburgh and having gone there by certain authority?—A. I said that that was purely an inference; I knew by the Pittsburgh papers that Colonel Young was in Pittsburgh; I do not know to this day that Col. Gantt went to Pittsburgh.

Q. I think he did not, if I recollect right. You stated these matters as facts simply from seeing Col. Gantt and Col. Young and perhaps others here at the Ebbitt House; they were not here until the last of July or the first of August some time.—A. I say it was extremely not weather when they were here.

Q. And after the Pittsburgh suit?—A. Yes, sir; after the Pittsburgh suit.

Q. Is that all the information which you had on which you based this statement that they appeared there by the authority of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company?—A. I do not say that that is all the information I had.

Q. If you have any other, let us have it.—A. I cannot recollect; it has been a good while ago.

Q. You state also: "The ground taken by the opponents of the Bell company in all these contests was that the principle patented by Bell was known and used in this country and Germany long before his patent was issued."—A. Exactly.

Q. How did you know that; how did you happen to know that?—A. I do not like to give the man's name, because, as I say, he is a patent attorney here. He is not engaged in any telephone business.

Q. What I am after is this: How does it come that you happened to know all the facts in regard to this litigation, not only in Baltimore, but in Tennessee and in Pittsburgh, about the formation of these companies, and about the appearance of lawyers in Pittsburgh who were not in any way connected with the Pittsburgh suit? How does it come that you knew all that?

Mr. HANBACK. Because it is his business.

The CHAIRMAN. It is his business to answer.

The WITNESS. You are speaking of the German inventions. So far as I know about it, I told you that I obtained the information from a patent attorney here, a man of high standing, whose specialty is entirely different. I know that he never had a telephone case in his life. He is connected, I think, entirely with fire-arms. I do not propose to give his name.

Q. I understood that you declined to give his name. You also say, "If this could be established the Bell patent would fall; but their minor patents, which were claimed as subsequent improvements, might still stand." How did you know that?

The WITNESS. Isn't that true?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; but are you a lawyer.

A. No, sir; I am not.

Q. How comes it that you could tell with such nicety just the matter involved in these suits, and what would be the effect of finding one way or the other?—A. It doesn't seem to me that it requires a lawyer to make that inference. I certainly made it, and I made it out of my own head.

Q. You say now that you made this statement as to the matters involved in these suits, and the effect of the judgment upon them, out of your own head?—A. No, sir; I say I made that part out of my own head. Perhaps it would be a little fairer if you would read the whole article together.

Q. I am going over it. "The defendant brought in a book of affidavits to support its side of the case." How did you learn that?—A. In the newspapers.

Q. "Judge McKennon announced to the defendant the usual rule in such cases, that he would hear any new defense which had not been passed upon in the final decisions in other courts; that, as he had himself heard the old defenses, he was satisfied that they were ineffectual. The judge found that the defendant had no new defenses, and so enjoined it." Did you get that from a newspaper, too?—A. That was all in the Pittsburgh papers, and I think in the New York papers, too. I think it was in every newspaper that published Associated Press dispatches.

Q. You proceed to state that "the promoters of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company were not dismayed. All of their resources had not yet been exhausted." And then you say that "A shrewd course was adopted. Henry McCorry, of Casey Young's own city, was appointed United States district attorney for the western district of Tennessee. Mr. Young, Bradley T. Johnson, and other members of both the Pan-Electric Telephone Company and the National Improved Telephone Company had long consultations, the last one, it is understood, having been held recently in this city. On September 6, ex-Congressman Young left Washington for Memphis, immediately after a three days' conference, and on September 10 United States district attorney McCorry brought suit in the United States district court at that place in the name of the United States as plaintiff against the American Bell Telephone Company and Mr. Bell for the cancellation of their patents." How did you get all that information?

The WITNESS. About the bringing of the suit?

The CHAIRMAN. About all these matters I have read; about the conference and about the application of Mr. McCorry. How did you learn that Mr. McCorry had made application?

The WITNESS. Had made application for a suit?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

A. That was all stated in the newspapers over and over again. I did not know when the application was made. I made it my business to find out that Mr. McCorry was a newly-appointed district attorney; I wanted to use that fact. I found out that his predecessor had been suspended; that his term had not expired.

Q. You say that you got all the facts contained in that last paragraph read by me from the newspapers?—A. No, sir; I do not say that.

Q. Where did you get them?—A. I got the fact of Mr. McCorry's appointment from the Department of Justice.

Q. Where did you get the other facts?

Mr. RANNEY. The other man had been suspended, you say?

The WITNESS. Yes; the district attorney, Mr. Poston, had been suspended.

Q. Then you say that Col. Young and General Bradley T. Johnson and others connected with these companies had a long consultation?—A. That was at the Ebbitt House.

Q. "The last one, it is understood, having been held recently in this city."—A. That is a mistake. All that I know about were held in this city. There must have been something left out there in the dispatch.

Q. And you were able to state the very day the district attorney brought the suit at Memphis?—A. Certainly.

Q. How did you get it on the 24th of September?—A. I think it was a dispatch that I saw in the New York Times; I will not be certain about that. I will not be certain whether I got it from a Baltimore or a New York paper.

Q. You say, "This suit, as it was subsequently stated by District Attorney Stirling, was brought by the express authorization of the Attorney-General."—A. That is what I understood.

Q. How did you understand that?—A. I understood that from the reports of the proceedings before Judge Bond in the Baltimore newspapers.

Q. "Indeed, it would not be proper or regular for such a suit to be instituted except by his authority."—A. That is my inference.

Q. On the question, then, assumed to be before us, you assumed that it might be instituted by his authority?

The WITNESS. Do you want my opinion on that?

The CHAIRMAN. I do.

A. Yes, sir; I did; but I am not a lawyer.

Mr. RANNEY. It might be instituted, but whether it is by any rightful authority is a question. Men have the power sometimes without the right.

Q. You say, "The grounds on which it is asked in this suit by the Government that the Bell patents be set aside are substantially the same which the Bell company has successfully met in its contests with the other telephone corporations, and which are, therefore, no longer available to them. But if the Government suit could be carried through it would enable them to have all these questions tried over again, and if the suit should be successful, the Pan-Electric Telephone Company and all its satellites would reap the full benefit therefrom, and the probable consequence would be to make the chief stockholders of the Pan company very rich men."—A. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I will put this entire article in the record, if there is no objection.

Mr. RANNEY. I have none. It is well written.

The CHAIRMAN. It is remarkably well written.

Mr. RANNEY. Put it in, and we will all study it.

Mr. HANBACK. It might be termed a prophetic article, looking at the future.

The WITNESS. There may be some bad grammar in it, but I stand by that article as a whole. It doesn't make any difference where I got my information.

The CHAIRMAN. It might make a difference where you got it in the view we take of it here.

Mr. RANNEY. Who do you mean by "we"?

The CHAIRMAN. I speak for myself now. I certainly do not speak for other members of the committee, especially for those who question my remark.

The article in question is as follows :

MR. GARLAND A SPECULATOR—THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S TELEPHONE STOCK—USING THE UNITED STATES COURTS TO ADVANCE THE VALUE OF HIS SHARES.

[By telegraph to the Tribune.]

WASHINGTON, September 24.—The Pan-Electric Telephone Company is one of the strongest and most powerful opponents of the American Bell Telephone Company. Its power and strength lie not alone in the capital which it can command, but in the commanding influence of its officers and promoters. One of the chief of these is A. H. Garland, Attorney-General of the United States. He subscribed for not less than $500,000 of its $5,000,000 capital stock. He has also been the company's attorney and "legal adviser" since its organization. This telephone company has been engaged in protracted and unsuccessful legal contests with the Bell company; so have a number of other companies which have been more or less leagued together against this, their common adversary. An extraordinary course has recently been adopted, under the authority of the Attorney-General himself, in his official capacity, to break down the Bell company. This is the commencement of a suit by the United States Government to set aside the Bell patents.

The Bell company has gone through contest after contest against the infringers of its patents, and has been successful in every case. It is now suing the Pan-Electric Telephone Company in some of the Southern courts. Just before the time arrives when the injunction is to be moved for against the Pan-Electric Company and the other companies that are its licensees, the Government suit is begun, in which all the old claims against the Bell patent that have been overruled in the litigated cases are again set up on the part of the United States, and a United States district attorney actually appears in court when the injunction motion against the Pan company comes on for a hearing, and urges the court that it ought not to issue the injunction while the Government suit is pending. The part that the Attorney-General has played in this extraordinary proceeding is not concealed in court. Although no mention is made of the fact that he is a very heavy stockholder in the chief company sought to be enjoined, it is openly stated that he has authorized the Government suit, and that fact is itself used as an additional argument to persuade the court not to proceed against the defendant companies.

The comments made upon the Attorney-General's course of action as the facts are gradually coming to light would interest not only him, but all the supporters of the administration responsible for his official conduct. The facts may be briefly told. The other chief promoters and officers of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, with Attorney-General Garland, were General Joseph E. Johnston, president, now United States Commissioner of Railroads; Isham G. Harris, of Tennessee, vice-president of the company and United States Senator; Casey Young, secretary and treasurer, formerly member of Congress for the Memphis district; J. D. C. Atkins, a director, now United States Commissioner of Indian Affairs; R. F. Looney, a director, and a member of the Democratic National Committee for Tennessee; and J. Harris Rogers, a director. All of the above have not held as large an amount of stock as the Attorney-General, but the amount held by each of the persons named was large.

The new company was thus provided not only with an abundant amount of capital, but also with plenty of Democratic influence, from the Attorney-General down. It was incorporated in the State of Tennessee. J. Harris Rogers was formerly electrician of the House of Representatives when it was under the control of the Democrats, and it was upon patents obtained by him at that time that the Pan Telephone Company was organized. Soon after its incorporation the company began to sell territory, in which the exclusive right to use its telephones was given, and the licensees or purchasing companies were guaranteed against loss by legal interference. One was organized in St. Louis, one in Memphis, one in New Orleans, one in Dallas, Texas; all of which paid considerable sums in cash, besides giving the parent company a percentage of stock and a royalty for all telephones used.

Two companies were also formed in Baltimore and Washington, with Bradley T. Johnson at their head, to control the States of Maryland and Virginia and the District of Columbia. A company was formed in Pennsylvania, in the establishment of which Congressman Klotz was prominent. Work was begun near Philadelphia, but the company was sued jointly with the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, and the result was an injunction.

The National Improved Telephone Company was formed in New Orleans upon some of Rogers's patents. The proceeding of the Bell company against that company for an injunction was brought to a hearing before Judge McKennon at Pittsburgh. Ex-Congressman Casey Young, who is an able lawyer, and Col. George Gantt, of Memphis, after a meeting of the directors of the Pan Telephone Company, went by their authority to Pittsburgh to watch the progress of that case and to aid in the fight against the Bell company. The ground taken by the opponents of the Bell company in all these contests was that the principle patented by Bell was known and used in this country and Germany long before his patent was issued. If this could be established, the Bell patent would fall; but their minor patents, which were claimed as subsequent improvements, might still stand. The result in this case was the same as in all the other many injunction suits brought by the Bell company. The defendant brought in a book of affidavits to support its side of the case. Judge McKennon announced to the defendant the usual rule in such cases, that he would hear any new defense which had not been passed upon in the final decisions in other courts; that, as he had himself heard the old defenses, he was satisfied that they were ineffectual. The judge found that the defendant had no new defenses, and so enjoined it.

But the promoters of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company were not dismayed. All of their resources had not yet been exhausted. Several of their officers were highly influential in Democratic politics and with the administration. One of their principal stockholders was the Attorney-General. The powers of the Government itself might be employed against the Bell company. A shrewd course was adopted.

Henry McCorry, of Casey Young's own city, was appointed United States district attorney for the western district of Tennessee. Mr. Young, Bradley T. Johnson, and other members of both the Pan-Electric Telephone Company and the National Improved Telephone Company had long consultations, the last one, it is understood, having been held recently in this city. On September 6, ex-Congressman Young left Washington for Memphis, immediately after a three days' conference, and on September 10, United States District Attorney McCorry brought suit in the United States district court at that place in the name of the United States, as plaintiff, against the American Bell Telephone Company and Mr. Bell for the cancellation of their patents. This suit, as it was subsequently stated by District Attorney Sterling, was brought by the express authorization of the Attorney-General. Indeed, it would not be proper or regular for such a suit to be instituted except by his authority. The grounds on which it is asked in this suit by the Government that the Bell patents be set aside are substantially the same which the Bell company has successfully met in its contests with the other telephone corporations, and which are, therefore, no longer available to them. But if the Government suit could be carried through, it would enable them to have all these questions tried over again, and if the suit should be successful, the Pan-Electric Telephone Company and all its satellites would reap the full benefit therefrom, and the probable consequence would be to make the chief stockholders of the Pan company very rich men.

Another way in which the power of the Government, used in this manner, may have been expected to be turned to the more immediate advantage of the corporation in which the Attorney-General is so largely interested, will be surmised from the most recent court proceedings. As soon as the Washington and Baltimore companies referred to above were formed, the Bell company filed its bill in Baltimore, and moved for an injunction there. In this suit the Pan-Electric Telephone Company was the chief defendant, along with the Washington Telephone Company, the Washington Telephone Company of Maryland, and various individuals. A delay was granted to the defendants until last Tuesday, when the motion came on to be heard before Judges Bond and Morris. Before the complainant's counsel had an opportunity to be heard, however, General Bradley T. Johnson, as counsel for the defendants, objected to the hearing on the ground that Attorney-General Garland, in his official capacity, had caused a bill to be filed in the United States court at Memphis in the name of the United States against the Bell company of Boston, setting up all the numerous defenses to the Bell patent which have been passed upon in the various suits tried during several years, and asking the Tennessee judge to retry these defenses and decree the patent to be void. He was followed by District Attorney Sterling, who appeared for the United States under orders, as it was understood, from his superior at Washington, and who protested against any action by the court to protect the patent from infringement until the United States had retried the various defenses which had been passed upon heretofore. In the course of his remarks to the court, the district attorney said:

"My brother thinks it strange that the Attorney-General of the United States who, he admits, has authorized it, should spend the money of the United States on a bill which he says contains so many allegations which were disposed of in other cases, but such is the fact; and it is also the law that nobody but the United States can set afloat a proceeding, the object of which is practically to attack the validity and existence of a patent. * * * It does strike me that when this proceeding is filed to set aside the patent, unless something is shown to the court, it must be treated as the act of the United States, and as long as that is pending in that way to declare the patent void, the court ought not to exercise its discretion against a bona fide business and grant a preliminary injunction."

The judges, however, did not seem impressed by this view, and ordered the motion for hearing on November 2, restraining the defendants in the mean time from increasing their business or putting out any more telephones.

The WITNESS. I only want to say this further word about it—if you are through with my examination on that article.

The CHAIRMAN. I am not through yet. Speaking of the Baltimore suit, you say:

"A delay was granted to the defendants (that is, the Pan-Electric Telephone Company and the Washington Company) until last Tuesday, when the motion came on to be heard before Judges Bond and Morris. Before the complainant's counsel had an opportunity to be heard, however, General Bradley T. Johnson, as counsel for the defendants, objected to the hearing, on the ground that Attorney-General Garland, in his official capacity, had caused a bill to be filed in the United States court at Memphis, in the name of the United States, against the Bell company of Boston, setting up all the numerous defenses to the Bell patent which have been passed upon in the various suits tried during several years, and asking the Tennessee judge to retry these defenses and decree the patent to be void."

Where did you get that?—A. I think that was all rehearsed in the reports of the proceedings there in Baltimore, in the Baltimore newspapers.

Q. I find that you make an exact quotation from the address of the district attorney, or it seems to be so. You say—

"In the course of his remarks to the court, the district attorney said: 'My brother thinks it strange that the Attorney-General of the United States, who, he admits, has authorized it, should spend the money of the United States on a bill which he says contains so many allegations which were disposed of in other cases, but such is the fact; and it is also the law that nobody but the United States can set afloat a proceeding, the object of which is practically to attack the validity and existence of a patent.'"

There are two or three periods here indicating that a part of the address is omitted. Then it continues:

"It does strike me that when this proceeding is filed to set aside the patent, unless something is shown to the court, it must be treated as the act of the United States, and as long as that is pending in that way, to declare the patent void, the court ought not to exercise its discretion against a bona fide business and grant a preliminary injunction."

How did you get the address of the district attorney?—A. If that is quoted there, I suppose it comes from one of the Baltimore newspapers.

Q. I think it is. It is in smaller type and is solid.—A. I don't recollect how it appears.

Q. Have you any recollection where you got the district attorney's speech with the omissions noted?—A. I don't recollect that at all.

Q. Will you look at it? Just step here.—A. (After an examination.) I presume that is taken bodily from one of the Baltimore newspapers.

Q. Do you think a newspaper would quote that in that way?—A. It would be very easy to ascertain.

Q. You do not state it as a fact; it is only a supposition of yours?—A. According to the best of my recollection I should say that. Of course, I was not inspired.

Q. Do you know Mr. E. N. Dickerson?—A. I do.

Q. Did you not meet him about that time?—A. I did not.

Q. Was he not in Washington about that very time?—A. He may have been.

Q. Did you not have an interview with him?—A. I did not. You mean Mr. E. N. Dickerson, of the Bell Telephone Company?

Q. Yes.—A. I did not.

Q. Didn't you get this information from some person for the Bell company?—A. I did not.

Q. Did not some person call upon you and ask you to send a dispatch in regard to these Baltimore proceedings?—A. No, sir.

Q. I note that a statement by Mr. Dickerson follows your dispatch. Did you observe that?—A. I remember now about it.

Q. It seems that he confirmed its substantial truth and accuracy.—A. Well, that shows good sense. No, I had not seen Mr. Dickerson. I did not know there was any such person in existence.

Q. Had you seen Mr. Storrow?—A. I did not know that there was such a person as Mr. Storrow in existence. I did not know anybody at that time connected with the Bell Telephone Company—yes, I knew a man connected with the company, but he was not here, and I did not know at that time how he was connected with the company.

Q. You decline to state who the attorneys were who gave you the information?—A. Yes, for the reason stated. I have no objection to giving their names to you privately.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not care to obtain that information privately unless it is information on which the committee can act.

The WITNESS. If they will give their consent I will give their names cheerfully. I do not wish to conceal anything in the matter; I simply do it to protect them. I will ask them, and if they are willing, nobody will be more ready than I to tell you.

The CHAIRMAN. It may be that they are connected with the Bell Telephone Company, or that they are connected with somebody who is connected with it.

The WITNESS. Nobody who gave me any information early in this thing was connected with the Bell Telephone Company. As soon as I could find out who the Bell people were, I went to them just the same as I went to Casey Young. I wanted to get all the news about these things.

Q. You have published many dispatches since?—A. I have.

Q. Have you been furnished with information for some of them by the Bell company lawyers?—A. They have not furnished me any information except in the way of printed matter; nothing that was worth publishing.

Q. You had conversations with them about it?—A. Yes, sir; I had conversations.

Q. Are you not supplied every day with the report which the Bell Telephone Company is having made of these proceedings?—A. Whenever I want it I buy it and pay for it.

Q. Not otherwise? Is there not an arrangement by which they give you a copy of their reports?—A. No, sir; I pay for what I print, or what the Tribune prints.

Q. Has the Tribune, to your knowledge, or any person connected with the Tribune, been paid anything for any of these publications?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Or rewarded in any way?—A. Not to my knowledge, unless you call the furnishing of these briefs a reward. I have had that sort of reward.

Q. Did you pay Mr. Hill for any information furnished by him?—A. I don't recollect that I ever paid him a cent. I may have paid him five or ten dollars.

Q. Did you have any conversation with General Sypher in regard to this matter?—A. I never did, to my recollection. I may have done it; I don't recollect.

Q. Have you paid any other person for information for the Tribune?

The WITNESS. About this matter?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

A. I have incurred some expenses, but not in the way of paying for information. I mean I have incurred some expense for carriage hire and so on, but I have not paid any large sum to any person.

Q. Were you ever requested by the Bell people to publish anything in regard to this matter?—A. No, sir.

Q. All that has appeared in the Tribune, as I get it from your statement, has been entirely voluntary?—A. Exactly so. I thought I had got hold of a good thing, and I was bound to work it for all it was worth.

Mr. HANBACK. And you have not been mistaken.

The WITNESS. If you will allow me to say it, three of the gentleman interested are personal friends of mine—Mr. Garland, General Atkins, and Colonel Young—so that I could have no malicious intent.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that the way you treat your personal friends?

Mr. RANNEY. Possibly his regard for truth may rise above friendship.

The WITNESS. I have treated Mr. Garland as well as I could. I tried to hold this thing back until he returned to Washington to give him a chance.

Q. Why didn't you do so?—A. Because I was afraid that some other newspaper would get ahead of me.

Q. From your statement it would seem that you got it all from other newspapers?—

A. I got it from advertisements and other sources. People didn't seem to understand it the way I did.

Q. The articles presenting the enterprise in the view in which it has now been sought to present it, really appeared first in the Tribune, did they not? The Tribune was the first paper to take up this Pan-Electric matter and give it the character which it is now sought to give it?—A. I think so. I may have seen something in the other papers of those symptoms, which newspaper men understand pretty readily, that it was likely to come out.

Mr. RANNEY. You were the first to diagnose the disease.

Q. You have spoken of another article which Mr. Hill offered you which you have seen since. Is that the World article?—A. I think it was substantially the same article that appeared in the World.

Q. Did Mr. Hill offer that to the Tribune?—A. He brought it into my office and left it there, as he has a good deal of other matter.

Q. Why didn't you take it?—A. The fact of the business is I had used the most of it. I took from the manuscript which I showed you some of the facts, but I think I may have taken something from the others.

Q. Did you pay anything for it?—A. If anything was printed, I did.

Q. Can you remember? It is not very long ago.—A. If I had paid him a small sum, five or ten dollars, I should not be likely to remember it. If I had paid him as high a sum as $25 I should be likely to recollect it. I have not paid as much as that.

Q. Have you not had consultations with the Bell attorneys since this investigation commenced?—A. Oh, yes, sir.

Q. Did they furnish you information?—A. Not at all. Well, they tried to furnish me information, but you see I did not think it was worth printing.

Q. Haven't you furnished it to the committee, however—had it brought out in committee?

The WITNESS. Information furnished me by the Bell company?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

A. Let me see. I have furnished members of the committee with information. I will try to think whether it has come from anybody connected with the Bell company. [After a pause.] I do not think so. I think the most of it has come out of my own head. I may have done that. I have covered the field so well I did not think there was any need of it. I should not have hesitated at all to furnish information. I do not think it would have been improper at all to furnish information from any source which would enable the committee to get at the facts. I suppose you want to get at the bottom of this thing.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, we want to see which side the Tribune is on, and if there is any reason for its being on that side, we would like to know.

The WITNESS. I suppose all the Tribune is trying to get at is the facts, and that is what you are trying to get at.

The CHAIRMAN. There is so much of this article that I cannot go over it; it would be an imposition on the committee.

Mr. RANNEY. I have no objection to your putting all there is into the record, all those papers, if you desire to, so far as I am concerned.

Q. I see a dispatch of the 2nd of October, reviewing various proceedings, with this heading: "Van Benthuyzen again." You quote here something as said by a lawyer: "Another lawyer who has been following the controversy in the papers carefully, said."—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who is he; do you care to state what lawyer it was?—A. I would not like to describe him further than this: that he has been an Assistant Attorney-General of the United States—if it is the article that I think you mean. If you will read two or three sentences I will tell you.

The CHAIRMAN. This is the article I refer to: "It seems rather strange that the authority should have been granted by the Acting Attorney-General in a suit involving interests of so great magnitude, matters so delicate, without any reference to the Department of the Interior, as in all other cases of a like nature."

The WITNESS. Yes, that is the article. I think that is a very good opinion that he gave.

Q. Will you state who it was?—A. I would not like to give his name, as he is a lawyer in practice here, without his consent. If he gives his consent I will tell you.

Q. You speak here of Judge Hammond: "I suppose Judge Hammond, before whom it is to be tried, is an upright and learned judge." Who is Judge Hammond?—A. He is United States district judge for the western district of Tennessee.

Q. I find here a long article over the signature of Mr. Dickerson dated the 3d of October. Do you know anything of the publication of that?—A. I did not until I saw it in the Tribune.

Mr. RANNEY. What is that?

The CHAIRMAN. It is Mr. Dickerson's article published in the Tribune.

The WITNESS. I put that in as a contribution to this literature.

Mr. OATES. I move that the committee adjourn until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to, and the committee adjourned until Thursday, May 6, 1886, at 12 o'clock.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Thursday, May 6, 1886.

The committee was called to order at 12.42 p. m.

S. N. CLARK was recalled and further examined.

By the CHAIRMAN (Mr. Boyle):

Question. Are you able to fix the beginning of your conversations with Mr. Hill in relation to the Pan-Electric company?—Answer. I said yesterday that I thought they were after the first dispatch. I may be mistaken about that. I know this, that only a few days before that he had furnished me with some matter relating to Mr. Garland, and it is quite probable that that might have brought this matter up as a subject of conversation between us, and he may have given me some points at that time about it.

Q. What did this matter refer to that he had previously given you relating to Mr. Garland?—A. It had no relation to this Pan-Electric business. I have no objection to stating it. It was a statement that Mr. Garland had accepted a retainer a short time before, and since he had become Attorney-General, in a North Carolina railroad case. There was litigation pending between the State and a railroad on account of taxes, and the statement was that Mr. Garland had become attorney of record and accepted a retainer in that case.

Q. You say that information was furnished to you by Mr. Hill some time?—A. Yes, sir; it was furnished by Mr. Hill. I do not want to detract from any credit that Mr. Hill deserves on account of furnishing me the information.

Q. General Sypher seems to have been under the impression that he and Mr. Hill originated the inquiry.—A. Well, several other people have been under a like impression.

Q. Did you use the matter Mr. Hill gave you in regard to the North Carolina case?—A. I sent it to the Tribune.

Q. Did you pay him something for it?—A. No, sir; I did not pay him anything for it, because it was not printed. If it had been printed, I should have paid him the space rates for it.

Q. You say it was an attack upon Mr. Garland for accepting a retainer in that case?—A. I regarded it in that light; yes, sir.

Q. Now you say you think it probable that Mr. Hill did communicate with you in regard to the Pan-Electric company before the publication of that dispatch of the 24th of September?—A. I think he may have done so.

Q. And you have already stated that you used some of the information that he gave you?—A. I used some of the information received from him, certainly.

Q. Did you pay him for it?—A. I don't recollect that I ever paid Mr. Hill a cent for anything about this Pan-Electric matter. I may have paid him five or ten dollars; if I did, why he will know it. I don't recollect it. If I had paid him any large sum I should remember it, because I should have communicated with the office about it.

Q. I read to you yesterday an extract from the argument made by Mr. Sterling in the Baltimore suit. Are you able to state now where you obtained that argument or that extract from it?—A. I am not; I don't recollect. I would state, if I could recollect at all, that it came from one of the Baltimore newspapers. I think from the appearance of it that it was clipped bodily from a newspaper article.

Q. Have you a copy of the printed argument made in that Baltimore case?—A. I have not. I did have one, but I think I lent it to Mr. Ranney.

Q. The argument on both sides?—A. The proceedings in the Baltimore case.

Mr. RANNEY. I gave it, I believe, to the chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. I think I have it. I looked for it this morning after I came here, but could not find it. I have some documents at my room.

The WITNESS. When this matter came up I collected everything I could relating to the subject, and sought by every means to obtain information.

Q. Are you able to say, with some degree of certainty, whether you cut that from the Baltimore newspaper or obtained it otherwise?—A. I cannot recollect.

Q. You spoke yesterday of having had friendly relations with Mr. Garland?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever call upon Mr. Garland in relation to this matter?—A. I did.

Q. Will you state what occurred between you, when it was, and all the circumstances?—A. I expected Mr. Garland to return to Washington on the 30th of September, and I rode out to his house in the evening of that day.

Q. What led you to expect him to return?—A. Something that I had seen in the newspapers. He had not returned, but his mother told me that he would be here next morning. I went to the Department the next morning, and he had gone to the White House. I went back to my office, and, when I called at the Department again, he was in consultation, I think, with the Solicitor-General. At any rate he was engaged, and I waited for some time, and as soon as he was accessible, I saw him. I gave him verbally as good an account as I could of what had taken place about this—of my dispatches, and of the letter written by Dr. Rogers and published in the Tribune the day before or the second day before that, and went on to explain the matter. My recollection now is not as good of what he said as it was at the time. I wrote a dispatch that day, I think it is dated October 1, which contains the substance of what he said. At his request I then called on the Solicitor-General, and he told me his story.

Q. Is the dispatch you refer to in this scrap-book?—A. Yes, sir; it is in that book.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Did you submit the dispatch to him after you had written it?—A. I did not. I will say that it is on all fours with his letter to the President and his testimony before this committee. Shall I read this dispatch?

The CHAIRMAN. Not yet. I want to see it. You can read it over to refresh your own recollection.

The WITNESS (after an examination). Yes, this is the dispatch I speak of.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You say he referred you to the Solicitor-General?—A. He said he would be glad if I would see the Solicitor-General.

Q. Did you see Mr. Goode?—A. I saw him immediately.

Q. You have stated, I believe, that the statement then made by the Attorney-General was on all fours with his letter to the President and his testimony before this committee?—A. Yes, sir; as I understand it.

Q. You may state what occurred between you and the Solicitor-General, going into as much detail as you see proper, giving all the facts.—A. What took place is stated in that part of the dispatch which I did not look at just now. I only read what I had given of the interview with Mr. Garland. Of course a good deal more took place between Mr. Garland and myself than that, but that was, as newspaper men say, boiled down, and those were the facts.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, I think that part of this article might go in as your statement of what occurred at these interviews.

The WITNESS. Yes, at both these interviews; I think that is substantially correct.

Mr. MOFFATT. The portion covering the interviews with Mr. Garland and Mr. Goode?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; the interviews with Mr. Garland and Mr. Goode; he has them both in the same article, and then follows certain deductions and comments in regard to the matter.

Mr. RANNEY. If you put in any of it, put in the whole.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to me there is a very material difference between them.

Mr. RANNEY. I think there are two purposes in it. I do not think what they said itself is competent evidence, for it is hearsay after the fact, and would not be competent. But I do not object to it on that ground. The article, however, has two bearings, as showing what they said, and also showing the temper and conduct of the witness.

The CHAIRMAN. The temper and conduct of the witness is not a question. It is not an element in this investigation so far. Nobody has attacked him.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not see, then, why you should put in his various dispatches.

The CHAIRMAN. That affects the newspaper.

Mr. MILLARD. Wouldn't it have this effect; if you put in one-half of the letter, should you not put in the balance of it?

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, we can put in this witness's statement of an interview with the Attorney-General. That certainly is all that it contains.

Mr. RANNEY. Is it long?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; I agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts that it is not strictly competent, but considering the manner in which we have been proceeding here, it might be proper to go in.

Mr. RANNEY. Suppose, then, we put in the whole of it?

The CHAIRMAN. No; I will not agree to that; I do not think that is fair to anybody. I do not think it is fair in an interview to put in the declarations of anybody—

Mr. RANNEY. If your object is to contradict the Attorney-General or Mr. Goode, it is perfectly competent to put in what they said, but not without informing them. Of course, if you have no purpose, we can get at the facts fairly on both sides. You presumably embrace both positions.

The CHAIRMAN. Undoubtedly; and the statement of Major Clark as to one of these interviews would make it pretty clear that I am not putting it in in the interest of the Attorney General or the Solicitor-General.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not presume that you are putting it in in the interest of anybody except in the discharge of your duty. We have in the committee spoken of the direct and the cross examination, and both sides of the question, but it is a part of our duty to put in any evidence which may serve to contradict or affect the credibility of any witness, and if the article has any tendency to that effect, it is very proper for it to be put in.

The CHAIRMAN. The remarks which follow the account of the interviews do not affect the credibility of the witness at all.

Mr. HALL. What is the question.

The CHAIRMAN. I asked Major Clark about two interviews that he had, one with the Attorney-General and one with the Solicitor-General, and he does not recollect them, but says they are embodied in a dispatch which he sent the day after.

Mr. RANNEY. I think the whole article should go in, but if you think otherwise, put in what you see fit.

The CHAIRMAN. It is very clear that the comments of the correspondent are not competent evidence.

Mr. RANNEY. Let me ask one question. Does that not tend to affect the paper as the other articles did? Why should not that article be competent to affect the paper in which it is published as well as the other article?

Mr. HALL. The part of the paper that was offered, was offered, as I understand it, as a substitute for the witness's memory.

Mr. EDEN. They are giving the sources of his information.

Mr. HALL. Of course, legally it would not be competent for that purpose. The witness would have to read it and speak from his memory as refreshed.

Mr. RANNEY. The chairman can put in what he sees fit, but I shall offer, and ask to have go on the record, the rest of the article, and if it is ruled out I claim to have the right to report it to the House as being incompetent evidence.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not think it is important enough for that. We will consider that when we come to it. If there is no objection, I will put in this part of the article.

Mr. RANNEY. I do enter an objection, on the ground that the whole should go in, if any.

The CHAIRMAN (to the witness). Then I will ask you to read the article, and I will examine you about it.

The WITNESS (reading): "Mr. Garland's statement. Denying all knowledge of the suit. Mr. Goode anxious"—

The CHAIRMAN. I mean read it only for your own information. You may make that as your statement, if you think proper, of the interviews.

Mr. HALL. The object, as I understand, is for you to give your testimony stating your recollection of the interviews refreshed by that article.

The WITNESS. You do not want me to read it?

The CHAIRMAN. You may give that as your statement if you see proper, but not because it is in the article.

The WITNESS (reading):

"Attorney-General Garland arrived in Washington this morning. Immediately upon his return to the Department, after a meeting of the Cabinet, he held a private conference with Solicitor General Goode on official matters. At a later hour a Tribune correspondent saw the Attorney-General and gave him a verbal account of the statements which have been published in the Tribune respecting the suit to annul the Bell Telephone patents. Mr. Garland declared that he had read neither the Rogers letter nor the Van Benthuyzen dispatch."

"So far as my official connection with this suit was concerned the story is a short one, and was really all told in my dispatch published in the newspapers. I did not authorize the bringing of the suit, nor did I know that such a suit had been instituted until I received the dispatch asking if I had authorized it. I will say this: One hot day in the summer—probably about the end of July or the beginning of August—General Casey Young, of Memphis, came in here accompanied by Colonel Gantt, a lawyer of Memphis, Mr. Van Benthuyzen, whom I had never met before, and another gentleman whose name I do not recall. They brought a number of documents with them, and explained that they had come to make an application in behalf of the Pan-Electric company to have a suit brought by me as Attorney-General of the United States to annul the Bell patent. I replied that I could not consider such an application. One of them then asked me several questions, which I declined to answer, when Colonel Gantt or General Young spoke out and said, 'The Attorney-General is right; he cannot answer those questions.' There the conference ended and the gentlemen withdrew. They presented no written application or other papers to me, neither did they urge, as perhaps they might have done, that simply because I was an individual stockholder in the Pan-Electric company I would not be justified as Attorney-General in refusing to consider an application from other stockholders to have the Government bring a suit against the Bell company, and denying them a proper and legal remedy. That phase of the subject was not raised or discussed, and the matter was not brought to my attention again by any person until last week. Neither did I ever mention it to the Solicitor-General, who authorized the bringing of the suit in my absence, and he will tell you so. I have been a stockholder in the Pan-Electric company since it was organized, some two years ago. I acquired my stock when I was a private citizen, at least so far as any connection, present or prospective, with the Department of Justice was concerned."

That is the end of the quotation. Shall I read the rest?

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed and read the rest.

The WITNESS (reading):

"The correspondent then saw Solicitor-General Goode. He said, 'As soon as I could see the Attorney-General to-day, I mentioned the public criticism on account of the action of the Department in authorizing the bringing of the suit to set aside the Bell patents, and told him that I desired to shoulder the entire responsibility of that action and to be held accountable if any mistake had been made, for I had issued the order after a careful investigation of the subject, and wholly without regard to the question as to who were the parties in interest. I desire to repeat that statement to you in the most comprehensive and emphatic manner possible, and to say further that Mr. Garland never mentioned the subject of the telephone litigation to me, and that I did not know when I acted in the case that he had ever been asked to begin such a suit. The facts are as follows: Mr. Garland left Washington on the evening of August 27, and I became Acting Attorney-General under the law. On August 31, four days after Mr. Garland's departure, District Attorney McCorry, of the western district of Tennessee, addressed me a letter from Jackson, Tennessee. In that letter he set forth the grounds for his belief that the Bell patent was fraudulently obtained, and applied for authority to begin proceedings to annul it.

"I received Mr. McCorry's letter on the morning of September 2. On the same morning Senator Harris and ex-Congressman Casey Young were in my office to discuss the matter. We talked it over, and I told them that I would investigate and consider it, and give my decision the next morning. I went over the case with great care, and the next morning when General Young called for my answer I informed him that I had already authorized the district attorney to begin the suit. That is all there is of it. If any mistake has been made or wrong done, I alone am responsible. I simply examined the matter to see whether the proposed proceeding would be regular, and I not only became satisfied on that score, but was convinced that it was the only manner in which the validity of the Bell patents could be tested."

The CHAIRMAN. Is that a correct statement of what occurred?

The WITNESS. Yes, that is the correct statement of what occurred.

Q. I understand that you have met some of the attorneys of the Bell company since the agitation of this matter commenced.—A. I have.

Q. Will you name them?—A. Mr. Dickerson and Mr. Storrow.

Q. Where did you meet them?—A. I met them first in the room of the Assistant Attorney-General for the Department of the Interior, during the hearings that were held there last fall.

Q. Do you know the date of those hearings, or about the date?—A. I should say that it was some time in October. I could ascertain the date by looking at my scrap-book. I sent dispatches about that hearing.

Q. Did you meet them there otherwise than as they appeared before the Secretary of the Interior in the hearing?—A. Oh, yes; I met them as a seeker for news, in the same way that I met Colonel Young there.

Q. Did you meet them subsequently?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where?—A. I met Mr. Dickerson in this city some time in the winter; I cannot recollect the date now; I cannot even fix the month. He was trying a case in the Supreme Court, and I met him as I was passing through the rotunda one day, and had perhaps five minutes' conversation with him.

Q. On the subject of this investigation, the matter we are investigating now?—A. The talk we had that day consisted entirely of a statement by him as to the right of the Attorney-General to spend money to carry on these proceedings without a specific appropriation by Congress. I wrote a short dispatch about that, but I think it was not printed. It was simply what Mr. Dickerson said.

Q. In that dispatch did you give it as what Mr. Dickerson had said?—A. Yes, sir; as what he had said.

Q. Did you have any other interview with him?—A. I had an interview with Mr. Dickerson since this investigation began. It was when he returned from New Orleans. He had been down there trying a suit with this National Improved company, and I met him and had perhaps an hour's conversation with him.

Q. Where?—A. I think I met him at the office of Pollok and Bailey. A friend of mine, who is connected with the Bell company, an old Army comrade, was here and took me to see him.

Q. Who are Pollok and Bailey?—A. They are patent lawyers here. They are the solicitors who got out the Bell patent. They may be still connected with the Bell company; I do not know whether they are or not.

Q. You say this interview took place at their office?—A. Yes, sir; at their office.

Q. Were they both present?—A. Mr. Pollok was present; I think he was present during the whole of the conversation.

Q. Who else was present?—A. Major Brown, the gentleman to whom I refer.

Q. Anybody else?—A. I think not.

Q. Have you any objection to stating the subject of that conversation?—A. Mr. Dickerson was telling about the New Orleans suit, and that is where I first learned about what is called the mutilation of that Interior Department record. That was a subject of conversation, one of the subjects. Mr. Dickerson read considerable of his argument before the judge down there. It was very interesting.

Q. You were sent for, you say, to come there?—A. I met Major Brown, as I do almost every day when he is in the city, and he said Mr. Dickerson was here, and I said I would be glad to see him, and we went together to see him.

Q. Has Major Brown any connection with the Bell company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What connection?—A. I do not know exactly, but I think he is sort of special or traveling agent. He and I were in the Army together, and whenever he is in the city he comes to see me.

Q. Had he been in New Orleans with Mr. Dickerson?—A. Oh, no, sir; he had been in town for a week, I should say.

Q. You say it was at his instance that you went to the office?—A. Not at his instance. He said Mr. Dickerson was here, and I said I should be glad to see him.

Q. Did he give you to understand that Mr. Dickerson had requested or intimated that he would like to see you?—A. No, sir; no request. The request came from me, if there was any request about it.

Q. You say Mr. Dickerson read a part of his argument?—A. Yes; he read considerable of it.

Q. Was anything said there about making a publication of any matters referred to in the Tribune?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you have any other interview with Mr. Dickerson?—A. No; I have not seen Mr. Dickerson since. I have seen Mr. Storrow.

Q. Have you stated all the interviews that you had with Mr. Dickerson?—A. I think so; all that I recollect.

Q. You say you had met Mr. Storrow. When did you meet him?—A. I met him when he came back from New Orleans.

Q. Where?—A. At Welcker's Hotel.

Q. How was that meeting brought about?—A. I think Major Brown told me he was here, and I went to see him.

Q. The same gentleman who told you at the other time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had Mr. Storrow and Mr. Dickerson come here together from New Orleans?—A. No, sir. The interview with Mr. Storrow, I think, was a month later. I think the interview with Mr. Dickerson was just about the beginning of this investigation.

Q. Did Mr. Dickerson make any suggestions to you in regard to this investigation, as to furnishing matter or aiding in any way?—A. I told him that anything he could tell me about it in any way I should be very glad to know, and I would inform members of the committee about it. It was chiefly about getting hold of men who knew about the facts.

Q. Did he give you any information?—A. No, sir; I did not get anything from him that amounted to anything.

Q. Did Mr. Storrow?—A. I had considerable talk with Mr. Storrow, which I could not repeat, because it was lawyers' talk and I did not understand it. I saw Mr. Ranney the same evening and told him Mr. Storrow was here. Mr. Ranney said that he would be glad to see him, and I saw Mr. Storrow and told him that Mr. Ranney would be glad to see him. I brought them together in that way. Mr. Storrow is a very eminent lawyer, and he was talking about the legal aspects of the case.

Q. You say you could not understand him?—A. I could not understand very much of the intricate law of which he spoke.

Q. It should not take much to understand him if he is a good lawyer.—A. But that was all that Mr. Storrow discussed.

Q. How long did your interview with Mr. Storrow last?—A. I suppose I stayed with him an hour.

Q. That was at Welcker's?—A. Yes, sir; at Welcker's Hotel.

Q. Did you leave him there?—A. I left him there.

Q. Did you see him any more?—A. I saw him, I think, twice before he went away. I walked down the street with him one evening, and I just saw him in Mr. Ranney's room. I went around there one evening late and Mr. Storrow was there. That was the interview which was brought about by me.

Q. The same evening or afterwards?—A. It was the next evening, I guess; I do not think they met that evening.

Q. Did Mr. Storrow furnish you with any information in relation to this matter?—A. No, sir; he did not—not anything that I could use. I was after news more than anything else.

Q. Did he make any suggestions as to the manner of conducting this investigation, or in regard to any matters to be brought before the committee?—A. No, sir; he did not.

Q. Havn't you been quite active during the investigation in furnishing matter to the committee?—A. Well, everything that I have furnished I have tried to print beforehand; I have tried to get it into the Tribune first. Of course I felt an interest in—

Q. In what?—A. I felt an interest in having the facts come out to substantiate what I have written. But all my work has been the work of a newspaper man.

Q. Is that in vindication or defense of your friend, Mr. Garland, or against him?

The WITNESS. I did not quite catch the question.

The CHAIRMAN. You say you have been anxious to have everything come out here, to have this investigation sustain what you have said in the Tribune. You stated yesterday that you were a friend of Mr. Garland. Have you desired to vindicate and defend him or to attack him?

The WITNESS. Did I desire to vindicate him?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

A. I desire to have the truth come out. If he is perfectly innocent the truth is not going to hurt him, if we can get at the facts.

Q. What has been the tone of your comments on what you wrote about the truth, friendly or unfriendly to Mr. Garland?

The WITNESS. Do you mean personally?

The CHAIRMAN. As connected with this Pan-Electric enterprise?

A. I regard Mr. Garland in two lights: First as a friend, second as a public man and an officer of the Government. I draw a very marked distinction between the man in the two capacities.

Q. Have you treated him as a friend in your correspondence?—A. I have not had any occasion to treat him personally at all. I never have made any personal attack upon Mr. Garland.

Q. Have you not been industrious in hunting up the facts which seem to make against him?—A. I have been industrious in hunting up all the facts, all the things that I could get. I don't want any other newspaper to get ahead of the Tribune on the news. That is the mainspring of the whole business, so far as I am concerned.

Q. Have not all your comments upon the matter been of an unfriendly tone to Mr. Garland and the other gentlemen who were connected with the Pan-Electric company?—A. Well, you know a correspondent does not make many comments.

Q. Sometimes he does.—A. Of course there is a way of putting things.

Q. Well, haven't you put things in a way to make them appear in an unfriendly light towards the Attorney-General and these other gentlemen?—A. My dispatches will show for themselves, and you must judge of that.

Q. Can you state generally what has been your purpose?—A. My main purpose has been to get all the news.

Q. In putting things, what has been your design; how did you want to put them, favorably or unfavorably to the parties?—A. I wanted to put them so that people would read them.

Mr. RANNEY. The question is, whether you endeavored to put the facts as they were, or as they were not.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not the question. I would not ask him if he put the facts as they were not and told a lie.

The WITNESS. I do not know hardly how to explain it, Mr. Chairman, but I have not any personal or unfriendly feeling.

Q. A man of your experience can say whether the tone of your correspondence has been friendly or unfriendly to Mr. Garland and those associated with him?—A. Unfriendly, most decidedly, to the transactions themselves, but not unfriendly to the people concerned. I draw that distinction.

The CHAIRMAN. It is a pretty hard one to draw.

Mr. HALL. It is like the fellow who refused to kiss the Chinese woman; he had to draw the line, and he drew it there.

Q. You say you had two or three interviews with Mr. Storrow, and that one of them was at Welcker's?—A. I had one interview. I met him for a few minutes in Mr. Ranney's room, late one evening.

Q. How long were you there together?

The WITNESS. At Welcker's?

The CHAIRMAN. In Mr. Ranney's room.

A. It was very late when I went over there. I think probably I may have been there fifteen or twenty minutes, but it might have been longer.

Q. Did Mr. Storrow go with you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did he come after you got there?—A. He was there when I went.

Q. Did he go away with you?—A. Yes, sir; we walked out down to Welcker's together. I think that is the time we walked down the street together.

Q. Did you meet him upon any other occasion?—A. I think that is the only time I saw him.

Q. That is twice, then?—A. Yes, sir; twice. I think the time I walked down street with him was the same evening.

Q. Have you had any instructions from the managers of the Tribune as to the tone your dispatches should take?—A. The only instructions I have received about this matter from the Tribune are to be very cautious and careful about my facts.

Q. You say you had no other instructions, nothing else, as to the general tone you were to give the dispatches or letters?—A. No, sir; nothing whatever. The correspondent takes his tone from the tone of the editor.

Q. That is what I thought, and I want to know whether you had any.—A. I received no specific instructions at all. That is a general rule, you know, which every newspaper man must observe.

Q. What do you gather to be the tone of the editorials of the Tribune; do you take them to be unfriendly to the Attorney-General?—A. Not to the Attorney-General, but to these transactions.

Q. I speak of the Attorney-General as connected with these transactions.—A. In his official capacity, yes.

Q. At the time of your meeting Mr. Hill and getting information from him, did he inform you where he had obtained his information?—A. I think that at some time, a time which I cannot fix, he told me that he had had some intimate relations with Colonel Young.

Q. Did he state what they were, in what capacity they were together?—A. I understood them to be intimate friends. I don't know but what they had quarters at the same place; I do not know, and cannot state about that. At any rate he was at Colonel Young's quarters a great deal.

Q. Did he say that he had been Colonel Young's clerk, or had done writing for him?—A. He said that he had done a good deal of writing for him.

Q. Did he say that he had any relation with the Pan-Electric company?—A. I think he told me that he kept the books of the company for a while. I was rather surprised, glancing at the books one day, not to see his handwriting in them.

Q. You thought then at the time you were dealing with him for news, that he had been Colonel Young's clerk and also bookkeeper, keeping the books of the Pan-Electric company?—A. He said that he had.

Q. Did you understand that it was in that way that he got his information?—A. I presumed that he had obtained some of it in that way; I knew from what he said that the relations between himself and Colonel Young had been quite intimate, or I supposed that they had; he so represented it.

Q. Did you consider it legitimate to obtain information from a man who had been the secretary of another, or the officer of a company, and publish it in the cause of just and fair dealing?

The WITNESS. I don't quite understand that question.

The CHAIRMAN. You seem to have gotten information from Mr. Hill which you knew at the time he had obtained by reason of his relations to Colonel Young as his secretary, and by his connection with the Pan-Electric company as a book-keeper. And you distinguish in your treatment of the Attorney-General between the man and the officer. I assume or suppose that you published this matter because you thought he had not behaved properly as an officer, as Attorney-General. I want to know whether you consider it legitimate and fair, even in a case such as that, to obtain information from one who had been the secretary of another, the clerk of another, or one who has been the officer of a corporation, intending to affect injuriously the principal, the employer, and the corporation, and to publish it in a newspaper?

The WITNESS. Now I understand you. I have had considerable experience in the newspaper business, and I have never found a way of getting at transactions correctly except from people who knew something about them. If I thought that the enemy of mankind had a piece of news and I could go and interview him I would do it.

Q. It is hardly necessary to make it so extreme as that.—A. I want to put it very strongly.

Q. I understand you want to get news from anybody?—A. From any source.

Q. You would get news from a man's wife and publish it, affecting him injuriously?—A. No, sir; I would not do anything of the sort.

Q. You say you would get it from the enemy of mankind, and I understood you to make that as an extreme case, as far as you could go. Do you consider it legitimate to publish anything without regard to how you came by it and the relations of the parties?—A. That is going into newspaper ethics.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, I think it is fair in this case.

Mr. RANNEY. It is not of so much consequence where you get the truth as that you get it.

Mr. HALL. It is not always the truth, either.

The WITNESS. Exercising due caution to verify the statements made, I would take a statement from any source.

Q. And publish it?—A. Yes; and publish it if it were a legitimate subject of newspaper discussion.

Q. And pay for it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I understand you were willing to pay Mr. Hill for anything you published?—A. Oh, yes, sir; we always pay for things we get—not always, but most always.

Q. I think I understand you; that you would buy from a person who was the clerk of another information which he had received by reason of his relations to this other person; you would buy it, pay for it, and publish it?—A. Yes; if it related to a public matter. I think I can stand on that. I perhaps ought to explain, Mr. Chairman, that that is not the common practice.

Q. I hope not. Did you think it was the proper thing towards your friend, the Attorney-General, to do that which was not the common practice?—A. I think it was a proper practice. I think it was a proper thing to do, to try to get at the truth of this matter. I was not so solicitous about the agencies as I was about the truth itself. I never publish one line that I do not believe to be true, and that I do not take great pains to verify.

Q. You may state what purpose you had in view in pursuing this (as I gather from you) rather unusual course in gathering this information and publishing it.

The WITNESS. Do you mean what was the object?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; what did you seek to accomplish by it?—A. In the first place, and above all things, I sought to publish the news; that has been my main purpose all the time. In the second place, as a good citizen, I thought that if there was anything wrong about this thing, it ought to come out. I thought, too—well, I don't care to say what I thought about it in that respect; you would not care to hear it. But the main purpose was to publish the news.

Q. You may state, with the consent of the committee, also, whether you found anything which, in your judgment, affected the personal integrity of the Attorney-General?

Mr. RANNEY. Do you care to put such a question as that?

The CHAIRMAN. I say with the consent of the committee.

Mr. RANNEY. We have allowed inquiries about the personal opinions of people freely, but I do not think they are competent evidence, and I simply suggest to you whether you ought to ask the opinion of the witness as to what he thinks. If you think you ought to do so, I will not object to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The opinion of this witness affects the conduct of a great newspaper—

Mr. RANNEY. I don't want to argue it; I submit it to your own discretion.

The CHAIRMAN. I say, if the committee is willing, you may answer that question. The gentlemen of the committee have heard the question, and if there is any objection they will state it.

Mr. RANNEY. Put your question again.

The CHAIRMAN. State whether, in your judgment, you have found anything in the course of this investigation or inquiry, from the beginning, which affects the personal honor, honesty, and integrity of the Attorney-General.

Mr. RANNEY. I think it is an improper question to answer or to ask.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will note that I assume the responsibility so far as the asking goes, if it is improper. I make it in this case purely my own question.

Mr. RANNEY. In putting it you represent the committee. I am alone on this side of the table, and leave it to your own side of the table as to their sense of its propriety or competency.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman ought to see that his comments on the question and the manner in which I put it are not, it seems to me, proper.

Mr. RANNEY. It is not the manner of your putting it, but as to the propriety of the question itself.

The CHAIRMAN. I put the question in such a way that the responsibility for it will rest entirely upon myself. I do not want to involve anybody else in it.

Mr. RANNEY. You represent the committee in doing it.

The CHAIRMAN. In the matter of examination I do not represent the committee any more than does any other member of the committee. In the examination I speak only as an individual member of the committee.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, measured by the legal standard, the question would not be competent, but if it is to be determined according to the loose course which has been pursued here, almost anything is pertinent.

The CHAIRMAN. I will entertain any objection to it.

Mr. OATES. I do not think the witness ought to be required to answer it. So far as I am concerned, if he sees proper to answer it, I shall have no objection to his doing so.

The CHAIRMAN (to Mr. Eden). What do you say, governor?

Mr. EDEN. So far as am I concerned, I have opposed the introduction of opinions in all cases, but unsuccessfully. I am of the same opinion now that I have been all the time, that the opinion of the witnesses which have been given all through the investigation should not have been allowed. Of course I would not insist on the witness answering the question unless he chose to.

Mr. HALL. So far as I am concerned, I expect this witness has expressed his opinion with tolerable freedom in his journal and said about all that he cares to. But if he has anything more to add to it, I would like to hear it. I am willing to leave it entirely optional with him. I do not think the witness ought to be required to answer the question unless he is willing to. If he has anything more to add to what he has said, I would like to hear it.

Mr. HALE. I think a question as to whether he has told all that he knows about this transaction would be sufficient.

Mr. OATES. There is a question put by the chairman which is pending. The question is whether he ought to be required to answer that question or not.

Mr. HALL. Let the question be read.

The reporter read as follows:

Q. State whether, in your judgment, you have found anything in the course of this investigation or inquiry, from the beginning, which affects the personal honor, honesty and integrity of the Attorney-General?

Mr. RANNEY. The question is not whether he shall be required to answer that. We have had no intimation from the witness that he has any reluctance in answering it. The question is as to the propriety of putting it and the competency of the question. Gentlemen say we have indulged in great latitude in that respect, but I appeal to the record whether I have ever put a question of that nature to any witness since this investigation began.

Mr. HALE. I am free to say that I am opposed to the question.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is objection to the question it will not be pressed.

Mr. HALE. His answer will be based on his own judgment on these facts, and might be adverse or friendly to the Attorney-General. I presume it would be adverse.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is put in the view that the conduct of the paper that the witness represents and the conduct of the witness himself is, to some extent, a matter of investigation in the inquiry before this committee. We are not only inquiring as to the conduct of the members of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, but we are inquiring as to the conduct of the New York Tribune.

Mr. RANNEY. As to payment of money to them, that is all.

The CHAIRMAN. If we find that the New York Tribune has pursued a certain course, we want to know its reason for pursuing it, and it is not confined in that view to the payment of money.

Mr. OATES. I think the question ought to be left to the witness to answer or not, as he pleases.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand there is objection to it, and I will not ask it. I do not say that it is within any legal rule of evidence.

Mr. RANNEY. You understand that I make no objection. I make simply a suggestion, and leave you gentlemen to determine it.

Mr. OATES. I think the witness should be allowed to answer it or not, as he pleases.

Mr. HALE. I object to an answer containing any allegations against Mr. Garland, based upon the opinion of the witness, which might be friendly or unfriendly.

Mr. OATES. You have it in the newspapers?

Mr. HALE. It may be in the newspapers, but not before this committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Hale objects to the question. I believe I have nothing more then.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. In one of the dispatches which were read yesterday, referring to the Baltimore suit, as I heard it, there was something said in relation to Mr. Dickerson confirming it. I understand you to say you did not get your information from Mr. Dickerson. I have not seen that dispatch. Was that what you put in, or was it gotten up somewhere else for the paper?—A. Mr. Dickerson lives in New York, and I understand that he was interviewed by one of the local reporters of the Tribune as to the truth of it.

The CHAIRMAN. I thought I stated that at the time.

The WITNESS. I do not know personally anything about it.

Q. That was not part of your dispatch?—A. It was not.

Q. So, if it was put in, it was by the paper in New York?—A. It was put in after an interview with Mr. Dickerson. "What Mr. Dickerson said," I think, is the heading. It was a local paragraph.

Q. They saw him, and he confirmed the truth. As I understand you, your course of conduct as a newspaper correspondent is to get your facts from whatever sources you can get them?—A. Yes.

Q. And, so far as you can, impartially?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that in this case you went to the Attorney-General himself as soon as he returned, and likewise to Mr. Goode?—A. I was very sorry that I could not hold that matter until the Attorney-General did return. I wanted him to have his say on his side.

Q. And you went to them to get their statement. I suppose they knew you were to publish it in your newspaper?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it was given to you carefully and deliberately, they knowing that you were going to publish it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have been asked particularly about your having sought interviews with Mr. Dickerson and Mr. Storrow. I observe that you have not been asked as to whether you proceeded to get information and have interviews with anybody else on the opposite side representing the Pan-Electric people. State how that was.—A. I interviewed everybody that I could.

Mr. EDEN. He was asked about interviews with Mr. Garland.

The CHAIRMAN. I have no objection; that is all right; if I omitted it I knew it would be asked.

Mr. EDEN. The remark is hardly justified by the facts.

Mr. RANNEY. I will be my own judge about my questions being justified, if they are competent. [To the witness.] Will you please answer the question?

A. I had interviews with Casey Young, Mr. Seixas, Col. Looney, and Dr. Rogers and his son; I guess those are all; I tried very hard to get Col. Young to make a statement of his side of the case, and he did promise to do so two or three times, but never found time to prepare it, and so I did not get it.

Q. You have been here during this investigation, I believe?—A. I have been here all the time except three or four days.

Q. When the investigation began were any pains taken by members of the committee to get from you in any wise the articles that had been published in the Tribune, and which are assumed to have given rise to the investigation, and did you furnish them to the committee?—A. When the investigation began I foresaw that those articles might be required, and so I went to work one day and cut them out and made a scrap-book. Mr. Millard asked me for the articles, and I furnished him that scrap-book as a convenient form. Subsequently, perhaps at my own suggestion that the chairman might want to see the articles if he was going to examine me upon them, I took the scrap-book to him.

Q. Have you furnished any other members of the committee anything?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. Have you furnished the chairman?—A. I furnished the chairman with a copy of Mr. Dickerson's brief in the New Orleans case. When I saw Mr. Dickerson I told him that I wanted three or four copies of that brief; that members of the committee might desire to have it. He gave them to me, and I furnished the chairman one copy of that, and I believe I furnished him with copies of one or two other briefs.

Q. I observe that some of the members of the committee have had copies of the record of the proceedings in the Interior Department, the first volume. Did you furnish those copies?—A. I did not.

Q. Do you know who did?—A. I do not.

Q. You do not know why they were not furnished with the second volume, if they were not, do you?—A. I do not.

Mr. EDEN. I got both.

Mr. HALL. I am like Lord Hale, I only got one.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not think there is anything improper about it; it was highly proper. You should have them all; I do not care where you got them.

Q. You say you got from Mr. Storrow the documents and papers in the New Orleans suit?—A. I got Mr. Dickerson's brief.

Q. Did you furnish that to the committee?—A. I furnished the chairman with a copy, and I think I furnished you a copy, and I kept one copy for myself; I had three of them; I think that I furnished the chairman with a copy of Mr. Storrow's brief.

The CHAIRMAN. You furnished me two or three; I have forgotten what.

Q. Do you know of any other member of the committee than myself desiring to see Mr. Storrow and Mr. Dickerson?—A. No; I don't know anything about that.

Mr. HALL. Desiring to see who?

Mr. RANNEY. Whether any of them wanted to see those gentlemen to get information to guide them in this investigation?

Mr. EDEN. I was not so fortunate as to be informed that Mr. Storrow was in the city.

Mr. HALL (to the stenographer). Read the question.

The STENOGRAPHER read as follows:

"Q. Do you know of any other member of the committee than myself desiring to see Mr. Storrow and Mr. Dickerson?"

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you have any conversation with any other members of the committee about any steps which it might be advantageous to take in conducting this examination?—A. Mr. Boyle, Mr. Moffatt, Mr. Millard, Mr. Hanback, and yourself have all talked with me about the investigation.

Q. Seeking to get all the information we could?—A. And Mr. Hall and Mr. Hale. We talked considerably about it one night on the street, I recollect. I don't know whether they were seekers for information or not.

Q. Did they speak about your having communicated facts that you knew to members of the committee? Do you know anybody who has been communicating facts to them, so far as you have observed? It is all proper enough; I do not imply anything wrong; it is highly proper.—A. I understand Colonel Young has been attending to that.

Q. Very properly. He has been in communication with them under your observation and to your knowledge?—A. I have seen him about the room here all the time, and I saw him take Mr. Jones out of the room yesterday morning.

Q. You considered it the duty of the committee, I suppose, to find their facts and get their information wherever they could?—A. I don't think I ought to answer that question.

Mr. HALE. I object to it.

Q. You considered it your duty to furnish information to members of the committee whenever they asked for it?—A. Whenever anybody has asked for information I have furnished it if I could, and if I hadn't it I did my best to obtain it.

Q. You have been asked considerably in detail about interviews with Mr. Dickerson and Mr. Storrow. I understand that you were seeking information about the New Orleans suits?—A. Yes, sir; and about everything connected with this case and this whole Government business. Colonel Young desires me to say that he came to me and asked me to point out Mr. Jones to him. That is true.

Q. You refer to the occasion of yesterday?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When he wished to give him information. I want to call your attention first to your interview with Mr. Garland. I see that Mr. Garland gave you a minute account, as you have detailed it—without pretending to characterize it—of an interview which was had between him and Mr. Casey Young, Mr. Van Benthuyzen, Col. Gantt and another gentleman whom he did not remember. Did he say anything at that time about having had an interview on the next preceding day, or soon before that, with that same Mr. Van Benthuyzen and Mr. Huntington?—A. He did not.

Q. He made no mention of it?—A. No, sir. I asked him to tell me all about this case and he proceeded to do it.

Q. Did he say anything in that interview about Mr. Van Benthuyzen or any one else coming after that interview and getting his assent to the withdrawal of Mr. Van Benthuyzen's application which had been referred to the Interior Department?—A. He did not.

Q. He made no mention of that?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you say that he said to you that he did not remember the name of the other gentleman who called?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then he did not say that it was Mr. Keasby, of New Jersey, or Mr. Von Breisen?—A. He did not.

Q. He mentioned nothing about Mr. C. P. Huntington?—A. I think not, unless Mr. Huntington's name was mentioned in the dispatch.

Q. I do not observe it here. Were you particular to take down accurately everything he said?—A. No, sir; I boiled that down a great deal. We had quite a long conversation. That is the substance of it; every material fact is given. The limitation, upon newspaper space are such that we cannot give everything.

Q. I see you state that Mr. Goode, in your interview with him, declined to answer certain questions?—A. That was Mr. Garland.

Q. Probably I have got the wrong one. What were those questions you desired to put to him that he declined to answer?—A. They were not questions I desired to put to him. He said that one of those gentlemen who came to see him put certain questions to him which he declined to answer.

Q. He was asked questions which he declined to answer, but those questions were not put by you?—A. Not by me, but by one of those gentlemen who came to see him.

Q. I see you say something in this dispatch about Mr. Goode telling you that Mr. Harris and Casey Young came in and that he discussed the matter with them. Do you recollect what he said on that subject?—A. The wording is better in the dispatch than I could give it now; the word "discussed" was not used; he said, "We talked it over."

Q. "We talked it over and I told them that I would investigate and consider it, and give my decision the next morning"?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he say to you that all or either of those gentlemen said to him that the object was to inquire whether the letter had come and whether he would act upon it?—A. No, sir; he did not. My understanding of what took place is very different from that.

Q. I have not looked through all your dispatches here. Did you, after you had first written them, find any fact which you ascertained to be otherwise than as you had stated in the dispatches, so that you had occasion to change them?—A. There was just one occasion. I received a copy of Mr. Garland's letter to the President—that correspondence which took place, I think, on the 8th of October, or the 9th, or perhaps after that—pretty late in the evening. I read it through hastily, and wrote an introduction to it. In that I unfortunately said or omitted to say something which I corrected the next day. I regarded it as an injustice to the Attorney-General requiring correction. I said that he discussed his relations as an attorney for the Pan-Electric company without stating his relations as a stockholder. What I should have said, and what I intended to say, was, "Without dwelling upon his relations as a stockholder." I used the word "stating" instead of "dwelling."

Q. And you corrected that?—A. I did correct that promptly.

Q. Were there any facts stated by you in these articles that you did not have reason to believe were true?—A. I took the utmost pains to verify every statement that I made.

Q. As you remarked yesterday, in answer to Mr. Boyle, the chairman, you did that knowing your responsibility for libel if you were wrong?—A. Yes, sir; a newspaper man always has that before his eyes.

Q. And that you had a caution or request from headquarters that you should be careful with your facts?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you took the utmost pains to be so?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you get the letters from Dr. Rogers? I do not know whether you published them before they came out in the World or not?—A. I published some that the World had not published.

Q. Where did you get them? I think you have not been inquired of in relation to that?—A. I got them from Dr. Rogers and his son. There were a good many more that might have been published that would have made very good reading.

Q. If they had been published in the World before, you published them yourself likewise?—A. Such as I thought material. There were some letters omitted from the World (not obtained by the World, perhaps is the better way of stating it) that I regarded as material, and I published those, and I republished several of the letters that had already appeared in the World.

Q. Where did you get those letters?—A. I got them from Dr. Rogers and his son.

Q. On your own solicitation or were they volunteered by him?—A. On my own solicitation.

Q. Did he or his son charge anything, or ask anything, or take anything for them, any money or other consideration?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you seek out Mr. Hill, or did he come to you?—A. Oh, Mr. Hill is frequently in the habit of coming into my office when he has anything he thinks is news.

Q. In this case I forget whether you said he came?—A. He had brought me something several days before, and was frequently in and out of my office. It was at the dull season of the year, when men don't have very much to do.

Q. Was it a case where you went to him to ferret out secrets, or where he came and communicated to you what he saw fit?—A. He came to me.

Q. I do not know whether there is any fact that you have not stated and that you desire to state or not?—A. There is one fact I would like to state that rather completes my testimony on one point. I was asked on yesterday whether I had any communication with Mr. Dickerson prior to the publication of this first dispatch. I did not have. I did not know then that there was any such person as Mr. Dickerson. But I did try to find somebody that could tell me the Bell side of the story. I always want to hear both sides. So I sent a note up to Professor Bell's house, but he had not yet returned from the country, and I did not know anybody else in Washington to whom I could apply in his behalf. I want to state that I made that effort to see Professor Bell.

Q. Is there anything else you desire to state?—A. That is all.

Q. I understand you were in the Army with Mr. Brown, the Patent Office man?—A. We were together in the Army during the war.

Q. And it was at this office where you visited him that you met Mr. Dickerson and Mr. Storrow?—A. Major Brown always comes to my office when he is in Washington; we are old comrades and friends.

Q. I want to know whether you were requested by any member of this committee to get information or to name any sources of information for use in this investigation?—A. I was; by yourself and, I think, by Mr. Millard.

Q. And it was at my express request that Mr. Storrow came, thinking I might get information from him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Otherwise, would he have come to see any member of the committee himself?—A. I do not think he had any such intention.

Q. He was then in town on his return from the argument of the case in New Orleans, I understand?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. That is all.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. Just a question or two. Among other things you wished to ascertain about this matter was the connection that Attorney-General Garland had with the bringing of the Government suit, I suppose?—A. Yes; that was one of the matters, and an important one.

Q. And you were anxious to get the truth about that as well as about other things?—A. Exactly.

Q. Upon his return from Arkansas you went and had an interview with him and got a statement from him as to what he had done or had not done in reference to that matter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He gave you the entire transaction, did he not?—A. He did. He talked very frankly about it. He said there was very little to say in addition to what he had already said. He had sent a dispatch from Little Rock to the Times-Democrat in New Orleans.

Q. Then after your interview with him you also had an interview with Mr. Goode, the Solicitor-General, in reference to bringing the suit?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He gave you his version of it, did he?—A. He did.

Q. After you had had those interviews with Mr. Garland and Mr. Goode, did you make any further effort to ascertain from any other source the connection that Mr. Garland had had with the bringing of the suit?—A. I have been making efforts ever since then.

Q. Did you have any reason to believe that the statement that Attorney-General Garland had given to you in reference to this matter was not correct?—A. I had this in view all the time—

Q. Of course I am not particular about the form of your answer, but please keep in view the question—that is, whether you had any reason to believe that his statement was not true?—A. No; I will not say that I had any reason to believe that his statement was not true, but I thought it was a subject for further investigation.

Q. Had you any reason to believe that the account Solicitor-General Goode gave you was not true?—A. I will make the same answer to that question. I was not satisfied.

Q. I will ask you if you did not regard the statements of Attorney-General Garland and Solicitor-General Goode, upon a matter that must have been within their personal knowledge, as entitled to as much weight as the statement of Mr. Hill?—A. I regarded them as entitled to a great deal more weight. Mr. Hill, however, did not make any statement to me, I think, on that point.

Q. From whom did you acquire any information on that subject that you regarded as being more reliable than the statement of the Attorney-General himself?—A. I do not say that I had any information that I regarded as more trustworthy. I was not satisfied in my own mind about it, and I considered it a proper subject for further inquiry.

Q. There is no question about that. You made a very thorough inquiry and were at considerable expense in order to ascertain who was connected with the Pais-Electric Telephone Company, if I understand your evidence.—A. No.

Q. Then give your version of it yourself.—A. The names of the chief stockholders and the directors I had had in my possession for some two years—

Q. Let me ask you there, before you proceed: Was there any secret about that?—A. None, whatever.

Q. It was published in the newspapers, was it not?—A. It was kept standing as an advertisement in a Washington newspaper for I don't know how long.

Q. Now, go on with your statement.—A. I did not incur any expense to ascertain that specific fact.

Q. What particular point was it that you were investigating that you were anxious to learn in reference to that enterprise?—A. I wanted to find out all about it.

Q. You knew already, and had known for two years, who the gentlemen were who composed the association?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What reason was there for desiring to make any special investigation about it?—A. As I stated in my testimony yesterday, the thing that probably started me off on this was what I had read in one of the Baltimore papers one morning about the proceedings in court there; that it was—

Q. You stated that yesterday.—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALL. Let him state it again.

Mr. RANNEY. Let him finish his answer.

Mr. EDEN. Certainly.

The WITNESS. Perhaps I had finished my answer. All I wanted to say in addition to that is this: The condition of affairs two years ago was a simple one. It was then just a simple question as to whether one electrician should be turned out in the House and another one put in; and it came in my way then, as a newspaper man, to ascertain something about this Pan-Electric Telephone Company. The change that was contemplated did not take place, and therefore there was no need of any publication about it. In addition to that, the president of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company at that time was not Commissioner of Railroads; the vice-president was a Senator; the counsel was not Attorney-General of the United States; one of the directors was not Commissioner of Indian Affairs; there was no Government suit ordered, as I supposed and believed, at the instance, or in any manner with the cognizance or consent, of the Attorney-General of the United States, who, at the same time, was a stockholder and counsel of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company. Those were the reasons which prompted the investigation.

Q. Did you institute any other investigation to ascertain what members of Congress or Government officers might have stock in railroad companies or telegraph companies or any other corporations except this Pan-Electric Telephone Company?—A. No; I didn't know of any other in which the Government had brought suit.

Q. You were aware of the fact, I suppose, that some railroad companies had very important interests in Congress on which legislation was being had?—A. Yes, sir; but I did not know that the Department of Justice was bringing a suit in the interest of any of them.

Q. Did you know that there was legislation in Congress coming up on that subject with reference to the forfeiture of lands and things of that kind?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. Did you institute any investigation to ascertain whether members of Congress were interested in that?—A. If I could get the first clue to it I would; I would be very glad to pay anybody that would furnish it to me.

Q. Did you make any investigation to ascertain whether there were any Government officers or members of Congress connected with the Bell Telephone Company?—A. No, sir; the Bell Telephone Company was not in this scrape except as a defendant. Naturally I supposed that if Congress took this thing up and any Congressman was interested in the Bell Company that fact would be shown.

Q. I was simply asking about what steps you yourself had taken.—A. I did not take any steps myself, because the Bell company was not applying to the Department of Justice to have suit brought. That was the central fact of this whole situation.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. You have been asked by Judge Ranney about who has been taking any part or interest in this investigation. I understand you to say that he approached you with a view of having you assist in furnishing the names of witnesses or any information you could to further the investigation?—A. Not so much the names of witnesses as facts. Well, yes, furnishing names of witnesses, too, in the sense of pointing out from whom certain information could be obtained.

Q. Have you done so?—A. I have.

Q. Do you know anybody else who has been doing that?—A. I suppose Colonel Young has been doing it.

Q. I am talking about your knowledge with reference to Mr. Ranney.

The WITNESS. Furnishing information to Mr. Ranney?

Mr. HALL. Yes.

A. I think probably half a dozen people have done it, but I only know by hearsay.

Mr. RANNEY. Mr. Hall is in error on that subject. The first inquiry on that subject was by the chairman; mine was only an extension of his.

Mr. HALL. I suppose it is nothing improper, is it?

Mr. RANNEY. Not at all, only I do not want you to give me the credit of originating anything.

Mr. HALL. I do not know that I have done that.

Q. You say you do not know of anybody else who has been doing that?—A. Only by hearsay.

Mr. HALL. I suppose hearsay is not competent, and I do not care so much about that.

The WITNESS. I have heard so much talk here about it not being competent that I feel a little delicacy about it.

Mr. HALL. I do not want you to do anything indelicate.

Q. You have occasionally, during the progress of this inquiry, furnished a note or memorandum to him?—A. I have.

Q. When his memory failed, or anything of that kind, you prompted him?—A. Well, it don't very often fail, but whenever I thought there was any danger that the point might escape him I have prompted him; I have also prompted the chairman.

Q. I suppose you did that as a mere matter of news, in order to get the news?—A. Yes; it was in that way—to get at the news.

Q. You speak about having had an interview with me?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you call that an interview?—A. Oh, no; we talked over this matter some.

Q. Now, I want to ask you if we did. I want to ask you if you are not mistaken in saying that we said anything about this matter?—A. It seems to me that we did.

Q. Do you not know that the only subject that was talked over between you and myself and Mr. Hale was relative to the habit or usage in publishing newspaper articles for pay, and that it was simply a casual conversation on that subject, on the propriety of doing it?

The WITNESS. Was not that part of this investigation?

Mr. HALL. I do not so understand it at all.

The WITNESS. I thought Mr. Pulitzer's resolution referred to it.

Mr. HALL. You may have had this thing on your brain; but do you not know, as a matter of fact, we did not talk at all with reference to this investigation?

The WITNESS. We did not talk about anything except that.

Mr. HALL. Do you not know that nothing was said about what was testified to or was to be testified to in relation to this subject?

The WITNESS. As to what should be testified?

Mr. HALL. Or had been.

The WITNESS. No; my impression is that we did.

Q. I want you to state a single word that passed between you and myself, or between you and Mr. Hale in my presence, touching what witnesses had been here, or what had been said or done here.—A. The conversation between you and Mr. Hale and myself was rather conversational about the morality of dealing in wheat options, I think.

Q. It commenced in that way, did it not, as a matter of general speculation?—A. Yes, sir. After Mr. Hale went home, you and I walked along and talked a little while on a corner on F street, and my impression is that we talked about the investigation, but not about the witnesses.

Q. Was there anything said between you and me except as to the morality of these newspapers; what they could or could not publish for information?—A. Perhaps that was all.

Q. Did I ask you to hunt up any testimony or do a single thing with reference to this investigation?—A. You did not.

Q. It was just a casual interview?—A. Yes, sir; a casual talk. Perhaps if you will refresh your memory you will see that Mr. Ranney asked me whether I talked with other members of the committee about it.

Q. I infer from your answer that you meant to imply that I had some talk with you about this subject under investigation.—A. Oh, no; I did not mean to be so understood.

Mr. RANNEY. I did not ask him because I thought there was anything improper about it. It was a very proper thing to do.

Mr. HALL. The trouble is that people outside do not entertain the same views about it that you and I do.

The WITNESS. I did not mean to be so interpreted at all.

Mr. RANNEY. I don't know how a committee could make an investigation unless they sought the facts somewhere, or the source from which the facts could be obtained.

The WITNESS. This conversation, I will say now, was merely a casual one. We happened to meet on the street one evening, and we talked some time about wheat options, newspaper morality, and so on. But I thought the talk about newspaper morality related to this investigation.

Mr. HALL. In regard to Colonel Young, I inferred from your answer that you implied that Colonel Young and myself have had interviews. You spoke about his assisting. Do you mean to imply that?

Mr. RANNEY. I did not ask it as an impropriety.

Mr. HALL. If it is of no importance I do not know why it was asked.

Mr. RANNEY. Simply to show that both sides were seeking information wherever they could get it, and seeking the sources of information.

Mr. HALE. I am free to say that I have had frequent talks with men on both sides of this controversy, and I did not think there was anything wrong about it.

Mr. RANNEY. I should not have asked the question, but the chairman put some questions so limited that I thought it might raise an imputation, and I extended it so that it might not appear that there was any imputation.

Mr. HALE. I have spoken to both sides, and think it is perfectly right.

The WITNESS. I think I have had more than one conversation with Mr. Hale about it.

Mr. HALE. Yes, casually, as we have met.

The WITNESS. I did not say anything about Colonel Young except that, seeing him here in the room, I supposed that he was taking an active interest in this case, and was furnishing information as he had opportunity to do. That is what I said.

Mr. RANNEY. I have sought information from Mr. Young and everybody else.

Q. Speaking of furnishing records, do you know who furnished me with records?—A. I do not.

Q. Do you know whether I have been furnished with a full record?—A. I do not.

Q. You have taken a very decided interest in this matter from the beginning, as a partisan, have you not?—A. As a citizen.

Q. I put the question if you have not done it as a partisan. As Judge Ranney says, there is nothing wrong about that at all; it is highly proper for you to do so, but I want the fact.—A. Yes, and if I had been a Democrat I should have taken just as strong an interest in it as a partisan.

Q. But you were not a Democrat, were you?—A. I suppose that a man's partisan feelings color a great many things.

Q. How long have you been connected with the Tribune?—A. I think about eight years.

Q. Were you ever connected with a Democratic newspaper?—A. I never was.

Q. I think you stated, in answer to a question, that a correspondent for one of these great daily papers, who resides here at the capital, has a sort of implied instruction, that is not necessary to be put in form, from the manager of the paper, about the political color of his correspondence?—A. Well, newspaper correspondents in Washington, you know, must agree with the policy of the administration of their papers.

Q. You want to make all the political capital out of any facts that may come in your way affecting what you call political the personnel of men in position of different politics, do you not?—A. I do not quite understand that question.

Mr. HALL. Read it, Mr. Reporter, and let me see if I have it in proper shape.

The STENOGRAPHER (reading):

“You want to make all the political capital out of any facts that may come in your way affecting what you call the political personnel of men in position of different politics, do you not?”

A. I should say yes, sir; though I do not know what you mean by political personnel.

Q. You have taken an active and zealous part as correspondent of the Tribune in getting up all these facts and in stating them just as strongly as you know how, to produce adverse political effect, have you not?—A. Well, Mr. Hall, if you knew what I had not said about this thing you wouldn't ask me that question. I have not put these things as strongly as I could. I have put them pretty strongly sometimes, but I have been extremely careful in what I have said.

Q. About what have you been careful?—A. In keeping within the limits of what I regarded to be the facts.

Q. Where there has been any doubt about the fact you have always thrown it against the officer, have you not?—A. I have tried not to be in doubt about the fact.

Q. In this article to which attention has been called, and from which you read, I will ask you if, after having stated the facts, you did not sit right down there and resolve every question of doubt adversely to the officers to whom the article relates, both Garland and Goode?—A. I have not read the comments there, but I presume they are very much such comments as a correspondent of any political paper might make.

Q. Do you suppose that if the persons involved had been officers holding under a Republican administration you would have pursued precisely the same course?—A. I am glad you asked me that question, because I have criticised Republican officials quite sharply.

Mr. HALL. I suppose you have, but that don't answer the question.

The WITNESS. Don't it?

Mr. HALL. No.

Mr. RANNEY. I don't see that the Tribune has been so severe, or any more so than the New York World and the New York Sun, which are Democratic papers.

Mr. HALL. That depends on the interest they have.

The WITNESS. You asked me whether I would have been as severe if the officers had been Republicans.

Mr. HALL. I asked you if you would have pursued precisely the same course.

The WITNESS. I presume I would.

Q. Have you any knowledge of such a course being pursued since you have been connected with the New York Tribune?

The WITNESS. By the Tribune?

Mr. HALL. Yes.

A. Well, it is not more than three years ago since I was going for Secretary Chandler in about the same fashion.

Q. You got over it pretty soon, did you not?—A. I got over it when he got straight.

Q. Did he ever get straight?—A. He did.

Mr. HALL. I am glad to find it out. It didn't take any investigating committee—

Mr. RANNEY. I am afraid the interrogator will disclose his partisan character if he don't look out.

Mr. HALL. You seem to have fears that lead you in both directions.

Q. I wish to ask you with reference to your interviews with Mr. Dickerson and Mr. Storrow. Were they before or after these publications first appeared in the Tribune; I mean the publications you got from Hill?

The WITNESS. Do you mean the first publications, in September last?

Mr. HALL. Yes.

A. It may have been ignorance, perhaps, but I will confess that I did not know at that time that there was such a person as Mr. Dickerson or Mr. Storrow. The only person I knew at that time connected with the Bell Telephone Company was Major Brown, and I only knew that in an indifferent sort of way, without taking any account of it. He was not in Washington at the time I wrote those dispatches.

Q. I understand you to say it was through Major Brown that you were brought to have an interview with those gentlemen?—A. Oh, no. It was through him I obtained the knowledge that Dickerson and Storrow were both here.

Q. Did he not say he would like to have you see them?—A. I said I would like to see them.

Q. Did Brown at that time know of these publications?

The WITNESS. Last fall?

Mr. HALL. Did he know at the time you sought through him to have these interviews?—A. These interviews took place since this investigation began.

Q. When you saw Dickerson and Storow did you have a conversation with them about the original publications that you got from Hill?—A. I did not. Nothing was said about it.

Q. I understood from you it was before that?—A. No. The first time I met Mr. Dickerson or Mr. Storow was during the hearing before the Department of the Interior.

Q. This interview was comparatively recently, when Mr. Storow was here?—A. When he was here on his return from the trial of the New Orleans suit. I should say it was within a month. If I can fix the date of the hearing before the Department of the Interior I can fix the date of my first acquaintance with Mr. Dickerson and Mr. Storow. It was some time early in November. Here is a dispatch of mine dated November 11, and that was during the period.

Q. Have you seen Mr. Storow since then?—A. I saw him within a month.

Q. When he was here?—A. When he was here.

Q. How happened you to see him then?—A. Major Brown told me he was here and I went right off to see him.

Q. Did you go to him to get some further information?—A. I went to him to see if he had any news.

Q. About this matter?—A. About this matter.

Q. Did you know he had a copy of this original Hill manuscript?—A. I did not.

Q. You never heard of that?—A. I never heard of it until it was developed here.

Mr. RANNEY. What original manuscript?

Mr. HALL. The one Hill transmitted to Sypher and Sypher transmitted to Storow.

Mr. RANNEY. It was not the original manuscript. It was a type-writer copy, according to my understanding of the evidence.

Mr. HALL. I regard them all as original.

Q. Did Mr. Storow furnish you any information that you communicated to any member of the committee?—A. I brought Mr. Storow and Mr. Ranney together.

Q. Whereabouts was that?—A. I saw Mr. Ranney and he said that he would be glad to see Mr. Storow, and I notified Mr. Storow and he went and saw Mr. Ranney.

Q. You were not the means of communicating any news?—A. I don't recollect that Mr. Storow gave me anything that I could communicate. It was all high lawyer talk that I couldn't follow at all.

Q. May be I can refresh your memory a little. Did he go on and explain to you how all the questions that would be involved in the Government suit were practically involved in the suits that were already on their way to the Supreme Court?—A. Well, he talked somewhat about that.

Q. And that practically there was no need for this present suit, for that reason?—A. That has been the argument of these Bell people from the beginning; that is what Mr. Dickerson wrote to the Tribune.

Q. I know it is; but I want to see whether that was communicated to you at that time.—A. I presume he talked to me about it.

Q. This conversation was in relation to the general merits of this controversy?—A. There was a good deal about it, and there was a good deal about the New Orleans suit which had recently been tried.

Q. Mr. Storow understood, of course, that you were the correspondent of the Tribune?—A. Oh, yes; I went to see him in that capacity.

Q. Do you know whether any other correspondents for papers saw him at or about the same time?—A. I do not.

Q. Do you know whether they did at the former time?

The WITNESS. In October or November?

Mr. HALL. Yes.

A. Oh, yes, sir.

Q. Other correspondents saw him at that time?—A. I suppose they did. I presume the Associated Press correspondent saw him daily; it was his duty to do so.

Q. At that time they got some information and you got some information from him?—A. I did not get so very much information from him.

Q. Such as you saw proper to furnish you furnished your paper, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Upon this subject?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. I would like to see if I understood you rightly upon one point. The reason of your activity in searching out this matter was not merely on account of the fact that these men belonged to a corporation, but because of the bringing of the Government suit?—A. That was one fact, and an important fact, as I said.

Q. You did not regard it as being any more wrong for a public man to have telephone stock than to have bank stock or railroad stock or any sort of stock? I suppose it was only in the use that was made of it?—A. Well, it would depend a good deal on the sort of stock it was—if you are asking my opinion about it.

Mr. RANNEY. It would depend on what kind of stock it was and how he got it.

The WITNESS. I did not mean to have my answer go to that length. The fact of the suit and the relations of these men to it I deemed important.

Q. Did you think it was any worse for a man to own stock in the Pan-Electric Telephone Company than in the Bell Telephone Company?—A. Are you asking my opinion about that? If you are, I reply most certainly in the affirmative. I say yes.

Q. Then there was something in the organization of the Pan-Electric Company in addition to the fact of the bringing of the Government suit that caused you to set on foot the investigation?—A. Yes. I looked upon it as a sort of speculation without much basis. I looked upon it in this way, if you want me to explain—.

Mr. EDEN. I am asking you particularly—

Mr. RANNEY. I think he should answer it now.

Mr. HALL. I think so, too.

The WITNESS. Suppose a national bank were organized and that the directors received deposits amounting to $15,000 or $20,000, and divided them up and declared the money to be a dividend. That is the sort of distinction I draw.

Q. They could not do that under the banking law, could they?—A. I was supposing the case, you know.

Q. Would you regard it as an offense for a public officer to hold bank stock?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or railroad stock?—A. Not if he obtained it honestly.

Q. Or telegraph stock?—A. Not if he obtained it honestly, and it was a real telegraph.

Q. You got your idea from your investigations that these gentlemen did not obtain this stock honestly, then?—A. No, sir; I do not say that. I think they obtained it in the most honest manner possible.

Mr. RANNEY. Are you not asking his opinion now?

Mr. EDEN. No; I am only trying to get what the reason was.

Q. You thought it was wrong for a public officer to hold stock in the Pan-Electric Telephone Company and was not wrong for him to hold stock in anything else?—A. Well, it seemed to me a good deal like a man having a deed to a quarter-section of moonshine. There is nothing intrinsically wrong about that, so far as I know, only it is a sort of stock I would not care to deal in.

Mr. EDEN. That is all.

Mr. HALL. I forgot one matter in the same direction.

By Mr HALL:

Q. I think you stated that you had these facts in your possession nearly two years?—A. Some of the facts; yes, sir.

Q. In relation to the organization of this company and who its members were?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you know how the company was organized?—A. I did not know how it came to be organized at that time.

Q. When did you first hear about how it was organized?—A. I think I got my first information some time between the middle of September and the time my dispatch was published.

Q. That was before you got this paper from Hill?—A. I testified to-day that I thought possibly Hill might have had some conversation with me on this subject. I am very clear I obtained some information about the organization aside from that.

Q. Did you know anything about what now strikes you as this objectionable form of organization before you learned of the order for the suit?—A. No, sir; I did not fully understand the ramifications of this Pan-Electric association before the latter part of February.

Q. When did you first learn of the organization of the Bell Telephone Company, and how it was gotten up?—A. I never knew how it was gotten up.

Q. You never knew anything about it until you heard it detailed here the other day by the witnesses?—A. I did not happen to hear their testimony.

Q. Then you do not know to this day how it was organized?—A. I do not.

Q. How are you so ready to condemn the one and uphold the other without knowing anything about the methods of organization?—A. Well, you know a man can hardly condemn a thing he doesn't know anything about.

Q. Not unless he wants to; but you yourself drew the parallel a few moments ago between the two companies.

The WITNESS. Between the two companies?

Mr. HALL. Yes, sir; in response to a question by Mr. Hale.

A. I have not drawn any parallel between the Bell company and the Pan-Electric company.

Q. Did not he ask you whether you thought it was any more wrong to own stock in the Pan-Electric company than in the Bell company, and did not you go right on to say it depended on how they were gotten up?—A. He did not ask me anything about the Bell company.

Q. You may not have understood him.—A. He asked me about holding stock in a telegraph company, as I understood it.

Q. Do you not feel conscious of the fact that, in view of your relation to the New York Tribune, and your education and desire to get up everything that is new and sensational, and that will affect anybody that is not a Republican, that you are biased in this matter, and that you are disposed to condemn what is on one side and upheld what is on the other?

The WITNESS. That is rather a long question.

Mr. HALL (to the stenographer). Read it over to him.

The stenographer read the question.

A. You assume as a fact something that I deny.

Q. What is that?—A. That I desire to get up sensations to affect exclusively people of one party. I do not desire to get up any sensations. I wish there were no sensations.

Q. I will withdraw from that question the word "sensation." Are you not conscious of bias in your desire to give the earliest news?

The WITNESS. Of being biased?

Mr. HALL. Yes.

A. I am.

The witness then left the stand.

Mr. RANNEY. I have made a request to the chairman for the summoning of several witnesses.

Mr. HALL. They are not here to-day, I suppose?

Mr. EDEN (in the chair). I suppose you do not want to go on any longer to-day?

Mr. RANNEY. No.

Mr. HALL. I move we adjourn until 1 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. EDEN. If there be no objection the committee will stand adjourned until to-morrow, at 1 o'clock.

Thereupon, at 2.45 p. m., the committee adjourned until to-morrow, May 7, 1886, at 1 p. m.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Friday, May 7, 1886.

The committee was called to order at 1.54 p. m. All the members present.

The CHAIRMAN. Does any gentleman of the committee desire to submit any evidence to-day?

Mr. OATES. Are there any witnesses present?

The CHAIRMAN. There are no witnesses present.

Mr. RANNEY. There are some important letters which I desire to put in at the proper time; some of them letters of Senator Harris; and I understand that he wishes to be present when his letters are put in.

Mr. OATES. I move that the committee go into executive session.

The motion was agreed to; and after some time spent in secret session the committee adjourned.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Tuesday, May 11, 1886.

The committee was called to order at 11.25 a. m.

GEORGE A. GUSTIN came before the committee and was duly sworn.

Mr. OATES (in the chair). Mr. Ranney, you may interrogate the witness.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Question. Please state your residence and occupation.—Answer. I am a resident of Washington, and a stenographer by occupation.

Q. Have you ever had any connection with this Pan-Electric company matter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was your relation to it?—A. I was one of the promoters of the branch company known as the Washington Telephone Company.

Q. The branch company to which you refer is the Washington Telephone Company?—A. Yes, sir, of which General Bradley T. Johnson is president.

Q. How early did you go into that?—A. I think it was about two years ago; I am not quite sure as to dates.

Q. It was at its inception or organization?—A. At its very inception. I was the original promoter of that company.

Q. Do you own any of the stock?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much of it?—A. I own now, I think, about six hundred shares.

Q. Did you have anything to do with the distribution or sale of the stock?—A. Nothing whatever.

Q. You never had anything to do with the disposal of it?—A. Not a thing; no interest whatever in the disposal of any stock.

Q. You had, I believe (so I am informed), something to do with the initiation of the negotiations for the sale to the Bell company of the patent or some patents connected with the Pan-Electric company?—A. It did not amount to that hardly. A gentleman came to me and asked me—from the fact that I knew some of the members of the Bell company—whether I could make a sale of his instrument, which I think is the best one in the world. I undertook to try it, but I made a failure of it.

Q. Who came to you to get you to do it?—A. I do not remember now. It seems to me there were two or three gentlemen. One of them, I think, was a Dr. Roberts, whom I did not know at the time.

Q. Do you remember any others?—A. I cannot recall them. It was rather a matter of surprise to me, as I was not looking for it. I do not remember any others.

Q. You cannot remember any of the others?—A. No, sir; I think he was the principal one.

Q. What connection had the Pan-Electric Company with the matter?—A. None whatever, that I know of.

Q. What did you do to the end proposed?—A. The Pan-Electric Company, or some of the members of it, named a price—I never had anything to do with them in a full meeting—so that my negotiations were rather in the interest of certain parties than with the Pan-Electric Company. They told me that if I could sell these patents to the Bell Company at a price which they named, I should have a commission. But the price which they named was so entirely disproportionate—

Q. What was the price that they named?—A. Five million dollars. I however made the offer, and it was rejected.

Q. To whom did you make it?—A. To Mr. Vail.

Q. Verbally or by letter?—A. By letter.

Q. Have you a copy of the correspondence?—A. No, sir; Mr. Vail and I are old friends, and it was merely a friendly correspondence between us; I never kept copies of it.

Q. You say your being applied to was a surprise to you?—A. Rather a surprise.

Q. Perhaps you were applied to because you were a friend of Mr. Vail's?—A. Yes, sir; I suppose so.

Q. You wrote a letter to Mr. Vail and received one in reply?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you fix the date of that?—A. No, sir; I could not.

Q. Fix it approximately, or as near as you can.—A. I should set it at about two years ago; I do not remember; the thing has passed out of my mind.

Q. Were you at that time a stockholder and interested in the Washington Pan-Electric Telephone Company?—A. That did not exist at that time.

Q. It was before you went into it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you say, then, that the Pan-Electric people came to you, you mean people connected with the Pan-Electric Telephone Company?—A. No, sir; nobody connected with the Pan-Electric Company came to me. This gentleman, Dr. Roberts, as I recollect the circumstance, came to me and asked me to go with him and call upon some of the gentlemen connected with the Pan-Electric Company.

Q. And you did call?—A. I did.

Q. Upon whom did you call?—A. Upon Colonel Looney.

Q. Is Colonel Looney a Mississippian?—A. I am sure I do not know.

Q. Where did you find him?—A. At the National Hotel.

Q. Who else did you see about it?—A. At that time nobody.

Q. Who did you see next—in connection with this matter, I mean, of course?—A. I cannot remember; nobody but Colonel Looney. I do not think I had any conversation with anybody but Colonel Looney in regard to the sale.

Q. Did you see Dr. J. W. Rogers?—A. No, sir; not in connection with that.

Q. You knew him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever talk with him about it?—A. I do not think I ever did. I do not think I ever had any conversation with him or with his son in regard to the sale, except incidentally. I am quite sure that they had nothing to do with the proposal.

Q. To whom did you make the report of the result of your efforts?—A. To Colonel Looney.

Q. Did you see Senator Harris about it at all?—A. I do not think we had anything to do with Senator Harris in regard to the sale; no, sir.

Q. Or Casey Young?—A. No, sir; I think Colonel Young was against it.

Q. Against the sale?—A. Against any attempt to make a sale.

Q. How did you think so if you did not see him?—A. I learned that afterwards. I being something of an electrician, Colonel Looney offered me an interest in the company if I would undertake to get up a company for Washington, and in that way I came to have a business connection with Colonel Young, who was called as one of the directors.

Q. If it was so long after that that you had a conversation with Colonel Young, it is of no consequence. When you say that you think he was against it, from whom did you get that idea?—A. I think from the colonel's actions at the meeting when I proposed to take an interest in the affair, and we discussed the matter of the sale.

Q. With whom; Colonel Young?—A. Colonel Looney and Colonel Young, and I think possibly Dr. Rogers, were there, and if I remember rightly Colonel Young expressed himself decidedly as against any attempting of a sale.

Q. That was subsequent to the time when your attempt to sell had failed?—A. Yes, sir; I don't remember how long subsequently, though.

Q. About how long?—A. I could not give you an idea.

Q. Were you then canvassing the propriety of renewing the attempt to sell?—A. No, sir.

Q. You were merely talking it over as a past transaction, then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You mean Colonel Young was opposed renewing it, or opposed to your selling it when you had already tried and failed?—A. I think Colonel Young was opposed to the whole attempt of certain parties to make a sale.

Q. To making a renewed attempt?—A. No, sir; to making the original attempt. I do not think he knew anything of it at the time.

Q. Did he not know at that time that you had made the attempt and failed?—A. I do not know whether he did or not. It was a matter entirely between Colonel Looney and myself.

Q. Have you been connected with the Washington Telephone Company since?—A. I was a director in the Washington Telephone Company, and its electrician for one year; I have now no connection with it, and have not had for a year past.

Q. You still, however, hold the stock?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know the holders of stock in that company, any of them?—A. I know but very few of them, and indeed I am not sure that I know any of them, for I do not know what transfers have been made or what has been done in the company for a year past.

Q. Do you know for whom any stock was held in that company as trustee?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. You have no stock held in trust for anybody?—A. No, sir; all the stock that I have is my own.

Mr. RANNEY. That is all.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. The connection that you had with the effort to make that sale to the Bell company, you say, was arranged between you and Colonel Looney?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He was the member of the Pan-Electric company who induced you to make the effort?—A. Yes, sir; that is my recollection of it.

Q. You do not know who else of the Pan-Electric company was connected with your effort or desired it, I understood you to say?—A. No, sir; my impression (and it was a very decided one at the time) was that Colonel Looney was the only one who wanted to make a sale; I think the other gentlemen were decidedly of the opinion that it was better to go to work with their telephone.

Q. The price in the proposition you submitted they regarded as too great, and they rejected it?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Do you know whether the time at which you went there was before or after the time when Senator Harris and Dr. Rogers went to Boston in an endeavor to sell?—A. It was afterwards; Senator Harris and Dr. Rogers had been to Boston and exhibited the instrument.

Q. So that what they had done was prior to the time when you were solicited to make the attempt?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. What commission were you to have for making the sale?—A. I was to have a sliding commission, which amounted, I believe, to about 20 per cent.

Q. Twenty per cent. on five millions?—A. Twenty per cent. on any amount that I could sell it for that they were willing to receive.

Q. You were authorized to sell it for five million dollars?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And 20 per cent. was the amount you were to have?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much would that be?—A. If it sold at five million dollars it would be one million dollars. When the price was named, I did not think it was feasible, and I wrote the letter as a matter of friendship.

Q. It was a pretty good offer, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

ARTHUR V. BRIESEN then came before the committee and was duly sworn.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. Where do you reside?—A. In New York.

Q. What is your business or profession?—A. I am an attorney at law.

Q. What branch of the law, if any, do you give special attention to?—A. Mostly patent law.

Q. Did you ever have any connection, professional or otherwise, with a telephone company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Please state with what company and in what way?—A. In March, 1885, I was retained by the National Improved Telephone Company of New Orleans to assist them in defending a suit brought by the American Bell Telephone Company against another concern in Pittsburg, the Pittsburg concern being a branch of this New Orleans company, or at least one which was using the New Orleans instruments. As such attorney, I did what I thought proper in that case.

Q. How was that case determined?—A. I do not know. We only came to an expected argument on a motion for an injunction, and the counsel for the complainant argued that motion for two days, but Judge McKennan cut me short when I began to state my side of the case, and told me that the prior adjudications in Boston and New York would practically preclude him from re-examining matters that had been in those cases adjudicated, and his manner and words were of such a character that all the counsel in the case consulted and decided not to take up the time of the court by presenting our defense.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. That was the Pittsburg suit?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. And that ended that case?—A. It did not end there. I believe it went on to further matters, but I had nothing more to do with it.

Q. Did you make an application to the Attorney-General to have a suit brought against the Bell company?—A. No, sir; I made no application, but I spoke to the Attorney-General about an application to be made.

Q. When was that?—A. That was on the 31st of July, 1885.

Q. Who was present?—A. Mr. Van Benthuyzen, my client, the president of the New Orleans company, Mr. Huntington, one of the directors I think in the same company, and I believe Colonel Casey Young and Colonel Gantt, two gentlemen whose acquaintance I had only made that day for the first time.

Q. You say you made an application or was present when one was made?—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, what transpired?—A. If I am permitted, I should like to answer that question by going back a little.

Q. Very well. We want the facts whatever they are.—A. On the 8th of July we were told by Judge McKennan that he could not give us relief, in substance, in our suit in Pittsburg, and on the same day I returned to New York. Instantly after that opinion was rendered I took the next train for New York. On the 12th of July, which was Sunday, Mr. Van Benthuyzen called upon me at my residence in New York, and we talked over this difficulty in which we found ourselves, the fact that the injunction was granted without a hearing (it being conceded that it was), and I suggested to Mr. Van Benthuyzen, I believe, that the only relief which could be had under these circumstances, if all the courts of the United States should act as Judge McKennan had acted, and every one grant an injunction as a matter of course, would be by a suit brought by the United States, in behalf of the United States, to set aside the Bell patent on the ground of fraudulent issue (or, if I may use the word, "collusion," I think I would be justified) by an officer of the Patent Office in granting it and in allowing things to be done with reference to that application which no proper officer of the Government ought to have allowed to be done. That was the purport of my conversation with Mr. Van Benthuyzen. I then left New York for a short vacation in New Hampshire; returned on the 27th of July, and then found a letter on my desk inviting me to be in Washington on the 29th, a letter from Mr. Van Benthuyzen, and also a copy of a letter which he had written to the Attorney-General on the 12th, the same day that he had been talking to me; he had afterwards written that letter. I suppose the committee know the letter I refer to.

Q. That is the letter asking for a suit to be brought under a supposed act of Congress?—A. Yes, sir; exactly. I also found on my desk a letter from the Commissioner of Patents, stating that this letter of Mr. Van Benthuyssen's had been referred by the Attorney-General to the Secretary of the Interior, and by him to the Commissioner of Patents, and that the Commissioner wanted to know what law was referred to in that letter. On the 29th I was in Washington, and on the 30th I found Mr. Wilbur, the examiner who had granted this Bell patent.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You found him in New York?—A. No, sir; I found him in Washington.

Q. You came to Washington?—A. Yes, sir; I arrived in Washington on the 29th. I looked up Mr. Wilbur on the 30th, and he gave us his affidavit, the one which, no doubt, this committee is acquainted with. On the next day we called at the office of the Attorney-General, and I had that affidavit in my hand when I called. The letter which Mr. Van Benthuyssen had written to the Attorney-General did not strike me as a proper means or mode of beginning such an investigation or of starting the machinery for beginning a suit in behalf of the United States. I had previously ascertained how the suit of the United States vs. Gunning had been started, and I thought that was a proper precedent for anything to be done in a similar case afterwards. I told the Attorney-General that I thought this letter was not a proper one; that his office could not be set in motion to relieve any citizen or to relieve the public from the pressure of this patent, if it is an unjust patent; that that could only be done upon presentation of proper affidavits to some district attorney, just as had been the case in the Gunning suit; and that if he would have no objection I would see to it that proper affidavits were presented to some district attorney, who could then recommend to the Attorney-General whatever action he saw proper; but that I would withdraw that letter. The Attorney-General told me that he would not be in a position to act in any matter concerning a telephone case, because he was a stockholder in one of the companies, and that if any application came it would be referred to some other officer, as he personally would not like to do anything in it; and as to withdrawing the letter, he coincided with me and said that that was proper. That is about the substance of our conversation. I then went to the Commissioner of Patents and told him, first, that there was no such law as Mr. Benthuyssen had said there was or thought there was, at least I knew of no such law; secondly, that I had been to the Attorney-General and told him that I would withdraw that letter, and the Attorney-General had said it was all right. The Commissioner then returned the letter to me.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. To whom did you deliver it?—A. To Mr. Van Benthuyssen.

Q. What further connection, if any, did you have with the effort at getting a Government suit brought?—A. None, whatever. On the 10th of August I received a letter—or rather I received a letter dated the 10th of August, I do not know when I got it—from Mr. Van Benthuyssen, advising me—

Mr. RANNEY. Do you say it was the 10th of August?

The WITNESS. Yes, the 10th of August, advising me—

Mr. RANNEY. I object to your stating what was in that letter unless you produce it.

Q. Have you the letter?—A. Yes, sir; I have it, but I haven't it here. It was simply discharging me from the case, that is all.

Mr. RANNEY. That is of no consequence then.

The WITNESS. It ended my connection with the case.

Mr. RANNEY. It discharged you from what case?

The WITNESS. From the telephone case.

Mr. RANNEY. You mean the Pennsylvania case?

The WITNESS. No; from the case of the New Orleans company, whose counsel I was. Between the 31st of July and the 10th of August, I believe, Mr. Van Benthuyssen had made some other arrangement with the Memphis company, and they had such a number of counsel that they did not need me any more.

Mr. RANNEY. You need not state what you understood. You mean the letter discharged you from his service?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. I would like to have you give the whole of the contents of the letter and then produce the letter itself, if you are willing?

The WITNESS. I can produce the letter.

Mr. EDEN. You might just send the letter down to us.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; I can send it.

Mr. MILLARD. Give us your best recollection now, and then send us the letter.

The WITNESS. It simply says about this: I am advised by the officers or directors of the New Orleans National Improved Telephone Company that it is no longer able to pay your expenses—or whatever the language is, I forget—and under these circumstances I ask you not to do any further work in the matter unless we advise you to the contrary—or something like that. I can send you the letter.

Q. Have you given your recollection of the language used by the Attorney-General, or the substance of it, when you had the interview with him?—A. I only give you the substance of it as well as I remember. I do not purport to give the exact words.

Q. You say that he said if an application came, or another application, it would have to go to some other officer; that he could have nothing to do with it?—A. I so understood him—that he would have to refer it to some other officer, as he could not personally act.

Q. For the reason that he was interested in another telephone company?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. OATES. You can examine the witness, Mr. Ranney.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. I think you are a partner of Mr. Steele?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The name of your firm is what?—A. Briesen & Steele.

Q. You have been in the habit of practicing in the department of law called the patent business more especially, have you?—A. In the Patent Office; yes, sir.

Q. You frequently are at the Patent Office?—A. Not very frequently. I am there three or four times a year.

Q. Who transacts the business at the Patent Office, you or your partner, Mr. Steele?—A. I do, mostly.

Q. When you came to Washington, you say you arrived here on the 29th of July. Will you be kind enough to state at what house you stopped?—A. I stopped at the Belvedere.

Q. You did not go to the Ebbitt House then?—A. No, sir.

Q. How soon after your arrival here did you see Mr. Van Benthuyzen?—A. I saw him the same afternoon. I arrived here about 4 o'clock, and called at the Ebbitt House the same afternoon.

Q. On the 29th?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you find any one there but himself?—A. I found Mr. Van Benthuyzen and Mr. Huntington.

Q. That was the night of the 30th?—A. No.

Q. Of the 29th?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you looked to fix the date?—A. Oh, I am positive about it.

Q. You arrived in the New York train which started from New York when?—A. It started from New York about 9 o'clock in the morning. It is called the limited express train, I believe.

Q. You got here about 4 or 5 o'clock?—A. Yes, sir; about 4 o'clock.

Q. How soon after your arrival did you go and see Mr. Van Benthuyzen?—A. I do not remember, but I am sure it was within two hours after I arrived. I came here especially to see him. I came here at his invitation.

Q. What day was it, then, when you went to see the Attorney-General?—A. It was the 31st.

Q. Then you were here all through the 30th?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What were you doing during the 30th of July?—A. We were conferring at Mr. Van Benthuyzen's room a part of the time. I was in the Patent Office looking up some records part of the time, and I called on Mr. Wilbur in the afternoon and made his affidavit.

Q. What records were you looking at at the Patent Office on the 30th?—A. I was looking up some records showing the titles of certain patents of Mr. Rogers which it seemed the Pan-Electric Company claimed to own, and which Mr. Van Benthuyzen had told me his company owned. And so I went in there to see who owned them.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. Did you say that you prepared the affidavit of Mr. Wilbur?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You went into the Patent Office and spent most of the day on Thursday the 30th?—A. No, sir; I only spent about two hours there, I should think.

Q. Do you remember who you saw there?—A. In the record-room I suppose I saw the proper officers, and I think Mr. Huntington also introduced me to a gentleman in the Department of the Interior—I forget what his office is and I forget his name—whose office was the second or third from that of the Secretary of the Interior.

Q. Did you have a conversation with him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In relation to what?—A. I do not exactly remember; I have no remembrance.

Q. Did you have any conversation with anybody in regard to this practice of the Department about granting Government suits or recommending them?—A. No, sir; my mind was fully fixed on that point, because I knew how the Gunning case was started—I thought I knew at least.

Q. They keep a record of these cases where they grant the application or recommend it?—A. Oh, yes, sir; in the Patent Office they do.

Q. You knew the Gunning case; did you know the case in which Mr. District Attorney Townsend recommended a Government suit?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know who you conversed with there?—A. I do not know the gentleman's name.

Q. Did you see the gentleman who had written your firm a letter making inquiry about the act of Congress referred to?—A. That was Mr. Montgomery, the Commissioner of Patents.

Q. Did you see him about it?—A. Yes, sir; I saw him about it.

Q. Did you have a conversation with him about it before the time when you went to withdraw the letter?—A. I am not quite clear whether I spoke to him about that on the 30th or the 31st. I know that on one of those days while I was in the Commissioner's room I told him that the law about which he had made inquiry did not, to my knowledge, exist; that is all.

Q. Did you make a reply in writing?—A. No, sir; not in writing.

Q. Didn't you know before that there was no such law?—A. Certainly; at least, before that I never knew of any such law.

Q. You keep run of the laws of Congress in regard to patents, do you not?—A. I try to.

Q. And you probably knew the fact that there was no such law at the time Mr. Van Benthuyzen drew that application?—A. Certainly; I never knew there was such a law.

Q. And you talked it over on one of the days with Mr. Montgomery?—A. I did not talk it over at all. I simply told him that there was no such law to my knowledge.

Q. I understand you to say that you do not know whether that was on the 30th or the 31st?—A. No, sir.

Q. You do not know which it was?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you talk over the law with him at all—the law on which it rested independent of the statute?—A. No, sir.

Q. You say Mr. Huntington was at the Patent Office also on the 30th?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Mr. Van Benthuyzen was there too?—A. Yes sir.

Q. Do you know what they were doing at the time they they were?—A. They accompanied me into the record-room to look up these titles, and they also were with this gentleman whom Mr. Huntington introduced, whose name I have forgotten.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. Was it Mr. Muldrow, the First Assistant Secretary?—A. I do not think it was.

Q. Or Mr. Jenks?—A. I think he was the attorney of the Department of the Interior.

Q. You do not mean Mr. Montgomery?—A. No, sir; it was Mr. McCammon, I think.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You talked with him on the 30th?—A. Yes, sir; I think so; I think that was the name. He has some connection with the office of the attorney of the Department of the Interior.

Q. You had a talk with him?—A. I had a long talk with him. We were simply introduced; Mr. Huntington knew him.

Q. Do you know what Mr. Van Benthuyzen and he were doing there?—A. They were simply looking over the records with me.

Q. How long a time did you stay at the Department?—A. I think about two hours.

Q. And at what time was it that you advised Mr. Van Benthuyzen that his proper course was to come through a district attorney?—A. I never knew any other course, and I think I suggested that to him on the 12th of July.

Q. Were you present when he drew that application?—A. No, sir; I was very much surprised when I saw it.

Q. If you were not in New York on the 12th when he wrote that application—
A. I was in New York on the 12th.

Q. I thought you had gone away?—A. No, sir; I told you that on the 12th, which was on Sunday, he called at my house and we talked this matter over, and he staid with me until about three o'clock in the afternoon, and then he went wherever he went, and must have written that letter afterwards.

Q. You told him then that the proper way was to make the application through a district attorney?—A. I have no positive recollection of telling him exactly that, but I do not think it likely that I did not tell him that, because in my opinion that was the only proper way.

Q. Did you know that he and Casey Young at Pittsburg had arranged the matter and made an agreement for a combination?—A. No, sir; I did not; that was kept from my knowledge.

Q. Did you ever hear of it?—A. I heard of it recently through some testimony that was published in the papers which was taken before this committee.

Q. Mr. Van Benthuyzen did not communicate to you any agreement between him and Casey Young that they had made at Pittsburg?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did he tell you anything that Colonel Young had told him about a Government suit?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or any suggestion Colonel Young had made?—A. No, sir.

Q. And he then went and drew his application, so far as you know?—A. I do not call that an application. He wrote a letter.

Q. Well, call it what you please it; was treated as an application, and it is one in fact.—A. It ought not to be.

Q. Well, no matter, we will take it as it is. You did not know at that time that he had drawn one?—A. I did not know until I came back from my vacation, on the 27th of July, and then I found a copy of it in my office.

Q. The 12th was Sunday?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then you came to Washington, in pursuance of a letter you had from Mr. Van Benthuyssen, written from where?—A. It was either a letter or a telegram, I think, sent from Waukesha Springs, or some such place, in Wisconsin.

Q. Had you known before that any meeting at Washington had been arranged?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you preserved that letter or telegram on which you came to Washington?—A. That I do not know. I may have preserved it.

Q. Had you, before you came to Washington that time, had any information of what you claim to be improper conduct on the part of any examiner or man in the Patent Office?—A. Yes, sir; very decidedly.

Q. Where had you obtained that information? I do not ask you for the details of it.

The WITNESS. The details of what?

Mr. RANNEY. The details of the information. I do not care to go into that question now; we are not undertaking to examine it. But I would like to know the source of the information which you had before you came to Washington in relation to what you claim to be improper conduct in the Department, if you are at liberty to state it?—A. Oh, yes, sir. I had examined the record in the case called the Dowd case, the Western Union Telegraph case, in Boston—

Q. That was the source of your information?—A. No, sir; I am going to tell you the source.

Q. Well?—A. In that Dowd case—

Q. I don't care for the particulars of it.—A. I am going to give you simply the source of the information. In that Dowd case some reference was made to a prior application made by Bell for a patent in 1875, and that application I was quite anxious to see, and applying to the Patent Office for a copy of it, I was refused a copy on the ground that it was still a pending application. I afterwards found that the clerk of the court in Boston had such an application as an exhibit in the Dowd case, and I ordered him to send me a copy of it. In that application I found certain facts which I am willing to tell you, if you wish to know them.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not care to have them. We are not investigating the facts of it, and I do not care to go into any unnecessary details.

The WITNESS. Well, they are very important facts, and that it was which induced me to look with great care into the application of the 1876 patent, because, amongst others, the 1875 application mentioned the word "telephone" as an old device; and when I looked at the 1876 application, which I have in my office, I found that the examiner, Mr. Wilbur, had allowed the attorneys of Bell to introduce an amendment in the 1876 application which sought to draw the only—

Mr. RANNEY. You need not state your construction of it, because that would open the matter.

The WITNESS. Pardon me; I am giving you the source of my information; there was an amendment in the 1876 application introduced—

Mr. RANNEY. We have seen those amendments; they are disclosed in the paper.

The WITNESS. Introduced by the attorneys, which sought to explain the difference between the 1876 and the 1875 application, and that was not executed by the inventor himself, nor drawn out by the action of the Patent Office, but was a sort of voluntary introduction into the patent by the attorneys of Bell. This I deem and know to be gross irregularity, and the grossest neglect of duty by Mr. Wilbur.

Q. I do not care about that.—A. That was one of the sources of information; the other source was a file-wrapper showing that the examiner had notified Mr. Bell's attorneys of the existence of a caveat, which the law prohibits him from doing.

Q. Lawyers differ about that.

The WITNESS. Who differs?

Mr. RANNEY. I will not discuss the matter. Lawyers may differ, I say; it would be strange if they did not. You need not express your opinion about it.

The WITNESS. I am simply stating facts. The law distinctly says that the caveat shall be kept secret.

Q. You have not answered my question. When did you first meet Mr. Wilbur?—A. About ten or fifteen years ago.

Q. You are acquainted with him?—A. I have practiced before him. He was examiner of interferences.

Q. When did you first have any interview with him about this proceeding in the Patent Office?—A. On the 30th of July, 1885.

Q. Was that accidental or sought?—A. I sought him out.

Q. Where did you find him?—A. At his place of residence.

Q. On what day was that?—A. On the 30th of July.

Q. Was any one with you?—A. No.

Q. Were you alone when you got the affidavit?—A. No.

Q. Who was with you then?—A. I took Mr. Wilbur to the Ebbitt House and I drew the affidavit in the Ebbitt House in the presence of Mr. Van Benthuyzen and Mr. Huntington.

Q. Who else was there?—A. No one else, to my knowledge.

Q. Do you know what he was paid?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much?—A. He wanted a retainer of $250, but I did not think his service was worth so much, and I told him that he ought to be satisfied, if we wanted the services, with a payment of $50, which amount we paid him.

Q. Who paid him?—A. I did.

Q. Was Mr. Van Benthuyzen present?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And saw it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you sure of that? Did you take a receipt?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To whom did you give the receipt?—A. I have it.

Q. You have it now?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who paid the money, you or Mr. Van Benthuyzen?—A. I paid it, but I got it back.

Q. Who paid it back to you?—A. The New Orleans Company, I suppose.

Q. And Mr. Van Benthuyzen was present when you paid it to Mr. Wilbur?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was Mr. Huntington there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you afterwards get two duplicates of it?—A. No, sir.

Q. It seems there were two more made afterwards.—A. That was not within my knowledge.

Q. You say he wanted $250 for it?—A. No; he wanted a retainer of $250. He says he is an attorney-at-law, and wants a retainer before he will pass his opinion, and I thought—

Q. Can you give us that receipt which he gave you?—A. I have it in my pocket.

Q. Let me see it, please.

The witness produced the paper as called for.

The WITNESS. I will let you copy it; I want to retain the original.

The paper referred to is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 30, 1885.

Received of A. V. Briesen, esq., fifty dollars in full for professional services in telephone matters.

$50.

Z. F. WILBUR.

Q. In whose handwriting is that?—A. Mr. Wilbur wrote it in my presence.

Q. How strenuously did he insist on a retainer of $250?—A. I do not know.

Q. Did Mr. Van Benthuyzen think that was too much?—A. I did not confer with him about it. Mr. Van Benthuyzen did not speak about it.

Q. Did he object to paying him $250?—A. No.

Q. You made the objection?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was Colonel Young there at the time?—A. No.

Q. You left Washington what night, please?—A. I left Washington on the Saturday morning of that week.

Q. The next day after the interview with the Attorney-General?—A. Yes, sir; I think so. On the 1st of August I left on the morning train.

Q. Who was in the room when that affidavit was taken?—A. I have told you.

Q. But do you remember any others except Mr. Wilbur, yourself, and Mr. Van Benthuyzen?—A. And Mr. Huntington.

Q. I had forgotten that you had mentioned him. Was Colonel Young there or did he come into the room?—A. I have already told you that he was not there. In fact, I believe I had not seen Colonel Young before the morning of the 31st.

Q. Had you seen Colonel Young before the affidavit was taken?—A. Not to my knowledge, unless I saw him in Pittsburg without knowing him, but I do not believe we were introduced.

Q. Was Senator Harris in the room?—A. Oh, no, sir.

Q. Or did he come in after the interview?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anything of what became of Mr. Wilbur that night?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was he promised any more money?—A. No, sir; but he promised to bring us some more facts in the case that would be of importance to our proposed suit.

Q. When you went away did you carry the affidavit that you took of Mr. Wilbur with you?—A. Yes, sir. Mr. Huntington kept it that evening, on the 30th, but handed it back to me on the morning of the 31st.

Q. And when you left did you take it away with you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that on the 1st of August you left for New York, taking the affidavit with you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You will pardon me for going into these details so much, and if I repeat a question please attribute it to my forgetfulness or my want of memory. Now, when you went to the Attorney-General, on the 31st, who went with you or who met you there?—

A. We all went together.

Q. From where did you start?—A. From the Ebbitt House.

Q. And the parties, if I remember right, were yourself, Colonel Gantt, Mr. Van Benthuyssen, and Casey Young—those were all?—A. And Mr. Huntington.

Q. Mr. Huntington went with you?—A. Yes, sir; I think those were all; I do not remember any one else.

Q. Who made the arrangement by which you went?—A. I do not know.

Q. Did you meet together at the Ebbitt House and proceed from there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you went to the Attorney-General's office and had an interview at about what time in the day?—A. At 11 o'clock in the morning, to my best recollection.

Q. I wish you would begin in your own way, as I have not a clear recollection of it, and I want it stated exactly as it was, and narrate exactly all that was said and done after you got into the Attorney-General's room without going into details.—A. I have told you that as near as I can remember it.

Q. If you will repeat it again—pardon me if I ask you to repeat it—not that I doubt the truth of what you have said. Was there any introduction; when you went in did you find the Attorney-General there?—A. I think we found him in the room. I do not remember whether there was any introduction.

Q. Had you any prior acquaintance with him yourself?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did anybody introduce the party?—A. I do not remember; I doubt very much. I do not think he knew my name.

Q. Who introduced you, if any one?—A. I do not know that any one did. Perhaps Mr. Van Benthuyssen or Colonel Young may have done so; I don't remember.

Q. Mr. Van Benthuyssen said that he and Mr. Huntington had had an interview with him previously, the day before. You knew nothing about that, I suppose?—A. Yes; I remember that they told me they had seen him the day before and asked him when the meeting should take place, and he said 11 o'clock.

Q. Of course if they had met him the day before, they did not need any introduction; but if you had not met him before you did?—A. I ought to have had one.

Q. I understand Casey Young says that he introduced you, or the Attorney-General says he did.—A. It is very possible.

Q. And you have forgotten that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you known Colonel Gantt?—A. No, sir; I met him that morning for the first time.

Q. Will you, with as much detail and accuracy as possible, disregarding your previous statement of it, state exactly what occurred and what was said?—A. That I cannot undertake to do, only as to the substance of it, as I have done before.

Q. Who did the talking?—A. I did. At any rate I remember in substance only what was said by myself and in reply by the Attorney-General.

Q. Was any allusion made there to the interview of the day before between Mr. Van Benthuyssen and Mr. Huntington?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did the talking?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Give as near as you can the words and the exact substance of what you said and of what all said.—A. The exact substance of what I said was, that I had been informed that Mr. Van Benthuyssen had written him a letter which he had referred to the Department of the Interior, and by the Department it had been sent to the Patent Office; that in my opinion that was not a proper and correct means of starting his Bureau in an investigation as to the propriety of bringing such a suit, and that in my opinion the practice pursued in the Gunning suit was the proper one, which was that the district attorney upon affidavits, and upon ascertainment of the respectability of the parties making the application, would recommend to the Attorney-General then whatever action he thought proper, and then the Attorney-General might act upon that recommendation and order the suit to be brought or not. The Attorney-General then replied that he had always thought that any such application should be referred to the Patent Office. I remember replying that I did not think that was a proper mode of procedure, because we charged the Patent Office with dereliction of duty, and to make it sit in judgment on itself in a case of this kind would not, in my opinion, be a proper proceeding; that I thought the other proceeding was better. He did not commit himself in reply but simply said that whenever a proper application was filed, his Department would do with it what ought to be done. He did not say that he would not send it to the Patent Office or that he would. But he did not choose, apparently, to discuss that question with me. He then said, "Moreover, if any application is made, I shall not be able to take charge of it, but it will be referred to another officer of the Department, because I am interested in a telephone company." That is about it. I wanted also to show him this affidavit of Mr. Wilbur, which I told him I had in my hand, and which I said was a paper which would satisfy him as Attorney-General that such a suit ought to be brought. But he declined to see it.

Q. Did he say what other officer of the Government it would be referred to?—A. I do not remember that he did particularly specify any officer. He may have said it would be referred to the Solicitor-General; I am not sure. I think he mentioned one or several.

Q. He said he could not attend to it, but it would be referred to another officer of the Department?—A. To the proper officer of the Department.

Mr. MILLARD: The witness says he thinks he mentioned one or several to whom it would be referred.

The WITNESS. I am not quite clear whether he mentioned the Solicitor-General only, or whether he mentioned him in connection with some others.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. But he mentioned the Solicitor-General?—A. I am not clear about that either. But afterwards this action of the Solicitor-General having been had, it was frequently commented upon, and I may say that my recollection upon that subject was not as clear as it ought to have been. He may have mentioned it.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. What did you say to that after he had said that much?—A. I had nothing more to say except that I would withdraw that application or letter of Mr. Van Benthuyzen's.

Q. You told him at this very interview that you would then withdraw that letter?—A. I told him at the very beginning that I did not think that letter was the proper means of starting it, and that I would withdraw it.

Q. And that ended the interview, did it?—A. To my recollection it did. It was a very short interview.

Q. Did anybody else say anything?—A. I believe everybody said something, but I do not remember what was said. Nothing struck me as being to the point.

Q. Did Colonel Young participate in the conversation at all?—A. Very likely he may have said something; I really do not remember what he said.

Q. Did not the Attorney-General say in substance this: "I am connected with another telephone company, and I cannot attend to it; but it will be referred to another officer"?—A. To some proper officer.

Q. He said that distinctly?—A. Oh, yes, sir.

Q. There is no doubt about that?—A. I am very clear on that.

Q. And that was satisfactory to you, I suppose?—A. I did not see any other way, if the Attorney-General refused to act personally. I thought if we had any rights they would come out of his office.

Q. Did he say what telephone company he was connected with?—A. I do not remember that he did; he may have said it. I knew that he was connected with a company.

Q. You knew that he was connected with the Pan-Electric Company?—A. Yes, sir; I knew it from the examination I had made the day before in my search.

Q. Mr. Van Benthuyzen was aware of that also, I suppose?—A. I suppose so; in fact, I was greatly surprised when I saw Mr. Garland's name amongst the list of owners of some of these Rogers patents, and I remember calling Mr. Van Benthuyzen's attention to it, and he seemed to know it.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. Why were you surprised?—A. Because I had not known it.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. When you had your conversation with the Attorney-General that day, did you say anything about your acting at that time for the Pan-Electric company?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you say anything to him indicating that you were making the application in behalf of the Pan-Electric company?—A. Most decidedly not, because I was not making it in behalf of the Pan-Electric company, and did not want to. But if I said anything to him as to my position, I said that I was the attorney of the party whose attorney I was.

Q. And you referred distinctly to the previous application made by Mr. Van Benthuyzen, which was for an independent company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did not the Attorney-General tell you that he would have nothing to do or say about the matter in any way, instead of saying that it would be attended to by some other officer?—A. He said he would have nothing to do about it, and would not express any opinion about it, except that he said that he thought such an application ought to be referred to the Patent Office; that he always had thought that that was the proper way.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. Speaking then of the general method?—A. Yes, sir; of the general method.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. But when he said it would have to be attended to by some other officer, did he say he would not have anything to do with it at all?—A. He said about what I have told you, I think.

Q. I think that is a fair inference; that is plain. The matter was not discussed any more than that.—A. No, sir.

Q. And you all went out satisfied?

The WITNESS. We went out satisfied.

Mr. RANNEY. Well, you were bound to be satisfied; I do not mean anything more than you were satisfied so that you did not pursue the inquiry any further. Where did you go then?—A. I went to the Patent Office.

Q. Did Mr. Van Benthuyzen go with you?—A. No, sir.

Q. You went, then, to withdraw the letter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You withdrew not only the letter of Mr. Van Benthuyzen, but what else did you withdraw?—A. Nothing else.

Q. You simply took Mr. Van Benthuyzen's letter?—A. It was given to me.

Q. You asked for that?—A. No.

Q. You may state what occurred when you went to the Patent Office on that occasion.—A. I went to the Commissioner of Patents and told him that I had just been to the Attorney-General and had informed him that I would withdraw that letter of Mr. Van Benthuyzen's, and that Mr. Garland had replied that that was all right. The Commissioner listened to me, and said that I should sit down for awhile; that he was busy. He was very busy there, with a great many people talking to him, and after about half an hour he suddenly seemed to remember me, and looked for some paper in his desk, and wrote something on it and handed it to me. I did not expect him to give it back to me. I simply wanted to withdraw that thing, and expected that the officers would return it in the proper channels. But he handed it to me.

Q. Who handed it to you?—A. Mr. Montgomery.

Q. He handed you the letter of Mr. Van Benthuyzen?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Anything else?—A. Nothing else.

Q. What did you do with it?—A. I went right up to the Ebbitt House and gave it to Mr. Van Benthuyzen.

Q. Did you see there the letter of the Attorney-General referring that letter of Mr. Van Benthuyzen to the Department of the Interior?—A. All that is indorsed upon this letter.

Q. What letter?—A. This same letter of Mr. Van Benthuyzen's. It was a double sheet of paper, and on the back of it was indorsed what Mr. Garland had written and what the Secretary of the Interior had written, and what Mr. Montgomery had written finally.

Q. So that you then did get not only Mr. Van Benthuyzen's letter, but Mr. Garland's letter too.—A. I got the indorsement, not the letter. It simply says that it was referred to the Department of the Interior for investigation or for report, and then below that is the reference to the Commissioner of Patents for report.

Q. These original papers were carried away, were they not?—A. I have not got them. The letter was afterwards returned to the Department.

Q. But it seems that there was a letter of the Attorney-General, and likewise a letter of Mr. Van Benthuyzen's, separate papers?—A. No, sir.

Q. That is not your recollection?—A. I know positively that that was not so. There was a letter of Mr. Van Benthuyzen's on a double sheet of paper, and it was folded and indorsed as I have told you.

Q. But whatever was written by the Attorney-General to the Department, as well as whatever was written by Mr. Van Benthuyzen to the Attorney-General, was taken away by you?—A. Yes, sir; whatever was on that paper.

Q. On that one paper?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are sure you did not get but one paper?—A. I am very sure. If you have that letter it will show for itself.

Q. Yes, as I remember it now—I want to see that there is no mistake about it—A. There is none.

Q. As I remember it now, there were two separate papers, and all the indorsements were on the letter of the Attorney-General, instead of on Mr. Van Benthuyzen's letter.—A. No; there was a letter of Mr. Van Benthuyzen to the Attorney-General, and all the indorsements were on that letter, and that very letter will show, if you have it, and you ought to have it here.

Q. We have had them here, but my memory is not certain about it.—A. I am particularly clear on that subject.

Q. I had an impression there were two separate sets of papers.—A. If there were two I only got one. There may have been more than two.

Q. Your recollection is that you took away simply the letter of Mr. Van Benthuyzen, and that these indorsements were on the back of it?—A. That is my positive knowledge.

Q. Did you read it after you took it away?—A. Yes, sir; I read it after I had it.

Q. And gave it to Mr. Van Benthuyzen?—A. Yes, sir; I did, and afterwards the Commissioner of Patents asked me to return it, which was done.

Q. If there was an indorsement on that application of Mr. Van Benthuyzen's, and likewise accompanying it a separate letter of the Attorney-General, you did not get the letter of the Attorney-General?—A. I did not; but there was an indorsement on that letter by the Attorney-General.

Q. On the Van Benthuyzen letter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if there was a separate letter of the Attorney-General?—A. I never saw it.

Q. You did not see it or get it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who told you that Mr. Van Benthuyzen and Mr. Huntington had had an interview with the Attorney-General on the day previous?—A. One of them. I remember they told me that they had arranged to meet at 11 o'clock.

Q. Did not the Attorney-General in that interview of the 30th or 31st allude to what he had told them the day previous?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't he say "I will have nothing to do with it, just as I told you yesterday?"—A. I do not remember that he did; he may have done so.

Q. Were there any questions put to the Attorney-General that you remember, that he did not answer?—A. That is more than I can recollect.

Q. You do not remember that there were any?—A. I do not.

Q. Did you have anything to do with a written agreement that was drawn in Washington on the 4th of August?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever know anything about it?—A. No.

Q. There seems to have been on the 4th of August a written agreement drawn between the Pan-Electric Company and the National Improved Company?—A. I suppose that that led to my discharge, and it is not very natural or likely that I should have known of it.

Q. Why not?—A. Because, probably, I was of no further use to that company; I could not have been of any use to that company.

Q. Was there anything said by these parties in your presence about a combination between the Pan-Electric Company and the National Improved Company?—A. Not to my knowledge. I did not know it, and therefore I do not think any one said it.

Q. When you went to the Attorney-General on the 31st of July, you had no knowledge or information or intimation that these two companies had made an agreement for a combination?—A. I had not.

Q. When did you first hear of it?—A. I heard it through the papers afterwards—after the 10th of August. I surmised it by the letter of the 10th of August.

Q. There was nothing of the kind said in that letter of the 10th of August?—A. No, sir.

Q. When were you first directed not to do anything more with the suit in Pennsylvania?—A. By the letter of the 10th of August. I had intended to do a great deal in that suit.

Q. Up to that time you had intended to go on with the suit?—A. Yes, sir; in fact, I had arranged with Mr. Storrow as to the mode of proceeding, and all that fell to the ground.

Q. What had you agreed with Mr. Storrow before the 10th of August about that suit?—A. We had agreed that the complainant—I forget now exactly. But it was an agreement which would have resulted in a very speedy introduction of testimony for the purpose of bringing the facts which we had into the Supreme Court in time for the argument on the first appeal on telephone matters that should come up.

Q. It was an arrangement whereby the evidence in another case should be put into that—evidence taken in New Jersey and Pennsylvania?—A. No, sir; that is not it. It was an arrangement so that we could be in the Supreme Court with all our proof before the Dolbear case could be argued.

Q. In the case at Pittsburgh, who else sat besides Judges Atcheson and McKennan?—A. That is all.

Q. And they decided they would hear you on any new matter they had not already passed on, did they not?—A. No; they did not.

Q. Did not Judge McKennan say he had just sat four days in Philadelphia hearing that same issue tried?

The WITNESS. Do you want to know what he said?

Mr. RANNEY. I have got it all here in print.

The WITNESS. No; you have not.

Mr. RANNEY. Have I not?

The WITNESS. No; you think you have it, if you have the report of the Bell company's stenographer.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not care to go into an investigation of that matter.

The WITNESS. If you wish to know about it, I will tell you.

Mr. RANNEY. That is an investigation we do not care to enter upon.

The WITNESS. I don't think you ought to.

Q. In that case there would have been no difficulty, I take it, in trying all the issues, if you had gone on with it.—A. I do not think Judge McKennan would ever have heard us. I don't think we could have had any trial before Judge McKennan.

Q. I mean on the merits of the case.—A. He would not have given us any relief.

Q. There would have been no difficulty in putting in the proof so as to carry it to the Supreme Court, would there?—A. That was the arrangement which we made, but—

Q. All the issues you know of were raised in that case, were they not?

Mr. OATES. Let him finish his answer.

Mr. RANNEY. If you have not finished your answer, please do so.

A. (Continuing.) But my connection with the suit was terminated before that arrangement could be carried into effect.

Q. If it had not been terminated, but had gone on, there would have been no difficulty in carrying the case up and having all the issues litigated?

The WITNESS. In the Supreme Court?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes, sir.

A. I believe so, yes; the issues which we had.

Q. When you were defending that case you knew of the alleged irregularity in the Patent Office?—A. I knew what the records showed, that is all. I did not have the proof positive from Mr. Wilbur.

Q. But you had set up a defense in that suit which would have covered it?—A. No; I don't think we had. I am not sure. The record will show for itself.

Q. The suit would have covered the question whether Gray or Bell was the original inventor?—A. Yes; but this question of the application of 1875 is a much more serious one, and I do not think we raised that in our pleading.

Q. Whose application?—A. Mr. Bell's application made in 1875, which was for the same invention as that of 1876 and was still pending.

Q. Were there any conferences at the Ebbitt House while you were here in July?—

A. I suppose those were conferences that I talked about.

Q. Other than those you have named? Did you have a conference after you left the Attorney-General that evening?—A. Yes, sir; there were quite a number of people present and a good deal of talk.

Q. Who were present at the conference?—A. The same persons that I named before, and some others—a gentleman from Baltimore; I forget his name.

Q. Bradley T. Johnson?—A. I think that is it.

Q. He was there in the evening?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did the conference last?—A. Oh, I don't remember. I didn't stay it out. I didn't see anything for me to do.

Q. Can you tell what was said there?—A. No.

Q. Was Senator Harris there?—A. No; Senator Harris was not at the conference. I saw him the same afternoon.

Q. Mr. Bradley T. Johnson was there representing the Washington Telephone Company?—A. I don't know what he represented.

Q. That was in the evening?—A. In the afternoon, I think. I left him in the afternoon. I did not go back.

Q. There was yourself, Mr. Huntington, Mr. Van Benthuyzen, Colonel Gantt, and Bradley T. Johnson. In whose room was it?—A. I think in Mr. Van Benthuyzen's room. It might have been Mr. Huntington's.

Q. How long did the conference last?—A. I left before it was over.

Q. Were they arranging for anything particular?—A. I suppose they were; yes. I doubt whether it would be proper for me to state that. Whatever was said there I think ought not be stated.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not want to infringe upon privileged communications.

The WITNESS. There were matters said that did not concern me. My duties in the case were very simple. I was simply to defend the company against the Bell patents; and other matters that came to my hearing there did not concern my duties.

Q. In that conference at the Ebbitt House, if these things were not stated to you as counsel—A. I was there as counsel and in no other capacity, and if I heard matters, they did not relate to any combination, as you might think they did; not within my hearing. They related to details; for instance, to where the suit should be brought.

Q. What suit?—A. The suit by the Government.

- Q. The conference related to the details of the Government suit to be brought?—
A. Mostly.
- Q. What was said or done there at that time?
The WITNESS. Do you want to know what was said?
- Mr. RANNEY. They treated it as to be brought, did they not, and were proceeding to make arrangements for it?
- A. I was very determined that it should not be brought in any district in which the court had already been committed; and I suggested that it should be brought on some neutral ground, wherever that might be found, in any court in which this litigation had not yet been brought. That question was, in substance, discussed pro and con.
- Q. The subject of discussion was where the Government suit should be brought?—
A. To what district attorney the papers should be presented.
- Q. You all assumed it would be brought, I suppose?—A. I didn't think there was any doubt about our making the application. Whether it would be allowed I did not know.
- Q. But you acted as though it was going to be allowed, and you were arranging for it?—A. I was simply advising where the papers should be filed.
- Q. What was there in that interview that you did not want to state? I do not want to ask you anything that is improper. I will allow you to judge. What is there that you think you ought not to state?—A. What I don't want to state I don't want to state.
- Q. What does it relate to?—A. There may be some reflections upon persons.
- Mr. EDEN. I did not hear the witness. I suppose he objects to stating what occurred between him and his clients of a professional nature.
- The WITNESS. Substantially.
- Q. Something occurred that you do not think you are at liberty to state, because of your relations as counsel to your client. Is that the reason?—A. A good deal occurred of that description.
- Q. Did it occur at that interview?—A. Some at that interview and some at others.
- Q. I am speaking of that conference. Was it something that was said between you and your client of a private nature apart from the others, or when they were present?—A. Well, unless I am ordered by the committee to answer at length upon that branch I do not think I ought to answer. It was a private matter that was being talked about, or private matters.
- Q. If those matters were between you and your client I should not think it proper to call for them. I am trying to ascertain whether the matters were between you and your client.—A. I will say this: that as long as I was in the room I was active in the conversation, and when I thought there was nothing more for me to do I went away.
- Q. What Bradley T. Johnson said there would not be between counsel and client, would it?—A. No.
- Q. Or anything that Mr. Young said?—A. No.
- Q. That would not be between counsel and client. What did Bradley T. Johnson say?—A. I don't remember.
- Q. Do you remember his talking about wanting the benefit of the Government suit in the Baltimore case?—A. No.
- Q. Did you hear him say anything to indicate why he was there?—A. I understood he was there in his capacity as attorney for some telephone company, the Washington or Baltimore company, I don't remember which.
- Q. The Washington Telephone Company, which operates in Baltimore. What else?
The WITNESS. What else what?
- Mr. RANNEY. What else did you understand he was there for?—A. I don't remember anything else.
- Q. Did he participate in the conversation?—A. I don't recollect particularly. The main conversation was as to where the suit should be brought. Reasons were given pro and con, and I insisted on my view, which I pressed as hard as I could. That was all.
- Mr. RANNEY. I am trying to find out the part you are unwilling to state.
- The WITNESS. Oh, yes; I know you are.
- Q. Did Mr. Young have anything to say?—A. Oh, Mr. Young said considerable, I believe.
- Q. Do you know whether Dr. Rogers or his son were invited to that conference?—
A. I hope not. They were not there.
- Q. You say that things were said there which you cannot repeat or do not deem yourself at liberty to repeat because of your relations as counsel. I leave that to your own judgment.—A. Beyond that, it would be a most preposterous thing for me to try to tell you what every one said in a conference which lasted perhaps two hours, and there being five or six persons present, and considerable said, probably, by each one. I could not remember. I had a certain point in view which I tried to impress upon the others; and that is substantially all I have charged my recollection with particularly.

Q. Do you say you are not willing to state it because you cannot recollect it, or because you think you ought not to be asked in view of your relations as counsel?—A. I state that I ought not to be asked.

Q. I happen to be the judge of what I ought to ask, while you are the judge of what you ought to answer. Did anything occur in that interview that you do not think proper to state because of your relation as counsel to the parties?—A. To some extent; yes.

Q. You may omit what you think you ought not to state. Is there anything else that you can state besides that?—A. No; principally not because I am not willing to do it, but because I do not remember the details sufficiently.

Mr. RANNEY. I understand your position and I appreciate the duty of counsel under his oath and the privilege the law gives. I believe there is nothing more that I want to ask you.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. I understand the only objection you make to stating all that occurred at that interview you have spoken of is the objection as to the relation of attorney and client existing.—A. In substance. Another reason is that I do not recollect what every one said. I could not state here under oath that Mr. Young said so and so and Mr. Johnson said this and that. I could not do it. I don't remember it. What was said as to the conduct of the New Orleans litigation was certainly of a character that I deemed confidential.

Q. And that you would not have a right to state?—A. No.

Q. You were the attorney for the New Orleans company only?—A. Only for that company.

Q. You had but one interview with Attorney-General Garland?—A. That is all.

Q. Did you make an application at that time to the Attorney-General to bring a suit?—A. No.

Q. You talked with him about the letter that Mr. Van Benthuyzen had written and filed some time previously?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And gave your view about the proper way of bringing the suit which you have already stated?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the Attorney-General heard what you said upon that subject. Did he give any opinion about it himself?—A. He said what I have told you before, sir. That he had always thought that in such a case when application was made it could be referred to the Patent Office. I sought to persuade him that that would be a most unjust proceeding, because the Patent Office would have to pass upon the correctness of its own action.

Q. You were not then talking about a particular application, but about general rules?—A. Yes; although of course we started by telling him that we came to see about this letter of Mr. Van Benthuyzen's. I told him I wanted to withdraw that letter because it was not a proper application; that an application should be made under oath; that there should be an affidavit setting out the facts to be proven, and when such affidavit was presented, then and not until then could his office be moved to act.

Q. You proposed to read to him or to have him read this affidavit of Wilbur?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did he say to that?—A. He said "I don't want to hear it; I don't want to see it; in fact I cannot have anything to do with any telephone litigation, because I am interested in one of the telephone companies."

Q. And he stated that if an application came it would have to go to some other officer of the Department?—A. That is the way I understood him, yes.

Q. Do you have any recollection as to whether he mentioned any officer, or just stated it in that general way?—A. I have been asked that question before; I don't remember; it is possible he suggested the Solicitor-General, perhaps also some one else; but I am not clear on that point; I do not remember.

Q. That is what I want to ask, whether you remember that distinctly or not?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. But you do remember that he stated distinctly he would have nothing to do with it?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Why could you not have pursued the course that you suggested to the Attorney-General and still leave Van Benthuyzen's letter on file?—A. My object was not to take it from the files. My object was to withdraw it and start the matter in the proper, lawful manner.

Q. I so understand; but why not leave the letter on file?—A. Because I did not want the Commissioner of Patents to act upon that letter, if he was to act upon anything. His action, if any, should have been upon all the papers which we wanted to present.

Q. It was withdrawn for fear there might be action upon it?—A. Action upon it without knowledge of the facts we wanted to base our application upon.

Q. You thought that office should not pass judgment upon a matter that had been before it?—A. I thought that was not proper, any more than if you wanted to find whether the Broadway franchise in New York was lawfully granted you should refer that question to the board of aldermen.

Q. I so understand you. It was you who suggested to the Attorney-General that the application should be made to the district attorney?—A. Yes, sir; I told him I understood that that had been the practice in the Gunning case, and I had every reason to believe that was the practice.

Q. Then the course that was pursued in the Government suit is the same course that you suggested?—A. I do not know what has been done. I have been out of the case for some time.

Q. Application was made to the district attorney?—A. If it was made to him and if he referred it, and if action was based upon that, then it was done just as I thought it ought to be.

Q. It was referred to Goode, and he ordered the suit. That was precisely as you suggested?—A. Exactly; but afterwards, as I understand, that suit was discontinued.

Q. But the same thing was gone over again?—A. No; I don't think so.

Q. Except that it was referred to the Patent Office?—A. I think that was a mistake.

Q. You have made a statement here which perhaps has no relation to this suit.

The WITNESS. Which suit?

Mr. MILLARD. The Government suit. You stated that after the combination of the Pan-Electric Company and the National Improved you could be of no further use to them; why not?—A. In the first place the Pan-Electric Company had numerous counsel, and a multitude of counsel are not apt to be useful in a suit. In the second place, I would not like to be in a litigation of that kind unless I had charge of it; and I would not have had charge of any such combination. In the third place, as the attorney for the New Orleans Company, I would not approve of such a combination; it would have been done against my protest.

Q. Why?—A. Because the parties were the owners of property which in due time would be apt to bring them into conflict with one another.

Q. You refer to the National Improved and the Pan-Electric?—A. Yes, sir; that is my opinion; I may be all wrong.

Q. There was a conversation at the Ebbitt House, that was held after you came from Attorney-General Garland's, relative to the Government suit, that you do not desire to disclose on the ground of your being attorney for some of the parties, as I understand it.—A. I was attorney for the New Orleans Company.

Q. I say there was a conversation at a conference held the same evening or day, in regard to this Government suit, which conversation you do not desire to state to this committee by reason of the fact of your being counsel or retained by some of the parties. Do I state you correctly?—A. Yes; you state some of my reasons. I have said I could not recollect the conversation. I have told you the purport, the object of it, which was to determine the place where this suit should be started. I have told you that already.

Q. But you have not told us the whole conversation?—A. No; I do not think I ought to.

Q. Are you acquainted with an attorney by the name of Pine, a patent lawyer in the interior of the State of New York?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you not talked freely with him in regard to this Government suit and how it came to be brought?—A. Never.

Q. I speak of the Government suit?—A. No, sir; I never have. I have had no conversation with him about it.

Q. When did you see him last?—A. I don't know. I think —

Mr. OATES. What is the object of this?

Mr. EDEN. It doesn't seem necessary to me.

Mr. MILLARD. If he has seen him recently I want to call his attention to another matter, to refresh his recollection.

The WITNESS. I don't remember when I saw him last, but it may have been in the spring of 1885. I don't think it was later. Certainly, according to my recollection, it was not after July.

Q. Did you see him after you were here?—A. No; I don't think I did. He was not a man I would be likely to talk with about such subjects.

Mr. MILLARD. I only learned of it accidentally.

The WITNESS. Of such a conversation with me?

Mr. MILLARD. Yes.

The WITNESS. It must have been a different person he conversed with. I don't think he conversed with me.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. In the conversation you had with Mr. Van Benthuyzen on the 12th of July who introduced the subject of bringing this suit by the Government?—A. I don't remember. I only know that I was thinking of any possible means of preventing the recurrence of what I thought to be a very great injustice in Pittsburgh, and it occurred to me that the Government suit would bring all the parties that had knowledge of the facts into a position where they would have to produce those facts.

Q. Did he not call your attention to the fact that he had been informed that a law had recently been passed giving the Attorney-General authority and making it his duty to bring suit for the vacation of patents?—A. I think he did mention that; yes; and I think I remember saying that there was no such law to my knowledge, but if there was I was greatly surprised, as I saw no necessity for it, the Gunning suit having settled the fact that a suit could be brought.

Q. You advised the bringing of the suit on the ground that there had been so many decisions upholding the Bell patent, as I understood you?—A. So many decisions based upon admissions.

Q. So many that in your judgment the matter could only be settled by Government suit?—A. In my judgment the Government suit would be the only means of bringing all the facts into one case, because each one of these defendants had a parcel of facts which counted perhaps for but little when you considered the immense power of the other concern.

Mr. MOFFATT. I mistook your position. I understood you to say the judges had all passed on it and had established precedents that would have to be followed; and I could not understand why they would not have to be followed just as much in a Government suit as in any other suit.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. They were only followed in granting preliminary injunctions?—A. No, sir; I think you are mistaken. I think if you will read Judge McKennan's statement in the Clay case, in Philadelphia, which was a final hearing, you will see he then said he would not look into the facts that had been, in his opinion, previously passed upon.

Q. Adjudicated?—A. Those were findings which, as we thought, were based merely upon admissions.

Q. I understand the custom in equity cases is not to grant preliminary injunctions, as a rule, until patents have been established judicially with some certainty?—A. Yes; but we had so many new facts we had gathered at great expense, and we came there in the utmost good faith, hoping to have a hearing, and we were not only disappointed, but I may say we felt ourselves ill-treated by the fact that the court announced it would not deny the injunction, no matter what facts we showed.

Mr. RANNEY. They say the only consolation a lawyer has when he gets beaten is to damn the court and jury.

The WITNESS. We did not do that, but we looked to other means of getting our rights.

Mr. HALE. You felt a little like damning them, didn't you?

The WITNESS. That is not my habit. I think probable Judge McKennan acted according to his conscience.

Q. In that conference with the Attorney-General on the 31st of July was any allusion made by the Attorney-General to the fact that he was going on a vacation?—A. No; there was not.

Q. Or was anything said about Mr. Goode not having returned?—A. No, sir; not to my knowledge.

Q. Was anything of the kind said in the conference?—A. Oh, no. There was nothing said about it in any way in the conference. I am free to say there was nothing said about the personalities of the officers; absolutely nothing.

Mr. RANNEY. The record shows that Mr. Montgomery had Mr. Van Benthuyzen's letter and a separate letter from the Attorney-General.

The WITNESS. That may be.

Q. He did not give but one to you?—A. That is all.

Q. You are sure of that?—A. Oh, yes.

Mr. RANNEY. He has taken them away by mistake, and they have not gone on the record.

The WITNESS. Can you send for them?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

Mr. MOFFATT. They were introduced at an earlier stage, and therefore were left out at that point, probably. The letter which the Attorney-General wrote went to the Interior Department, but was not referred to the Patent Office.

The WITNESS. I think you will find I have made no mistake, Mr. Ranney.

CECIL CLAY, who had been previously sworn, was recalled and further examined, as follows:

By Mr. RANNEY:

Question. You said there was one case, and only one, which was not referred to the Secretary of the Interior, and that you could not find more than one of the papers in that case, at the time of your examination previously. Have you found those papers?—Answer. I have here the papers in all the cases.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. What papers have you brought?—A. I have brought all the original letters received, and copies of the letters sent in all the cases in which applications were made and granted or refused.

Q. For how far back?—A. Back to 1871, I think; to the date of the original list which appears in print.

Q. You have brought the original papers?—A. I have brought the original papers; the original letters received and copies of the letters sent.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not think that is necessary. It already appears in the record as to how many applications have been granted and how many have been refused; and he was asked to see if there were any that had not been referred to the Secretary of the Interior. He mentioned one case in which he said he could not find but one paper, and had not the paper here. He was requested to look the matter up, as I recollect it.

The WITNESS. I do not think I said I could not find but one paper. I think I said there had been but one or two papers on file in the Department.

Mr. RANNEY. I accept the correction. I think you are right.

The WITNESS. The remainder of the papers that are now there in the custody of the Department have got there irregularly.

Mr. RANNEY. Have you the papers with you now?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. I wish you would give me the papers in the Well case. I don't want to get into a very deep well of muddy water.

Mr. OATES. It strikes me all the committee wants is a statement of the causes and the point in each case. Here is the statement to which you refer, Mr. Ranney [hands paper to Mr. Ranney].

By Mr. OATES:

Q. Were you required to bring all the original papers?—A. I received a letter from the chairman of the committee, written, I think, on Saturday, asking me to come up yesterday and bring all these papers; and I was requested orally by somebody on the committee the last time I was here to bring all the papers in all the cases.

Mr. OATES. My understanding was that the only reason why this statement, which I believe you prepared, was not satisfactory, was that it did not show what was involved in each one of the cases. It states a number of cases, but does not show what was involved.

The WITNESS. As to what the particular patent was and the allegations against it?

Mr. OATES. Yes.

The WITNESS. That list could be taken and amplified a little.

Mr. OATES. I see an entry here, "April 24, 1883. U. S. Attorney authorized to attach signature to bill to vacate patent issued to A. L. Roberts for torpedoes in oil-wells."

The WITNESS. That is the Well case.

Mr. OATES. The patents are referred to by number, but the list does not show what the patents were.

The WITNESS. May I look at that list for a moment?

Mr. OATES. Yes. (Hands it to witness.) It seems to me that if that list was amplified it would be all that the committee would need.

The WITNESS. This list was made by taking the list which was in print, and which simply gave the titles of the different cases in which permission had been given to institute suit; that was compiled after looking at the record to see what had been done. Then a statement of this sort was added: "Application having been made by John Smith, and approved by the Commissioner of Patents," simply to show in that case the action of the Interior Department upon it. And so with these others.

Mr. OATES. It would not be much trouble, would it, to take that list and enlarge it by mentioning in each case the action taken and the subject-matter; that is, giving just enough to show what kind of a patent it was and what it was about?

The WITNESS (referring to another paper). There is another list that was furnished to the committee.

Mr. OATES. This is the only one I have. I got it from Mr. Boyle when he was going away.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Was that a statement of the cases referred and not referred?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where is that?—A. That should be here with the committee.

Q. Who is Duncan S. Walker?—A. He is a lawyer in this city.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not find the application here.

The WITNESS. Those are all the papers that the Department has in that case. When I came to look for the records at the Department I found only a few letters on file there, received or sent. Some time after that Mr. Walker returned to the Department a number of papers, which are there, as having been in his hands. The correspondence seems to have been conducted by him and Gen. Butler. When we were called upon to state how many cases had, and how many cases had not, been referred to the Interior Department, I took that original list and put into it whatever was necessary, whatever the phraseology might have been in the letter of the attorney. That simply included in each instance the wording of the letter sent to the attorney at the time the instructions were given, either after reference to the Secretary of the Interior or on the suggestion of the Secretary of the Interior, whatever the action was. If that list has been mislaid we can furnish several copies if need be.

Mr. RANNEY. Mr. Boyle and I had it and looked at it. I do not find that there was any application whatever made to the Department, except a letter of Gen. Butler's, which seems to be an application on the relation of some of the parties, and those parties were permitted to take charge of it.

The WITNESS. I do not know anything about that case except the mere collection together of these papers. I have no idea how it got into the Department originally. I know upon one occasion Mr. Duncan S. Walker, who was one of the counsel in the case, came to the Department and said he had brought the papers in the Roberts torpedo case, which he wished to return, or rather, not to return, but to turn over to the Department. I took them and went all over them and gave him a receipt for them. I then looked on the record of the Department to see what we had concerning the Roberts torpedo case, and found several letters from the Department. Copies of those letters from the Department are here, and also the papers presented by Mr. Walker. I put them in one bundle and filed them with the papers already on file. I have never read the papers so as to know how the papers got into the Department, or anything at all about it.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. It does not appear here that there is any order for the suit. The attorney is simply authorized to attach his signature on behalf of the United States on the relation of these parties.—A. That is the nearest approach to definite action on the part of the Department that we could find.

Q. Probably it may explain somewhat the absence of a formal application. The suit may have been commenced, and that order may have been made subsequently.—

A. The case came to the Department before my incumbency as chief clerk. When I received the papers from Mr. Walker I asked one of the clerks in my room, who had been there for some time, what the case was and how it had arisen. He said that was something he had never been able to discover, except that Mr. Walker and General Butler had charge of the case; that Attorney-General Brewster had managed the matter, and he had placed it in their hands. That appeared to be all that this clerk knew about it. There was no correspondence with our Department as a Department. When they got through with whatever they did in the case they brought these papers to the Department and turned them over.

Mr. RANNEY. It was in regard to a reissue of patent, not the original issue. It was a proceeding in the nature of a quo warranto on the Patent Office, one of General Butler's operations.

Mr. OATES. We do not need that in this case.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not mean to say that it was anything improper.

Mr. OATES. It does not throw any light on any matter we have under consideration.

Mr. RANNEY. I think this will throw some light upon it. I would like to have it taken down.

Mr. OATES. Suppose it is taken down and shows the nature of the case, will it do us any good?

Mr. RANNEY. The question is, whether it is the universal practice of the Department. It has been stated that it is not. Mr. Clay, after examination, has produced a number of cases where suits were ordered, and a number where permission to institute suit was refused. Every one was referred to the Interior Department with a single exception. The excepted case is a case of a peculiar nature, which would not be referred, and does not come within the rule.

Mr. EDEN. All that proves is that there are some cases where reference would not be made.

Mr. RANNEY. It is an application to prevent the vexatious use of a patent reissued.

Mr. OATES. Suppose we just state that, without introducing any of the papers.

Mr. RANNEY. I would like to put in a paper I have here; it is very short. It is the report.

Mr. OATES. Nobody will ever read it, any way.

Mr. EDEN. What you wish to show is the practice, and that can be shown without putting all the papers in the record.

Mr. RANNEY. I will show you the nature of this case, if you want to see it.

Mr. OATES. I am perfectly satisfied.

Mr. RANNEY. It appears by these papers that the proceeding was had in order to stop the multitudinous litigations instituted by the Roberts Torpedo Company; that there were five thousand suits, according to General Butler's statement, pending against different parties for alleged infringements of patents claimed by that company; that said patents had been issued twice, and that it is claimed, under decisions of the Supreme Court, that they are not valid now, if they ever had any validity.

Mr. EDEN. I suppose that will answer the purpose as well as putting in all the papers.

Mr. RANNEY. There is another thing. The report shows that on May 31, 1882, Gen. B. F. Butler applied to the Att'y-General asking that proceedings be instituted to vacate the patents for exploding torpedoes in oil wells, which patents were owned by the Roberts Torpedo Co., and alleging that the patents were void because of illegal reissue, and also alleging extortion practiced by the company and vexatious litigation set on foot by the company. It was stated that the number of suits brought in the western district of Pennsylvania was five or six thousand, and that one hundred and sixty suits were brought in the northern district of New York. The suit was brought on the relation of the parties interested.

Mr. EDEN. That was a case that was not referred to the Interior Department.

Mr. OATES. That is the case that was not referred.

Mr. RANNEY. The case was brought on the relation of the parties, and the Government was simply asked to intervene and allow the parties to proceed. General Butler returned the papers in the torpedo case and said they were withdrawn in order to be presented to the Supreme Court of the United States in another case. I have here the original letter of General Butler, saying: "I withdrew the papers in the torpedo case for the purpose of using them before the Supreme Court if necessary. I now return them so that they can be placed on file in your office, together with the motion made in the Supreme Court." The papers show that it was a case peculiar in itself and unlike the others. The United States was asked to intervene and allow these parties to proceed on their relation because of oppression and vexatious litigation. It was based on a reissued patent, not on the original issue. It appears to be a case which was brought because of his allegation that many thousand oppressive suits had been brought, and the United States was asked to intervene and allow a bill to be prosecuted on the relation of the parties named. The Department of Justice allowed it, but the cases were finally abandoned, the papers returned, and the parties proceeded in another way in another case in the Supreme Court.

The following letter is inserted at the request of Mr. Ranney:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, Jan'y 11, 1883.

Genl. DUNCAN S. WALKER,
Atty. at Law, Washington:

SIR: It is not possible for me to see you when you call frequently; and then again I have no instructions to give you in that business. If you want any further instructions or advice, write to Gen. Butler about it, and the district attorney here. I really handed it to you because I did not want to have my mind interrupted with it. I am so much occupied. The person who represents Gen. Butler went to you yesterday, and represented to me that he had made an arrangement with you which was satisfactory. If it is satisfactory between you it is satisfactory to me. All I have in view is to have the business of the Government promptly attended to by a responsible man, to be paid proper, reasonable charges for it. This is a special case that the dist. atty. and you should attend to. I cannot consent to have such litigation pass exclusively into the hands of the claimants who bring the suits. The Government must have somebody to stand guard over it. Now, exercise your own discretion as a lawyer, having due regard to what the parties in interest request and aver to Gen. Butler, their attorney; also having regard to Mr. Corkhill's views.

Proceedings ought to be taken at once. The man is urgent, and the parties I employ are employed to get a speedy remedy. I leave it to you. Pray do not trouble me for it.

Very truly, yours,

BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

E. N. HILL then came before the committee, and was duly sworn.

By Mr. OATES (in the chair):

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Washington City.

Q. How long have you resided here?—A. Since 1876.

Q. Where is your former place of residence?—A. Arkansas.

Q. What is your business or vocation?—A. Attorney-at-law.

Q. Have you any other?—A. Yes, sir; I sometimes write for the newspapers; journalist.

Q. Were you ever in the employ of Col. Casey Young as his clerk or in any capacity in connection with the Pan-Electric company or the Pan-Electric Telephone Company?—A. I was never employed by Col. Casey Young; I have done a great deal of work for him, but never under any employment in any capacity. I do not think it was considered between Colonel Young and myself that I was in his employ.

Q. You did a good deal of work for him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you do any work for him in connection with either of the companies named or touching their business?—A. Some little.

Q. Are you familiar with the affairs of either of those companies or the organization of the companies and the stockholders?—A. From personal knowledge I could hardly say that I was familiar with their organization. I have heard the organization stated by quite a number of persons, Colonel Young and others, and I have seen the books of the company which showed the organization. I suppose that would be personal knowledge from reading it off of the books.

Q. Did you ever write up the books or the minutes of the proceedings, or act as secretary or clerk?—A. I never acted as secretary or clerk at the meetings of the Pan-Electric company.

Q. You are aware that Colonel Young was the secretary and treasurer, are you not?—A. I am, sir.

Q. Did you ever write for him at his instance?—A. Oh, yes, I have written a good deal for him at his instance.

Q. Touching the affairs of the company?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. OATES. I will suspend the examination here for a moment. My attention has been called to a matter that I want the committee to pass upon. Mr. Huntington has been subpoenaed here as a witness. I have just received a telegram sent to General Catchings, in which the signer of the telegram inquires if the committee cannot arrange the testimony of Mr. Huntington by deposition. The telegram reads:

"Mr. Huntington has been subpoenaed before the Pan-Electric committee. Go and see Casey Young and arrange to have Huntington's testimony taken by interrogatories, if you can, as he is too unwell to travel and does not wish to cause delay. He has telegraphed Sergeant-at-Arms to obtain time from the committee.

"J. S. McNEAL."

I told General Catchings that I would bring this matter before the committee and learn what the committee had to say. He wants to know so that he can reply to the dispatch.

Mr. RANNEY. Mr. Huntington was subpoenaed at my instance and request. I do not think that an examination of him by interrogatories would amount to anything. I do not think that his deposition could be taken in that way so that it would be of any use.

Mr. OATES. His statement is that he is too unwell to come.

Mr. EDEN. He cannot come until he gets better, I suppose.

Mr. OATES. What action will the committee take about it?

Mr. RANNEY. I think he had better be telegraphed to come personally if he can. We have no authority to take depositions. We consented that those men in New Orleans should be examined in that way because their testimony only relates to the matter of a date. A man must be examined orally in order to have his testimony of much value. We might send two members of the committee down to examine Mr. Huntington, though I do not think his testimony is of so much importance as to render that necessary. Now that Mr. Von Brieson has testified I do not think Mr. Huntington's testimony is important, for it would only confirm the fact that this interview took place. That was the principal thing I wanted. I do not think it becomes of consequence now, and yet I think it is but fair that he should be called.

Mr. OATES. Suppose I say to General Catchings to tell Mr. Huntington to come on if he can or if he is able.

Mr. EDEN. Yes, I think that is all we can say.

The WITNESS. Mr. Chairman, I was just going to ask you to allow me to make a statement of all I know about this matter, and then you put your questions afterwards, if it will answer as well.

Mr. OATES. Yes, you may do that; just proceed and make your statement.

The WITNESS. So far as I know this Pan-Electric company was organized in 1883.

During the fall and winter of 1883, or rather in the winter and spring of 1874, I was at Col. Young's room a great deal, and he asked me to do some writing for the company, which I did. In doing that I obtained some knowledge of the business of the company. That was continued up until probably July or August, 1884; I am not certain as to the exact date; sometime about that time. After that I had no connection with the company in any way, and I had very little intercourse with Col. Young. When he came back here in December as a member of Congress I think I was in his room only two or three times. I found in July, 1885, that the newspaper reporters were trying to get a statement of the Pan-Electric company's business, and I was satisfied, from the men that were working at it, that it was intended to make a political attack upon these parties. Knowing the facts as I did know them, I wrote out what I conceived to be a fair statement for these gentlemen, making no attack upon them at all, but just stating the facts as they existed. I gave this to Mr. Clark, of the New York Tribune, telling him not to publish until he found out that other papers were about to publish incorrect statements. Mr. Clark held that statement for ten or fifteen days before it was published, and then notified me that other papers—I think some of the Chicago papers—were about to publish it, and I told him if he chose to publish it then, to do so.

I only wrote the first part of that article. Mr. Clark added a good deal to it. If I had the article I could designate it. I haven't it, and I haven't read it since that time. He added a good deal of knowledge of his own to the article. The part I wrote was simply a statement about the stockholders of the company. I forgot to say that before I wrote that I saw a number of articles printed in the New Orleans Times-Democrat on the subject, a paper which I took or which came to the office where I was and which I read every day, and also an article in the Baltimore Sun. Then, when General Sypher came from New York in the latter part of July or August he told me what Mr. Cahoon had said to him, and the papers came from Saint Paul with some very incorrect and I thought improper statements in them, before I wrote my article at all. I wrote the article as a statement of what the interests of these gentlemen were in the matter.

Some time after that there was an interview with Col. Robert Alexander printed in the Globe-Democrat, and that renewed the inquiry on the part of the papers. I saw something in the New York World about it, and I went to Mr. Crawford and told him if he wanted a complete and correct history of that matter that I could give it to him. I wrote it up, had it type-written, and gave Mr. Crawford a copy of it. In talking about it he said "I think Mr. Garland has done something very wrong in this thing." Said I, "I can't see where he has done anything wrong." He said, "He must be very obtuse if he don't think he has done wrong." I said, "If he is obtuse so am I, because I can't see where he was wrong in the matter. Mr. Garland, as far as I know, has never been at the meetings of the company; I never saw him at one in my life, and I was in the room when they used to assemble, and would leave; I never staid at one of their meetings, and I never was present at a meeting, but I used to be in the house there with Col. Young, and when the board of directors of the company used to meet, I always left the room and the house generally."

I wrote that statement and kept some copies of it. Before I gave it to Mr. Crawford I sent it to Mr. Dana with the letter which he read here, that if he thought it was worth publishing to publish it, and if he didn't to give it to the office cat. Two or three men had come to me professing to be agents of different parties. One man who called himself Ray, I believe, came to me and talked about being the agent of some capitalists in Chicago, and wanted me to tell him if Col. Young and Garland had not written letters to each other. I told him if they had I didn't know it. He was very anxious, as it seemed to me, to get something upon Mr. Garland. He asked who was Mr. Young's stenographer, and I told him I didn't know he had any. He asked further a great many questions about it. He hadn't been talking to me more than 15 minutes before I made up my mind that he was a detective, and I verified the fact by learning that he was one of Pinkerton's detectives. I don't know who employed him. As soon as I had made up my mind that he was a detective I talked very freely to him, and I didn't confine myself at all to facts, either, in talking to him; I told him a great many things that were just buncombe; I tried to hide anything I might have said or might know in the matter. In the statement that was published in the World there is a great deal of matter that was given to me by other persons, and I, of course, made some mistakes in it. I know it is said there that Senator Vance had some stock in the company; I find he did not have it, but I was so informed by some one.

Q. By whom?—A. I decline to say who it was. It was said that Mr. Garland was at a meeting at 1327 C street. I stated in my letter to Col. Dana that I did not know that to be a fact; I was informed that he was there; I do not know that it was a fact.

Q. By whom were you so informed?—A. I decline to answer. I am not going to involve anybody else in what I have to say. Those statements were incorrect. The general history of the Pan-Electric Company, I believe, as I give it, has been substantially proven by the testimony of all the parties that have been here. Part of the information I got by writing for Col. Young. I didn't think there was anything improper in it, because I really thought it was due to him and his associates to have a correct statement made. Part of that information I got from other parties. That is the history of my connection with it. I haven't known anything about it since July, 1884, I think. I haven't been in Col. Young's company or in the company of any member of the organization. The subpoena that came to me was a subpoena duces tecum, to bring papers and letters in regard to the Pan-Electric Telephone Company and the Bell Telephone Company. I haven't a letter from any member of the Pan Electric Telephone Company, except, perhaps, personal letters from Col. Young written years before the company was organized. I don't know by sight any member of the Bell Telephone Company or any stockholder in it, that I know of. I never had any communication with any person connected with the Bell Telephone Company in my life, that I know of, and never spoke to one of them that I know of.

Q. You say that your purpose in compiling the article known as the history of the company and in giving the information that you gave to Major Clark was that no misrepresentation or injustice might be done to the company?—A. As far as I was concerned that was my principal object. I knew the facts and I knew they would be twisted and tortured a great many ways, politically and otherwise, and I thought I would put them out properly.

Q. Were you in accord with those gentlemen in politics?—A. I am on good personal relations with Colonel Young and with Mr. Garland; I have had any ill opinion or bad feeling towards either of them. I am not in accord with them in politics. I am a Republican in politics.

Q. You have stated that you were satisfied that attacks were going to be made on them for political purposes?—A. I thought so, sir.

Q. When you prepared that statement known as the history, did you submit it to either of those gentlemen?—A. I did not, sir.

Q. Or did you inform them of your purpose to defend them and see that no injustice was done to them?—A. I did not.

Q. You say you had seen articles in the New Orleans Times-Democrat concerning them before you mentioned to Major Clark the information that you had?—A. For several days, probably weeks, before.

Q. Were they of a hostile character?—A. I don't recollect now what they were.

Q. Were they hostile to the Pan-Electric company or the Pan-Electric Telephone Company?—A. I think some of them were. I think they were in the interest of the National Improved Telephone Company, and attacking the Bell company to some extent.

Q. The Times-Democrat is a Democratic paper, is it not?—A. Yes.

Q. And you went to Major Clark, the correspondent of a Republican paper, to save these gentlemen from an attack which you regarded as a political attack?—A. I will tell you how that was, Mr. Chairman. I think on the 10th of March, 1885, an article was sent from here as to Mr. Garland's personal character. That was written by me, and it is as complimentary to him as anything that has ever been printed in any paper. They came to me, as a great many correspondents do—as I am on very good personal relations with them—Major Clark of the Tribune asked me to write that article about Mr. Garland because I knew him and had known him from boyhood. I will say it, it is a very complimentary article to him, and the Tribune published it just as I wrote it.

Q. Was it true?—A. It was, so far as I know. There is not a breath against Mr. Augustus H. Garland of any sort in his home. He is, as I stated in that article, a man that is thoroughly in earnest so far as I know, and has always been so regarded; he is a man of high reputation as a lawyer; but, as I think I said in that article, like all politicians he would work for success; I think I stated that in the letter.

Q. Where did you write the article known as the history, published in the World?—A. Partly at home and partly in the office occupied by myself and Mr. Sypher.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not know whether that history has gone into the record or not.

The WITNESS. I wrote it partly at my house and partly at the office occupied by myself and General Sypher.

Q. At whose suggestion did you do that?—A. I don't know, sir, that I did it at any one's suggestion. I talked to General Sypher about it; I don't know whether it was at his suggestion or not.

Q. Did you hear his testimony?—A. I did not.

Q. Have you read it?—A. I have not, except the report in the newspapers.

Q. Did he not suggest the writing of that article by you?—A. As I say, I don't recollect whether it was a suggestion of his or mine that I should write it; I am not positive about that.

Q. Did you not write that article and furnish a copy of it to different newspapers in New York for publication?—A. No, sir; I wrote that article, and Mr. Sypher took a copy of it and sent it, as he tells me, to Prof. Bell, probably a month after that. I am certain it was a month or more.

Q. After you had written it?—A. After I had written it.

Q. I mean sent it to Prof. Bell?—A. No, no; I don't know when he sent it to Prof. Bell; I don't recollect. I say perhaps a month after that—I think it was more than a month—there was an interview with Col. Robert Alexander published in the Globe-Democrat; the record will show what date it was. I then sent my article to Mr. Dana. I first carried it to Colonel Alexander and asked him to introduce me to the correspondent of the Globe-Democrat; and I asked him if he wanted to publish it, and he said he did not. I then sent it to Mr. Dana at the date he spoke of. I am satisfied that that was published two or three months after the article was written; I am not positive as to the date.

Q. Did you not sell that article to Mr. Crawford, the correspondent of the World?—A. When he took the article he paid me for it.

Q. How much did he pay you?—A. I think about eighty dollars.

Q. Was it not your object when you compiled that article to sell it to the newspapers for money, to make money out of it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Instead of a mere act of friendship to guard these Democratic officials from political attack?—A. No, I was not regarding them as Democratic officials. I want you to understand that; I was regarding them in a different light. Only two of them were officials and some of them were my friends. I did not write it originally for publication, I will say that positively and without any hesitation; I did not write it for publication at all; I wrote it with an entirely different intention.

Q. What was that?—A. I think that is something neither you nor any one else has a right to inquire into; that is my opinion.

Q. You just wrote it?—A. I wrote it because I had an intention in writing it, but I did not write it for publication, and I state so most emphatically. It was not published for months after I wrote it.

Q. If you wrote it for the purpose of bringing out the exact truth and shielding Mr. Garland and others from false representation, how did you expect to accomplish that by withholding it from publication?—A. I told you exactly how I accomplished it. When he was attacked in the Globe-Democrat in the interview with Mr. Alexander, which I have been informed, although I don't know it, has been printed in circulars and sent out, I then offered my papers for publication and not until then.

Q. Where is the Globe-Democrat published?—A. In Saint Louis.

Q. Have you the article?—A. I have not; I never even read it; I was told what was in it by Colonel Alexander himself.

Q. What did it relate to?—A. It related to Colonel Alexander's own connection with the telephone company and gave some statements in regard to what had occurred.

Q. About that branch company in Missouri?—A. I don't recollect positively; I paid very little attention to it at the time.

Q. If you never read the article, and relied upon Colonel Alexander's statement to you as to its contents, will you please give that statement or the points in it which you considered untrue?—A. I couldn't possibly do it at this length of time.

Q. Was there anything in that statement which you considered untrue?—A. I don't mean to say anything in it was untrue, sir.

Q. Then why did it call out your publication, if there was no error to correct?—A. Well, sir, a thing might be an error and not be untrue; there is a great deal of difference.

Q. Will you point out anything of that character?—A. I don't recollect it, sir; if I had the article here possibly I might do so. I recollect that Colonel Alexander and I talked about it at the time. He came to my office and told me about it, and he told me afterwards that it had been printed as a circular, I think, by the Bell Telephone Company, and it was then I started out to publish that history, not until then.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. In order to vindicate the Pan-Electric Company?—A. I don't see anything in the history that I wrote about the Pan-Electric Company that reflects in the least bit upon any of the gentlemen.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. What was there in Alexander's interview or statement that you thought was damaging?—A. I stated, Mr. Chairman, that I don't recollect at this time, because I had other things to attend to, and paid very little attention to it.

Q. You do not remember what he stated that was erroneous or false or unjust to these men?—A. I wouldn't say that he stated anything that was false in that interview.

Q. Or anything that was unjust?—A. I think possibly that he did them some injustice, though I don't recollect.

Q. The matter did not fasten itself upon your memory so that you have been able to carry it up to this time?—A. No, sir; because it was a matter of very little importance to me.

Q. And you have never read the article?—A. I glanced over it. I never read it.

Q. Yet it was of sufficient importance to induce you to give to the public the history you had written?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which you say you had written for the purpose of vindicating Garland and the others?—A. I didn't say it was written entirely for vindication. I said it was written to correct any false statements that might have been made.

Q. If no false statements had been made, and, as you have just stated, you did not intend it for publication, why was it that you gave it to the public by selling it to the newspapers?—A. Well, I saw that erroneous statements were being published, and I meant to characterize them as false, and I thought mine was a correct statement of the facts that did not do injustice to any one, and I therefore gave it to a newspaper.

Q. You say you did not intend it for publication when you compiled it?—A. I did not originally intend it for publication.

Q. Yet you furnished Sypher with a copy of it, and permitted him to send a copy to Professor Bell?—A. It was written in his office and at my house. After he and I had talked over the matter, he took a copy of it, and said: "I will send a copy of this to Professor Bell."

Q. Did you think that was keeping it very closely from the public?—A. I didn't suppose Professor Bell would publish it. If he has done so, I don't know it.

Q. Was he put under any obligation not to do so?—A. I presume he was; I don't know. I never saw Professor Bell in my life. I wouldn't know him if I was to meet him.

Q. You knew him as the inventor of the Bell telephone?—A. Yes, sir; I know him in that way, of course.

Q. You did not intend the article for publication, and yet you permitted a copy of it be furnished him without prohibiting him from publishing it?—A. I did; I let him do with that copy as he pleased.

Q. Did you offer to sell that history to Major Clark before you disposed of it to the correspondent of the World?—A. I don't recollect that I ever did; possibly I might have said to him that if he wanted it he could have it.

Q. When you sent it to Mr. Dana for publication, did you ask to be paid for it?—A. My letter says, if he thinks it worth publication, he can inclose me a check for whatever it is worth, and if not, he can give it to the office cat. I corresponded a great deal for the New York Sun, and never put a price upon an article I sent them. I would send to Mr. Dana personally, and he paid what he thought they were worth.

Q. You say that you obtained the information which that article contains from your familiarity with the affairs of the company through Colonel Young, and from what you learned in the newspapers?—A. Yes, sir; and from other sources.

Q. When you were writing for Colonel Young and working for him on the affairs of the company, was not your relation a confidential one to him in that matter?—A. Well, I don't know, sir; the books were there in the presence of a thousand people; his rooms were always crowded; there were great numbers of people in there; I saw those books and saw them open and lying on the table there.

Q. Did you ever exhibit any of the books of Colonel Young to any other persons for publication?—A. I never handled the books of Colonel Young after he left here at the close of the last Congress.

Q. Did you ever at any time show any book or books of his to Mr. Crawford, the correspondent of the World?—A. In making out the accounts of Colonel Young as secretary and treasurer of the company, the first statement I made was found to be incorrect, and I made a second one, which was a correct account-current of himself with the company; and in his moving away and in my taking the things of mine that were in his office, that was accidentally included among my things. I didn't know it was there until in moving a desk where my things were kept in Colonel Meyer's office, I having left that office, that paper was thrown out and I saw it there; up to that time I didn't know it was there. The mistake occurred of its getting among my papers just as the mistake occurred of some of my papers going off with Colonel Young.

Q. Do you know anything of a stenographer's book of letters belonging to Col. Young?—A. I never saw such a book.

Q. You never saw it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever show any of the books of Col. Young connected with either of these companies to Mr. Sypher, or have them at your desk in his office?—A. I didn't have any of his books.

Q. You never exhibited any there?—A. No, sir.

Q. You never had any of them there?—A. No, sir.

Q. What suggestions did Sypher make to you about the compilation of that article called the history?—A. I couldn't tell that, sir; I can't recollect.

Q. Do you decline to state that?—A. I do not decline. I say I can't recollect it; I do not recollect what suggestions he made.

Q. Did not he call your attention to some statements made in the newspapers and talk it over with you and suggest to you that you compile a history, as you were a newspaper man and sometimes correspond with the papers, and that you might make some money out of it?—A. I don't recollect that he ever said anything of that sort, sir. General Sypher and I occupied adjoining desks in an office together, and we talked together a great deal. I cannot pretend to recollect our conversations.

Q. Then you do not deny that he suggested to you you might make some money out of it?—A. He possibly may have said such a thing. I don't recollect whether he ever did or not.

Q. If he did, did you tell him you would not write an article of that character for publication or to make any money out of it?—A. I don't think he ever did; and I know, as I have stated before, that I did not originally write the article for publication, and only intended to publish it, as I stated before, whenever I thought a proper time might arise for its publication. I did not originally write it for publication or with the intention of selling it for money. I wrote it because I had the facts. I took a little pains to gather those I did not know, and I put them all together and wrote up that history. I have got a good many such papers written now that have never been published.

Q. Did you not write other articles upon the same subject or parts of that same subject and offer them to the newspapers also for publication?—A. I think not, sir. I don't think I ever wrote another article except the first part of the one in the Tribune and this one in the World. I don't recollect ever having written another line on the subject.

Q. The one in the Tribune was the starting point, was it not?—A. It was not given to the Tribune as the starting point, because a number of other articles had been printed before, which made me write that. There were two or three newspaper reporters, so I was informed, looking up the history of the Pan-Electric company, and I gave that to Mr. Clark after writing it, and told him to hold it and not publish it until he found some other newspaper was going to print something about it and then he could print it.

Q. Were you ever present with Col. Young when he was having any conferences with any of his associates or any of the lawyers in reference to this matter?—A. I don't think I ever was, sir. I have been in Col. Young's room when he was talking with these gentlemen, but whenever I noticed they commenced talking about the business of the Pan-Electric company I left the room as a rule, sir. I have not been in Col. Casey Young's company half a dozen times since July, 1884, except casually meeting him on the street.

Q. How often were you in his company before that time?—A. Well, I was in his room all winter, the previous winter.

Q. That was when you were writing for him?—A. I was not writing for him especially. I was there in his room and whenever he wanted any writing done he thought I could do well he asked me to do it.

Q. Did he pay you for working for him?—A. Never. I have gotten money from Colonel Young. If I wanted $5 or $10 I asked him for it and he would give it to me. He never paid me any money as an employé for writing for him. There was no relationship between us such as clerk and principal or hireling and master.

Q. You mean you did no work for him for an agreed sum?—A. For any sum.

Q. But you did work for him and then asked him for money and he would give you money?—A. No, sir; I didn't do it with that idea. I did whatever friendly act Colonel Young asked me to do for him; and if I happened to be short of money and wanted a little, I would ask him for it. I usually had money, but sometimes I might want a dollar or two or five dollars, and if I was short of money I would ask the Colonel for it and he would give it to me.

Q. How often would you get short?—A. I don't know. I was getting a pretty good income at the time.

Q. What business were you engaged in then?—A. I was an attorney, sir.

Q. Did you practice before Congress or its committees?—A. Yes, sir; I had business before Congress and in the departments.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. I see in your letter to Mr. Dana, of the New York Sun, dated Washington, D. C., November 9, 1885, and found on page 867 of the record, you say the inclosed article is all true within your personal knowledge, except the part which relates to Mr. Garland.—A. I will not swear to that, sir. I said that in the letter. I could not without reading the article speak as to my personal knowledge. I could select from my personal knowledge what was in it and what I obtained from others. It was true as far as I know. I could not say upon oath that all that article is true.

Q. You came from Arkansas, did you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that your native place?—A. Well, sir, it is pretty near it. I have lived there since I was ten years old.

Q. In what part of the State?—A. In the southern part of the State, at Camden.

Q. Did you know Senator Garland before he came to Congress?—A. I have known him ever since we were boys, sir. His father was judge of the same circuit in which I lived.

Q. What is about your age?—A. My age is fifty-five.

Q. Are you and he about the same age?—A. I think we are about the same age, sir.

Q. When did you come to Washington?—A. In December, 1875.

Q. You have lived here ever since?—A. Yes.

Q. When did you first know Casey Young?—A. I don't recollect when I first got acquainted with Colonel Young. It was a great number of years ago. I think I met him in Memphis; in fact, I know I did, probably as far back as 1866 or 1867, or somewhere along there. I am not positive as to the time. Perhaps Colonel Young knows. It was about that time. I have known him since that time.

Q. On what terms have you been with him?—A. Very excellent terms, sir; intimate for a number of years.

Q. What sort of personal relations have you had with him in the last three or four years?—A. The most friendly, sir.

Q. When this Pan-Electric scheme was started, what was your first knowledge of it?—A. Some time in November, 1883, I think was the first that I ever knew of it.

Q. How did you learn of it then?—A. I learned of it from Colonel Young.

Q. What did you learn of it?—A. I learned that there was such a company, that was all; that there was a company started on Harris Rogers's patents; and he told me who was in it.

Q. Whom did he say was in it?—A. I think he said Mr. Garland, Mr. Atkins, Senator Harris and himself, and General Johnston, with the Rogerses, were the company.

Q. That was in 1883?—A. I think that was in November, 1883, or December, perhaps. It was at the organization of the last Congress.

Q. How did he happen to mention it to you?—A. I don't know how he came to mention it. I was at his room a good deal, and he told me about those things.

Q. From that time on how much were you with him until you wrote this article?—A. Well, after February, 1884, my wife being in Baltimore, I was at his room pretty much all the time. We generally took breakfast together. When he was not boarding at the Ebbitt House we went to a restaurant together. Sometimes I slept at his room and sometimes I went home and slept. Col. Young always liked to have me at his room late at night. He didn't like to be alone at night; and when other people went away from there I would often stay with him until it was too late to go home, 11 or 12 o'clock at night. I sometimes stayed and played casino with him just for our own amusement, not for money; and I used to be with him in that way, and in fact I got in the habit of staying at his room a good deal, and was there until the adjournment of the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress.

Q. Was that the room where the office of the company was of which he was the secretary and treasurer, or was it his private room?—A. It was his private room, but I think the company held most of their meetings in those rooms.

Q. Were you often at the room where he kept his books, or were they kept in his private room?—A. His books were kept in the front parlor of his suite.

Q. During all that time were you in the habit of talking over this Pan-Electric matter?—A. I have talked a good deal with him about it, sir.

Q. Do you know anything of his correspondence?—A. No, sir. He had a clerk who did his correspondence.

Q. Who was he?—A. I forget his name. He was a little clerk of his committee. Colonel Young was the chairman of a committee of the House at the time, and this was his committee clerk. He was a youngster, about nineteen years old. I have really forgotten the name.

Q. Do you know where he is now?—A. I do not, sir.

Q. Did he write his letters for him?—A. Colonel Young dictated the letters to him.

Q. Were they written in shorthand?—A. No, sir; he wrote in longhand, but he wrote very rapidly.

Q. Did he keep a letter book?—A. I do not know that he did, sir. If he did I never saw it.

Q. Did you have access to his books?

The WITNESS. What books do you mean?

Mr. RANNEY. The books of the company.

A. Yes, sir; I had access to them whenever I wanted to. Whenever I was asked to I took them and did whatever I was asked to do about them. They were lying in the room there.

Q. What were you asked to do about them?—A. I was asked at different times to do certain work; to make up certain things about those books, and I did it.

Q. I see in this letter you say something about meeting at 1327 G street. What meeting do you refer to there?—A. The history speaks of a meeting or conference at the rooms at 1327 G street. That history said that Mr. Garland was at that meeting. I wanted to say that I did not state that upon my own knowledge, for I did not know it.

Q. What rooms were those at 1327 G street?—A. They were Col. Young's rooms at the time he was here.

Q. He came here and stopped at the Ebbitt House on his arrival on Saturday night July 30?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And stayed there a day or two and then took a room elsewhere, did he?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. Do you speak of your own knowledge?—A. No, sir; I am not speaking of my own knowledge, for I do not know. I said in that letter I did not know. That information was furnished me.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. I allude to that as the time.—A. Yes, sir; that was the time.

Q. Were you at that room?—A. No, sir; I never was at that room.

Q. How do you know of that meeting?—A. I do not know of it, except what was brought me by another person. It was told me by another person.

Q. Who was that person?—A. I decline to answer that question.

Q. If there is any person who knows of there being a meeting at that place, I would like to have you state who he is?—A. Well, sir, the person that informed me did it in such a way that I do not feel at liberty to give his name.

Q. Was it a man or a woman?—A. It was a man, sir.

Mr. EDEN. What information was it?

Mr. RANNEY. Information of a meeting at 1327 G street. (To the witness.) I think you should give us that name.

The WITNESS. Well, sir, you may think so. I don't think so.

Q. Was that room on G street near the Catholic church?—A. 1327 is near the Episcopal church.

Q. Harris Rogers testified to a meeting there to which he was invited. Was that the meeting?—A. I suppose that was the meeting.

Q. Did you learn it from Harris Rogers?—A. I did not, sir.

Q. Did you learn it from Dr. Rogers?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you learn it from Casey Young?—A. I did not.

Q. From whom did you learn it?—A. I decline to answer.

Q. Why?—A. Simply because a gentleman told me, and I do not want to bring his name before the committee. That is the only reason in the world. A gentleman gave me the information who is not connected with the Pan-Electric Telephone Company in any way, shape, manner, or form.

Q. When did he give it to you?—A. About the time it occurred.

Q. You say here that Mr. Garland attended that meeting?—A. That gentleman told me so. I said I did not know whether it was true or not.

Q. Was that house kept by Mrs. Ryan?—A. I don't know, sir.

Mr. HALL. This testimony is not competent.

Mr. RANNEY. It is a search for information. We have to search under difficulties sometimes.

Mr. HALL. I do not think the testimony is proper to be retained on the record.

Mr. RANNEY. It is already in another form.

Q. Did not Mrs. Ryan keep that house?—A. I don't know. I haven't the slightest idea.

Q. Have you ever told any one you could get an affidavit that Mr. Garland came over there?—A. As I say, a gentleman gave me these facts, and he said he could get it.

Q. Get what?—A. He said he could get that affidavit.

Mr. HALL. I object to going into that, Mr. Chairman.

Q. Why can you not give us that man's name? Does he live here in Washington?—A. I decline to answer any questions.

Mr. EDEN. Was that statement with reference to a meeting of the Pan-Electric Association?

The WITNESS. It was in relation to a meeting as alleged between Col. Young, Mr. Van Benthuyzen, Mr. Huntington, and perhaps Bradley T. Johnson, at which it was said Mr. Garland was present.

Mr. OATES (in the chair). Do you insist on your objection?

Mr. HALL. I insist on it.

Mr. RANNEY. It has been testified to and is already in the case.

Mr. HALL. Nobody has testified to it that I know of.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not ask these questions in the way of proof.

Mr. HALL. I know; but you have brought it out in such a way that many people would take it as testimony.

Mr. RANNEY. We cannot assume that everybody is a fool.

Mr. HALL. We can assume one thing, that only competent evidence should be called for.

Mr. OATES. You direct your objection towards that part of the testimony of the witness in which he refers to what he was told?

Mr. HALL. I object to that part of his testimony in which he narrates what this unknown, unattainable individual told him.

Mr. OATES. That Mrs. Ryan would give an affidavit that Mr. Garland was there.

Q. Was it told to you in confidence?

Mr. EDEN. I object to hearsay evidence.

Mr. OATES (in the chair). Let us pass on this point. [To Mr. Ranney.] Do you insist on having the testimony of the witness on this point?

Mr. RANNEY. Not as proving the fact.

Mr. OATES. Then we had better strike it out?

Mr. RANNEY. No; he has already stated in his examination, as he stated in his letter, that what he said was hearsay and not of his personal knowledge. That fact is to be taken in connection with the rest.

Mr. OATES. In connection with his letter?

Mr. RANNEY. Certainly.

Mr. HALL. If Judge Ranney will go on and ask him all about what this unknown man said—

Mr. OATES. He is examining him on a letter.

Mr. HALL. There is nothing in that letter.

Mr. RANNEY. He says in his letter, "Every allegation in this article except the one that Mr. Garland attended the meeting at 1327 G street is of my own knowledge."

Mr. HALL. He says it is not of his own knowledge.

The WITNESS. The letter says so, and I say so.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Ranney insists upon asking this witness what this unknown individual told him, and I object.

Mr. RANNEY. That already appears. I am not putting it in anew.

Mr. HALL. I do not think it does appear.

Q. Why cannot you tell us who that man was?—A. I have told you why.

Q. Why?—A. Because it was given to me in confidence, and I don't intend to tell.

Q. Was it Mr. Sypher?—A. No, sir, it was not Mr. Sypher, and I shall not answer any more questions of that kind. I simply say it was not Mr. Sypher. I decline positively to give that man's name.

Mr. RANNEY. I think the witness is obliged to give us the name of that man.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. What is your reason for declining?—A. Because it was given to me in confidence and I do not care to tell it. The gentleman don't want it known that he told it to me, and I have said I would not give it. I said in my letter to Mr. Dana, and I have testified under oath that I did not know anything about that meeting myself; and therefore why should I be called upon to give that man's name? I said that in my letter to Mr. Dana.

Mr. OATES. I do not know of any confidential communication that will relieve a witness from the necessity of answering except such confidential communications as those between attorney and client and husband and wife. A gentleman who makes a communication in a confidential way to another as to some fact I do not think has a right to have his name held sacred.

Mr. HALL. May I be allowed to interrupt Judge Ranney's examination long enough to put one or two inquiries in the same line?

Mr. RANNEY. I am now asking for the ruling of the chairman.

Mr. HALL. I would like to make a preliminary examination which will have relation to the ruling. I do not want to interrupt your examination, but this is a question addressed to the committee, and it is proper I should do so.

Mr. RANNEY. The witness has stated his reason why he will not answer, and I think the chairman should rule on it.

Mr. HALL. I am simply going to make an inquiry in the same direction.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. Was this individual whom you say communicated this information to you in your employ?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or were you in his?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know whether he was acting as the employé of any other person or corporation?—A. I know he was not acting as the the employé of any person.

Q. Did he come to you and communicate this information in order to enable you to proceed with your history?—A. Partly that; I asked him about it and he gave it to me.

Q. Then he knew that you were interested in some way in knowing what was going on?—A. He knew I was writing this thing.

Q. Then he knew you were interested in knowing what was going on?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In obtaining the information, or in becoming cognizant of it, did he act for your benefit and at your suggestion?—A. I think not, sir. I think he obtained the information accidentally, and gave it to me, if he had any such information.

Q. But prior to that time he knew what you were doing?—A. He knew I was writing a history of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company.

Q. Did he receive any pay for his information?—A. Not a cent, sir.

Q. Then there was no other relationship between you and him except that of mere personal acquaintanceship?—A. Mere personal acquaintanceship.

Q. He was under no obligation to give you this information?—A. None in the world.

Q. And you were under no obligation to take it?—A. No, sir; he was under no obligation to give it to me.

Q. Did you say this lady's name was Ryan?—A. I don't know her name, sir.

Q. Then your answer to Judge Ranney's question where that name was used was scarcely correct, was it?—A. I said I didn't know her name.

Mr. MOFFATT. He told Judge Ranney so.

Mr. HALL. I did not understand it so.

Q. Then it is an unknown man or an unknown woman?—A. The woman lives in that house, of course. I don't know anything about her.

Mr. OATES (in the chair). It is the opinion of the chair that there is no such confidential relation shown between you and your informant as would make the communication sacred or protect it by law from the knowledge of the committee. It is about a matter that is clearly within the scope of our inquiry as directed by the House in the resolution creating this committee; and the chair therefore decides that you must disclose the name of your informant.

The WITNESS. I think, Mr. Chairman, that it is a matter that is entirely within my own determination as to whether it is a matter that is confidential; but if you press the matter, it was given to me in my law office, and I am an attorney licensed by the Supreme Court of the United States, and therefore I could say that that man was my client, and that you could not get that information from me. He was coming to me. I am not certain whether I suggested it to him before the first visit or not, that he get me the information, but I think he came and gave it to me first, and then I asked him afterwards to go and get further information, and he came and gave it to me in my law office. I cannot answer the question.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. Was that about any suit that you had or any legal business that you had for him?—A. No, sir; but I shall decline to answer the question. I cannot help the ruling of the chair.

Q. You say you are a lawyer. Do you not know that unless a communication is made to you in the confidential relation of attorney and client concerning some matter of suit, or of a legal nature, that it does not fall within the rule?—A. I know this communication was made to me in a confidential way, and that I cannot violate that confidence.

Mr. OATES. I will take the opinion of the committee on it.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. Let me ask a further question. You were not the attorney of the Bell Telephone Company?—A. I have never been the attorney of the Bell Telephone Company.

Q. And you do not regard this communication as having come to you in the interests of that company?—A. I do not, sir; because I never had the slightest communication with the Bell Telephone Company that I know of.

Mr. OATES. Here is a charge made against the Attorney-General that he was at a meeting and in conference with gentlemen connected with other telephone companies, with reference to their affairs and with reference to bringing a suit. You say that fact was communicated to you by a person who said he knew it and could furnish an affidavit of the fact. If the Attorney-General was there in that conference it is a matter of the highest importance that it should be known, and is clearly within the scope of the inquiry.

Mr. HALL. This witness has made the public charge in the press.

The WITNESS. I have withdrawn that. Before you go any further, allow me to say this: That the Attorney-General, if he were present at that meeting, would so state. He has been before your committee. The other gentlemen that were present at that meeting, if there was such a meeting (and I don't know that there was), would state the fact, and whether the Attorney-General was present. They are all gentlemen whose word could be taken, let alone their oath.

Mr. OATES. That is not the question now. Mr. Clerk will you call the names of the committee. All those who are of the opinion that the witness should answer the question and disclose the name of his informant, will say ay when their names are called. Those opposed will say no.

The clerk called the roll, and all the members present, as follows, voted ay: Mr. Eden, Mr. Hall, Mr. Oates, Mr. Ranney, Mr. Moffatt.

Mr. OATES (in the chair). You have the opinion of the committee.

The WITNESS. I still decline to answer the question.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. I would like to ask you this: Was there anything dishonorable in this man's conduct?—A. No, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. That will not do.

Mr. OATES. The question is settled. We will have to go to the House with it.

Mr. RANNEY. I move that the witness be presented to the House for contempt.

Mr. HALL. I thought possibly we might obviate such a course.

Mr. RANNEY. We can deal with this matter.

Mr. OATES. It was held in the case of Kilbourn and Thompson that where the question asked was within the scope of the inquiry it was proper for the committee to deal with the witness, but where it was not, it was not proper. I think this question is clearly within the scope of the inquiry, but the committee had better be careful about it.

Mr. HALL. I suggest this, in order to save time: That perhaps the gentleman in question will give permission.

Mr. OATES. He says he declines.

Mr. HALL. Are you willing to answer if the party involved will authorize you to do so?

The WITNESS. I am willing, if he will authorize me to answer.

Mr. HALL. Have you made any inquiry of him?

The WITNESS. I have not.

Mr. HALL. I suggest that action on this matter be suspended long enough to let the witness ascertain whether the party involved will permit his name to be given.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not think we ought to qualify our position. I think we had better go on and try the power of the committee. We will not act on it now. We will leave that question for the present.

Mr. HALL. I move that the witness be directed to ascertain whether upon further consideration he will answer the question, and that he be given until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

Mr. OATES. The chair would suggest that at any time up to the final action taken by the committee to compel him, he would have the opportunity of doing that, if he sees proper. It does not require a vote.

The WITNESS. Will you allow me to ask you to suspend until to-morrow? I have been confined at home by sickness for twenty-odd days. I came here early this morning and have been kept until there were several other witnesses examined. I am very weak and was so exhausted before I commenced that I had to lie down for some time. I am now covered with perspiration and utterly exhausted.

Mr. OATES. Let him go until to-morrow.

The WITNESS. At what hour?

Mr. EDEN. We had better meet at 12, had we not?

Mr. OATES. The House meets at 11.

Mr. HALL. We had better meet at 12.

Mr. OATES. Then you can be excused until 12 o'clock to-morrow, and at that time, if you see fit to answer the question, you can do so.

The witness then left the stand.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. Is the committee through with the books and papers I brought here?

Mr. OATES. So far as I know, they are.

Mr. MOFFATT. I want to ask you one or two questions in regard to the organization of the Illinois Company, brought out by what we have found on the books, and not referred to in your testimony. That matter was overlooked.

Mr. YOUNG. I think I can answer without the book. If not I can bring it back.

Mr. OATES. You may take your books. (To the committee.) Before Mr. Boyle went away he handed me certain papers, which I will lay before the committee. The first is a letter as follows:

BOSTON, May 6, 1886.

HON. CHARLES E. BOYLE,

Chairman Committee on Telephone Matters, Washington, D. C.:

SIR: I find in the Boston Journal of the 6th inst. a dispatch which says that Mr. George Jones, of the New York Times, in his examination before your committee, makes the following statement:

"Mr. Forbes had written to him that his son was a large owner in the Bell Telephone Company, and urging him to write to the President of the United States to interfere on behalf of his patent."

Upon examining a copy of the letter referred to I find that this testimony does not fairly represent its purport or object, which doubtless was owing to the unfortunate loss of the letter.

To correct this mistake, the shortest way seems to be to send you another copy, which you may think it best to lay before your committee. Perhaps if Mr. Jones reads it once more he may think it a pity that he did not at the time follow its suggestions.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. M. FORBES.

I have here the copy which he desires to put in. I do not see any objection to it.

Mr. RANNEY. I understood that was already in evidence.

Mr. EDEN. It has already been put in, I think.

Mr. OATES. The stenographer will put in the letter of Mr. Forbes to Mr. Boyle and also the copy.

Mr. EDEN. It might be submitted to Mr. Jones; but I suppose it is not necessary.

Mr. OATES. He will see it; and if he thinks it needs any correction, he can say so. Mr. Forbes thinks this letter ought to be put in in justice to him, and I do not see any

Mr. RANNEY. We all agree about that. Mr. Forbes is a man of very high character.

Mr. EDEN. I have no objection.

The letter in question is as follows:

BOSTON, January —, 1886.

MY DEAR MR. JONES: By reason of my son's connection with the American Bell Telephone Company, I have become acquainted with some of the facts connected with the Pan-Electric Telephone Company's effort to have Attorney-General Garland authorize suits to be brought for vacating the Bell patents.

I learn from the managers of the Bell Telephone Company that they feel no anxiety as to the final results of any action taken by the Government in this matter, though admitting that much temporary annoyance might result on Garland's acquiescing in the request of his company.

Looking at it, however, from a wholly different point of view, that of the independent voters, and in fact of all who supported, and desire to support, Mr. Cleveland, it seems to me the Administration would make a serious mistake if Garland's Department is permitted to lend any countenance to the scheme proposed by the company in which he is so largely interested.

There is no doubt that all the matter contained in the claims which it is proposed that the United States should set up have already been heard and decided in the circuit courts of the United States, and these cases are well advanced for hearing on appeal to the Supreme Court. There is no doubt that the new move was made simply in the hope of obtaining indefinite delay in the suits for injunction against the Pan-Electric Company, already ripe for hearing before the court at Baltimore, on the ground that no such suits should be heard while the Government suit was awaiting a hearing. There is equally no doubt that an attempt is being made by a syndicate of Southern brigadiers to use the influence of a Democratic Administration in the interest of an enterprise of, to say the least, a highly speculative character, and to throw the weight of the Government's power in the scale, before its own courts, on the side in which this Southern syndicate is interested.

There can be no doubt that Garland received an enormous bonus of stock of the Pan-Electric Company for the influence he was expected to exert.

The entire Republican press of the country will be only too glad to open on such a trail as this, and it seems to me of much importance that no such opportunity should be afforded them. Even were the procedure not a most unusual one, and had the claim not already been acted upon, and were there strong presumptive evidence in favor of the claims proposed to be set up, the fact that the Government's interference is invoked in behalf of a private enterprise of prominent Southerners, and that a member of Mr. Cleveland's Cabinet is counsel for, and one of the largest stockholders in the company interested, ought to show the extreme danger of permitting this thing to go a single step further.

I would give you, confidentially, the whole history of this scheme, which would make the basis of a dime novel and be pretty good reading, but you already know the substantial facts of the case.

If the Southern syndicate succeeds it will be a great step towards a new set of swindles, such as you exposed in the Tweed case, and will of course be the end of Cleveland's usefulness; he cannot escape the blame for endorsing what his Attorney-General does.

If you agree with me in this, I shall be glad if you can see your way clear, either by writing to some one who has Mr. Cleveland's ear, or possibly to Mr. Cleveland himself, or by using the power of your paper in such a way as to aid in preventing the President from permitting such a dangerous step as the one proposed to be taken.

And I am, very truly, yours,

J. M. FORBES.

Mr. RANNEY. I think we ought to do something about the report of the Attorney-General's testimony. I have compared it with the report of the other stenographer, and the official report is the worst mangled piece of stuff I ever saw.

Mr. OATES (in the chair). I was directed by Mr. Boyle to bring to the attention of the committee a matter already passed on, as to the subpoenaing of Mr. Miller, the managing editor of the New York Times. I believe, on considering the matter the other day, I voted against it. Mr. Boyle's idea was that the committee ought to reconsider the action then taken and subpoena Mr. Miller.

Mr. RANNEY. On what points?

Mr. OATES. I suppose with reference to the course of the paper. I do not know what else. He seems to be the managing editor.

Mr. RANNEY. There is no question but what his paper has taken strong ground in favor of the Pan-Electric side of this issue, if we may designate it in that way.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Boyle also remarked that if the committee decided to subpoena Mr. Miller he thought they should also call Mr. Dickerson, as Mr. Miller would probably testify about Mr. Dickerson's coming there and wanting a communication published, as he is the gentleman referred to. Mr. Jones said he did not see him, but that he had been informed Mr. Dickerson had come there. The other day I voted against subpoenaing either of these gentlemen, because I did not deem it necessary.

Mr. RANNEY. There was no vote taken on it. Nobody moved to have Mr. Miller called.

Mr. OATES. And it was the same way as to Mr. Dickerson.

Mr. RANNEY. I suggested that if we did summon Miller we ought to summon Dickerson also, providing the testimony referred to him.

Mr. MOFFATT. I move that Miller and Dickerson be subpoenaed.

Mr. EDEN. I was never of the opinion that we would get much evidence from newspaper men, and I think so still.

Mr. OATES. I was not in favor of it the other day, but as Mr. Boyle has requested it, I bring the matter to the attention of the committee.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not oppose it, but I do not believe there will be anything got out of it.

Mr. MOFFATT. I do not make the motion with the expectation of developing much. I have always taken the position that if any member of the committee wanted a man summoned, he ought to be summoned.

Mr. OATES. I do not know about that being a safe rule. I believe we have pretty discreet men on this committee. To test the soundness of the rule, suppose we had a cranky man on the committee who wanted a thousand witnesses.

Mr. MOFFATT. That is outside of my premises.

Mr. EDEN. It seems to me the committee ought to agree on these matters.

Mr. MOFFATT. Oh, yes.

Mr. OATES. I will put the question.

Mr. RANNEY. If Mr. Boyle says expressly that he wants it done—

Mr. OATES. He only states that he thought it had better be done.

Mr. RANNEY. If Mr. Boyle thinks that it should be done, I will not object. I only say if Mr. Miller comes, Mr. Dickerson should come too.

The question as to the subpoenaing of Mr. Miller and Mr. Dickerson was then put and lost; and the committee thereupon adjourned until to-morrow, May 12, 1886, at 12 m.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Wednesday, May 12, 1886.

The committee was called to order at 12.35 p. m.

Mr. E. N. HILL again came before the committee, and his examination was continued, as follows:

By Mr. OATES (in the chair):

Q. In the paper produced by Prof. Bell, said to be a copy of that which you prepared and furnished to the World, is this paragraph:

"On the 29th of August Mr. Van Benthuyzen and Mr. C. P. Huntington, representing the lately defeated National Company, registered at the Ebbitt House in Washington. On the next day Col. Casey Young and Col. Gantt, representing the Pan Company, stopped at the same place, as did Mr. Bradley T. Johnson, the president of the local Pan Company in Baltimore. That these gentlemen were in consultation together is well known. On the 1st of September Col. Casey Young secured private apartments at 1327 G street, a most central locality, within two squares of the Ebbitt, Riggs, and Willard's. At these rooms a number of conferences were held amongst the parties named above, and among the callers upon Col. Young while these conferences were being held was Attorney-General Garland. Shortly after the conferences closed it was announced that the Attorney-General would soon start for a visit to his country place in Arkansas, and he did leave on August 27, burying himself in the woods away from all postal or telegraphic communication, and remaining there until the press of the country was glowing with comments upon the action of the Department of Justice."

Did you write that?—A. I wrote that, sir.

Q. You stated that Attorney-General Garland was one of the callers on Col. Young at these conferences. Was that a fact?—A. I do not know, sir. I stated yesterday to the committee that I had information from another person that Attorney-General Garland was a caller there, and I so stated in my letter to Mr. Dana, that I could not verify that fact.

Q. But you wrote it here, and it was published?—A. I wrote it, and it was published as information that was given to me, which I supposed to be true, sir; I do not know it to be true, and I haven't any personal knowledge of it; no one who writes for a paper—

Q. Who was that person?—A. That is the question that I declined to answer yesterday.

Q. Do you still decline to answer it?—A. I do, sir.

Mr. OATES. Very well; it is a matter then for the action of the committee hereafter.

The WITNESS. I wish to be distinctly understood that I decline to answer upon the ground that it was a confidential communication to me; that in writing for a newspaper, or any other purpose, confidential communications, I think, are always held sacred, and I could not give that person's name. I was so careful in writing Mr. Dana about the publication of that article that I stated that that was not within my personal knowledge.

Q. You claim, then, that this was communicated to you in confidence, and you will not give the name for that reason?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say you are a lawyer and have a license from the Supreme Court to practice?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As a lawyer, do you not know that that sort of communication is not privileged by any rule of law that ever was written in any book of authority?—A. I do not know, sir, whether it is or not. I have never examined that question of law. It has never come before me to examine it, and for that reason I have not examined it.

Q. What was it you said yesterday about your informant saying that some woman would make an affidavit he was there?—A. He said he would get an affidavit.

Q. What woman was that?—A. I don't recollect exactly what I said yesterday. He said he would get an affidavit.

Q. From whom?—A. I am not positive as to whether he said a woman or not. I don't recollect what I said yesterday. I am not positive about it. You must remember that this was some time ago.

Q. Did he say whose affidavit he could get?—A. I don't know that he did, sir. I am not positive that he did. These things happened some months ago, and I have not kept them in my mind.

Q. How did he say that he knew Garland was there?—A. Well, sir, I didn't inquire about that.

Q. But you put it as a fact in that communication?—A. Why, certainly, sir.

Q. Although you did not know whether it was true or not?—A. It was told to me by what I considered to be good authority. If you were to tell me, or any other gentleman was to tell me certain things had occurred, I should write it down as a fact.

Q. Have you seen that person and conferred with him to see whether he would give his consent for you to answer?—A. No, sir.

Q. You stated on yesterday if the person was willing you would answer the question.—A. I have not been able to see him yet, sir. I went from here directly home, and am barely able now to be here.

Q. Have you made any effort to see the person?—A. I did try to see the person. I probably shall see him to-day.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. How much did you see of Col. Young between the 30th of July, 1885, and the 7th of August, 1885. He seems to have arrived here on the 30th of July in the evening, and left, as he says, on the 7th of August?—A. I possibly may have met him two or three times, although I am not positive whether I did or not. If I met him at all it was just simply to shake hands with him.

Q. Did you know of the fact of his being in Washington, and likewise Mr. Van Benthuyssen, Mr. Huntington, Col. Gantt, and Mr. Von Briesen from New York?—A. Yes, sir; I know the fact that they were here by being at the Ebbitt House and seeing it on the register there. I think I met Colonel Young there. I am not positive about that.

Q. Did you know of their having conferences?—A. I was not in their room when they were having any conferences. I had nothing to do with it. I knew generally that they were consulting together. I did not know it as a personal matter.

Q. What did you see indicating it?—A. I was never in the room of any of the gentlemen. I did not see them in conference.

Q. But you saw them go into the room?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you see them come out?—A. I did not. I don't know what room it was.

Q. Did you take any special interest in it?—A. No; no special interest in it, sir.

Q. Had you any indication what they were here for?—A. I had no indication except a general knowledge of the fact that these gentlemen were organizing, which knowledge I obtained from the newspapers and from hearing other people talk.

Q. Did you know or hear of the fact that there were one or more conferences with the Attorney-General?—A. Only what I have already stated, sir; I was informed that the Attorney-General went to one of those meetings; I know nothing about it personally.

Q. Were you informed or did you know of the fact that there were conferences with the Attorney-General at his office?—A. I did not, sir, except what I might have seen in the newspapers.

Q. Was that noted in the papers?—A. I think so, sir.

Q. In what paper was that fact noted?—A. I do not know, sir; I read eight or ten papers every day. I think there was a notice, probably, in some of the papers that these gentlemen had called on the Attorney-General.

Q. You know something more about that transaction than you have stated, do you not?—A. I do not, sir, personally know anything more about it than I have told.

Q. You say you wrote this article giving a history of the Pan-Electric operation, in the interest and for the benefit of the people connected with it, Mr. Garland included?—A. That was the general idea, but there is no man, I don't care who he may be, that can tell altogether what motives may actuate him in doing a thing. There may be some motive that he don't even know himself. I have no doubt a great many gentlemen in Congress vote for a river and harbor appropriation, perhaps with an idea they are doing a proper thing, and possibly they might do it, without even acknowledging it to themselves, with an idea that it would help to re-elect them to Congress. There might have been such a motive lying back behind what I was doing. I couldn't explain it very well.

Q. Do you mean to intimate that the reason you have given to the committee as your reason for writing that history, to wit, that it was in the interest of Mr. Garland and others, may have been a mistaken statement as to your motive?—A. No, sir; I do not mean to intimate that, but I mean there may have been some other motive that actuated me at the time, though I did not even recognize it myself.

Q. What do you imagine it might have been?—A. I couldn't imagine, for if I could I would have known it was a motive.

Q. It was not money?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not get enough from Mr. Crawford, of the World, to pay you a day's wages hardly for what you did for him, did you?—A. Oh, I don't know, sir. There are about three columns of the article in the World, and Mr. Crawford paid me, I think, $85 or $90. I usually get $20 or $25 a column for my writing.

Q. Is that your estimate of the value of your genius in writing such reports?—A. I usually get about $25; from $15 to $25 usually, from the newspapers.

Q. You have been in the habit of writing a good deal, have you not?—A. I have written a good deal for the newspapers, and that is what I get when I get anything. I write a great deal gratuitously, I desire to say.

Q. You wrote in the interests of your friends?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the party?—A. Yes, sir; and my party.

Q. Did you take pains to go to your life long friend, Attorney-General Garland, on this matter, to ascertain the truth of what you had written?—A. No, sir.

Q. After he came back?—A. No, sir; I did not. I have not seen Attorney-General Garland, sir, since that article was written, and I have not seen him since he became Attorney-General but twice, and I called on business on each of those times. I have seen him once or twice on the street since.

Q. Can you tell the source of any other information that you imparted in this history, omitting for the present what your unknown friend told you; can you tell the source of one single fact as to which inquiry has been made?

The WITNESS. May I see a copy of the history?

Mr. RANNEY. It is on page 772 of the record.

The WITNESS (after examining the article). I can answer that question now. Most of this information I did not have from my knowledge of the affairs of the company. I got out of the newspapers, generally.

Q. Did you get any of it from Gen. Sypher?—A. Gen. Sypher and I talked over those matters a good deal, and I don't know but what he handed me newspapers with some information in them. You will have to excuse me from talking any louder. I am afraid you don't hear me, but I am very weak.

Q. I hear you better than you do me, I think. Don't you know anything more about this matter?

The WITNESS. In regard to what?

Mr. RANNEY. Anything connected with this company. We are not presumed to know anything about it, except by inquiry.

A. Well, sir, I think I have told in that history everything that I knew of my own knowledge, and what I had collected from others. I think I have told it all.

Q. Do you know Marcus J. Wright, in the War Department?—A. I do, sir; very well.

Q. Did he have anything to say to you about it?—A. I have talked with him frequently about it.

Q. He is the man who has charge of the compilation of the Confederate records?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you talk to him about it before you wrote that article?—A. Oh, yes, sir; because I met Gen. Wright very often and we frequently talked about this matter; about his interest in the Pan-Electric Telephone Company.

Q. Do you know how much stock he held?—A. I think he had $30,000 at one time. He gave me a thousand of it, or loaned it to me once, and I used it.

Q. He loaned you the certificate?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To raise money on?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much did you raise on it?—A. Well, Mr. Ranney, is that a competent question?

Q. How did you raise money on it?—A. I sold it, sir, to a party who was buying the stock.

Q. You sold it for Mr. Wright?—A. I sold it for myself. He loaned it to me.

Q. Did he give it to you as a present?—A. No, sir; he loaned it to me with the understanding that I was to return it to him, or give him the money, in due time.

Q. The value of the stock is in issue here. How much did you get for it?—A. It is not a matter I care anything about. I sold it for $90; 9 cents on the dollar.

Q. $30,000 worth?—A. $1,000.

Q. General Wright had $30,000 worth?—A. I think that was what he had.

Q. Are you willing to name the man who purchased it?—A. I have no objection in the world to doing so.

Q. Who was he?—A. I will try and remember his name. I know he was a clerk in the Treasury Department. I can't recollect his name now. I will get it for you if you desire it.

Q. If you can recall it, I would like to have you do so?—A. I cannot recall it now.

Q. Will you be kind enough to state the date of the sale as near as you can?—A. I don't remember it, sir.

Q. Approximate it as nearly as you can?—A. I think it was some time in the fall of 1885, probably in September or October. I can't state positively, though, sir.

Q. You cannot give us the name of that man?—A. I can't recollect it. I can get it.

Q. Did you ever sell any of the stock to anybody in the Department of Justice?—A. I never sold to anybody else, sir. I never had a piece of the stock except that one. I never had any of the stock in my possession.

Q. I see in some of the papers a statement that Mr. Goode or others in the Department of Justice were interested in Pan-Electric stock. I do not assert it. Do you know anything about it?—A. Not a thing. If he is the owner of any of it I do not know it. I have seen it in the papers. I have seen such assertions and seen such statements, but I know nothing about it in the world.

Q. When did you hear of the Government suit being ordered?—A. When it was announced in the papers.

Q. Did you know of the movements in connection with the bringing of the Government suit?—A. I did not.

Q. Did Casey Young, during your intimacy, tell you anything about it?—A. No, sir.

Q. I believe in your article you did not say anything about an alliance between Casey Young and Van Benthuyzen?—A. I am not certain whether I said anything about it or not.

Q. Did you hear anything about it?—A. I never did until I saw it in the papers, or in the proceedings of this committee. I think I first saw it there.

Q. Had you any knowledge of his having gone to Pittsburgh to see Mr. Van Benthuyzen?—A. I think Mr. Young told me that he was going to Pittsburgh to attend that suit.

Q. He did?—A. I think so; though I am not positive about that; I think he told me so.

Mr. HALL. Did he tell you that he, Young, was going, or somebody else?

The WITNESS. I think he told me that he and Col. Gantt were going. I met him and Col. Gantt, and I think he told me, though I am not positive. I knew he was here through the public press, though, I think. I saw notices of it, if he did not tell me, and it may be that is the way I learned of it instead of his having told me of it.

Q. Did he tell you he was going to get Mr. Van Benthuyzen to bring a Government suit in his interest?—A. No, sir; he never did.

Q. Did you have any knowledge of Dr. Rogers having applied on the 24th of May, 1885, for a Government suit?—A. I did not, sir.

Q. Mr. Young did not talk over those matters with you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know a man by the name of Rees Edmonston?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where is he now?—A. I saw him here yesterday, sir.

Q. In the room here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. While you were testifying?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does he live in Washington?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was not he the man who told you about Mr. Garland?—A. No, sir.

Q. What?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are you sure?—A. I am very positive, sir.

Q. You know him intimately, do you not?—A. I know him very well, sir.

Q. Why will you not tell us who that man is? It is no professional matter.—A. I have given you my reasons. If anybody had told you a thing confidentially I am confident there is no court or committee on earth that would make you tell it.

Q. You cannot be a very good lawyer to assert that as the law?—A. I do not say it is the law. I say you wouldn't tell it.

Q. Have you got any letters from him?—A. No, sir.

Q. It was a voluntary communication?—A. I don't recollect the circumstances under which the matter came up.

Q. Do you recollect where you were when he told you?—A. No; I am not positive; I think I was in my office.

Q. Was anybody else present?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did he know you were writing a history of this transaction?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How do you know he knew that?—A. Because he saw me writing it.

Q. Did you read him what you had written?—A. I did not. I read him extracts from it, possibly.

Q. How much of it had you got written at that time?—A. I cannot tell you, sir.

Q. Where were you writing when he saw you?—A. In my office, sir.

Q. Was anybody else present?—A. I do not know.

Q. Was General Sypher there?—A. I don't think he was. I don't think there was anybody present.

Q. Was he an intimate friend of yours?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you talked with him since about it?—A. Well, I don't know that I have. I don't think we have ever mentioned the subject. I tried to see him yesterday, as I answered to the chairman, but failed to do it.

Q. He has never told you he was mistaken, has he?—A. I have never talked with him on the subject.

Q. You have never withdrawn that statement in the paper?—A. I very distinctly withdrew it in my letter to Mr. Dana, and I had intended to make the same withdrawal to Mr. Crawford, but it was an oversight if I did not. I am not positive that I did or did not, but I know I intended to do so.

Q. The only withdrawal was that you said it was hearsay and not personal knowledge?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I believe you said it was not General Sypher that told you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was the man who told you here in the room yesterday?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you think the man who told you is living?—A. Yes, sir; he is living.

Q. He has not gone out of the city or out of the country that you know of?—A. No, sir.

Q. Is he a resident of the city?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What part of the city?—A. Now, Mr. Ranney, that is asking me a question upon a subject which I have declined to answer upon, and I don't see that it will amount to anything.

Mr. RANNEY. I want to see how near we can come to it. I have no further questions, reserving the right of proceeding in the House hereafter.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. Where was it you had the conversation with this gentleman whose name you will not give, who gave you the information about Attorney-General Garland?—A. In my office.

Q. When was it?—A. I don't recollect the date.

Q. How long ago?—A. It was about the time that I was preparing that article, and I don't even recollect when I prepared that article. It was sometime in August or September, perhaps.

Q. Of what year?—A. 1885.

Q. Was that in Gen. Sypher's office?—A. Yes, sir; I had a desk in Gen. Sypher's office.

Q. Was Gen. Sypher present when the conversation took place?—A. No, sir; there was no one present except the gentleman and myself.

Q. Does he occupy any official position?—A. No, sir.

Q. Has he any relation to any of these telephone companies?—A. Not a particle, sir.

Q. How did the conversation come up between you and him?—A. He was a friend of mine, and I was reading him some things that I had written, and he said he happened to know of this fact, and told me about it.

Q. You were then engaged in writing this article?—A. I was, sir.

Q. Was he in the habit of calling on you?—A. Oh, he was in the office occasionally, and I met him often on the street.

Q. When did you see him last?—A. Well, within a week; no, not within a week, because I haven't been out of my house for twenty-five days until yesterday, except to walk to the corner, perhaps.

Q. Did you tell him you were writing that article for publication?—A. I did not, sir.

Q. Did he tell you that you must not use his name?—A. No, sir; he did not tell me I must not give his name at the time; but after the article was published he then told me I must not use his name.

Q. In the article as published there was nothing to indicate that you got this knowledge from any other person?—A. He and I knew it, sir.

Q. You stated it as a fact in your article, I believe?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How soon after the article was published did he tell you you must not give his name?—A. Directly afterwards; the first time I saw him afterwards.

Q. Did he come immediately to you after the publication of the article?—A. Well, the first time we met after that he told me so.

Q. Then, when he made the communication to you, he did not do it in confidence?—A. Why of course he did. It was confidential.

Q. He did not say it was in confidence?—A. Oh, yes sir; it was so considered at the time it was made.

Q. He did not say so?—A. We were talking confidentially, sir, in my office.

Q. This article was first published in the World, I believe?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were portions of it afterwards published in the Tribune?—A. I don't know, sir.

Q. Did you not read the article in the New York papers that were published in reference to this Pan-Electric matter?—A. I read most of them, sir.

Q. Is it not true that the articles published in the World and in the Tribune were based upon information which you had given in this article?—A. That I do not know, sir. The first part of the article that was published in the Tribune I wrote myself, as I stated yesterday, and gave it to Major Clark, and I wrote the entire article that was published in the World. I don't know where the newspapers of New York get their information from.

Q. So far as you read those papers, you could tell whether they were based upon the articles you furnished?—A. I think they were generally, sir. I think they were, so far as I noticed.

Q. Some of those matters contained in that article you stated from your own knowledge?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And some on information from others?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did General Sypher give you a good deal of information about it?—A. I can't tell whether General Sypher gave me any information or not. He and I talked over those matters. He had a very accurate knowledge of what was in the newspapers. I don't know. He might sometimes have told me things that he had learned in the newspapers or learned from some one else, and given me the authority for it, and in that way I might have written something from information furnished by General Sypher.

Q. But you cannot tell what portion of the article was based upon information from General Sypher?—A. I cannot, sir.

Q. And you cannot tell what part of it was based upon your own knowledge?—A. Oh, I can tell you that, sir.

Q. I will call your attention to one particular item and inquire how you got that information:

"All these gentlemen agreed to take an interest in the organization of the company, and as this was to be an enterprise appealing to the South for its political aid it was no wonly necessary to secure a distinguished Confederate general to put at the head of it."

Who gave you that information?—A. Well, sir, I don't think that that is information at all; I think that was an inference of my own.

Q. Nobody told you these gentlemen had agreed to do what you state here they had agreed to do?—A. I think that is an inference of mine. Possibly some one may have said that to me, but I could not say positively.

Q. And nobody told you that these gentlemen had secured the services of Gen. Joseph E. Johnston in order to accomplish that purpose?—A. No, sir; that was probably patent on its face.

Q. You acquired the knowledge of the fact about the organization of the company from having access to the papers at Col. Young's office, I suppose?—A. Some of them only, sir.

Q. Did you get some of this information from Dr. J. W. Rogers?—A. I don't know, sir, what information I got from him. I have talked with Dr. Rogers a great deal about the company; very often, indeed.

Q. I am asking now about the information that you embodied in this article.—A. Yes; I suppose I got a great deal of that information from Dr. Rogers, because he and I were on very intimate terms, and we very frequently talked about it.

Q. Can you tell any particular fact stated in this article that Dr. Rogers told you?—A. No, sir, I could not.

Q. I believe you stated on yesterday that one of the purposes of preparing this article was to defend Attorney-General Garland.—A. I thought, sir, as there was going to be an attack made upon Attorney-General Garland it would be well that the truth should be told about the whole matter at the beginning. That was one of the reasons why I wrote that article.

Q. You stated yesterday that one of the reasons was that you wished to defend the Attorney-General.—A. Well, it was a defence to tell the truth in regard to him.

Q. You regarded the article then as a defence of the Attorney-General?—A. Well, I know that in giving the article to Mr. Crawford, he, I think, suggested that the Attorney-General had been—that it was, at least, improper conduct, and I think—

Mr. EDEN. I don't care about the conversation between you and Mr. Crawford.

The WITNESS. I said I couldn't see anything improper in it; that I didn't think he intended anything improper.

Q. The first information you furnished for a newspaper was for the Tribune, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was the Tribune engaged vigorously in defending the Attorney-General at that time?—A. I don't know that it was, sir. I think it was attacking him, as it generally does. I gave it to the Tribune because I could always give the Tribune articles, and they generally printed what I gave them.

Q. You say you are a practicing attorney?—A. I am an attorney, sir.

Q. In what courts do you practice?—A. I have some cases in the Court of Claims; in the Departments mostly.

Q. Anywhere else?—A. I do not practice in the local courts.

Q. Do you practice in the common-law courts in the city?—A. I do not practice in the common-law courts at all.

Q. How long have you been living here in the city?—A. Since 1876.

Q. Did you come from Arkansas here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you have a case in the Court of Claims?—A. I have some there now, sir.

Q. You say you practice also before committees of Congress?—A. I have cases in Congress.

Q. Are you the same Mr. Hill that was the attorney to get an appropriation for the Jeffersonville, Indiana, levee?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you the same gentleman that is referred to by the report of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service that investigated that matter?—A. I am, sir.

Q. Is that the only case that you have had before a committee of Congress?—A. Oh, no, sir. They asked me if I had had cases, and I mentioned one or two. I have had, in the course of the last six or eight years, not less than thirty or forty cases.

Q. Before committees of Congress?—A. Yes, sir; cases that have gone to the committees of Congress; I never went before a committee of Congress in my life to make an argument; I have my cases referred to them, and sometimes have written briefs.

Q. What do you do when you are employed as an attorney for a case before a committee of Congress, if you don't go before the committee and argue it?—A. When I am employed as an attorney I write a bill and have it introduced in Congress and submit the evidence to the committee. As a rule my cases go before the War Claims Committee, and they don't permit attorneys to come before that committee. They are generally war claims from the South. They don't permit attorneys to come before that committee to argue cases. Their rules don't allow it. They don't even allow an attorney to know to whom—

Q. Did you argue the Jeffersonville case before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors?—A. No, sir; I did not. I stated in my examination before that committee exactly what I did. I advised Mr. Warder what he ought to do in that case.

Q. You never spoke to the committee about it or any member of it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nor prepared any bill or brief?—A. I prepared a statement for Mr. Warder, which he used, I suppose.

Q. Have you been engaged in this business of practicing in the Court of Claims and before committees of Congress ever since you came here from Arkansas?—A. Not all the time; most of the time.

Q. What other business have you been engaged in?—A. Writing, sir.

Q. Writing for what?—A. The newspapers.

Q. Are you the regular correspondent of any newspaper?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever been the regular correspondent of any newspaper?—A. No, sir. Oh, yes; I was at one time.

Q. Since you came to Washington?—A. Since I came to Washington; yes, sir. I was at one time the regular correspondent of quite a number of papers.

Q. When was that?—A. That was in 1876.

Q. Have you been the regular correspondent of any newspaper since 1876?—A. No, sir.

Q. In what way did you get compensation for your services in writing for the newspapers?—A. The newspapers are always very willing to pay for articles that are well written and upon pertinent subjects.

Q. Is that the way you got your pay?—A. Yes, sir; of course, like a great many other newspaper men.

Q. How much did the Tribune pay you for the information that you gave to them?—A. I did not ask them for a cent of pay.

Q. I did not ask you about that; but how much did they give you?—A. I don't think they ever paid me a cent. The Tribune paid me for some other matter I furnished to them, some small items, but I don't think the Tribune ever paid me a cent for that article.

Q. Did you continue to furnish information to these newspapers after you furnished this article that is called the history?—A. I don't think I have since that time. I don't think I have said a word or talked to any one about it.

Q. Have you given the Tribune any information since the first information that you gave them?—A. Well, for a few days afterwards I gave Mr. Clark some items, but not lately.

Q. Do you say the Tribune folks did not pay you anything for it?—A. I did not ask them for any pay. They would have paid me if I had asked them, doubtless.

Q. Did anybody else give you any pay for the information you furnished to the Tribune?—A. No, sir.

Q. You were doing that as a labor of love, were you, or was it for the purpose of defending the Attorney-General?—A. Well, sir; it was to put a correct statement of the fact before the public; if it was a defence, as I think it was, it was for that purpose. I did not make any attack upon the Attorney-General.

Q. You sent to the Sun the same article that was published in the World, did you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you send that article to the Sun before the World got it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you set any price on it when you sent it to the Sun?—A. I did not, sir.

Q. Did the Sun return it to you?—A. They did not, sir.

Q. Then you kept a copy?—A. Yes, sir; when I wrote the article I took three copies of it.

Q. You kept three copies?—A. I took three copies.

Q. And you sent one to the Sun?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you do with the other two?—A. I sent one of them to the World.

Q. What did you do with the other?—A. I gave the other one to Gen. Sypher.

Q. When you gave it to him, for what purpose did you give it to him?—A. I didn't ask him.

Q. Did he ask you for it or did you voluntarily give it to him?—A. I wrote it with the understanding that he was to have a copy of it.

Q. Did he tell you he was going to furnish it to Mr. Bell of the Bell Telephone Company?—A. I am not certain whether he did before he sent it or not.

Q. Think about it and see if you can remember.—A. I cannot tell, sir. I have tried to think whether he told me before or afterwards. I am not positive.

Q. Did he not tell you at the time you gave him the article that he was going to furnish it to Mr. Bell?—A. It is possible he may have told me that, sir.

Q. Did you not give it to him for the purpose of having it placed in the hands of Mr. Bell?—A. I do not know that I did.

Q. What is your recollection of it?—A. I don't think he told me beforehand that he was going to send it to Mr. Bell, though I am not positive. It was not a matter that I considered of any great importance. I didn't know that I was going to have an investigation by Congress, or I should have tried probably to put the facts in my memory a little closer. I don't think he told me before that he was going to give it to Mr. Bell, but I am not positive of that.

Q. Your name did not appear in the proceedings until after the investigation commenced, did it?—A. No, sir; not that I know of. I signed the article that I gave to Mr. Crawford. My name was to the article when Mr. Crawford got it.

Q. Did you ask him when he published it to publish it with your name?—A. I told him he could do it if he chose to do so.

Q. But he published it without your name?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. Mr. Crawford says when he sent it to the World it was specified to be Mr. Hill's history.

Mr. HALL. They probably took his name off. They didn't want it to be authentic.

Q. You do not know why they did not leave your name on it?—A. I didn't make any inquiry about it.

Q. Did you ask Mr. Crawford why they had not published it over your signature?—A. I never did.

Q. You were very well acquainted with Mr. Crawford, were you not?—A. Very slightly acquainted with him, sir.

Q. Did you go to him to furnish him the article, or did he come to you for it?—A. I went to him. I saw an account published in the World, and directly afterwards, a day or two afterwards, I went to Mr. Crawford and told him if he wanted a correct history that I had one written that he could have.

Q. Did you tell him how much you wanted him to pay you for it?—A. I did not.

Q. Was there any negotiation between you and him about the consideration?—A. No, sir; I left that entirely to him.

Q. Was the agreement between you and him that you should leave entirely to him the question of what he should pay you?—A. That is the way I have always done with the newspapers.

Q. Did he pay you before the article was published or afterwards?—A. Before, sir.

Q. How much do you say he paid you?—A. I think it was $85.

Q. Did he pay it all at one payment, or in instalments?—A. He paid it at different times.

Q. Was it all paid before the article was published?—A. All of it, sir.

Q. You have never made any inquiry to ascertain why it was they did not publish the article over your name?—A. I did not care, sir.

Mr. EDEN. That is all

By Mr. HALL:

Q. When was it you first began to occupy rooms with Col. Casey Young?—A. I think in January or February of 1884.

Q. Were those rooms sleeping apartments or did they constitute an office?—A. They were sleeping apartments and his parlor or sitting-room.

Q. How long did you continue to sustain those relations to Col. Young in the rooms?—A. For four or five months, during the time my wife was absent in Baltimore; about five months, was it not, Col. Young?

Mr. YOUNG. Yes.

Q. Was it during that same period you were occupying a desk in Gen. Sypher's office?—A. No, sir; I had a desk then at 1305 E street, with Col. Gilbert Moyer.

Q. When did you retain a desk in Gen. Sypher's office?—A. I think in July, probable. I am pretty certain it was about the 1st of July, 1884.

Q. Are you still occupying a desk there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have been there ever since?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you cease to frequent Col. Young's rooms after the time that you began to have this desk in Gen. Sypher's office?—A. When Congress adjourned in July and when Col. Casey Young came back in the latter part of November or the 1st of December to the short session of Congress I was in his rooms occasionally only. I did not go there at all after that probably more than once a week.

Q. That, you say, was in the year 1884?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have access to his rooms in 1885?—A. I did not, sir.

Q. Were you ever in his rooms in 1885?—A. I have called on him occasionally, but very seldom. He was not here having rooms in 1885 that I know of. Yes, he was, too.

Q. I understand you to state that much of the foundation for this article that you call the authentic history of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company was from information received in casual conversation with Col. Young?—A. With Col. Young and other members of the company; Dr. Rogers and Mr. Harris Rogers.

Q. Was that information derived from conversations occurring before or after Congress adjourned, and after you had ceased to frequent Col. Young's rooms?—A. During the time.

Q. During that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you at any time whilst you were occupying the office or rooms of Col. Young, or subsequently, make any copies of any books relating to the Pan-Electric

Telephone Company?—A. I did some copying for Col. Young in his office; and I stated yesterday in my testimony that in doing some of his work some of his papers accidentally got mixed with mine, which I had in his room, and carried to my office. One of them was a transcript of the account current of the company. I didn't know I had that paper until some time when I was in Col. Moyer's office, and they wanted to use the desk I had been using there, and it had a great number of my papers piled up on it, and in moving the papers from that desk it was accidentally found. I gave that paper to Mr. Crawford, of the New York World, as evidence of the fact that what I had stated to him was true.

Q. Do you remember the date of the last item of that account?—A. I do not, sir.

Q. Are you sure that item is not later than the removal of your books? Are you sure there are not items on that account later than the removal of your books?—A. I am very sure there are none there that I put there later than that, sir. It was the very same time, as I stated yesterday, and as Col. Young knows, for I asked him after he returned, that one or two of my papers got mixed up with his papers and were carried to Memphis.

Q. Is that the only transcript of the books of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company that you ever had?—A. That is the only one I ever had in my possession, and I simply gave that to Mr. Crawford to show him that what I had stated of my knowledge of the company was true.

Q. You do not remember the date of the last items of the account?—A. I do not, sir.

Q. Do you say that transcript was made for Col. Young?—A. It was made in making out his account with the company. He asked me to make it out, and I made it out, and it was incorrect, so that there was a second copy made, and that copy was thrown among my papers, and accidentally came into my possession that way.

Q. Did you make copies of any correspondence?—A. I never did, sir.

Q. Did you furnish Mr. Crawford any letters or copies of correspondence?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any?—A. I have not.

Q. When did you first form the idea of preparing a statement or correspondence for the newspapers relating to this Pan-Electric Company?—A. I think it was in July, 1885. I stated it yesterday. There were numbers of newspaper reporters and newspaper men trying to find out some of these facts. I saw articles published in the New Orleans Times-Democrat, and one in the Baltimore Sun calling attention to these things, and Gen. Sypher returned from New York some time in the latter part of July or August and told me what had occurred between Major Cahoon and himself, and some papers were sent to me from Wisconsin, I think, from Milwaukee or St. Paul or somewhere, with a number of articles in them. I think it was in July or August, as I just said, that I determined that I would write out a correct history of it, and I did write the first article at that time.

Q. Did you write it on your own motion or at the request and suggestion of Gen. Sypher?—A. I wrote it on my own motion, sir. We talked the matter over beforehand.

Q. I understood you to say yesterday that you had one purpose in preparing the article that you declined to state?—A. I think not, sir.

Q. Did you not say something to that effect?—A. I think not, sir.

Q. That originally in preparing that article you had one motive or purpose that you thought was your own matter, and you declined to state it?—A. Possibly, I may have said so, sir.

Q. I will ask you now whether there was not one motive or purpose in its preparation?—A. I did say that yesterday. I recollect now. Yes, sir; there was.

Q. Was that the prime and principal motive?—A. Well, it had some influence in my preparing it, sir.

Q. Do I understand you to decline to state what that motive and purpose was?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Upon what ground?—A. Well, upon the ground that the motives that actuated me in doing anything are not a proper subject for the committee or any one else except myself.

Q. How long were you occupied in preparing that first paper for the Tribune?—A. Probably a couple of hours; I don't know how long.

Q. Did you send it to the paper at once after its preparation?—A. I carried it to Major Clark and told him not to print it—I think that was my statement to him—unless he found that other papers were going to print something and then he could print it. Is not that what I said, Major Clark, or about what I said? Oh, Major Clark is not here; I thought he was.

Q. Had you at that time begun the preparation of this more extended article?—A. I began it as soon as that was printed, sir.

Q. Having printed the first article you then took a second thought, or formed a second purpose of preparing something a little more extended and complete. Is that so?—A. I concluded I would prepare a complete and extended article, and I took what was published in the papers, what I saw in the other journals and what I believed to be correct, and used that in preparing the second article.

Q. Did you not state yesterday that originally in the preparation of this article your purpose was not to have it published?—A. I did say so, sir. I did not originally prepare it for publication.

Q. You prepared the Tribune article for publication?—A. I prepared that for publication; yes, sir.

Q. Was it the same motive, this secret motive, which operated on you in preparing both those papers?—A. I can't tell sir. As I stated before, sometimes men do things when they don't even know their own motives.

Q. You are not certain that there was not some unconscious motive operating?—A. I am not certain, sir. No man can be certain of that fact.

Q. Whether there was a motive or no motive, you went forward and prepared this article that has been introduced in evidence without any purpose of its publication?—A. I did, sir, without any purpose of its publication.

Q. When did you complete it?—A. I can't tell you, sir.

Q. I see that General Sypher's letter to Mr. Bell—A. That probably fixes about the time I concluded it.

Q. The letter in which he sent one of these copies to Mr. Bell is dated October 26.—A. It was completed before that.

Q. How long before that?—A. I couldn't tell you, sir, how long before that.

Q. A month?—A. Possibly. I don't know how long it was before that, because I didn't pay any attention to the time.

Q. How long long do you think you were occupied in preparing it?—A. Well, I didn't work at it at all continuously, sir. I wrote when I felt like it. Probably four or five days, at different times, I was writing on it, either at home or at the office, for I wrote at both places, just as the humor happened to strike me and I had nothing else to do.

Q. As soon as you had prepared the manuscript, were these copies made?—A. I think not, sir, for some time afterwards.

Q. What was the reason for the delay?—A. I don't know, sir. I hadn't prepared it for any particular use.

Q. Was not that manuscript that you prepared submitted to somebody else?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you swear it was not out of your hands?—A. I would not swear to that, sir, because it was on my desk.

Q. Don't you know that manuscript was taken out of your office for the purpose of being submitted to somebody else?—A. I do not know any such thing.

Q. Do you swear it was not?—A. If it was, it was done without my knowledge.

Q. Don't you know that Gen. Sypher took that manuscript?—A. I don't know any such thing.

Q. For the purpose of submitting it to somebody else?—A. I don't know any such thing, and I don't believe any such thing.

Q. I would like to have you refresh your memory, and see if you cannot state about how long after that article was completed it was before those copies were made.—A. I cannot. It might have been a week, or it might have been two weeks, or it might have been four weeks.

Q. Then, I understand you to say no use whatever was made of the manuscript from the time it was completed until those copies were made?—A. So far as I know, there was not. That is my recollection, sir.

Q. When the copies were made a copy was sent to the Sun?—A. No, no; not until long afterwards.

Q. When was it sent to the Sun?—A. The date of the letter in Col. Dana's testimony will tell you.

Q. About what time was it?—A. I do not know, sir. I don't recollect. I will find it.

Q. These copies were made on the 26th of October. What did you do with the other copies after they were made. You say three copies were made, one of which was sent to Mr. Bell on the 26th of October. What became of the other copies?—A. I sent one of them to the Sun, and gave one of them—

Q. Immediately; at the same time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then they were kept in your office?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, I ask you the same question about those copies; whether they were submitted to anybody?—A. No, sir; they were locked up in my desk.

Q. Then there was a period after Mr. Bell had been furnished with a copy of this statement in which you took no further action?—A. I did not, sir.

Q. And that seems to have been about a month?—A. I don't know how long it was. It was whatever time it might have been.

Q. Why did you not send those copies to the newspaper's sooner?—A. I did not write them for publication, as I stated in the beginning. I stated yesterday the reason I published the article was because I had seen something in other papers that probably did not give an entirely correct statement, in numbers of papers, and I then sent it to Mr. Dana for publication.

Q. You and Gen. Sypher were on very intimate terms, were you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And consulted each other about what was to be done with that manuscript that you prepared?—A. I don't know, sir, that we consulted each other about what was to be done with it. We talked over the matter a great deal.

Q. He showed you the note he sent to Mr. Bell with the copy of the manuscript, did he not?—A. I don't know that he did, sir.

Q. I will read it to you:

"I hand you herewith an authentic statement of facts compiled by my associate, Col. E. N. Hill. It may be of interest to you. The scheme to destroy your patents was tolerably well matured, and it remains to be seen whether this reform Administration will lend itself for its consummation."

A. I did not see that letter, sir.

Q. Do you pretend to say that you and Gen. Sypher did not understand what each was doing about that thing?—A. I pretend to say, sir, that there was no understanding at all as to what we were doing about it. I wrote the article originally for the reasons that I have stated. Gen. Sypher said he would send one of the copies to Mr. Bell, and he took a copy of it and sent it to him. I never saw that letter, and never heard it read.

Q. Don't you know that you prepared that article in conjunction with Gen. Sypher with the idea of giving expression in some way to what was found in this letter:

"The scheme to destroy your patents was tolerably well matured, and it remains to be seen whether this reform Administration will lend itself for its consummation."

A. I don't know whether I did, sir.

Q. Don't you know that this motive that you are talking about, and which governed you in the preparation of these articles, was to assist the Bell Company against this new company, and to do it by making an attack on certain members of the Administration?—A. No, sir; I don't know any such thing.

Q. Do you say it was not?—A. I say I was not governed by any such motives.

Q. But I understand you to say you never attempted to make any other use of the manuscript than first to send it to Mr. Bell, and next—A. I didn't send it to Mr. Bell.

Q. And then to send it to the papers?—A. I didn't send it to Mr. Bell. I don't know Mr. Bell.

Q. You knew it was sent to him?—A. I knew it was sent to him.

Q. You were cognizant of it at the time?—A. I don't know I knew it until after it was sent.

Q. It was your brain work and property, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you assented to its being sent?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You made no objection to it?—A. No objection.

Q. Do you pretend to say you are not the author of it in the sense of sending it to him?—A. I didn't send it to him.

Q. How about the way it went to the papers; did you send it to the papers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You became the instrumentality there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I ask you again whether you ever attempted to make any other use of the manuscript than to give it publicity in the papers?—A. I don't think I ever did, sir.

Q. Do you pretend to tell the committee you had any other motive in preparing it than giving it publicity?—A. I do, sir.

Q. But you decline to state what it was?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you the further question, whether you did not delay sending this manuscript to the papers from the time that the first copy was sent to Bell, expecting it would get into the papers through that copy?—A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. What did you wait for?—A. Because I had not determined to publish it. That was the simple reason I waited.

Q. Had you asked anybody to pay you anything for it?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not ask anybody for compensation for it until you offered it to the World?—A. No, sir.

Q. I think you stated you received the money from Mr. Crawford before it was published?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At different times?—A. Yes, sir; at different times.

Q. Have you ever tendered any other manuscript on the subject?—A. I have not had any other.

Q. You have not prepared anything else?—A. No, sir. That was all I knew.

Q. Did you make any division with anybody of the money paid by Mr. Crawford?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you pay anything to Gen. Sypher?—A. No, sir.

Q. If I understand you correctly, the probabilities are that you began the preparation of this article before the meeting occurred at 1327 G street?—A. I think I did, sir. I am not positive about that, sir. I had written the article for the Tribune, I think, previous to that. I am pretty certain I had. I was writing about it.

Q. And it was whilst you were in the course of preparing the article that this unknown person came and gave you the information about that meeting?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. The undisclosed person; not the unknown person.

The WITNESS. The undisclosed person.

Mr. HALL. Unknown in a general sense.

Mr. EDEN. Unknown to us.

Q. Was there any person assisting, either by your suggestion or that of Gen. Sypher, to get information to enable you to perfect and complete the statement?—A. I do not know what Gen. Sypher may have done; I don't think there was; I don't think he required any assistance or that he thought I did.

Q. Did you or he employ a detective?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you aware at the time that that meeting was being held that those gentlemen were here?—A. I saw that from the book of the Ebbitt House.

Q. Did you at that time know that Mr. Van Benthuyzen had any interest in this matter?—A. I did not know he had any interest, and don't know now he has any in the Pan Electric Company; I knew he was interested in the National Improved Company; at least, I knew that through the papers.

Q. Then you got the information of his presence from your personal inspection of the register?—A. I think I did, sir.

Mr. HALL. I don't think of anything else to ask.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. You say you had a second motive which you decline to disclose?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you attempt to carry it out?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. I understood you to say that the first information you had of the ordering of the Government suit was after it was ordered and published in the papers?—A. I think that was the first information I had of it.

Q. You are sure of that, are you?—A. I am pretty sure.

Q. Have you read the testimony of Gen. Sypher given before the committee?—A. I have not, sir.

Q. Gen. Sypher stated that he was informed some nine or ten days previous, and that he got his information from you.—A. Well, possibly I may have known it then, but I have forgotten it if I did.

Q. That statement does not refresh your recollection.—A. It does not, sir.

Q. Have you any idea where you got that information?—A. The first article that I ever saw on the subject of the Government suit was in the Baltimore Sun, I think.

Q. Was that before the suit was ordered?—A. I think it was, sir.

Q. What was the purport of the article?—A. There was something in there to the effect that there was going to be a Government suit; and, possibly, in the New Orleans Times-Democrat. I don't know whether that could be counted as information that I could testify to at all.

Q. Was it stated that the suit was going to be ordered, or that application was going to be made?—A. That suit was going to be ordered, or application made, or something. I don't recollect now what the article was I read in the newspapers at the time. I did not pretend to charge my memory with it.

Q. You have no recollection of being informed that the suit was going to be ordered?—A. I have no recollection of being informed by any one that the suit was going to be ordered. The only information I could possibly have had would have been from what I might have read in the newspapers.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. While you were associated intimately with Mr. Young, do you know whether he kept files of the letters received from his associates in the Pan-Electric Company?—A. I do not, sir. I never saw one of the letters from any of his associates in the Pan-Electric Company.

Q. You say his papers and yours got mixed up. Have you looked to see whether some of his correspondence did not get mixed up with your papers, too?—A. That was the only paper of Col. Young's that was with mine. I know that, because I examined the papers when they were moved.

Q. We have not been able to get any of that correspondence. You don't know where we can find any of it, do you?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. What paper of Col. Young's did you say it was that got mixed up with yours?—

A. It was an account current of Col. Young's with the company as secretary and treasurer; a cash account, you might call it.

Q. One you had drawn for him?—A. I originally drew it; yes, sir.

Q. And when you found it you say you took it to Mr. Crawford?—A. I took it to Mr. Crawford as a verification of the statements that were contained in my letter.

Q. Why did you not take it to Col. Young?—A. It was a matter of no value.

Q. Why?—A. Because it was an incorrect statement and had been corrected.

Q. (Showing paper to witness.) Is that the paper?—A. Yes, sir; that is the paper.

Mr. RANNEY. I suppose it is unnecessary to put that into the record.

Mr. OATES. I just want it identified.

Q. At what date did you furnish to Mr. Crawford this article called the history of of the Pan-Electric Company?—A. I don't recollect.

Q. What is your best memory about it?—A. I haven't the slightest idea about the date. Possibly Mr. Crawford can tell you. I cannot. I don't know whether it was in November or December.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It was furnished on Thanksgiving Day. I think it was the 24th of November.

The WITNESS. I know it was after the letter had been written to Col. Dana.

Q. You say that you wrote this paper I have just shown you?—A. Oh, no, sir; I did not. That is not in my handwriting. I say I originally made up the account. That was a copy.

Q. Why was this of no value?—A. It was of no value because it was incorrect.

Q. And it was a copy from what you had made?—A. It was a copy from what I had made and was found to be incorrect, and I then made a correct statement, which Col. Young has.

Q. In this statement which you furnished and was published I find the following paragraph:

"It might make an interesting newspaper article if the names of the parties who went before this Committee on Patents to advocate the passage of this bill could be given."

How and where did you get that information?—A. Well, sir, I don't know. I don't think it is information at all. I think it is a simple inference that it might make an interesting article, and I think it would.

Q. Did you not get a good deal of the information on which you based your article from a detective?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not?—A. No, sir.

Q. Again you state:

"Attorney-General Garland left for Arkansas on the 27th of August. Promptly on the 1st of September Col. Young arrived in this city and stopped at Wormley's. Private rooms were not needed on this occasion."

What do you mean by that?—A. I don't know, sir, what I meant by that. The statement that Attorney-General Garland left was published in all the papers. I knew that from them. The statement that Col. Young arrived was published in the papers, and I called to see him and he was not in when I called.

Q. You do not know what you meant by "private rooms were not needed on this occasion"?—A. No, sir.

Q. You just wrote that in order to see how you could write?—A. Yes, sir. I am called a pretty good writer.

Mr. EDEN. It was a rhetorical flourish?

The WITNESS. That is a very good name for it.

Mr. RANNEY. A conjecture. He had a private room before on G street.

Q. What time did you say it was he took a room at 1327 G street?—A. I don't know, sir; I think the history states when he took it.

Q. Does the history state it correctly?—A. So far as I know, sir. I don't know that he ever had a room there.

Q. You never were there?—A. I never was there.

Q. You stated that only on information?—A. That is all, sir.

Q. Do you know, of your own knowledge, that any meeting or conference was ever held there?—A. I do not know, sir; and I so stated yesterday.

Q. You got that from this unmentionable individual?—A. Yes, sir; I so stated yesterday.

Q. Did you not get the major portion of your facts from that same person?—A. No, sir.

Q. How did you know about the action by the Solicitor-General?—A. I think I saw it in the newspapers.

Q. About his prompt action?—A. I think I saw it in the newspapers.

Q. You say here:

"In less than one working day he passed on the whole thing and ordered the suit."

How did you know that?—A. I knew the application had been made on one day, according to the statements, and that the order for the suit was made on the next day.

That was less than a working day, because the mail arrives from the South about 11 o'clock in the morning, from nine to eleven, and the papers couldn't have gotten to him before twelve o'clock that day. I made a little calculation myself at the time as to its being less than a working day.

Mr. RANNEY. Mr. Goode confirmed all that, I think.

Q. Were you a lawyer before you came to Washington to live?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When were you first licensed?—A. I think it was 1857. I read law in 1848 and 1849, and was under age and could not get a license and didn't apply for it until some time afterwards.

Q. What court licensed you first?—A. The circuit court.

Q. Where?—In the judicial district where I resided, in Camden, in Arkansas.

Q. You say in this history:

"On the 29th of August Mr. Van Benthuyssen and Mr. C. P. Huntington, representing the lately defeated National Company, registered at the Ebbitt House at Washington."

Was that true?—A. Yes, sir; I saw their names there. I met Mr. Huntington and was introduced to him on the street that day.

Q. On the 29th of August?—A. I think it was on the 29th. The register shows what day it was.

Mr. RANNEY. They arrived in the afternoon.

Q. You say:

"On the next day Col. Casey Young and Col. Gantt, representing the Pan Company, stopped at the same place, as did Mr. Bradley T. Johnson, the president of the local Pan Company in Baltimore."

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was then the 30th of August. You say it was the next day—

"That these gentlemen were in consultation together, is well known. On the 1st of September Col. Casey Young secured private apartments at 1327 G street, a most central locality, within two squares of the Ebbitt, Riggs, and Willard's."

How did you know about that?—A. That was the information that was given to me by that undiscovered person. I did not know it.

Mr. RANNEY. I have examined the record, and the record shows it to be a fact.

Mr. HALL. I think there is no dispute about it.

Q. That was the first of September?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say:

"At these rooms a number of conferences were held amongst the parties named above, and among the callers upon Col. Young while these conferences were being held was Attorney-General Garland."

You wrote that?—A. Yes, sir; I wrote it.

Q. Did you not know when you wrote it that it was a falsehood?—A. No, I did not; and I don't now know whether it is or not.

Q. Let us look a little further at your own language and see:

"Shortly after the conferences closed it was announced that the Attorney-General would soon start for a visit to his country place in Arkansas, and he did leave on August 27, burying himself in the woods away from all postal or telegraphic communication."

You wrote that, did you?—A. That must be a misprint, sir.

Mr. OATES. Ah, a misprint?

Mr. RANNEY. That is exactly a fact, is it not?

Mr. HALL. Let the examination go on.

Mr. RANNEY. Mr. Garland says it was announced in the newspapers.

Mr. OATES. Hold on, Mr. Ranney.

Mr. HALL. Give the witness a chance.

Q. You said you wrote that history, did you?—A. Yes, sir; I did write it.

Q. In the history you say Col. Young took those rooms on the 1st day of September, and you say that Garland left on the 27th of August preceding, and yet you say Garland was at the conferences which followed immediately after the 1st of September; how can you reconcile that?—A. I did not state it as a matter of my own knowledge, sir.

Q. Is it not false on its face?—A. It seems to be, sir; but it is not a matter of my own knowledge, and I have distinctly disclaimed any knowledge of it all the way through.

Mr. OATES. It is the plainest thing in the world. He says Young took the rooms where the conferences were held, on the 1st of September, and that Garland was at the conferences, and yet he states that Garland had left on the 27th of August. It is false on its face.

Mr. HALL. It is a small case of felo de se.

The WITNESS. I do not know what time Mr. Garland did leave.

Mr. OATES. It was stated in all the papers.

The WITNESS. Well, whatever time he left. I wrote that upon the information of another person, and I did not pay much attention to it either.

Q. It doesn't make any difference who stated it; from those facts in that shape, couldn't you see that it was false?—A. I never noticed that it was in that shape. This is the first time it has ever been called to my attention.

Q. You knew and stated that Mr. Garland had left for Arkansas on the 27th of August, and that that suit was ordered on the 2nd of September; that Colonel Young took the rooms on the 1st of September, which was after the time when Mr. Garland left.—A. Yes, sir. I never noticed that statement before.

Q. That escaped your memory?—A. It escaped my notice.

Mr. HALL. To begin at the first paragraph on this subject; it says, "On the 29th of August Mr. Van Benthuyson and Mr. C. P. Huntington, representing the lately defeated National Company, registered at the Ebbitt House in Washington."

Mr. RANNEY. That is true; go on.

Mr. OATES. It shows that the statement about Mr. Garland's being there is a falsehood.

Mr. RANNEY. I want to find that.

Mr. OATES. It is at the bottom of the page. It says, "At these rooms a number of conferences were held amongst the parties named above, and among the callers upon Colonel Young while these conferences were being held, was Attorney-General Garland. Shortly after the conferences closed it was announced that the Attorney-General would soon start for a visit to his country place in Arkansas."

Mr. RANNEY. That is all right.

Mr. OATES. "Shortly after the conferences closed." They began on the 1st of September.

Mr. RANNEY. No; those were the conferences of the 29th of July.

Mr. OATES. But the witness says the conferences were held at Colonel Young's rooms, which he took on the 1st of September.

Mr. RANNEY. Colonel Young did not have any rooms then; he was stopping at Wormley's, and, as this article says, "private rooms were not needed on this occasion."

Mr. OATES. No, that was on a different occasion. Read it; it is in print.

Mr. RANNEY. Read the fourth paragraph from the top on page 776. Then, that must refer and relate to the 29th of July and the beginning of August.

Mr. OATES. There it is; it speaks for itself. He begins the paragraph by saying, "On the 29th of August Mr. Van Benthuyson and Mr. C. P. Huntington, representing the lately defeated National Company, registered at the Ebbitt House, in Washington."

The WITNESS. I think, Mr. Chairman, that this is a bad print in that book. I think it is, or should be, the 29th of July.

Mr. RANNEY. And the 1st of September should be the 1st of August?

Mr. HALL. If you change that you have to make two corrections.

Mr. RANNEY. That is August; that is the time when he secured those rooms.

The WITNESS. I think that should be the 29th of July; that it is misprinted.

Mr. RANNEY. Then on page 776 it says distinctly that when he came on the 1st of September he did not need any private rooms.

Mr. HALL. Then there will have to be two mistakes corrected. Have you a copy of the World article to compare and show that date? This "August" has got to be changed to "July," and then the word "September" will have to be changed to "August."

Mr. RANNEY. But, taking the paragraph altogether, it is a manifest typographical error in printing September for August.

Mr. OATES. We will compare it and see.

Mr. RANNEY. It is a typographical error, or an error of that sort. It is published in the World as September, but the whole article together shows manifestly that it was the first of August.

Mr. HALL. We are not dealing with the fact, but we are dealing with this statement.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Clerk, you will secure from the printer the copy furnished by Mr. Bell, the type-written copy, and bring it before the committee. If all of them read that way it is pretty conclusive.

Mr. RANNEY. Not at all. You take the three paragraphs together and the article states conclusively that he had these rooms and this conference on the last of July and the first of August. It says distinctly and unequivocally that he came here and stopped at Wormley's, and that private rooms were not needed, and that is italicized.

The WITNESS. If it states the other way, and it seems that it does, it seems to me to be a mistake in writing, because the records of the Ebbitt House show that the registering of Col. Young, Mr. Van Benthuyson, and all these parties, was on the 29th and 30th of July.

Mr. OATES. If there is a mistake in writing that is your responsibility.

Mr. RANNEY. But the third paragraph on this page shows exactly that it referred to the 1st of August, and not September. It is unmistakable, if you read them both.

Mr. HALL. With regard to the correctness of that statement, it is not unmistakable at all, because we have a case where this information about this meeting which is charged to have been on a given date is, I think, very doubtful, and we cannot get the name of the person who furnished the information. We can correct other dates, but not that one, because there is no foundation for correction.

Mr. RANNEY. If you, as a man of intelligence, will read those four paragraphs and say that the meaning of them is that the man represented that they had a meeting when Mr. Garland was present on the 1st of September, I will not discuss it.

Mr. HALL. That is not the question at all. This witness has testified that this information, as stated in this paper, of a meeting on the 1st of September, was furnished to him by a certain person. Now he testifies that the information came to him—when? That has not been corrected.

Mr. RANNEY. It does not need to be.

Mr. HALL. No, if you do not want it to be; if you are in a state of mind that you do not want a correction.

Mr. RANNEY. But I do. I want to do justice to this witness, and when it is stated that he has said a thing falsely in that communication, when it is perfectly apparent in the communication itself that whatever he wrote, whenever he wrote September he meant August, and that it applies to it, I do not think it is fair to say that the intention was to falsify.

Mr. OATES. The witness may state what was the case. I ask him to say if he does not know that it shows on the face of the statement here that it could not have been so, but was a falsehood.

The WITNESS. I do not know it, for I did not know that that statement was there in that way. I do not think I ever read that article until now. I know I did not read it in the World.

Mr. OATES. I did not enter into an argument with the witness; I was putting a question.

Mr. RANNEY. You said with a good deal of emphasis, that the article, on the face of it, was false.

Mr. OATES. I asked him the question whether it was not, on the face of it, a falsehood. I will let him answer that question now.

The WITNESS. It could not be possible for Mr. Garland to be at a meeting held on the 1st of September if he had left on the 27th of August and was on his way to Little Rock.

Q. Then on the face of it, it is not true?—A. It would certainly be untrue on the face of it as it reads now. But as I stated—

By Mr. HALL:

Q. I want to ask you to tell this committee what this unnamed individual told you about any meeting.—A. Well, sir, he told me that Colonel Young had taken these rooms—I did not know it—and that these gentlemen had been there to meet him, and that Mr. Garland was there. That is the substance of his statement.

Q. Did he tell you when that happened?—A. It was at the time these rooms were taken.

Q. Did he tell you that it was on the 1st of September?—A. No, sir; he told me at the time the rooms were taken, whenever that was.

Q. Then the date that is put in there was a date put there by yourself?—A. It seems to be a mistake, that is all. I may have written it, and it may have appeared August and September when it should have been July and August.

Q. And you think the mistake is in the month of August in the first instance, and in the month of September in the next?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You answered me a little while ago, if I remember correctly, that you were in the very process of preparing this article at that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How could you make a mistake of that kind?—A. Well, a man frequently writes a word wrong when he is writing a great deal and overlooks it, and the printers overlook it, and it gets into print in that way wrong. I have done it myself a hundred times—written the wrong date.

Q. When you are writing about an event that has transpired you often put it as occurring in the month before that?—A. I might do it.

Mr. RANNEY. Let me see. I do not want any assumption that is wrong. Your article says: "On the 29th of August, Mr. Van Benthuyzen and Mr. C. P. Huntington, representing the lately defeated National Company, registered at the Ebbitt House in Washington. On the next day Colonel Casey Young and Colonel Gantt, representing the Pan Company, stopped at the same place, as did Mr. Bradley T. Johnson, the president of the local Pan Company in Baltimore. That these gentlemen were in consultation together is well known." Then you say, "On the 1st of September, Colonel Casey Young secured private apartments at 1327 G street, a most central locality, within two squares of the Ebbitt, Riggs, and Willards." And you do not say that time was the time the Attorney-General visited them. Then you say, in the next paragraph, "In a few days all the parties to these conferences, Messrs. Young, Gantt, Van Benthuyzen, Huntington, and Johnson went to their respective homes." Then it is, and subsequently, you speak about the Attorney-General visiting there. These together show exactly when these men left. They left after the conferences following immediately the "29th of August," you got it. That is, July instead of August. But you go on afterwards to say, "Promptly on the 1st of September Colonel Young arrived in this city and stopped at Wormley's. Private rooms were not needed on this occasion." So that he had no private rooms, then. And you state also that Mr. Garland left on the 27th of August.

The WITNESS. That was directly after what you have read there.

Mr. RANNEY. There is no question about that, reading the whole article, that you got August instead of July, and September instead of August. It is a mere verbal error, that is all. Take the whole article together, supposing you are right in your dates. You recorded facts; there were no errors of intention. The error is in the interest of Mr. Garland and the Pan-Electric people, and not in the interest of any opposite theory.

Mr. OATES. I will make my comments on it hereafter, not now.

Mr. RANNEY. I am not commenting on it, but I am explaining what the newspapers themselves show, because it says further, "Attorney-General Garland left for Arkansas on the 27th of August." Then you say that on the 1st of September Colonel Young arrived and stopped at Wormley's and no rooms were needed on that occasion. Then you say, "On the 2nd, Colonel Casey Young and Senator Harris called upon the Solicitor General, finding there the application which had arrived that morning."

Mr. OATES. If you are through, Mr. Ranney, on that point, the examination of the witness may be resumed.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. When did you learn of these interviews with the Attorney-General?

The WITNESS. Which interviews?

Mr. RANNEY. About their calling on the Attorney-General?—A. I think I saw it in the papers.

Mr. RANNEY. That is all.

Mr. OATES. I believe the next thing before the committee is to take some action upon Mr. Ranney's motion to report the witness to the House for refusing to answer the question put to him.

Mr. HALL. I desire to ask this one question. [To the witness:] When did you first learn that the Bell Company did not want to have anything to do with the publication of these articles?—A. I never learned it. I did not know whether they were published or not. I never had any communication with the Bell Company.

Q. Did you not understand while engaged in the preparation of this article that the Bell Company would not have anything to do with the publication of it?—A. I had no communication with the Bell Company.

Q. I did not ask you that. Did you not understand that the Bell Company would not have anything to do with the publishing of it?—A. I did not understand any such thing, because I could not possibly have had any communication about it.

Q. Didn't you get that information from General Sypher?—A. No, sir.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Clerk, will you call the roll of the committee?—As many as are in favor of the motion of Mr. Ranney that we report this witness to the House to be dealt with for contempt in refusing to answer the question put to him, will, as their names are called, say aye, and those opposed, no.

Mr. RANNEY. I think before you put that motion, a formal resolution should be prepared stating the point involved and then the question put, and have the witness decline to answer it. Perhaps the question had better be reserved for the present as the witness says he will see the party and ask him to allow his name to be used, and in the mean time we can prepare the resolution.

The WITNESS. Are you through with me to-day?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes, until you see that man, to see whether he will allow you to give as his name.

The WITNESS. I am not going to run away.

Mr. OATES. Wait a moment.

Mr. RANNEY. I believe the proper way is to prepare a formal resolution.

Mr. OATES. It seemed to me that the committee might act, and if they voted an instruction to any member of it, that then there could be the preparation of a report of the fact to the House showing the point in the case, and the questions put, which we can consider.

Mr. RANNEY. I withdraw my motion for the present until the proper resolution is prepared.

Mr. HALL. I think we had better have an executive session on the subject.

Mr. RANNEY. I will withdraw my motion for the present, to be followed by a formal resolution if the witness does not get permission to give the name of the party.

Mr. OATES. Will you prepare the resolution, Mr. Ranney?

Mr. RANNEY. Some of us will. Perhaps there will be no occasion if he gets the permission of the person. I think he ought to give us the name. I see no reasonable excuse for a refusal.

Mr. OATES (to the witness). Mr. Hill, you can leave until the next meeting of the committee, when the matter will be put in due form.

The WITNESS. Will the committee notify me when they are ready to proceed?

Mr. OATES. I do not know; I have not taken the sense of the committee as to when we shall meet again.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not find in this article where it is stated that the Attorney-General attended this interview.

Mr. EDEN. The statement is that among the callers on Colonel Young while these conferences were being held was the Attorney-General. He was a visitor. It does not state that he attended the conferences.

Mr. RANNEY. It does not state that he called on them on G st.

Mr. EDEN. It says, "At these rooms a number of conferences were held amongst the parties named above, and among the callers upon Colonel Young while these conferences were being held, was Attorney-General Garland."

Mr. RANNEY. The conferences with these gentlemen were not here. He says they left immediately.

The WITNESS. This article does not state that the Attorney-General attended them at all?

Mr. OATES. It states: "At these rooms a number of conferences were held amongst the parties named above, and among the callers upon Colonel Young while these conferences were being held was Attorney-General Garland."

The WITNESS. The article in the World does not state that.

Mr. RANNEY. Let me see that article in the World.

Mr. HALL. That paper is not in evidence.

The WITNESS. I make the same corrections that I made to Mr. Dana; that I could not verify the fact.

Mr. RANNEY. That statement is not published in the World article at all.

Mr. HALL. But it was contained in the original manuscript.

The WITNESS. Yes, and I stated to Mr. Dana that I could not verify the fact, and therefore I suppose he took it out of the article.

Mr. RANNEY. I observe that it was not published in the World, and I want that fact noted in the record.

Mr. OATES. I do not think we had better note any fact until we compare it and see what it is.

Mr. RANNEY. I think we had better have the article as printed in the World go into the record, and then we will all have a chance to see what the paper itself shows. That sentence is not in the article as published in the World. This copy of the World article was handed to me by the reporter of the World. He handed it to me, and I think Mr. Boyle has one likewise.

Mr. OATES. Put it in evidence; that is the best way. Let it go in evidence.

The article in question is as follows:

SPECULATIVE STATESMEN.

THE TRUE HISTORY OF THE PAN-ELECTRIC TELEPHONE COMPANY—MOST CURIOUS ORGANIZATION OF CONGRESSMEN AND POLITICIANS—MILLIONS OF STOCK GIVEN AWAY FOR "MORAL" INFLUENCE OR "SERVICES"—ATTORNEY-GENERAL GARLAND'S GREAT INTEREST IN THE SCHEME—OTHER SENATORS AND HEADS OF DEPARTMENTS WHO HOLD FUTURE FORTUNES IN STOCK—SINGULAR IDENTITY OF POLITICIANS, OFFICE-HOLDERS, AND STOCKHOLDERS.

[Special to the World.]

WASHINGTON, January 27.

The Pan-Electric Telephone Company is founded upon inventions and patents issued to J. Harris Rogers, formerly of Memphis, Tenn., but now a resident of Washington City, and it will, therefore, be not amiss before commencing its history to say a few words as to its antecedents. The Hon. Casey Young was elected to represent the Tenth Tennessee district as a Representative to the Forty-fourth Congress. After taking his seat, in December, 1875, he succeeded in having Mr. J. Harris Rogers appointed electrician of the House of Representatives. Whilst in that position Mr. Rogers claims to have made a number of discoveries in telephony and telegraphy, which, after his retirement from office, he patented. These patents were transferred to an organization known as the "Secret Telephone Company," and this company, after the lapse of some years, transferred its patents to the National Improved Telephone Company.

After the sale of his patents, Mr. Rogers continued his experiments in electrical matters, and after a time secured other patents. Upon these latter patents a company was formed by Mr. Rogers and his father, Dr. J. Webb Rogers, called the "Pan-Electric Company," which was located in the city of New York.

The management of the "Pan-Electric" failed to attract capitalists as investors in its stock, and the Messrs. Rogers bethought them of the old patron of the inventor, Col. Casey Young, who was again in Congress.

In the spring and summer of 1883 the organization of a new company was determined on. Dr. J. Webb Rogers, a gentleman of ability, standing, and culture, and an enthusiastic believer in the genius of his son, J. Harris Rogers, saw the advantages that a company controlled by men of high political position and character would have over any other in the event a postal telegraph bill should become a law. He knew Senators Harris, of Tennessee, and Garland, of Arkansas, two Senators than whom none stood higher in the South, and also Col. J. D. C. Atkins, one of the leading Democratic Representatives from the South, who had for years been chairman of the Appropriation Committee. All these gentlemen agreed to take an interest in the organization of the company, and as this was to be an enterprise appealing to the South for its political aid, it was now only necessary to secure a distinguished general to put at the head of it. This was done by getting Gen. Joseph E. Johnston, and the combination was complete.

It was determined to divide the telegraphic and telephonic inventions and form two companies, and accordingly there was organized in the spring of 1883 "The Pan-Electric Telephone Company" and "The Pan-Electric Telegraph Company."

These companies were identical in their stock, stockholders, organization, and officers, so that a statement as to the one covers the other.

The Pan-Electric Telephone Company has $5,000,000 capital stock, divided into shares of $1,000 each; these shares were held originally by the following named persons:

J. E. Johnston.....	$500, 000
Isham G. Harris.....	500, 000
A. H. Garland	500, 000
Casey Young.....	500, 000
J. D. C. Atkins	500, 000
J. Harris Rogers	2, 000, 000
The Company.....	500, 000

It will be observed that these five gentlemen each held one-tenth of the stock, but knowing the vagaries of inventors, they required that another tenth, making a majority, should be put under their control, so that they could have the business in their own hands. This $500,000 worth of company stock belonged to the holders of the other shares in proportion to their holdings, but was controlled by the board of directors and could be used in any way it saw fit. These directors were old politicians and had not forgotten that notable saying of Oakes Ames as to "placing stock where it would do most good."

The board of directors of the company was composed of Joseph E. Johnston, Isham G. Harris, A. H. Garland, Casey Young, J. D. C. Atkins, and J. Harris Rogers. The officers were: Joseph E. Johnston, president; Isham G. Harris, vice-president; Casey Young, secretary and treasurer; A. H. Garland, attorney; J. Harris Rogers, electrician.

Messrs. Johnston, Harris, and Young were made an executive committee with all the powers of the full board.

The telephone company was chartered by the State of Tennessee, with its principal office in Memphis and another in Washington City. Under the laws of that State as to corporations, all that was necessary to be paid in of the five millions capital stock was the fee to the secretary of state for using his seal, amounting in this case to $4.50.

The agreement by which these gentlemen became the owners of the Rogers patents was that they should put up what money was necessary to take out patents, manufacture telephonic instruments, and to put up experimental wires.

All this work was done in the summer of 1883.

In November, 1883, the incorporators of the Pan Company were assembled in Washington, and as the experiments had been pronounced successful, the directors determined to commence operations. In the mean time Mr. Rogers had disposed of one-third of his interest, $333,333, to Col. Robert F. Looney, a lawyer and speculator, of Memphis, Tenn., and he was added to the board of directors, and took an active part in its management. The directors determined to issue licenses to local companies; that is, sell territory in which the Pan Electric instruments were to be used.

The terms upon which these sales were to be made were agreed upon and are as follows: "Forty per cent. of the capital stock of the local company to be held by the Pan Company; all instruments to be furnished by the Pan Company at a stated price. A royalty of $10 per annum to be paid by the local company on each instrument; a bonus in cash to be paid by each local company."

Under these conditions eight local companies were formed; one for Pennsylvania, with the Hon. Robert Klotz, formerly in Congress, as the principal promoter, General Frank Armstrong, now Indian Inspector, being the secretary; one in Baltimore, the Hon. Eli J. Henkle, formerly in Congress, being the promoter, to which the States of Maryland, Virginia, and the District of Columbia was sold; one in Saint Louis for Missouri; one in Wisconsin; one in Tennessee; one in Alabama, of which Gen. Upshur, now chief clerk of the Indian Bureau, was the promoter; one in Texas, and one in Louisiana. The two first-named companies were not required to pay any bonus, but in all their contracts the Pan Company agreed to defend the validity of its patents at its own expense.

An opinion was asked for and given by the attorney of the company, Senator Garland, as to the validity of the patents, which reads as follows:

NATIONAL HOTEL,
Washington, D. C., January 4, 1884.

Hon. A. H. GARLAND:

DEAR SIR: My attention has been called to the stock of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company as an investment. I therefore desire your opinion as to whether the telephone owned by said company or any part of it is an infringement on what is known as the Bell Telephone?

Respectfully,

D. E. MEYERS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 5, 1884.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your question propounded in the note hereto attached, I beg to say I have given the subject referred to much attention and have closely examined several opinions delivered by different courts in controversies between the Bell Telephone Company, Dolbear, Spencer Ghegan, and others, and I am clearly of opinion that the Pan-Electric, named by you, in no wise infringes the Bell Telephone. From the earliest decisions of our courts to the present, although inventions may in their general principles be alike, yet if in their operation and working there is an essential or material difference, there is no conflict to amount to an infringement. This is recognized in the historic case of O'Reilly vs. Norse, 15 How., U. S. Rep., 62, and in numerous decisions since that; but more clearly, and with more direct application to the matter now in hand, in Clough vs. Manufacturing Company, 106 U. S. Reps., 178 (October term United States Supreme Court, 1882).

Without attempting any minute detail touching the inventions in question, I am satisfied—thoroughly so—that the difference between them is wider and more distinct than that recognized by the court in the case 106 U. S. Reps., Sup.

The courts hold that a "substantial departure" from a former invention is patentable without infringing. (Duff vs. Sterling Pump Company, 107 U. S. Reps., 636.)

This, in my judgment, is more than enough to insure the Pan-Electric Telephone from any charge of infringement of the Bell Telephone. Very truly, &c.,

A. H. GARLAND.

D. E. MYERS, Esq.

When the first local company paid its bonus of $10,000, the directors proceeded to pay back the sums expended by themselves in paying for patents, experiments, &c. This amounted to $275 for each of the five, showing that of the $5,000,000 capital stock, there never was paid in but $1,375, being a little more than one-fortieth of 1 per cent.

After this money was paid back the directors next proceeded to divide the remainder of the $10,000 as a dividend to the stockholders; the amount received by each holder of one-tenth of the stock being little less than $600.

The $500,000 of company stock had in the mean time been partially distributed, one hundred shares going to ex-Gov. John C. Brown, of Tennessee, now resident in St. Louis, and principal attorney for what is known as "the Gould system of Southwestern railways." Other sums were given or sold to other parties, having, or supposed to have, either local or national influence, Senators Vest, of Missouri, and Vance, of North Carolina, each getting a portion.

Mr. Rogers, for reasons not necessary to explain, was removed from the position of electrician, and Dr. J. E. Harlan was given that place.

At the beginning of the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress a brother of Senator Vance, Mr. R. B. Vance, then a Representative from North Carolina, introduced a bill in the House of Representatives giving the Attorney-General power to bring suit upon application to vacate patents. This bill was referred to a committee which reported in favor of its passage, saying in its report that since 1836 the Attorney-General had not been intrusted with this power. The bill passed the House of Representatives almost unnoticed, but was never reported from the Senate Committee on Patents.

It might make an interesting newspaper article if the names of the parties who went before this Committee on Patents to advocate the passage of this bill could be given.

At the same time with the bill above spoken of there were introduced into the House several postal-telegraph bills, all of which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, of which the Hon. H. D. Money, of Mississippi, was chairman. These bills created a vigorous fight, and the result was no legislation. The interest of the Pan Company in this fight can best be told by Dr. J. Webb Rogers himself. In the winter of 1883, in a conversation with a gentleman whom he was trying to get interested in the Pan companies, and who asked why so many politicians had been put into the companies instead of well-known business men, Dr. Rogers said: "You do not understand our idea; we intend to get a postal telegraph established and political influence will give us the control of that. Then we will have the grandest monopoly in the world."

But to return to the movements of the Pan directors in a business way. Contracts continued to be made in the spring of 1884 until eight local companies, as before stated, were organized. As these companies paid in the required bonus, the money was paid out to the stockholders as dividends, two being declared in July of $1.50 per share, giving each of the original promoters, Garland, Johnston, Harris, Young, and Atkins $750 at each division, or $1,500 in that month. Another dividend of the same size was declared later, aggregating about $3,000 profit to each of these gentlemen within eighteen months upon an investment of $275 each.

The Pennsylvania Company, under the energetic handling of Mr. Klotz, had gotten so far along that the Bell Company interfered and asked for an injunction, upon the ground that the Rogers patents were an infringement upon the Bell patents. Under its contract the Pan Company had to defend this suit, and its attorneys commenced preparation to do so.

In the mean time an episode had occurred in New Orleans. A nephew of Col. Looney had gone to that place to promote a local company to work under the Pan-Electric. A Mr. Van Benthuyzen had been suggested as "the most fit and proper" person to manage the business, but it seemed that he, in connection with Mr. C. P. Huntington, of Mississippi, and other parties had become the owners of the first patents of Rogers, sold by him to the "Secret Telephone Company," and that a company was organized to work these and other patents under the name of the "National Improved Telephone Company." This company claims that it owned by prior purchase all the inventions of J. Harris Rogers and that the Pan Company was using what belonged to them. There was a bitter fight, which resulted in driving the Pan Company out of New Orleans.

The stopping of the Pennsylvania Company by legal process acted as a damper upon purchasers, and there were no more victims coming forward with their bonuses, so that dividends in the Pan Company ceased.

When all that could be had been done towards securing high places for its members, the Pan Company could once more look after its local interests.

The case in Philadelphia had been allowed to go by default, and various efforts had been made to get a case at Saint Louis or Memphis, but had failed.

Just at this juncture an occasion was offered which was eagerly seized upon by the shrewd politicians who controlled the Pan Company.

The National Improved Telephone Company had established itself in Pittsburg and had been promptly enjoined by the Bell Company. At once the Pan Company proposed to aid it in defending the suit. After some conferences this proposal was accepted. The terms of compromise between the two companies are not known, but the fact is known that instead of fighting each other as before, these companies had joined forces to fight the Bell Company. All the preparations made by the attorneys of the Pan Company were given to the National for its fight at Pittsburg. Col. Young, with Col. George Gantt, of Memphis, one of the leading lawyers of that city, came to Washington and after a meeting of the Pan directors, went to Pittsburg to attend the trial on the 6th, 7th, and 8th of July. The decision of the court that it would not hear arguments, but would follow the precedent established by the courts and grant the injunction, destroyed the well-laid plans of the two companies and left them adrift.

The leading spirits in the Pan-Electric Company are Senator Isham G. Harris and Col. Casey Young, of Tennessee. Both these gentlemen are bold and fearless. They had a great stake at interest, and it was doubtless through their advice that the next card was played. They knew nothing of the Fabian policy, which as a general the president of the company understood so well, but they knew how to make a downright attack.

Dr. Rogers says that he called on Attorney-General Garland and asked him to commence proceedings against the Bell Company to vacate its patents, and the Attorney-General refused because of his interest in the Pan Company.

This has not been denied. Mr. Garland himself tells of the call made by Senator Harris, Col. Young and others, and of his refusal to act.

If the laws of the country justified such a suit the refusal of the Attorney-General to bring it because Mr. Garland held stock in a rival company is absolutely unjustifiable. His duty—his sworn duty—was to execute the law as he understood it. If the Bell Telephone Company was, as alleged, using a patent fraudulently issued, no personal consideration should have kept the Attorney-General of the United States from moving to set that patent aside if there was any statute authorizing such a suit.

But he refused to bring the suit.

It will be remembered by every one who reads the daily papers that when plans were being published of how the President and members of the Cabinet were going to spend their vacations, the facts being obtained directly from the parties, that it was announced that Attorney-General Garland would take no vacation, remaining in or near Washington.

On the 29th of August Mr. Van Benthuyzen and Mr. C. P. Huntington, representing the lately defeated National Company, registered at the Ebbitt House in Washington. On the next day Col. Casey Young and Col. Gantt, representing the Pan Company, stopped at the same place, as did Mr. Bradley T. Johnson, the president of the local Pan Company in Baltimore. That these gentlemen were in consultation together is well known. On the 1st of September Col. Casey Young secured private apartments at 1327 G street, a most central locality, within two squares of the Ebbitt, Riggs, and Willards.

In a few days all the parties to these conferences, Messrs. Young, Gantt, Van Benthuyzen, Huntington, and Johnson, went to their respective homes.

The Bell Telephone Company of Boston commenced suit in Baltimore against the local Pan Company for infringement of its patents. Immediately the local Pan Company of Memphis, Tenn., commenced suit against the local Bell Company of the same place for infringement of its patents. In the one instance the parent company brought the suit for the benefit of its licensees; in the other instance the local company brought the suit.

In his letter published in the New York Tribune of Sept. 30, in defense of the Attorney-General, Dr. Rogers says: "Col. Young informed me and my son that the Attorney-General had agreed that a suit should be brought by the Solicitor-General against the Bell Telephone Company at the instance of the National Improved Company." That statement has never been denied by any of the parties.

Attorney-General Garland left for Arkansas on the 27th of August. Promptly on the first of September Col. Young arrived in this city and stopped at Wormley's. Private rooms were not needed on this occasion. On the second, Col. Casey Young and Senator Harris called upon the Solicitor-General, finding there the application which had arrived that morning, made by the district attorney for the western district of Tennessee, to bring suit in Memphis to vacate the Bell patents. This application was granted at once, and without reference or consideration, for Solicitor-General Goode informed Col. Young the next morning that the order had been forwarded to commence the suit. Mr. Goode was acting Attorney-General on the 2d day of September, and had all the routine work of the Department of Justice to perform; had to receive visitors who came on business to see the Attorney-General, and yet he had time to consider (?) a question involving millions, examine the papers in the case, determine upon the propriety of the suit, see that authority existed to bring it, and order the commencement of it, all within one working day of seven hours. Such prompt action has hardly ever been paralleled in a Government office. And Mr. Goode by his action showed that he was not afraid to assume responsibility. A committee of Congress, composed of lawyers, had reported little more than a year before that the Attorney-General had no power to bring such suit, as Mr. McCorry, district attorney for Tennessee, had requested authority to bring. Mr. Goode probably did not know that such a report was in existence, or, if he did, assumed to know more as to the powers of the Attorney-General than Congress did.

But to return to our narrative.

Each one of the companies holding under the Pan Company, except the Pennsylvania and Baltimore, paid a bonus for its privilege and besides paid $10 each for all the telephone instruments it used in its "plants." In addition these companies paid all the expenses of "a plant." All this was an actual cash outlay, varying in amount according to the size of the "plant" and the number of instruments purchased. The bonus in each case was the same, $10,000. Then 40 per cent. of the capital stock of each of these companies was reserved for the Pan Company, and it paid no part of the "bonus" or the cost of the "plant" and instruments.

For this expenditure the local companies received a license to use the Pan-Electric telephones and a guarantee of protection in using them.

To fully understand the interest which Attorney-General Garland had in breaking down the Bell patent it will be necessary to recapitulate a little.

First, there was his $500,000 stock in the Pan Telephone Company—one-tenth of the whole company was his. Then there is the $40,000,000 capital stock of the license companies, of which 40 per cent., or $16,000,000, belongs to the Pan Company—of this one-tenth, or $1,600,000, belongs to Attorney-General Garland. But this is not all, nor even a small part of what would result from the breaking down of the Bell patents. In that event there would not be eight, but at least fifty companies, with capital stocks averaging $5,000,000 each, that would seek licenses from the Pan-Electric Company. Two hundred and fifty million dollars is an exceedingly small estimate of the amount at which the companies using the Pan-Electric telephones would be capitalized if the Bell patent was invalidated. Forty per cent., or $100,000,000 of this stock, would belong to the Pan Company—one-tenth of that, or $10,000,000, would be the property of Attorney-General Garland. Paying only 5 per cent., and this is a small allowance, he would have an income of over $500,000, and that without being out one dollar.

Senator Harris and Col. Young, Gen. Johnston and Commissioner Atkins, Dr. Rogers and Col. Looney would each have as much or more.

There was another potent reason working upon these parties one and all. The laws of the country are particularly severe on bogus corporations which obtain money without giving an equivalent, and though corporations are without souls or bodies, the men who compose them are not, and hence, unless the Bell patents could be broken down and declared invalid, the men who had invested their money in the 60 per cent. of the local companies which had been licensed by the Pan Company, which had paid bonuses, built plants, bought telephones which were without value, would be apt to call upon the parties who had induced and profited by these expenditures; made upon false statements as to law and facts, to make good the losses.

There was ruin both in fortune and fame upon the one side and almost unbounded wealth upon the other. It was worth stretching the law and the power of the Government to secure the one and prevent the other.

In the formation of the local companies, particularly in the East, where it was to be expected that the Bell Company would first assert its rights, particular care was had by the Pan Company to secure local political strength. Dr. Eli J. Henkle, an ex-member of Congress and a leading Democrat of Baltimore, was intrusted with the formation of the company that was to control the cities of Baltimore and Washington. Gen. Bradley T. Johnston, one of the most popular of the Southern leaders in Maryland, was made president of the company.

In the Pennsylvania company, Mr. Robert Klotz, a leading German citizen and an ex-member of Congress, was selected to organize the company. In the South and West the political magnates who controlled the parent company knew their power was supreme and only required money from their licenses, furnishing the political influence themselves.

The list of the names of the leading stockholders and officers in this company reads almost like a page from the Government Blue Book :

A. H. Garland, Attorney-General.
Joseph E. Johnston, Railroad Commissioner.
J. D. C. Atkins, Indian Commissioner.
Isham G. Harris, U. S. S., Tennessee.
George G. Vest, U. S. S., Missouri.
Zebulon G. Vance, U. S. S., North Carolina.
Robert Klotz, ex-M. C., Pennsylvania.
Eli J. Henkle, ex-M. C., Maryland.
Casey Young, ex-M. C., Tennessee.
Mr. Upshaw, Chief Clerk, Indian Bureau.
Frank Armstrong, Indian Inspector.
John C. Brown, ex-gov., Tennessee.

Mr. HALL. I want to ask one question about whether this paper has been identified in the evidence in any way—I mean this transcript from the books of the telephone company.

Mr. RANNEY. Yes, I think it has been.

Mr. HALL (to the witness). I understand this is a transcript from the books of the telephone company which you alluded to in your testimony.

The WITNESS (Mr. HILL). It is the paper that I alluded to, but it is not a transcript from the books. It is an incorrect paper which I made a mistake in, and found out afterwards and it was thrown among my papers.

Q. Did you produce it before the committee?—A. I gave it to Mr. Crawford as a verification of the statement I had made of the amount of stock held by the parties.
Mr. RANNEY. It was so stated by Mr. Crawford when he gave it to the chairman.

Hon. CASEY YOUNG was then recalled and further examined.

By Mr. OATES :

Q. Did you ever occupy rooms at No. 1327 G street, in this city?

The WITNESS. Mr. Chairman, I prefer not to be examined on that subject until the committee gets through with the prosecution of the line of inquiry it is on; I did occupy the rooms.

Mr. OATES. The committee desires to inquire into the matter at this point.

Mr. RANNEY. It seems to me that the committee should be the judge of that.

The WITNESS. I have already answered the question that I occupied the rooms.

Q. When did you take those rooms?—A. I took those rooms first in November, 1875, and I occupied them at intervals from that time up to some time after that period there.

Q. November, 1875?—A. Yes, sir; when I first came on to the Forty-fourth Congress I occupied those rooms, and I occupied them for two years, and occasionally at intervals after that time.

Q. Did you occupy them last year?—A. Yes, sir; at the time stated there in that article.

Q. It is stated here that you took them on the 1st day of September.—A. I could not state that that was the exact date when I took them or not, but it was some time about that time.

Q. Do you know whether it was the 1st of August or September?—A. It was the 1st of August, I am inclined to think. That is my recollection now.

Q. While you occupied those rooms, did Colonel Gantt, Mr. Huntington, Mr. Van Benthuyzen, and General Bradley T. Johnson visit you at your rooms and have conferences with you touching these matters?—A. Neither Mr. Van Benthuyzen, Colonel Gantt, nor Mr. Huntington had their foot in those rooms while I was there, and my present recollection is that I did not occupy the rooms until all of them had left the city. It is my best recollection that General Bradley T. Johnson was not there, but I could not say that positively. I do not think he was there, but he may have been.

Q. Do you know at what date Mr. Garland left Washington to go to Arkansas?—A. I only know from what I saw in the newspapers. It was some time in the latter part of August. As I was on my way here in August I saw in a newspaper in Cincinnati that he had left. I did not know anything about it, definitely.

Q. You went there the 1st of August, you think?—A. I am not certain about the exact date.

Q. You think that is the date?—A. I think it was a little after that. I think it was probably about the 2nd or 3rd of August.

Q. From the time of your occupancy of the rooms there from the 1st of August up to the 27th of that month, did Attorney-General Garland visit you at any conference held there?—A. Attorney-General Garland never had his foot in my room but once that I am aware of.

Q. And was that time you speak of while you were at No. 1327 G street?—A. No, sir; it was not. I never saw him there. It was at 515 14th street.

Q. He never did visit you at your rooms there?—A. No, sir; he never did, and I do not think a single one of the parties mention in that article came near that room while I was there. My recollection is that I staid at the hotel, the Ebbitt House, until all those gentlemen returned home, and, having been in the habit of occupying that room, it being less expense than the Ebbitt House, I went there. General Bradley T. Johnson lives at Baltimore, and he may have come over here during the time I stayed at that room, and possibly called to see me.

Q. Did you return here the 1st of September?—A. I returned here—I do not recollect the date. I had a memorandum when I was testifying before. I think it was about that time. But then I stopped at Wormley's.

Q. You say you stopped at Wormley's then?—A. Yes, sir; my recollection is that I only stayed there three or four days, I don't recollect.

By Mr. RANNEY :

Q. This is true, is it not: That when you left the Ebbitt House and gave up your room, you went to this room on G street?

The WITNESS. When I gave up what room?

Mr. RANNEY. Your room at the Ebbitt House.

A. Yes, when I left the Ebbitt I went there.

Q. You went to this room. Where did you take your meals after that while you were at these rooms?—A. I don't recollect whether I took them at some restaurant, or in the house, or at the Ebbitt House. I rather think I took them in the house there; I am not certain about that.

Q. How many rooms did you have there on G street?—A. I had two, a sleeping room and a parlor.

Q. So that you did have a parlor where you could receive persons if you wanted to?—A. Oh, yes, sir.

Q. Have you looked at the Ebbitt House books to see when you left there?—A. No, sir.

Q. I find in the books (I had the clerk look it up for me) that you left the Ebbitt House on the 1st of August.—A. It is possible.

Q. If that is so, you went there.—A. I don't recollect that I went anywhere else.

Q. I understand you to have said that you left Washington after that on the 2d of August, if I recollect your previous testimony.—A. What I stated before was about correct. I had a memorandum before me then.

Q. Mr. Van Benthuyzen says that he left on the 4th of August, so that he was here three days after you took the room on G street.—A. That may be, but it is my recollection that I did not go there until they all had left. Of course, my recollection is not distinct now, within a day or two.

Q. The dates on the Ebbitt House register will show that he left on the 4th of August.—A. That may be. It is my recollection that Colonel Gantt and Mr. Huntington had gone before I left. It is possible they may not have gone for a day or two. I feel quite certain that Colonel Gantt did, because the night I went around there I think I settled his bill at the Ebbitt House. Perhaps I may have been misled into supposing that they all left at the same time.

Q. You may be right about it. I do not know when Colonel Gantt left, as shown by the books.—A. I have not examined the books.

Q. Mr. Van Benthuyzen testifies that he left on the 4th of August.—A. I remember now that he says he left on the 4th.

Q. Where was he when he gave you that agreement of the 4th of August?—A. I think it was handed to me in the Ebbitt House.

Q. Who did visit you while you were living in G street?—A. I could not tell you now; I do not remember anybody. Of course, I cannot remember who visited me during the time I was there.

Q. You did not have a parlor and bed-room without having somebody come to see you?—A. I might have done it. I might have had the whole building without anybody coming to see me. I did not take it for the purpose of receiving visitors.

Q. What is your recollection about it?

The WITNESS. About what?

Mr. RANNEY. About anybody visiting you.

A. I have not any recollection about it at all.

Q. You have no recollection of General Bradley T. Johnson visiting you?—A. No. He may have come there; I do not remember.

Q. He may or may not. You have no recollection whether he did or did not come?—A. No; I have not.

Q. Why, then, should you have recollected whether Mr. Van Benthuyzen did or did not come there during the three or four days that he remained here?—A. I have no distinct recollection; I could not swear that he did. I have no recollection of his coming, and do not think that he did.

Q. Are you able to swear that Colonel Gantt did not come there?—A. I will not swear that anybody did not come there. I say I have no recollection of it or of a single one of those persons entering the room while I was there.

Q. And you have no recollection of Mr. Huntington's coming there?—A. I answer about Mr. Huntington the same as in regard to the balance of them.

Q. During those three days, while you were here in Washington, were you engaged in the preparation for the defense of the suit at Baltimore to occur on the 15th of September?

The WITNESS. The defense of the suit?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

A. No, I cannot say that I did anything about the defense of that suit. My recollection is that it had been deferred in some way or other. I did very little about the defense of that suit. I never was there but once, and I think that was in October.

Q. What were you doing during those six days that you remained here in August?—A. I could not tell you to save my life all I was doing here; I don't remember.

Q. You do not know anything you were doing?—A. I do not remember anything in particular that I was doing. I remember that I would have started home a day before I did, or one or two days before, but I missed a sleeping-car, and probably remained one day longer on that account, and I cannot call to mind now any particular thing I was engaged in then.

Q. Can't you remember anything you did in the way of business during those six days?—A. Will you allow me to ask you a question, and then I will answer yours?

Q. I am not under examination.—A. I know, but I want to give an illustration. I want to ask you if you remember—

Mr. RANNEY. If you will pardon me, with all respect—

The WITNESS. I will pardon you, of course.

Mr. RANNEY. I would like the fact then.

The WITNESS. Let me ask you a question to illustrate the absurdity of your question that I could remember everything I did in six days a year ago. No, I cannot remember any such thing as that.

Q. You remember what occurred at the Attorney-General's office?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. If you did anything more, any business in which you were engaged in those six days, why shouldn't you remember that just as well?—A. If I had gone back to his office and attended to any business there I presume I should have remembered it.

Q. If you had attended to any business with General Bradley T. Johnson would you not have remembered it too?—A. I think if I had attended to anything of any great importance I should have remembered it, but I do not.

Q. You cannot remember, so as to state to the committee, any business that you did or attended to from the 1st of August until you went away on the 7th?—A. No, sir; I will not try to answer that question. If you will call my attention to any particular thing I will answer, but I won't answer any such question as that.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. Let me ask you a question. Was there any conference held at your room about the business of the Pan Electric Company or the National Improved Company, or both, during that time?—A. There was no conference unless some one of those gentlemen may have dropped in there and incidentally talked about it. There was no conference had there.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Did Dr. Rogers and his son come to your room on G street?—A. I could not remember.

Q. You will not swear that they did or did not?—A. No, sir; I will not.

Q. Don't you remember their coming there and your going out when they had a buggy at the door and riding down to Mr. Marble's?—A. I remember either going in a buggy with him from my room or from his house to Mr. Marble's; I don't remember which.

Q. Didn't you start from your door?—A. I cannot remember whether I started from his house or mine, but I do remember very distinctly going to Mr. Marble's office with Harry Rogers; and now, since you have called my attention to it, that was one of the things I was attending to. It was about a patent that he had applied for. That was one of the things I was looking after during that six days.

Q. Didn't they see you in your room about it?

The WITNESS. Didn't who see me?

Mr. RANNEY. The Rogerses.

A. I presume he came in when he came down there; I don't remember whether he drove up to the door and I went out, or whether he came in.

Q. If you are not able to state as to these individuals with more positiveness, why are you able to state that Mr. Van Benthuyzen, Mr. Huntington, and Colonel Gannt did not come there?—A. Your question is absurd. I will not answer as to what I did in general. If you will ask me about any particular thing I will answer it. I had forgotten he had come until you had called my attention to it.

Q. You may have forgotten about the others?—A. Yes, sir, possibly; I do not think I am mistaken about their coming there and having conferences; they may have dropped in.

Q. Did Mr. Van Benthuyzen come and bring the agreement of the 4th of August?—A. I cannot remember whether he came there and handed it me, or handed it to me at the hotel. I think he handed it to me at the Ebbitt House, but I cannot remember.

Q. Were you present at the conference at the Ebbitt House after the interview with the Attorney-General of the 31st of July?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did that interview last?—A. Oh, I was there all day. I could not say it was an interview, particularly. The gentlemen all had rooms near by, and they were together most of the time in Mr. Van Benthuyzen's room and parlors.

Q. Did you hear Mr. Von Briesen's statement of that conference?—A. Yesterday? Yes, sir.

Q. And of the talk you had then in regard to the place where the Government suit should be brought?

Mr. EDEN. I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the witness was examined very fully in reference to the conferences at the Ebbitt House when he testified before, and I supposed that the members of the committee asked all the questions that they thought were necessary. It does not occur to me that it is necessary to take up time by going over that same thing again, if we are ever going to have an end to this investigation.

Mr. RANNEY. This is a particular conference which I did not bring out, and upon which I did not interrogate the witness before.

Mr. EDEN. This is about a conference which was not held at the Ebbitt House at all.

Mr. RANNEY. This is a conference about which I did not interrogate him. As to the remark of the gentleman as to when this investigation is coming to an end, I will say that I desire to bring it to an end as soon as any body, but I do not mean to have it come to an end, if I can help it, until I get through with it. I wait for the ruling of the chair.

Mr. OATES. Whenever there is any specific objection there will a ruling by the chair.

Mr. RANNEY. It is about this specific interview which was testified to by Mr. Von Briesen that I want to inquire.

The WITNESS. I think I stated all about it in my testimony in my examination-in-chief.

Mr. RANNEY. You do remember that interview, the one Mr. Von Briesen testified to yesterday?

The WITNESS. I will not testify to anything that I have already testified about. I do not wish to testify again about it. I do not want to be interrogated forty times about one thing. I think I gave an account of that interview in my former testimony.

Mr. RANNEY. You have testified generally as to conferences, but not as to this specific one.

The WITNESS. If I did not tell all about that in my testimony, I am perfectly willing to tell all about it now.

Mr. RANNEY. It will take less time to answer my question than to discuss it.

The WITNESS. Go on; let me see what it is.

Q. Did you in that interview or conference discuss the matter as to where the Government suit should be brought?—A. Yes, sir; at least it was discussed; I cannot say that I discussed it.

Q. Mr. Von Briesen stated that something was said there which he declined to repeat to us. Will you state what it was?—A. I heard his statement. I have no idea what it was. I think he answered everything that he could have answered. I have no idea of anything which occurred that he could not have told with equal propriety.

Q. Is your memory distinct as to what did occur?—A. Oh, no, not in every detail. As I remember, it was about as Mr. Von Briesen stated. The conversation was general, and each one was giving his views about the legal aspect of this matter, and the proper place to bring the suit, &c. Mr. Von Briesen, as he stated, urged against the propriety, as I understood, of bringing it in any of these circuits where the cases had already been heard.

Q. Do you know where Mr. Huntington was between the 20th of August and the 1st of September?—A. I think he was in Memphis part of the time. I do not know whether he was there all the time or not.

Q. Was he not here part of the time?—A. He came here with me.

Q. Was he not here before the 20th of September?—A. Not that I know of, except on the 1st of August.

Q. Has he not been here during this investigation?—A. Yes, I have seen him here.

Q. How many times?—A. Only once. He was here a day or two.

Q. Did he come into this room where the investigation is going on?—A. No, sir. I did not see him in this room; I saw him at the hotel.

Q. Did you inform the chairman of the committee that he was here in town, so that he could be called?—A. I did not know the committee wanted him. I wanted him myself.

Q. Did you inform any member of the committee that he was here?—A. No, sir; not that I am aware of; perhaps I did.

Q. How long since you have heard from him, if at all?—A. I have not heard from him since he left here, except through that telegram you read yesterday.

Q. Do you know how long ago it was that he was here?—A. I could not tell you the exact date. It is probably four or five weeks ago.

Q. Do you know where he stopped when he was here, at what hotel?—A. I do not know where he stopped. I think I met him at the Ebbitt House. He was at my room once.

Mr. RANNEY. I understand that you do not desire at this time to go into the other examination. There are some other questions I desire to put to you when you come before the committee again.

Mr. OATES. That is all for the present.

The WITNESS. I want to say, in explanation, that the reason I intimated a desire not to be examined now was because I want to introduce some rebutting testimony after awhile, and I dislike to go on the witness stand every day.

Mr. RANNEY. I think that suggestion will aid the committee hereafter.

Mr. OATES. I think you had better be ready with your rebutting testimony. I do not think this committee will run a great while longer; I think it will come to a close soon; we have been at it over two months now.

Colonel YOUNG. If the committee will indicate a day when they will be through with such witnesses as they may want to examine, I can take measures to have these other witnesses here. It might take some little time to get the witnesses here.

Mr. OATES. Well, submit to us what you want to prove by your witnesses, on what point you desire to bring them, and when you can get them here we shall be ready to see them at any time.

Colonel YOUNG. The examination has been very thorough so far as it has gone, and I want to make it thorough in a direction in which it has not yet gone, in order to bring out all the facts, and I think in justice to myself and the other gentlemen who have been attacked along with me, we have a right to do that.

Mr. OATES. Can you have the witnesses here that you want to examine by day after to-morrow?

Colonel YOUNG. Not all of them. I wish to recall some of the witnesses already examined.

Mr. OATES. Whom do you wish to recall?

Colonel YOUNG. I cannot say at present. Other gentlemen are interested in this matter besides myself, and I want to consult with them. If the committee thinks it will adjourn soon I will try and hurry them up. I want some witnesses from St. Louis and some from Memphis.

Mr. OATES. You had better submit to the committee what points you want to examine them on.

Colonel YOUNG. I shall have to consult with other gentlemen before I can do that.

Mr. OATES. I will state to you that the committee considered the matter in executive session, and it has been decided to require a vote of the committee upon the question of subpoenaing witnesses. We have taken that course, and you will have to submit your list and state the points on which you desire them called.

Colonel YOUNG. I will state that all the gentlemen who have been referred to as interested in the matter will be here in a day or two—Mr. Van Benthuyzen and the officers of the Globe Company, and the other gentlemen who have been attacked will be here—and I do not feel authorized to do anything until they come here. They are not here now.

Mr. OATES. The committee has decided already not to subpoena any more witnesses; that has been agreed upon in committee, and you will have to submit your list to us.

Colonel YOUNG. I understand. But some of them are from New Orleans.

Mr. OATES. We are through with you as a witness.

Gentlemen of the committee, here is a letter which the Sergeant-at-Arms handed to me this morning from Mr. Huntington, inclosing the certificate of one Walker, signing himself M. D., certifying that he is not able to come here at present, and requesting me to call the matter to the attention of the committee, and for this reason I have done so.

Mr. RANNEY. I desire to have Mr. Talcott, Senator Platt, and the clerk of the Ebbitt House give their evidence before the committee.

Mr. OATES. Can you give the name of the clerk?

Mr. RANNEY. No, I do not know his name; but I will request him to come to-morrow.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Talcott is here in the House.

Col. CASEY YOUNG. The committee has inquired once or twice about my various clerks. If it is desired, I will give the names of all of them and their present addresses, and the committee can summon them if they see fit. Mrs. Mary Bryan is the name of the lady where I roomed.

Mr. HALL. I move that the committee adjourn until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to, and the committee adjourned until May 13, 1886, 12 o'clock m.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Thursday, May 13, 1886.

The committee was called to order at 12.20 p. m.

CECIL CLAY was recalled and further examined.

By Mr. OATES (in the chair):

Question. Have you the original letter of Mr. Van Benthuyzen's which has been referred to heretofore?—A. Yes, sir; I have it with me. [The witness submitted the letter to the committee.]

Q. This is the original letter or application of Mr. Van Benthuyzen's?—A. Yes, sir; this is the original letter.

Q. Addressed to the Department of Justice, and which you have stated heretofore was referred by the Attorney-General to the Interior Department?—A. It was sent to the Interior Department with an accompanying letter, and Mr. Van Benthuyzen was informed that it had been so sent.

Q. Did you write the letter referring it?—A. Yes, sir; I wrote both the letters.

Q. There is no indorsement upon this, I see, except some marks.—A. No, sir. The original paper was sent and was noted on our file jacket.

Q. And the letter of the Attorney-General was on a separate piece of paper?—A. Yes, sir; it was a separate letter.

Q. How long have you been chief clerk in the Department of Justice?—A. Since December, 1883.

Q. Were you at the Department of Justice on the 1st and 2d of September last, at the time when the papers of District Attorney McCorry came to the Department?—A. Yes, sir; I was there.

Q. Did you receive those papers?—A. My recollection is that I got them in the ordinary course of the mail. There was nothing about them to call my attention particularly to those papers any more than to any others.

Q. Do you recollect that the Solicitor-General was Acting Attorney-General at that time, the Attorney-General being absent?—A. Yes, sir; he was Acting Attorney-General at that time.

Q. Do you recollect how many papers, business applications, came to him the day that he received those?—A. There were but two other papers that were referred to him on that day. That I happen to know, because, as a matter of curiosity, for my own amusement or edification, I looked at the records of the Department to see how many papers had been referred to him that day, and I remember the papers, because one of them was an amusing one, a telegram from one of the marshals out West about certain Chinamen. Those two papers and two telegrams, other than the McCorry letter that was referred to him that day, he disposed of in two minutes.

Q. Did you have any knowledge or information that the Attorney-General was going away before he did leave?—A. I knew it probably six weeks before he went away.

Q. Six weeks before he did go away?—A. I think about that long, possibly longer, or possibly not quite so long. It was some time in July, I think it was, I was speaking to him one morning about the adjustment of the leaves of absence throughout the Department, and suggesting how I thought they ought to be made, and whether he thought it was proper, so as to suit the work, and he asked me when I would like to take my own leave, and I replied that if I went moose hunting in Canada, as I had been doing for several years, I would like to go in September, but that I would go whenever it suited his convenience. He said that would suit him exactly, because he intended to go away during the last week of August, and he said that the only true way of getting a leave of absence was to go out into the woods and camp out and get away from everybody, from the world and business, and that was what he intended to do.

Q. Do you know whether that was generally known or made public; was it made known in the Department?—A. He said he did not wish anybody to know it. He said, "Don't say anything about this to anybody in or out of the Department." I said I would not, and I did not make it known.

Q. Did you see any publication in the newspapers about it preceding the time of his leaving?—A. No, sir. I noticed publications about other members of the cabinet leaving, but I do not think I saw anything about his going away. So far as I am aware nobody in the Department or out of it knew it.

Mr. OATES. Does any member of the committee desire to ask any questions?

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. The original application of Mr. Van Benthuyzen was inclosed in what you call a jacket, was it not?—A. Yes, sir; this is the paper [exhibiting].

Q. So that the indorsements on it were on the jacket?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you hand that to the reporter and allow him to put into the record what the indorsements on the jacket are.

The indorsements referred to are as follows:

So. N. Y.

Depart. of Justice.

6921. Rec'd July 14, 1885.

Dated July 12, 1885.

From W. Van Benthuyzen, of N. Orleans, La.

Sub.—Says A. G. Bell is not the inventor of the telephone.

Action.—Ans. and original to Sec. Int., July 14, '85. Orig. ret'd to D. of J. with letters of Sec. of Int., Jan. 14, '86. See copy of receipt which accompt. Sect's letter.

Q. Do you remember who wrote the letter of the Attorney-General to the Secretary of the Interior?—A. I wrote it.

Q. By whose direction?—A. By his direction. I either handed him this letter of Mr. Van Benthuyzen's and stood there while he dictated his reply, or he may possibly have had the letter in his possession and called me into his room and dictated the reply. At all events I stood by his table and handed it to him and he said "This is a matter that does not belong——"

Q. The reply was dictated?

Mr. HALL. Let the witness complete his answer. He was going to say something.

The WITNESS. He said this is a matter that does not belong to the Department at all, and it ought to come here, if anywhere, from the Interior Department. Just write to this man and tell him so, and send the letter down to the Secretary. Thereupon I wrote the letters—they are both very short—one informing Mr. Van Benthuyzen that his letter had been so referred.

Q. He told you that and dictated the letter of reference?—A. He dictated it in so far as to say write to the Secretary a letter to let us know what he thinks about it, and write to this man that this letter has been sent. It was a mere formal letter.

Q. I am not speaking of the letter of Mr. Van Benthuyzen now; I am coming to that; but the letter of reference to the Interior Department. You wrote that under his dictation?—A. Yes, I say he dictated it, in so far as to give me the substance of it; I did not take it down in short-hand; I simply went into the other room and wrote the letter.

Q. You signed it?—A. Yes, sir; I signed it.

Q. I notice at the end of the application that he was requested to acknowledge the receipt of it to the attorneys, Briesen and Steele, in New York. How happened it to be written to Mr. Van Benthuyzen himself?—A. I do not know. Possibly the Attorney-General may never have read the letter through. I don't know whether he ever looked beyond the first page of the letter. I have just said I don't remember whether I handed in the letter and stood there and told him what the contents were while he took my say so for what was in it, or whether he took the letter and actually read it through. It was treated as purely a formal matter.

Q. How long after it was received was it referred to the Secretary of the Interior?—A. Immediately; on the same day, I think.

Q. Was it done right off when it was opened?—A. That is the point where I say my memory is defective. Whether I took the letter in and said here is a letter from so and so, as is my habit, and he said what I had to do without reading it, or whether he took it in his hand and read it, I cannot say. He may have had it in his possession half an hour or so; I could not say.

Q. You did not look at the statutes, I take it?—A. No, sir; no one looked at anything, so far as I am aware.

Q. No search was made, to your knowledge, to see whether there had been an act of Congress passed on the subject, was there?—A. I do not know about that. He may have had the letter in his possession from early in the morning until three o'clock in the afternoon, for all I can remember now.

Q. You have no memory about it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you write the letter to Mr. Van Benthuyzen yourself?—A. I wrote that letter; yes, sir.

Q. Under his dictation?—A. Under his dictation; yes, sir.

Q. I see he says in that letter that it ought to have gone to the Secretary of the Interior to start with?—A. He did not dictate the actual words, as one would dictate a letter in having it taken down in short-hand, but he simply said, write to him, and I went out and wrote to him.

Q. You do not recall why the letter was sent to him when the request in the application was that it should be sent to the attorneys, Messrs. Briesen and Steele?—A. No, sir; I do not know. It is possible I may simply have read him the first page of the letter and said, "he mentions some act," and the Attorney-General said "if he does, send it down there and see what they know about it," or the Attorney-General may have had it all day and examined fifty authorities for all I can tell.

Q. Do you know whether it was known in the office on the 1st of August at what time Mr. Goode would get back, or whether it was uncertain when he would return?—A. My impression is—I cannot say when we received information of his return—that we did not know when he was coming back until shortly before he arrived, possibly just a few days before he left.

Q. The time when the Attorney-General spoke to you about going off you say was in July?—A. I think in July, and it is my impression that it was the early part of July.

Q. It was a working administration that did not take a vacation. Was it not in July when that was announced?—A. That is a matter outside of our Department. I do not know.

Q. I understood the Attorney-General himself to say that it was about the time that he went to General Grant's funeral. By the way, do you remember the date of that?—A. I do not. It was some time in the beginning of August, I think; I did not pay any attention to it.

Q. It was the 8th of August. It was before that that the Cabinet all arranged the time when the vacation should be had?—A. I do not know what action the cabinet took in regard to a vacation.

Q. The Attorney-General testified in regard to that.—A. All I know is what the Attorney-General told me when I was bringing up the general subject of apportioning the leaves of absence in my Department, which falls to the chief clerk's duty, and that was early in July.

Q. I do not care about that. You do not know of an arrangement made in August, before they went to the funeral of General Grant?—A. I do not know what arrangement was made then. The Attorney-General simply said that he intended to take his leave in one body, and should go away in the latter part of August, and would be back in September, and that if I took my leave in September it would suit him.

Q. When did you take your vacation?—A. I did not take my vacation until the 14th of September, on account of the sickness of my daughter, and I remained away about two weeks. I got back here about one day after the Attorney-General returned.

Q. Were you present when Mr. Goode and the Attorney-General met, before the Attorney-General left? Did you hear any interviews between them between the 19th of August, 1885, and the 27th of August, when the Attorney-General left on his vacation?—A. The Attorney-General sent up stairs for Mr. Goode on the morning of the day, I think it was, he was going away, and told him that he was going away that evening, a fact which Mr. Goode had not previously been apprised of apparently, and Mr. Goode asked him about what was to be done, &c., and what he told him I do not know, except from hearsay. I know that he sent up stairs for him and had him come down.

Q. You know they had an interview as to what was to be done in his absence?—A. I do not know except from hearsay whether the interview was as to what was to be done in his absence or not. I presumed that he had sent up for Mr. Goode in order to let him know he was going away, and to give him any directions that he might have.

Q. How long an interview did they have?—A. I cannot tell; I mean by that I do not know.

Q. Probably you were not present when they had that interview?—A. No, sir; I was not present; I think I either went out or sent a messenger up after the Solicitor-General.

Q. Did he ask Mr. Goode to come down or did the Attorney-General go to him?—A. I think he sent up for Mr. Goode to come down. The object, I understood, was to tell him he was going away.

Q. Was the interview between them in your presence or were they alone?—A. I cannot say whether they were alone. I do not think I was there.

Q. But Mr. Goode came down into the Attorney-General's room that day and they were together some time, and you do not know what occurred?—A. My impression is that he was down there for a few minutes probably.

Q. Were you there on the 2d of September?—A. Yes, sir; I was there on the 2d of September.

Q. Were you there when Senator Harris came in?—A. I do not remember Senator Harris's coming in; I have no particular recollection of his coming in.

Q. Have you any personal knowledge of a document coming from District Attorney McCorry, the attorney for the western district of Tennessee?—A. I remember the fact of those papers coming there from McCorry with a request for the institution of a suit. I remember that.

Q. Did you open them?—A. All the mail that comes into the Department is opened in the morning by a messenger, generally in my presence, on one end of my desk, and the accounts and letters, those that do not need jacketing and going on the general files, I simply put in the boxes belonging to the different persons to whom they ought to go. Letters of a character that require jacketing and putting on the general files are laid in a pile by themselves, and I go over them and mark the disposition to be made of them. Letters frequently come accompanied by big bundles of papers. I do not remember how large this bundle was that Mr. McCorry sent us.

Q. I do not know whether you have the jacket of those papers or not.—A. The papers would not come in a jacket. The letter would be jacketed and would then be tied with tape or something to the bundle, and the bundle of papers would be sent up with the letter to whoever they belonged to.

Q. Don't you make a jacket of your own?—A. Yes; there is no jacket when they come. The letters are jacketed there. The letters are put in a separate pile, and I mark the disposition to be made of them, and they are then briefed and jacketed.

Q. Do you know anything about the jacket for these papers?—A. Oh, yes, sir; we have the jacket of the McCorry matter there in the Department, showing the reference to the Solicitor-General.

Q. The reference by whom?—A. When I say the reference of them I mean the reference to whoever the papers go to. When they come into the Department they are placed on my desk and I have them briefed and jacketed, and then I have them marked "Solicitor-General" or wherever they go.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. For the subordinates in the same Department?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. He was not a subordinate then; he was Acting Attorney-General?—A. Yes, sir. When I say "a reference" I mean the one to whom they are given in the Department.

Q. You mean who they are delivered to?—A. Yes, sir; who they are delivered to—who they go to, as we use the expression.

Q. Your expression might imply that the Attorney-General himself referred them to somebody?—A. I do not mean that. I mean who the papers go to in the Department. I mark on the paper who it goes to, to the Attorney-General or Solicitor-General, or whoever it may be, knowing who has the case in charge.

Q. Have you that jacket?—A. It is in the Department, I think.

Q. I am sorry to trouble you so much, but I should like to see that. Did you see Senator Harris in there on the 2d of September, or about that time?—A. I do not remember whether he was there or not. He may possibly have come in to ask whether any such papers had been received. People frequently come in.

Q. I do not mean to inquire about what may have been, but simply if you know.—A. I do not remember whether he was there or not.

Q. Do you remember Senator Harris and Casey Young coming in?—A. Oh, they have been there different times, but when, I have no idea at all. There is nothing to attach any importance to their coming in there whatever.

Q. Nothing especially to fix your attention?—A. No, sir; nothing especially. Senators are coming in and going out all the time.

Q. Were you there at any interviews on July 30 and 31?—A. Was I at the Department? I think so.

Q. Do you know Mr. Van Benthuyzen?—A. I never saw him that I know of.

Mr. OATES. The question was whether you were there at any interviews.

The WITNESS. Interviews with whom?

Mr. RANNEY. I do not mean personally present when the interviews occurred, but if you were in the office when certain interviews occurred with the Attorney-General.

The WITNESS. Interviews with whom?

Mr. RANNEY. Do not people going into the Attorney-General's room pass through your room?—A. No, sir. They frequently come in there; ask whether the Attorney-General is in, and I turn them over to his messenger, and sometimes go to his door and look in to see whether he is engaged, or ask him whether he will see certain people. Ordinarily they go into the ante-room and the messenger tells him. He might have a dozen interviews and I would not know it.

Q. If you have a separate room you would not be cognizant of people who did go in?—A. No, sir, unless I opened his door to go in with papers, and noticed that there were a number of people there.

Q. Have you looked to see whether you have in the Department any letters of Mr. Van Benthuyzen, written between the 16th of July, 1885, and the 30th of July of that year?

The WITNESS. Do you ask whether we have any; whether I know we have any?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

A. I do not without looking at the record; I cannot say without looking at the record. I do not depend at all upon my memory as to what papers are or are not in the Department.

Q. I didn't suppose you would remember them all. I thought you might have looked.—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you looked to see whether there is any correspondence in the Department between the Attorney-General and Mr. Van Benthuyzen between July 16 and July 30, 1885?—A. I presume that the matter has been looked up. All the papers in connection with this telephone business have been gotten together, and if there are any such letters they are no doubt with the rest of them.

Mr. RANNEY. I will not trouble you any more, Mr. Clay.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. You have been requested how many times to bring papers and copies of papers here?—A. I think about three times, probably, I have been up here.

Q. You have always attempted to bring everything that has been requested of you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have not been called upon to examine whether there are any letters on file between Mr. Van Benthuyzen and the Attorney-General?—A. I do not think I have.

Mr. RANNEY. Nobody pretends that Mr. Clay has intentionally withheld anything. He has been very courteous, very kind, and very faithful.

Q. The office is open for inquiry to get any information of that kind?—A. Certainly.

Q. I notice on the jacket, which I understand you accompanies this letter of Mr. Van Benthuyzen's, there is a memorandum as to the action. I wish you would simply explain what that means.—A. Every letter that comes into the Department that requires to go on the general files has one of these jackets placed on it. It goes then to the Attorney-General, the Solicitor-General, or such officer of the Department as it is proper for it to go to, whoever has charge of the matter. When that officer takes any action upon it in the way of writing a letter in reply to it, or referring it to another Department, or doing anything at all with it, that action is then indicated under this head "Action."

Q. What does that jacket show with reference to the time when Mr. Van Benthuyzen's letter was received?—A. "Received July 14, 1885."

Q. Does it show its date?—A. "Dated July 12, 1885."

Q. Does it show what disposition; and, if so, what was it?—A. "Answered and original to the Secretary of the Interior July 14, 1885."

Q. That means that this letter was referred to the Secretary of the Interior on July 14, that date?—A. It was sent to him. We use the word "Refer" in a technical sense in the office. If we refer it we put it in the reference jacket and say, "Respectfully referred to the Secretary of the Interior" on such a date.

Q. And this was sent under the suggestion of the Attorney-General that it did not belong to his Department, and ought to have been sent to the other Department originally; is that correct?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When does that show that it came back?—A. It came back on the 14th of January, 1886.

Q. From the Secretary of the Interior?—A. From the Interior Department, in company with a mass of papers relating to this telephone business.

Q. With reference to interviews, I wish you would state how your office is connected with that of the Attorney-General, in which any interview would be held.—A. There is a door immediately to the right of my desk, perhaps as far as that wall [indicating], going into the Attorney-General's room.

Q. So that when you are in your office, you would not be present at any interviews that might be held there unless you were called in?—A. Unless, in the ordinary course of business, I should open his door for the purpose of going in to see him, and notice there were parties there.

Mr. HALL. I suppose, Mr. Chairman, that it is not desired that the original Van Benthuyzen letter should be retained here any longer?

Mr. OATES (in the chair). No; only for inspection. It has already been put in evidence.

Mr. EDEN. It has been brought here three or four times, I think.

Mr. OATES. I will say to the committee that Mr. Ranney expressed a desire to see this original letter after the testimony of Mr. Von Bricsen the other day, in which he stated that his recollection was that the reference made by the Attorney General was indorsed on the original application or letter of Mr. Van Benthuyzen. I find by inspection of it that he was mistaken in that. It was written on a separate paper.

Mr. EDEN. It seems to me it does not make much difference what paper it was written on.

Mr. OATES. Perhaps not.

Mr. RANNEY. The indorsements put into the testimony the other day were on the letter of Mr. Muldrow to the Attorney-General.

Mr. OATES. Are there any other witnesses present to examine?

Mr. RANNEY. We had better send up and request Mr. Talcott to come in, and Senator Platt might be sent for also. I do not think the clerk at the Ebbitt House has been here yet.

Hon. O. H. PLATT then came before the committee and was duly sworn.

Mr. OATES (in the chair). Mr. Ranney, you may examine the witness.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Question. You have been in the Senate how many years?—Answer. Since March 4, 1879.

Q. You were in the Senate with Senator Garland, the present Attorney-General?—A. Yes, sir; he was there when I became a member, and continued until he was appointed Attorney-General. I was a member of the Senate all that time.

Q. You were chairman of the Committee on Patents in the Forty-eighth Congress?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember anything about a bill which came before your committee, having passed the House prior, respecting the bringing of a suit by the Government, or authorizing the Attorney-General to bring a suit by the Government, for the purpose of vacating patents?—A. Such a bill was referred to the Committee on Patents after it passed the House, I think at the short session of the Forty-eighth Congress.

Q. Was it ever reported to the Senate?—A. It was not. The committee made no report upon it.

Q. While your committee had it, please state whether you had any interview with Senator Garland about it, and what Senator Garland had to do with it, so far as you remember?—A. To answer that question, perhaps I ought to state the circumstances which led up to a conversation between myself and Senator Garland.

Q. State the whole of it.—A. The first that I remember to have noticed that bill, Senator Garland, at his desk in the Senate, referred a letter which had been addressed to him by some one, I do not remember who, to me as chairman of the Committee on Patents, and sent it over by a page. I think I had not heard of the passage of the bill at that time, and then got the bill and examined it. Subsequently Senator Garland referred to me another letter which some one had written him on the subject, and I do not remember who wrote that letter, but my recollection is that that letter contained one or two suggested amendments to the bill, the character of which I do not now recall. He referred that in the same way, and I may say in the usual way in which Senators refer communications addressed to them to the committees having charge of the subject-matters to which they relate, and sent it over to me by a page.

My recollection then is that, receiving that second letter, I went over and had some conversation with him, and as the conversation lies in my mind it was substantially this: I asked him if he had any interest in that bill, and he said no, that he had no special interest in it; that he had referred those letters to me because they had been written to him. Then he went on to say that he had examined the subject somewhat, and that he thought that the Government might then, without the passage of any such act, maintain a suit for the cancellation of a patent if it had been obtained by fraud. I would not say that he expressed that as his decided opinion or conviction, but as his better judgment in the matter; and I think he said this, that if the bill was to pass there ought not to be any implication by the passage of the bill, or by anything that was in it, that the Government had not that right at that time. I then went back to my seat and had no more conversation with Senator Garland about it.

I think perhaps I ought to say that it was not the first time that Senator Garland had referred letters to me in the same way which were addressed to him relative to matters pending before the Patent Committee. I remember that there was a proposition before the Patent Committee to prevent the bringing of suits for the infringement of patents, against users merely of the patented invention, and Senator Garland referred some letters to me on that subject. I speak of it because I do not wish to imply, by anything I say, that there was anything unusual in his conduct.

Q. When he referred those letters, was there any written indorsement on them?—A. My recollection is that he put a little indorsement on the back of the letters in the usual way—"The within is respectfully referred to Senator Platt, chairman of the Committee on Patents."

Q. Do you know what has become of those two letters with the suggested amendments?—A. I do not. I have an impression, which is not very distinct, in relation to that matter. I do not think they ever went into the files of the miscellaneous papers of the committee, because those miscellaneous papers were at the conclusion of the session done up in a bundle by the clerk, and deposited in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, and were sealed, at least the bundle of such papers was brought to me by an officer connected with the Secretary's office, and it was sealed up, and I opened it and went through it, and I did not find those letters in the bundle. My impression, which I give for what it is worth, is that as that occurred in the Senate, I put the letters in my desk, and when the session closed, in cleaning out my desk, threw them away. The impression is not very distinct, but it is an impression nevertheless.

Q. I see by the papers that some of the reporters, when this matter came up and was canvassed, went to see you about it. Did you at that time, and have you since, searched for them?—A. I have searched for them, have made a pretty thorough search for them, and I am unable to find them, and the impression which I have stated grows upon my mind the more I think of it, that leaving them in my desk and not reporting the bill, why, when Congress was over, I cleaned out my desk and threw them into the waste basket.

Q. Have you been able to recall the writer of those letters?—A. I have not.

Q. Can you tell how it lies in your mind whether they were or not from any members of Congress, or whether they came from the outside?—A. I think if they had come from any member of Congress I should remember that fact.

Mr. RANNEY. That is all.

The WITNESS. As so much has been said about this matter, perhaps I ought, in justification of the Committee on Patents, to say a word.

Mr. OATES. I was going to ask you just there about it. There has been some report and there was some talk that a bill was stolen in this connection. Was there anything in that?—A. It seems to me that that was rather an unnecessary suspicion. Certainly any one knowing the order of business in the Senate, and the way bills come to the Senate committees after having passed the House, would know it is in the form of a printed bill, simply. The bill is sent to the Senate, referred to a committee, and ordered printed, and what we get is not the engrossed House bill, but a printed bill, of which there are nineteen hundred copies printed, so that if a bill was stolen there would be 1,899 more copies of it in the document room of the Senate.

Mr. RANNEY. That was only in keeping with Mr. Van Benthuyzen's suspicions and charges which he has brought here.

The WITNESS. So that there would be no opportunity of stealing any such bill.

Mr. OATES. I have no idea that such a thing could be.

The WITNESS. If you will allow me to speak of a fact not within my knowledge, I will state that that particular bill went back to the Secretary of the Senate at the close of the session, and was by him returned to the House in the ordinary course of things. I would like to make this additional statement, if there is no objection—

Mr. EDEN. There is no objection to the Senator's making a statement I think?

Mr. RANNEY. Not at all.

The WITNESS. The reason the committee did not act upon the bill was, I think, that it was at the short session of Congress. If I remember, it did not come over until some time in January, and the committee was very busy. It was talked about informally in the committee at various times, and objections of a political character were made to it, that possibly it might prove an engine of oppression against poor patentees in the hands of the Government at the request of somebody who wished to carry on a contest at the expense of the Government; and later on it came to my knowledge that the Baltimore and Ohio Telegraph Company were very much interested in the passage of the bill, as they wanted to attack what is known as the Page patent, owned and used by the Western Union Telegraph Company, as having been unlawfully extended by the Commissioner of Patents by authority of Congress. Well, that made the committee hesitate about taking action, and so the session closed without action on the bill.

Mr. OATES. Does any member of the committee desire to ask any questions?

Mr. EDEN. I do not want to ask anything.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. I would like to ask a question. In the conversation between yourself and Senator Garland, when he spoke of having examined the question, did he speak of having examined it recently or before in the course of his practice?—A. I do not think he said when he had examined it. Of course I do not remember his exact language, but I know the substance of it. The impression it left on my mind was that he was sufficiently well acquainted with the subject to have formed the opinion that the Government could maintain it without the passage of the bill.

Q. And that such a bill, if it became a law, would be simply a sort of declaratory statute?—A. Yes.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. I am reminded by Mr. Moffatt of a fact I had forgotten, which is that that bill passed the House at the first session of the 48th Congress, in January. If that is so are you not mistaken in thinking it came in at the short session?—A. Very likely; I have not looked at the matter to determine it. I have seen somewhere a date in January, and I assumed perhaps that it was at the short session.

Mr. RANNEY. I had forgotten myself.

Mr. MOFFATT. It passed within ten days after the organization of the committees of the House.

The WITNESS. Then my supposition that it was at a short session could not have had very much influence with the committee.

Mr. RANNEY. It was laid over, perhaps, from the short session.

The WITNESS. There was another matter, perhaps, that influenced the matter somewhat when it was pending before the committee. Some case was decided in one of the circuits, which looked as if it was to be decided in court that the Government could make such a suit. I think it was the case of the United States against Gunning; I am not sure of the case. I know it was brought to the attention of the committee while the bill was pending before it.

Mr. RANNEY. Yes, Judge Wallace held adversely to Judge Shepley.

Mr. HALL. I want to ask another question when Judge Ranney is through.

Mr. OATES. You may proceed.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. I understand, then, that the expression of opinion by Senator Garland was, practically, that there was no necessity for a measure of this kind.—A. He expressed his opinion that there was not.

Q. You have referred to some considerations that probably operated on the minds of the committee in not acting. Do you remember whether the question was discussed in that direction before or after you had this interview with Senator Garland?—A. I think afterwards, because my recollection about it is that I had not heard of the passage of the bill until Senator Garland referred to me the first letter of which I have spoken.

Q. Did you state to the committee the opinion that had been expressed to you by Senator Garland as to the want of necessity for such an enactment?—A. I do not remember. I doubt whether I stated to the committee that I had any conversation with him at the time, but I may have done so.

Q. I suppose his opinion would have been regarded as of some consideration on a subject of that kind?—A. Certainly. I think, perhaps, his suggestion induced me to look up the question, and looking it up I discovered this decision made about the time or during the time when it was under consideration.

Q. So that his opinion had something to do, then, directly or indirectly, in influencing the action of the committee?—A. It may have, remotely.

Q. There is one other question I would like to ask. You were asked how you happened to look up the papers, the files of the committee. I wish you would state more definitely, if you please, how you came to look them up—at whose instance?—A. In reading in the newspapers about this matter, I saw, of course, that there was talk made that the bill had been stolen or abstracted. That, of course, led me to investigate the whole matter, and I then asked my clerk what he did with the papers of the committee, and he said that he had carried them to the Secretary's office, and after I got back here I had them sent for, and at this session looked them over.

Q. Did anybody request you to do that?—A. I do not think any one did.

Q. Did anybody request you to try to find those two letters referred to you by Senator Garland?—A. No; I wanted to find them myself. I do not think anybody requested me.

Q. It was not at the instance of any reporters?—A. No.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Do you remember being interviewed by a reporter?—A. I have been interviewed by a great many reporters.

Q. I mean on this subject—do you remember Major Clark or Mr. Crawford coming to see you?—A. I do not know about Mr. Crawford. I do not know that I should be able to recognize Mr. Crawford. I remember a reporter of the World coming to me, and I had an impression it was a Mr. Bayne whom I did know or supposed I knew, and I told each of those gentlemen, I suppose, substantially the same story I have told the committee.

A. B. TALCOTT then came before the committee and was duly sworn.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Question. You are the electrician of the House?—Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you been such?—A. Since February, 1881; five years; since the Forty-seventh Congress.

Q. You succeeded Mr. Rogers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I refer to J. Harris Rogers.—A. Yes.

Q. Were you aware of any efforts being made at the beginning of the Forty-ninth Congress to secure the appointment of J. Harris Rogers as electrician of the House?

The WITNESS. You mean the Forty-eighth Congress, do you not? This is the Forty-ninth Congress.

Mr. RANNEY. Yes, the Forty-ninth Congress.—A. I was aware of it; yes, sir.

Q. There were some papers handed in here the other day, a letter which you had some connection with.—A. I heard of a letter of that kind.

Q. What did you know of that matter?—A. Mr. Clark, the Architect, directed my attention to it, and asked me if I remembered giving him a certain letter.

Q. What do you remember about it?—A. If it is the letter I suppose it is, it was one handed me either by Mr. Campbell, of New York, or Mr. Cox, I do not know which. I turned it over to Mr. Clark and had forgotten all about it until my attention was recalled to it.

Mr. RANNEY. I believe that is the one I had in mind (handing letter to the witness).

The WITNESS. Of course I cannot identify this, but this is substantially the letter that I supposed it was.

Mr. RANNEY. It is a letter of the Rogerses—well, look at it.

Mr. HALL. Let him answer what it is.

The WITNESS. I suppose that is the letter.

Q. Did either one of the Rogerses see you personally about that appointment?—A. The elder, J. Webb Rogers, sent a note to me one day which said that he wanted to see me in relation to that matter, and I called on him.

Q. What did he say to you?—A. He said that Harry had revived his idea of being electrician of the Capitol, covering the whole building, with a salary sufficient to pay a competent electrician, and that it would accommodate them if I would step down and out before Congress met; that we were going to have a Democratic Congress, and of course I would not expect to stay.

Q. State all that he said, if there was anything more.—A. And that they were willing to allow me the salary for December and January, and would add—

Mr. EDEN. Whose conversation is it that the witness is relating?

Mr. RANNEY. A conversation with Dr. J. W. Rogers.

The WITNESS. That they would allow me the salary for December and January and would allow me the extra month's pay that would probably be allowed to discharged employes before the 1st of February; that I could take time to think it over if I desired to, unless I was prepared to give them an answer then. I told him I would take time to think it over. When I came up to the Capitol I found that his messenger had got ahead of me and had filed an application with Mr. Clark for the appointment of the two sons.

Q. Who had got ahead of you?—A. His messenger; and for that reason I paid no more attention to it.

Q. Did you see him again?—A. No, sir; not on that subject. I have met him very often.

Q. Do you know anything about the resolution introduced by Mr. Robinson, of New York, looking to his appointment?—A. I recollect that Mr. Robinson introduced the resolution.

Q. Do you know at whose request?—A. I do not positively. At that time I was making a report of the House proceedings for the United Press Association. He came over and showed the resolution to Mr. McElhone, and Mr. McElhone said, "Why, that is our friend here," pointing to me. He said, "I did not know that."

Mr. HALL. Who said this?

The WITNESS. Mr. Robinson. He said "a gentleman asked me to introduce it"—he said "General Johnston wanted me to introduce it, and," he said, "I told him I would;" and he afterwards came back to me and said that he could not find the gentleman who gave it to him to return it to him, and he would have to introduce it, and I told him to do so of course, and he did so.

Q. Did you go before the committee to whom that resolution was referred?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you have any Pan-Electric stock?—A. Not any.

Q. Was any offered to you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Dr. Rogers wanted you to receive that pay. How much did it amount to?—A. $287.50.

Q. He did not offer you or send you any stock?—A. No, sir. In his note which he sent me he inclosed a circular of the Postal Telegraph and the Pan-Electric prospectus. I didn't consider that as an offer at all.

Q. He sent you the prospectus of the Postal Telegraph. What works have the Government got connected with the Capitol that Mr. Rogers could have utilized for the advantages of any association?—A. I do not know of anything except the dynamo engine.

Q. There are electrical works in the Capitol?—A. Simply for lighting; nothing else.

Q. Did he have a lighting apparatus among his claimed inventions?—A. I have seen the remnants of one about there; that is all I know about it. I have understood that he did have a light in the loft at one time.

Q. His prospectus had one for lighting the world, did it not?—A. I don't recollect.

Q. Was there anything embraced in his prospectus, any patent described for lighting purposes? Did his prospectus describe any patent for a lighting apparatus?—A. No, sir; I think not. I think it was one of the future inventions to be brought out, in the prospectus.

Q. I was thinking that I saw something of that kind in it; I may be mistaken. Do you know of anybody in Congress or in the House having any of that Pan-Electric stock?—A. No; I do not recollect now.

Q. See if you can recall any fact about it.—A. I suppose that Colonel Young was a stockholder; in fact, his name was connected with the prospectus.

Q. Yes; he was a stockholder, and in the Forty-eighth Congress. What do you know of his connection with it?—A. I only know it from the prospectus.

Q. Did he ever see you about the matter?

The WITNESS. Colonel Young?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes; about the electrician?

A. No, sir; never.

Q. That is, about getting Rogers appointed.—A. No, sir?

By Mr. OATES:

Q. Who appointed you electrician?—A. The law requires the appointment to be made by the Architect of the Capitol, subject to the approval of the Speaker. My appointment was practically and substantially made by the Speaker, Mr. Keifer.

Q. And you were not removed by that Democratic Forty-eighth Congress?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you are still the electrician of the House?—A. Yes, sir; I am still electrician.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. I do not think I understood exactly how you first came to know about this letter, or how it came into your possession.—A. It was handed me by one of those gentlemen.

Q. By one of what gentlemen?—A. Either Mr. Felix Campbell or Mr. Cox of New York.

Q. Who is Mr. Felix Campbell?—A. A member of the House from Brooklyn, New York.

Q. When was it handed to you?—A. Soon after the resolution was introduced. It bears date there, doesn't it?

Q. Whereabouts were you when it was handed to you?—A. That I could not say.

Q. What persons were present?—A. That I could not say. I presume no one.

Q. Was it handed to you here in the Capitol building or in the city?—A. About the House somewhere.

Q. But you don't remember where it was?—A. I could not state positively.

Q. Can't you remember whether it was Mr. Cox or Mr. Campbell?—A. I should guess —

Q. Do not give any guessing about it; I want the fact.—A. I cannot say positively, but I should rather think it was Mr. Campbell.

Q. Don't you know that Mr. Cox never handed you a note of this kind?—A. I am aware that Mr. Cox got a letter of that kind.

Q. I didn't ask you that. Why do you want to pursue it in that way; are you anxious to fix anything on Mr. Cox?—A. No, sir. I know them both intimately and talked with them frequently on this subject.

Q. I am not asking anything of that kind.—A. I only want to explain my position.

Q. There is nothing to explain just yet. You say that one of these gentlemen, and you rather think it was Mr. Campbell, handed you this letter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did he say to you when he handed it to you?—A. I could not recollect.

Q. It is not addressed to you, is it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are you sure that that letter was ever given to you by anybody?—A. That identical letter I could not swear to.

Q. We are talking about nothing but this identical letter.—A. The substance of that letter—

Q. I am not asking you about the substance of that letter. I doubt very much if you know what the substance of it is. I want to know if you pretend to swear to this committee that you ever saw that letter until it was shown to you here?—A. I told you, Mr. Hall, at the beginning, that I could not identify that individual letter.

Q. You cannot remember what was told you by the person in regard to the letter about which we have been talking?—A. It was not delivered in that way. It was simply handed over to me as a matter which was of interest to me.

Q. As a matter of curiosity?—A. No, sir; as a matter in which I was interested.

Q. Without any instructions?—A. Without any instructions.

Q. To whom was the letter addressed, that it came into your hands?—A. That I cannot tell.

Q. You do not know what you did with it—do you know?—A. I had forgotten entirely about it. I found it in the hands of Mr. Clark.

Q. Found what in the hands of Mr. Clark?—A. This letter.

Q. But you say you do not know that that is the letter?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. So that you do not know very much about it?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you do not know really what you did with the original letter that you say did come into your hands?—A. I think I gave it to Mr. Clark.

Q. But you don't remember, do you?—A. Not distinctly.

Q. All the reason why you talked about this letter is because Mr. Clark has produced a letter?—A. No, sir; I recollect the letter now that my memory is refreshed and called to it, a letter of that substance.

Q. A letter of what substance?—A. That letter there.

Q. Let us hear what the substance is, and what your memory of it is.—A. The only point in it that impressed itself on my mind was that they didn't want them as electricians, or any other Democrats, and also to be under the Speaker or any other Democratic officer of the House.

Q. That is the substance of the letter that you remember?—A. That is the main point of it that I remember.

Q. Has anything arisen to call your attention, or to awaken your memory about that transaction from the time it occurred until very recently?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who has called your attention to the matter lately?—A. Mr. Clark, the Architect, asked if I remembered giving him the letter.

Q. When was that?—A. I cannot give you the date. It is the date he testified here, or the day following.

Q. Did he show you this letter?—A. No, sir.

Q. Has anybody else spoken to you about it?—A. I think not.

Q. Has anybody else tried to refresh your memory besides Mr. Clark?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You say you knew of Mr. Cox's having a letter of the kind; how did you know that?—A. He told me so.

Mr. HALL. Do you desire to put any other questions, Mr. Ranney?

Mr. RANNEY. I want to read this letter once more. I will put this letter into the record.

Mr. HALL. I think it is already in; it seems to be marked on the outside.

Mr. RANNEY. It was simply identified; it was not copied into the record.

The following is the letter:

315 4½ St., N. W., January 20, 1884.

HON. DEAR SIR: As citizens of N. York we sent to you yesterday a "resolution" concerning the electrical department in the House of Reps. If the N. York delegation should prefer other electricians than ourselves we would cheerfully acquiesce; but it seems preposterous that a Republican Architect should keep two Republicans in our places, vacated by us on notification of said Architect that we must bring to him Republican influences, which we declined to do, but instantly resigned. Please confer with our New York members and determine whether the resolution can be passed. In deference to the Speaker you may explain that we would prefer to be exclusively under him, or any Democratic officer of his preference.

Yours, respectfully,

J. H. AND J. C. ROGERS.

Mr. HALL. I supposed that where letters were marked they were regarded as in. [To the witness.] You say Mr. Cox told you that he had a letter; you answered Judge Ranney that he had a letter of that kind. Now, do you mean to say that?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. Now tell the committee what Mr. Cox said to you, if you please.—A. Mr. Cox said that they had been after him.

Q. Who?—A. The Rogerses, and that he did not recognize them as New Yorkers.

Q. Did he tell you that they had sent him some stock in the letter?—A. No, sir; he never told me that.

Q. And then he did not explain to you what they had said in their letter to him?

Mr. RANNEY. I attribute that conduct of Mr. Cox as rather favorable to him than otherwise. It shows that he did not favor the scheme.

Mr. HALL. I have seen a great many people favor men. I want to save myself from that kind of favors.

Mr. RANNEY. What favors?

Mr. HALL. The favors you are speaking about. You say you think this thing rather favors Mr. Cox.

Mr. RANNEY. You remarked that it was putting something on to Mr. Cox that you did not want there. I thought it was relieving Mr. Cox, as showing that he would not yield to any scheme of that kind. He declined to take the stock, and then he hands the letter over to this electrician.

Mr. HALL. I am trying to find out just exactly what Mr. Cox did. I think Mr. Cox is entirely able to rest on anything that he has said or done when properly stated.

Mr. RANNEY. I should not have made the remark except for yours.

Q. You do not know whether Mr. Cox got a letter like that, do you, from the Rogerses?—A. Verbatim, I do not.

Q. He did not attempt to give you its contents?—A. Unless that is the letter.

Q. But you do not pretend to say that that is the letter?—A. I do not know whether I got it from him or Mr. Campbell.

Q. But Judge Ranney said, and you have sworn, that Mr. Cox told you he got a letter like that?—A. Yes, sir; in substance.

Q. Did he say that he had a letter like that, or did he simply tell you about what was in the letter?—A. He told me what was in the letter, unless he gave me the letter.

Q. Didn't he tell you at the same time about there being some stock or paper in the letter that was sent to him?—A. Not a word.

Q. Nothing of the kind?—A. No, sir.

The witness was then excused.

Mr. RANNEY. I understood that there had been a subpoena issued to men connected with the telegraph offices, summoning them to produce telegrams to-day. Was not this the day set?

Mr. OATES. A gentleman came and spoke to me about it, and showed me a rule of his office on the subject, and said that under that rule he should decline to furnish any telegrams to the committee. He said he had consulted the superintendent, and the superintendent had so instructed him. This was outside of the committee room, and I called Mr. Millard, who was standing near by, and told him what this man had said, and I left them talking together, and have not seen the man since.

Mr. RANNEY. Was he not summoned to appear to-day?

Mr. OATES. I think he was summoned to appear this day, or at an earlier day, perhaps.

Mr. RANNEY. I had an impression that this was the day set.

Mr. OATES. I looked at the book of rules of his office, which he showed me, but I did not look at the subpoena. If it is as he said, unless the law is different from the rule, I do not know whether we could compel him to answer. The subpoena, he stated to me, seemed to be for all telegrams passing between Casey Young and others within a certain stated time, and as I understand from an explanatory note to the rule which goes on to illustrate its meaning, it says that a subpoena served upon an employé of the company to produce all telegrams passing between C and D in a given time will be obeyed, but the particular telegram or telegrams must be described in the subpoena, so that they will know exactly what they are.

Mr. EDEN. This is merely a fishing net.

Mr. OATES. He went on to say that such a subpoena as that was regarded as a search warrant and would not be obeyed by the company.

Mr. RANNEY. Permit me to inquire whether the chairman said he need not produce them and need not come before the committee?

Mr. OATES. I stated to him that if that was true, if that was the character of the subpoena, I did not think he would be required to produce them. But I did not tell him that he need not pay any further attention to it. He asked me what I thought about it, and I told him. I said if it is as you state, that sort of a subpoena—I have not seen it—you would not be obliged to obey it, but that is a matter for the committee, and I called Mr. Millard, who had just gone to the outer door there, and left him talking to him.

Mr. RANNEY. I understand that you or Mr. Millard gave to the chairman a specific statement—

Mr. OATES. Have you the subpoena?

Mr. MOFFATT. I think the subpoena is about as Mr. Oates states it. It calls for telegrams between parties on certain dates.

Mr. RANNEY. Was there a subpoena issued for the Baltimore and Ohio Telegraph Office also?

The CLERK OF THE COMMITTEE. None that I know of.

Mr. RANNEY. When is Mr. Boyle, the chairman, expected to return?

Mr. OATES. The latter part of the week, he says.

Mr. RANNEY. It seems to me highly important to get those telegrams, and the law by which they are regulated is familiar, doubtless, to all. I have had a good deal of experience in getting telegrams from telegraph companies, and never have failed yet.

Mr. OATES. I do not know what the man finally said. I think if we notify him he will appear before the committee at our next meeting, and will probably give his reasons for not obeying the subpoena. Of course I am only giving my opinion upon the hypothesis. I could not speak for the whole committee; I speak for myself.

Mr. RANNEY. Of course I do not mean to intimate anything against you, but I think it is very important we should have them.

Mr. EDEN. If there are no further witnesses present to be examined, I move that we adjourn until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

Mr. HALL. Have you heard anything further from Mr. Hill?

Mr. OATES. No, nothing.

Mr. RANNEY. Let us decide about this subpoena, this telegraph business first. I desire that these men be requested to come here and give their reasons for not complying with the subpoena, and if we find it requires a subpoena duces tecum let it be issued.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Clerk, go to the Sergeant-at-Arms and get him to return you the subpoena, and see if you can give the notice to the gentleman named to appear before the committee at the next meeting and show his reason why he does not wish to produce them, if such is his course.

Mr. MOFFATT. Should he not appear here in response to the subpoena in any event?

Mr. OATES. Yes; notify him to appear.

Mr. HALL. The rule of the company which has been spoken of does not excuse him from appearing.

Mr. EDEN. No; we have a right to have the attendance of the witness.

Mr. RANNEY. I know what the rules of telegraph companies are.

Mr. EDEN. If we have any more witnesses to examine, I am very anxious that we shall go on and examine them, for, so far as my connection with the committee is concerned, I shall be compelled to get through before a great while. If there are any witnesses to be examined to-morrow, can we not go on with them? It is not necessary to wait for these telegrams.

Mr. OATES. I do not know of any witnesses to be examined.

Mr. EDEN. If there are any witnesses we can go on with them. We have not an intimation that there is anything in those telegrams bearing on this investigation, or that a single telegram passed between those men.

Mr. MOFFATT. The books introduced in evidence show telegrams between them.

Mr. RANNEY. It appears not only in oral testimony, but it appears by the books.

Mr. OATES. We can dispose of that when it comes up regularly. The man will come here, and, as he states to me, he will decline to produce the telegrams, and will give his reasons for declining.

Mr. RANNEY. Colonel Young has produced copies of some telegrams.

Mr. EDEN. I was not referring to those we have already had.

Mr. RANNEY. I am more anxious about those we have not got.

Mr. OATES. I am very anxious to close this investigation myself. I do not think we are going to get anything more of any importance, but it is for the committee to decide, and as we examined all the known witnesses that we hoped to examine that are within reach, I prefer that the committee should adjourn until Monday, when Mr. Boyle will be here and there will be a full committee. I am only chairman pro tem., and do not care to assume any responsibility such as devolves necessarily on him during his absence.

Mr. EDEN. It was said that there were some witnesses who had already been before the committee that it was desired to have recalled. I suppose we might go on with them.

Mr. OATES. Not being chairman of the committee, I have not kept as strict an account of the proceedings and notes of the testimony as Mr. Boyle. All his papers and memoranda are here and before we enter upon a re-examination of any witnesses—for we ought not to go over the ground except where new matter has made it necessary—I would prefer his presence, unless the committee shall otherwise order, and I do not know any good that we can accomplish by sitting to-morrow or the next day, and probably we will get through very early next week.

Mr. EDEN. If we cannot do anything, I move that we adjourn until Monday.

Mr. OATES. I think that would be better.

Mr. RANNEY. As the inquiry is left open, why not leave that to him? There is one other branch we have gone into somewhat, as showing one reason why this Government suit should not be brought, the fact that all the issues involved in it are now pending in cases which are before the Supreme Court on appeal, which will be soon decided.

Mr. EDEN. If we have to go into the merits of one case, we will have to go into the merits on both sides.

Mr. RANNEY. That is a matter I want to discuss with the chairman.

Mr. OATES. It is a matter, too, that we can get at when we come to consider the question in executive session.

Mr. RANNEY. I will agree to adjourn, then. I would be better satisfied to adjourn until Tuesday. I am going to run home now.

Mr. OATES. I will say that Mr. Eden is very anxious, he says, to return to his home soon, and we can probably do something on Monday, I think.

Mr. EDEN. I want to get some matters through before I go.

Mr. RANNEY. When do you want to leave?

Mr. EDEN. I must go in the course of ten days.

Mr. RANNEY. Are you likely to be absent long?

Mr. EDEN. I may be gone two or three weeks.

Mr. OATES. Is the committee ready for the question? The motion is to adjourn until Monday at 12 o'clock.

The motion was put and agreed to, and the committee adjourned until Monday, May 17, 1886, at 12 m.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Monday, May 17, 1886.

The committee was called to order at 12.20 p. m.

Mr. OATES. I have here, Mr. Chairman, a response from Mr. Clay, the chief clerk of the Department of Justice, in the matter of these patent suits. He came here with about two bushels of papers and I would not undertake to put them in the record, but suggested to him that it would be well, if he could, to enlarge or amplify the statement that he had given before, so as to show the character of the patent in each case, and he said that he had furnished such papers as that, he thought, but the paper I got from you, Mr. Chairman, is not of that kind. Here is the paper which he has sent [Handing the paper in question to the chairman.]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Boyle). There were two papers furnished by the Department, and the one I had, I think, was the fuller of the two.

Mr. OATES. I did not see in the record where either one of them had been introduced in evidence.

The CHAIRMAN. Neither has been introduced. [After examining the paper in question.] I see this is a paper containing a list of applications in which suits were allowed. There was another paper containing a list of applications in which suits were refused.

Mr. MILLARD. Was that put into the case?

The CHAIRMAN. I think not; I have no recollection of its going in. Judge Ranney had it. [Addressing the committee.] Gentlemen, is there anything to be brought before the committee this morning?

Mr. MILLARD. There were certain witnesses subpoenaed for this morning.

Mr. OATES. Has any one seen Mr. Marean this morning?

Mr. MILLARD. He is present.

Mr. OATES. He might come before the committee. He informed me last week that he should object to furnishing the telegrams in answer to the subpoena.

The CHAIRMAN. Has he yet been called before the committee?

Mr. OATES. No; but he came to see me in person last week, and I referred him to Mr. Millard.

The CHAIRMAN. If he is present he may be sworn.

MORELL MAREAN then came before the committee and was duly sworn.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Are you connected with the Western Union Telegraph Company?—Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. In what capacity?—A. I am manager of the office in this city.

Q. Have you been served with a subpoena or requested to produce certain telegrams?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you brought them here?—A. I received one subpoena, I think, about a week ago, and I received a second subpoena on Saturday to appear at 12 o'clock to-day; and in response thereto I wish to say that I must respectfully decline to comply with the demands of that subpoena, for the reason that it is in the nature of a drag-net or search-warrant. It does not allege the existence of or describe any particular messages, but seeks to discover whether any messages sent or received by certain parties relating to a certain subject exist.

Q. Are you acting under the instructions of your company in declining to produce the messages?—A. Yes, sir; both under the instructions and the rules of my company.

Q. You say you decline to produce them because the messages asked for have not been described?—A. Yes, sir; because they have not been specifically described. The subpoena covers a period of about ten months, and it would require a search through our entire business during that time. It does not allege that any messages were sent or received, and we would be compelled to make a search to ascertain that fact.

Q. You say there is a rule of your company which would prevent the production of messages under a subpoena such as has been issued in this case?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any objection to stating what the rule of your company is?—A. I have not the rule with me; I could get a copy of the rule; I do not know that there is any objection to that. I would prefer, perhaps, to confer with our officers first. I presume there will be no objection. I would like to add that the use made of messages drawn out by the Senate committee nine years ago ought to satisfy this committee that no such drag-net subpoena ought to be obeyed.

Q. What committee was it?—A. I cannot give you the name of the committee, but it was the committee which examined into the election of 1876 and matters relating to that election.

Q. Have you anything further to say in respect to this matter?—A. Nothing further; no, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Does any gentleman of the committee desire to question the witness?

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Have you the subpoena with you that was served upon you?—A. Yes, sir; I have.

Q. Won't you please read it—the one served upon you Saturday?—A. Yes, sir. [Reading.] "M. Marean, Manager Western Union Telegraph Company"—shall I read it entire?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, read it.

Mr. MILLARD. Read it and let us see what it is.

The WITNESS (continuing): "To J. P. Leedom, Sergeant-at-Arms, or special messenger: You are hereby commanded to summon M. Marean, manager Western Union Telegraph Company, to be and appear before the Pan-Electric Select Investigating Committee of the House of Representatives of the United States, of which the Hon. C.

E. Boyle is chairman, to produce all dispatches to or from each of the following-named persons to or from each other: Hon. Casey Young, Hon. A. H. Garland, Hon. Isham G. Harris, Gen. Joseph E. Johnston, Wm. McCorry, W. Van Benthuyzen, Col. George Gantt, Gen. Bradley T. Johnson, H. O. Seixas, and Hon. John Goode, between July 8, 1885, and August 10, 1885; between August 10, 1885, and the 15th of September, 1885; between September 15, 1885, and the 1st of January, 1886; between January 1, 1886, and the 1st of May, 1886. Said dispatches sent to or from the following offices: Washington, D. C.; Memphis, Tenn.; Pittsburgh, Pa.; and New York, said dispatches relating to a Government suit or matters concerning the Pan-Electric Telephone Company and its subordinate companies." That is all, except the signatures.

Q. That is the subpoena that was served upon you?—A. Yes, sir; on Saturday.

Q. By whom was it served?—A. I do not know the gentleman's name; a deputy, I suppose, of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Q. Have you the rule to which you refer, with you?—A. No, sir; I haven't it with me.

Q. It is a printed rule, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any objection to producing a copy of that rule?—A. I have none myself, but I should like to confer with our officers first.

Q. I should like to have the rule produced. It is the same rule you showed me last week, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. This subpoena served upon you specifies the parties, does it not?—A. Yes, it specifies the parties.

Q. And specifies the dates?—A. It specifies the dates for about ten months; continuous dates.

Q. It specifies dates from July 8 to August 10, does it not?

Mr. HALL. The subpoena has been read; that will show what it states.

Q. And it states also about the subject-matter, does it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLARD. I know the rule the witness refers to. It does not prohibit the introduction of this evidence, and I would like to have the rule presented and become a part of the case. [To the witness.] What did you do after the subpoenas were served upon you?

The WITNESS. This subpoena?

Mr. MILLARD. Yes.

A. I immediately communicated the contents of it to my superior officer.

Q. Who is he?—A. He is in New York, the superior officer there of the law department.

Q. What is his name?—A. Mr. Feron.

Q. Who did you communicate with in New York?—A. Directly with the law officer.

Q. Give us the name of the gentleman you communicated with.—A. Can I have the privilege of consulting our people before answering that? Must I answer it? I do not know that there is any objection to it, but I would like to have that privilege.

Mr. HANBACK. You stated it was the law officer in New York?

Mr. MOFFATT. You can certainly give the name of the man, I should think.

Mr. MILLARD. You object to producing the telegrams called for on the ground that you have some rule, or if not a rule, then by authority of the company. I want to get at the authority, and for that purpose I ask you this question; you say you communicated with some gentleman in New York; I ask you his name.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand the witness to say that he would like to communicate with the officers of the company before making known the name.

The WITNESS. I do not know that there would be any objection, but I would like that privilege.

Mr. HANBACK. I have no objection so far as I am concerned.

Mr. MOFFATT. I do not see what objection there is to answering the question. He says it is the law officer of the company; what is the objection to his giving his name? I cannot see any earthly objection. If he had said he did not want to indicate the person at all, it would be different. But he has said with whom he communicated; now what is his name? There is no necessity of his making any refusal about that.

Mr. MILLARD. It would be very strange if he could injure himself in any way by giving the name of the party with whom he communicated.

Mr. HALL. I think the request of the witness is entirely reasonable. I think the inquiry is tending towards private affairs, and it is highly proper for a subordinate agent, if he desires, to be allowed to make an inquiry of that kind.

Mr. MILLARD. If he has any superior officer in this matter, I think we ought to know it for the purpose of subpoenaing him, or if this gentleman is acting under the advice of somebody else who outranks him, we ought to know who he is. I insist on my question.

Mr. EDEN. I did not understand the request that the witness made.

The CHAIRMAN. He was asked to name the officer of the company with whom he communicated.

Mr. OATES. And the witness asked an opportunity to confer with the officers of his company before giving the name of the officer with whom he conferred.

The WITNESS. I should have said to confer with my proper superior officers.

Mr. OATES. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that if it is desired that he should produce the printed rule under which he acted, together with the instruction, that we should lose nothing, as he would have to go to his office to get that, and he could ask in a minute if he could give the information called for about the officer in New York, and would answer at once whether the disclosure is made or not. Of course, being an employé of this corporation, he wants to keep within due bounds, and I do not blame him for it.

Mr. MOFFATT. Can you conceive of any objection to it?

Mr. OATES. I do not see any objection to it, but still as he makes the request, and as he has to go to his office for the printed rule, we will lose no time over it.

By Mr. HALE:

Q. Where is the superior officer to whom you refer, in this city or in New York?—
A. In New York.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. I understood you to say it was the law officer of your company?—A. I presume it comes from the law officer.

Q. You said you communicated with some man there who is the law officer of your company?—A. I communicated directly to my superintendent, and I suppose it goes through that channel.

Q. You said in answer to the question (you may have misunderstood it) that you communicated with the law officer of your company?

Mr. MILLARD. Never mind; let us pass that. (To the witness.) Have you been instructed by anybody connected with the Western Union Telegraph Company that you must not furnish these dispatches?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. You have been ordered by some person connected with the Western Union Telegraph Company not to produce those dispatches?—A. Yes; that I must decline to comply with the demand of the subpoena.

Q. Where does that person live?—A. My instructions come from the general officers of the company.

Q. But you are not instructed not to answer this question: I ask you where the gentleman lives?—A. I say in New York.

Q. Have you sent him the subpoena?—A. I sent him the contents of the subpoena.

Q. You sent him the contents of the subpoena; when did you do that?—A. Saturday; immediately on receipt of it.

Q. When did he answer you?—A. The same day.

Q. In what manner?—A. In the manner in which I have stated.

Q. Did he answer by telegraphic dispatch?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he did it on Saturday?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he instructed you not to obey the subpoena?—A. To follow the rules and decline.

Q. That is what I want to get at. What was his answer?—A. I have not got it with me.

Q. Give us the substance of it.—A. The substance of it I gave in my answer to the committee.

Q. Now give the committee the substance of the dispatch.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it desirable to go into that matter?

Mr. MILLARD. I think so, and I will tell you why—

Mr. OATES. Have you the dispatch in writing?

The WITNESS. I have in the office.

Mr. OATES. It seems to me that the best way would be for him to go and get that and get a copy of his rule and bring them both to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is not the committee in this position? The committee has called for the production of certain telegrams, and a subpoena has been served on the proper officer, a gentleman supposed to have custody of them. Is it material for the committee to go beyond that and inquire what the several officers of the company have said in their consultations? We are dealing with a responsible man, and the question for us to determine is, in the first place, as to whether we have the power to compel the production of the papers.

Mr. OATES. I do not think, Mr. Chairman, you take in the point I made, which was this: This witness declines to obey the subpoena, and the committee have a right to know his reasons for declining. Now, merely as giving his reasons for declining he can show his printed rule of instructions and state what the superintendent has said to him. I do not propose to go any further. I saw the rule that Mr. Millard saw, and my recollection is quite different from that of Mr. Millard about it, or at least I put a different construction on it. I would like to see the rule again.

Mr. MILLARD. So would I. [To the witness.] Have you been instructed by anybody else not to produce those papers?

The WITNESS. No, sir.

Q. Who have you talked with on this subject?—A. No one outside of the persons connected with our office.

Mr. MILLARD. I think he ought to bring the rule and let us see it.

The WITNESS. I presume I can get a copy of the rule at our branch office upstairs.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. You have had no conversation with any parties except people connected with your own office?—A. I don't remember that I have; I think not.

Q. Wouldn't you remember it if you had?—A. Unless it might have been at my house with my family, or something of that sort; no one else.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. After you had been served with the first subpoena you came to the committee to see whether you should comply with it?—A. I came up here, and I think I saw you, and also the chairman as well.

Mr. OATES. You saw me as acting chairman; you did not see Mr. Boyle.

The WITNESS. I beg your pardon; I thought you were the chairman.

Q. Have you done anything with reference to looking up the dispatches?—A. No, sir.

Mr. MILLARD. The witness says he can get a copy of this rule up-stairs. I think we ought to go on with the investigation.

The CHAIRMAN. Are you willing to produce a copy of that rule, Mr. Marean?

The WITNESS. I do not think there is any objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you bring us a copy of it?

Mr. MOFFATT. And while you are gone, I wish you would think over the fact as to what objection there can be to your telling to whom you telegraphed in New York for instructions.

The witness then left the committee-room for the purpose of obtaining a copy of the rule referred to.

Mr. W. VAN BENTHUYSEN. Mr. Chairman, I have noticed since I left here that testimony has been given in some particulars conflicting with the testimony given by myself, and some other matters have been shown here which I desire to ask your permission to reply to.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you wish to be recalled as a witness?

Mr. VAN BENTHUYSEN. Yes; afterwards. I will state in a few minutes what I desire. It has been shown here or charged that I entered into a conspiracy at a certain time. I propose to show in regard to testimony given here by certain individuals that those individuals are unworthy of credence and would not be believed under oath. I mention among those—

Mr. MOFFATT. I object to all this sort of business. If we are to have Mr. Van Benthuyesen here again—

Mr. MILLARD. If he wants to go back to the witness stand and testify, I have no objection.

Mr. MOFFATT. I do not know that I have any objection to that if he is called by the committee. He has refused to testify here, has refused to answer important questions in my judgment, and I do not think we should allow him to come in here on his own motion to clear himself. I do not wish to allow that until he consents to answer the questions put.

Mr. OATES. I think we should instruct the stenographer not to take his statement down; but I think we ought to hear it, so as to know what his point is.

Mr. MOFFATT. I think there ought to be then an executive session.

Mr. OATES. Oh, no; just let the statement be made; let us hear it; but instruct the stenographer not to take it down.

Mr. MOFFATT. It is understood, then, that it is not to go into the record.

The CHAIRMAN. If that is so, I submit that neither stenographer should take it down.

Mr. VAN BENTHUYSEN. Probably it would be well for me to state what I wish to show, and then you can decide about it.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the sense of the committee?

Mr. MOFFATT. I have no objection to it, with the understanding that it does not go into the record.

The CHAIRMAN. I believe it is the desire of the committee that the statement of Mr. Van Benthuyesen shall not be reported at all.

Mr. OATES. After we hear his statement then we can see what it is.

Mr. HALL. What is the reason for its not going on the record?

Mr. OATES. Because we do not know what it is.

Mr. MOFFATT. He has not been requested to come before the committee.

Mr. OATES. He is not testifying now. He is going to make a motion, as I understand it.

Mr. VAN BENTHUYSEN. I think as counsel for myself I have a right to appear here and refute this testimony that has been given already by certain witnesses.

Mr. MILLARD. You are not a defendant at all. This is not a prosecution. You are not upon trial in any way.

Mr. VAN BENTHUYSEN. It seems that some of you have made me appear so, whether it is so or not.

Mr. MILLARD. Oh, no.

Mr. VAN BENTHUYSEN. I beg your pardon. There have been things stated here which are absolutely false, and by people who are not worthy of credence.

Mr. MILLARD. I presume a great many things have been testified to falsely. I agree with you in some respects, that a good deal of it is not true.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any objection to hearing a request from Mr. Van Benthuisen?

Mr. OATES. Our witness is back now and we can go on with him.

Mr. EDEN. I think if there is any testimony in conflict with that which Mr. Van Benthuisen gave, he has a right to be heard. He has a right to show that he is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. We will take that matter up after awhile.

Mr. MORELL MAREAN then resumed the witness stand.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you the rule of your company about which you have spoken?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you produce it?

The WITNESS. Do you wish me to read it?

The CHAIRMAN. You may read it.

The WITNESS reading:

"RULE 100. Whenever a manager or other employé is subpœnaed on the part of the sender or addressee of a message to produce it before a court or other legal tribunal, he will comply with the subpœna and afterwards return the message to the files; but whenever a manager or other employé is subpœnaed on the part of any person other than the sender or addressee to produce a message or testify in relation thereto before a court or other legal tribunal, he will take the message into court and then submit to the judge that he ought not to produce it or testify in relation thereto, and that he cannot do so unless a rule or order of the court be entered requiring it, for the reason that telegraphic messages are of a confidential nature, and that the communication is claimed to be privileged. If such order be made and entered it will be obeyed, and the clerk of the court will then be requested to furnish a copy of the order, which, together with the subpœna, will be filed with the message to which it relates.

"NOTE.—A subpœna to be regular and valid must describe the desired messages by such specific reference to the names, dates, or subject-matter concerned as will enable such messages to be readily found and identified in the files; but a subpœna which only calls in general terms for such messages as may be found after a search through the files [for example: "All messages passing between John Smith and Richard Brown between the 1st day of July and the 5th day of August," &c.] is irregular and an unlawful subpœna in the nature of a search-warrant, and not founded upon messages known to have existed. It is the policy of the company to contest subpœnas of the latter character, especially where the production of the messages concerned is likely to create public scandal or excitement. On receipt of subpœnas of this class managers will bring the same to the attention of their superintendents, stating particularly the language of that part of the subpœna which calls for the messages."

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. Did you communicate fully this subpœna to your superior officer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you tell him that the subpœna set forth what was supposed to be contained in the messages?—A. I communicated the subpœna in full.

Mr. MILLARD. This is what the rule says: "A subpœna to be regular and valid must describe the desired messages by such specific reference to the names, dates, or subject-matter concerned as would enable such messages to be readily found and identified on the files." Now the point I make is this: That this subpœna specifies the persons, the senders and the receivers of the messages in the first place; in the second place it specifies the dates, and in the third place it specifies the subject-matter.

Mr. OATES. Let me see that subpœna.

The witness produced the subpœna and handed it to Mr. Oates.

Mr. MILLARD. It does not call for any confidential communications or dispatches—to relieve the company of that embarrassment—but it relates to the subject of “a Government suit or matters concerning the Pan-Electric Telephone Company.” I make the further point that this witness has exactly violated the rule in a single respect. The rule says, “Whenever a manager or other employé is subpoenaed on the part of any person other than the sender or addressee to produce a message or testify in relation thereto before a court or legal tribunal, he will take the message into court and then submit to the judge that he ought not to produce it or testify in relation thereto.”

Mr. EDEN. I suppose if the subpoena had identified some particular message he would have taken that course.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, this subpoena reads as follows: “and produce all dispatches to or from each of the following-named persons to or from each other: Hon. Casey Young, Hon. A. H. Garland, Hon. Isham G. Harris, Gen. Joseph E. Johnston, Wm. McCorry, W. Van Benthuyzen, Col. George Gantt, Gen. Bradley T. Johnson, H. O. Seixas, and John Goode, between July 8, 1885, and August 10, 1885, between August 10, 1885, and the 15th day of September, 1885, between September 15, 1885, and the 1st day of January, 1886, and between January 1, 1886, and the 1st day of May, 1886; said dispatches sent to or from the following offices: Washington, D. C., Memphis, Tenn., Pittsburgh, Pa., and New York, said dispatches relating to a Government suit or matters concerning the Pan-Electric Telephone Company or its subordinate companies.”

I respectfully submit that this subpoena, mentioning the date as between a certain date and another date, covering a large space of time, does not come within the rule at all, because if that was a compliance with the rule you could in a subpoena call for all dispatches passing between two people or any number of people for a space of ten years, or twenty years, or fifty years, by just chopping up the time, by concluding on one day and beginning on the next day, and so on through. So that does not obviate the difficulty, or at least it does not bring it within the rule at all, as I understand it. This subpoena calling for all dispatches relating to two or three matters, broadly stated, is not such a definite description. Now, I will tell you what, in my judgment, that rule means. If the subpoena directed the witness to produce a telegram or telegrams sent by or passing between—to illustrate—Isham G. Harris and Joseph E. Johnston on the 1st, 2d, or 3d days of a month, or coming within some reasonable limit, said dispatches relating to a particular matter, a matter sufficiently described to enable the keeper of the dispatches to easily identify them, as a rule, to find them, it would come within it. But here is a general spread. If there is anything in the shape of a search warrant or drag-net it cannot be broader or more effectual than the language of this subpoena, and the mere fact, as I repeat, that dates are mentioned between certain times, amounts to nothing. For instance, four months at a period are embraced within some of the dates mentioned—dispatches all along through that space of time. Why, it is too general and too indefinite, and it seems to me that the rule is founded in reason and good sense. In the first place, these communications are all of a privileged character; they are private. While the law will not exempt them from being brought into court, it is the duty of a corporation to keep them private and not to produce them, or a batch of them, so that the court or legal tribunal may run over the list and examine the correspondence between the parties and select from it what they want, and reject, it may be, what they do not want, for in that way it would be impossible for any man to inspect the correspondence and select from it such as might be legal evidence, and it would be an exposure, perhaps, of messages that were not at all relevant and whose production could not be enforced. So I think unless there can be a more definite description of the messages desired, that we have not the power to compel their production.

Mr. MILLARD. Can you make a subpoena more specific?

Mr. OATES. I could if I had the information. I presume you could.

Mr. MILLARD. That is the precise point.

Mr. OATES. If you have not got the information, that is your misfortune. It is no reason why we should violate the rule because of our ignorance and want of information.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything pending before the committee at this time?

Mr. OATES. I understood the subject was whether the witness should be compelled to answer a question.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no motion of that kind.

Mr. MILLARD. I insist on his answering the question.

Mr. HALE. What question?

Mr. MILLARD. The question I put awhile ago, that he should give us the name of the gentleman who instructed him not to obey the subpoena.

Mr. OATES. I do not see any objection to his answering that.

Mr. MILLARD. I believe Congress has the power to get this information, and that it is the duty of the committee to get it if we have the power to get it, and if we are authorized, without a violation of the rule that he has read. We should know who is the obstacle to furnishing the information.

Mr. HALL. I do not believe that any corporation in the country has a right to adopt a rule which would preclude a committee from securing a dispatch that can be described with ordinary accuracy. I do not believe that that rule requires us to give the exact date of a dispatch.

Mr. OATES. And no one else does.

Mr. HALL. I think that the ordinary form of a subpoena duces tecum, which describes the thing to be produced with ordinary accuracy, would be sufficient.

Mr. MILLARD. How could you make it more specific?

Mr. HALL. You make a wholesale description there. You practically compel them to bring up all the telegrams between certain individuals that you may inspect and examine them. That is the difficulty.

Mr. MILLARD. My answer to that is this: Here was this Government suit brought on the 2d of September. We certainly have a right under that rule to every dispatch sent in the months of July, August, and September. For instance, I can have issued separate subpoenas for every day in August, which this witness would have to comply with. I call for a dispatch between these parties, we will say, for the 2d of September relating to the Government suit or relating to the Pan-Electric Telephone Company. Now, he can come in here and produce, say, dispatches for the month of July (that is not the case now, for we have only covered one month) and he can produce the dispatches for August or for September, or we will say from January 1, 1886, to May, 1886. That covers four months, suppose; that will cover too much time. He said to me this, and I say it to the committee, "It will take us some time to go over this work and look up these dispatches, and we must be paid for the extra trouble." I brought that before the committee and was authorized to say to him that he should be paid for the extra trouble.

The WITNESS. I would like to explain to the committee this additional fact, that I had not then examined this rule particularly. I never have been called before a court to produce messages since I have been manager. I was familiar with the first part of the rule read, and presumed that covered that case; but when I saw the note attached to it, I saw that it applied to this subpoena. At that time I said to you that I did not think it was right for us to give so much labor and trouble without compensation.

Mr. MILLARD. Now, as to the action the committee should take in disposing of this matter, let me say that the books of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company show that dispatches did pass between these corresponding parties, most of them within the dates specified in the subpoena, and I think this committee ought, as a matter of self-protection from outside and just criticism, if they should neglect it, to insist upon the production of these dispatches.

Mr. EDEN. What do you say shows that the dispatches passed?

Mr. OATES. If the books show that any dispatches have passed, then you can describe them sufficiently.

Mr. MILLARD. The books do not show sufficient for that, but they show that the Pan-Electric Telephone Company paid for dispatches received and sent between these parties.

Mr. EDEN. Between what parties?

Mr. MILLARD. Between most of the parties specified here.

Mr. EDEN. I should like to see that.

Mr. MILLARD. Between the district attorney at Memphis and Casey Young, between Senator Harris and Casey Young, and a good many of the parties. That is in evidence.

Mr. EDEN. I do not know that there would be any difficulty in getting those dispatches.

Mr. MILLARD. I should like a vote on the question I put to the witness asking him to give the name of the person from whom he received his instructions.

Mr. EDEN. No court would allow the production of papers on such a subpoena as that, in my judgment.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not understand the witness to decline to give the name. He only desires to communicate with the officers of the company as to whether the name shall be disclosed.

The WITNESS. That is the case.

Mr. HALE. I understand the witness to say that he received this instruction from the main office, from those having charge of the office. I think that is a sufficient answer.

Mr. OATES. I suppose it is a matter of public notoriety as to the names of the officers?

Mr. MOFFATT. Do you mean the name of the man who communicated that instruction?

Mr. HALL. Are their names published?

The WITNESS. I do not know whether they are or not.

Mr. HALE. Do you mean the head officer in New York?

The WITNESS. I suppose the general manager in New York.

Mr. MOFFATT. You say you "suppose." Don't you know whom you telegraphed to?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir. But as this instruction came from my superior officers, I think I should have an opportunity to consult with them.

Mr. HALE. Who is the head man in New York, of your company?

The WITNESS. The general manager of the company is Thomas B. Eckert.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. Did you telegraph to him?—A. No, sir. He is not my direct superior officer.

By Mr. HALE:

Q. Who is your direct superintendent?—A. Mr. Gill, in Philadelphia, and Mr. Tinker, in New York.

Q. Who is your direct superintendent?—A. Mr. Gill, in Philadelphia.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. Is he the man you telegraphed to?—A. I would not like to answer.

Mr. HANBACK. The way I feel about it is this: This is a fair man who is employed by a great corporation, and it is a matter of bread and butter with him to a certain extent, and I do not believe if he thinks he had better not answer that question that he should be compelled to, but he should be allowed to go to the office and make the inquiry, and come back here and say.

Mr. HALE. I think it is a very unimportant question and I dislike to waste time in waiting.

Mr. HALL. I do not know who the attorney is.

Mr. HANBACK. That is for the witness to say.

The CHAIRMAN. I understood him to say a moment ago who gave this direction. We are dealing with a responsible man who is the custodian of these papers, and in any event we will not go beyond him. It does not make any difference who advised him to do it or not to do it, if he takes the responsibility of acting on that advice. It is wholly immaterial to the matter now before the committee.

Mr. OATES. It is a matter of law as to whether he is compellable to answer or not, no matter from whom he got his instructions.

The WITNESS. If you desire, I will now say that my instructions came from Mr. Ferons, the attorney of the company.

Mr. EDEN. I make the suggestion to Mr. Millard that we can examine the books—

Mr. HALE. The witness has already answered the question.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. Do you mean that you communicated with him?—A. Yes, sir; my first communication did not go to him direct, but went through the proper channel.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. Whatever dispatches have been received here are all filed away in your Department, so that there would be no difficulty in getting them—that is your custom, is it not?—A. We retain the dispatches for six months, and then they are shipped away and destroyed.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. Have you any dispatches later than six months preceding this time?—A. The last dispatches we have go back to October.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I understand you, then, to say that there are some of the telegrams named in the subpoena which you do not have?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You only have them back to last October?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. What have you done with the others?—A. They were shipped to New York to the agent of the company, by whom they are destroyed.

Q. You do not know of your own personal knowledge of their destruction, do you?—A. No, sir; I could not tell you in regard to that.

Q. To whom do you ship them?—A. They are shipped to the storekeeper of the Western Union Telegraph Company.

Q. Can you give us his name?—A. I do not know his name. I could obtain it for you.

Q. Did you ship them yourself?—A. No, sir; but I forwarded the memorandum of their shipment and the dates to the superintendent, for each one.

Q. Have you a record of them?—A. We have a record of the shipment—that is, of the dates.

Q. And of the months they were shipped?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. When were they shipped?—A. The last shipment was made on the 23d of April.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. This last April?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. That was up to October last, you say, and you have the dispatches from October 1st down to date?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Would a compliance with this subpoena require an examination at all the offices named, New Orleans, Memphis, Washington, and Baltimore?—A. I do not so understand it. I understand it only applies to my own office. I would have no direction over those offices.

Q. I will repeat my question to you. You are required to produce dispatches sent to and from certain persons named, between certain dates, "said dispatches sent to or from the following offices, Washington, D. C., Memphis, Tenn., Pittsburgh, Pa., and New York." Now, I want to know if in order to find the dispatches sent within the last six months to any of those offices it would require an examination of the files of that particular office?—A. Not if the dispatch was sent from this office.

Q. But supposing it was a dispatch sent from Memphis to Pittsburgh?—A. Then it would require a search to be made at the Memphis or Pittsburgh office or both.

Q. Then you could find here only the dispatches sent to or from this office?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLARD. To each of those offices?

The CHAIRMAN. To each of those offices, and as to those between the other offices named you would have to examine those offices?

Mr. MILLARD. Certainly, but that is not the intention.

The CHAIRMAN. This is the way the subpoena reads: "Sent to or from the following offices?"

Mr. HALE. You could only find such as were sent to or from this office?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

Mr. OATES. It was intended to reach only those sent from or received at this office?

Mr. MILLARD. Yes; from the other offices.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. The other dispatches for the previous time to the last six months you could not produce, because you have not the dispatches here?—A. No, sir.

Q. They are sent off by a general rule of the company?—A. Yes, sir; they are shipped away at the end of the month; at the expiration of about six or seven months.

Q. Does not the same rule which you have read apply to a subpoena to produce a dispatch in court?—A. I understand it does.

The CHAIRMAN. Does any other member of the committee desire to ask any questions?

Mr. MILLARD. I understand that the witness refuses to produce the dispatches called for.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, for the reasons stated.

Mr. HALE. (To Mr. Millard.) Have you any other questions you wish to put to the witness before this matter is passed on?

Mr. MILLARD. No; not now.

Mr. HALE. I submit that we ought to have an executive session.

The CHAIRMAN (to the witness). We will dismiss you for the present, Mr. Marean.

Mr. OATES. I do not understand that the motion is made to take action upon this matter at present.

Mr. MILLARD. As I understand the law, I think the company is obliged to produce the messages, but I think the committee should take a little time to examine the question so as to act upon it understandingly. I do not think we should act on this question at present.

Mr. OATES. But there seems to be a motion to the effect that we should go into executive session to consider it.

Mr. MILLARD. I should prefer to have the full committee here on such a question as that. Judge Ranney is detained by sickness.

Mr. OATES. I think we can get along without Judge Ranney. If it is a question of voting we can pair without waiting for him.

The CHAIRMAN. There is nothing before the committee, I believe. This gentleman is still on the witness stand, and if any member desires to ask him any questions he may proceed; otherwise I will dismiss the witness.

The WITNESS. One of the gentlemen a few minutes ago spoke as though it was a matter of bread and butter with me; I wish to say in reply to that, that when I cannot comply with the rules of the company I think it will be my duty to resign and let them appoint some one in my place.

Mr. HANBACK. You misunderstood me entirely on that point.

Mr. HALE. I understand Mr. Millard insists upon his question.

Mr. MILLARD. Yes; I insist on his answering the main question.

Mr. HALL. I understand you insist on his producing the telegrams called for in the subpoena.

Mr. EDEN. To produce the telegrams called for in the subpoena?

Mr. HALE. That is the question before the committee.

The WITNESS. That subpoena does not claim the existence of any messages.

Mr. HANBACK. Is it necessary a motion should be made? I understood—

Mr. HALL. We might wait until we go into executive session. There is another similar question pending before the committee. Mr. Hill is here, and we might dispose of both matters at once.

The WITNESS. Shall I remain here?

The CHAIRMAN. We will recall you after the committee has determined whether it will undertake to compel the production of these papers. Is Mr. Hill present?

Mr. EDEN. He was here.

Mr. MILLARD. The manager of the Baltimore and Ohio Telegraph Company was subpoenaed for this morning, too.

The CHAIRMAN. Who is he?

Mr. MILLARD. His name is Clark.

The CHAIRMAN. Is Mr. Clark, of the Baltimore and Ohio Telegraph Company present? [After a pause.] We can hear Mr. Van Benthuyzen now. Is there any objection to that?

Mr. OATES. I move that we hear his motion without its being taken down.

The CHAIRMAN (to Mr. Van Benthuyzen). For what purpose do you appear before the committee?

Mr. EDEN. If the other reporter takes it down, I think we had better have it taken down also.

Mr. MOFFATT. I do not want his statement to go into the record.

Mr. EDEN. I do not, either.

Mr. MILLARD. If he wants to testify, I have no objection.

Mr. OATES. Let the reporters, both of them, take it, and it will be then a question as to whether or not it shall go into the record.

The CHAIRMAN. If you will allow me, I would like to ask and ascertain what he wants to say to the committee.

Mr. VAN BENTHUYSEN. I will state what I want to say and then you can tell afterwards.

Mr. MOFFATT. There is a misunderstanding in regard to this matter. It was agreed that this should not be taken down, but some member of the committee instructed the reporter to take it down, and it is being taken down.

Mr. OATES. I insist upon it if the other reporter takes it down.

The CHAIRMAN. I requested the gentleman who reports for the Bell company not to take it if the committee determined that it should not go on to the record, and of course he will comply with the request of the committee.

Mr. EDEN. I do not think it is right for one reporter to take it and not the other.

Mr. MILLARD. We have but one official reporter.

The CHAIRMAN. I referred to the gentleman making the Bell company report.

Mr. HALL. I do not think the committee has a right to dictate to an outsider about his taking it down.

Mr. MOFFATT. But we have a right to dictate to the other reporter.

Mr. HALL. I do not see any sense in not allowing the Bell company to take it down and supply it to the journals if they think proper; I mean to supply the record of our proceedings.

Mr. MOFFATT. This gentleman (referring to the reporter for the Bell Company) is here by permission of the committee, and of course if we tell him not to take down anything he will not do it.

Mr. HALL. I do not think he is here by permission of the committee.

Mr. MOFFATT. Suppose the committee refuses him permission to be present?

Mr. OATES. The committee could exclude every one from the room if it thought proper.

Mr. HALL. It would cease to be a public inquiry then.

Mr. HANBACK. That would exclude all the press reporters.

Mr. EDEN. I think the committee reporter might take it down, and then it can be afterwards determined by the committee whether it shall stay on the record.

Mr. MILLARD. I am opposed to any statement that the gentleman may make going into the record, unless he goes back upon the stand and testifies.

Mr. HALL. You have consented to other gentlemen making a statement. A Massachusetts judge sent a letter here, and other letters and communications have been made and sworn to for the purpose of going on this record, and Judge Ranney and yourself have moved to have them admitted, and they are part of the record now!

Mr. MILLARD. No, sir; I have done nothing of the kind; the witness was not here. I am opposed to any statement that the gentleman may make going into the record unless he goes back on the stand and gives it to us in the shape of evidence. It seems to me that that is lawyer-like.

Mr. EDEN. I suppose the committee does not know now whether it is to go on the record or not. Mr. Van Benthuyzen is here for the purpose of stating what he wants.

Mr. MILLARD. Supposing every witness should make a personal request of this kind?

Mr. OATES. Let it be taken down, but I do not propose to let it go into the record unless it is testimony.

Mr. HANBACK. Does he make it under oath?

Mr. OATES. No; it is not evidence to go into the record unless we put it in there.

Mr. MOFFATT. In other words, he could put a stump speech into the record?

Mr. OATES. Not at all; I do not think it is going into the record.

The CHAIRMAN. If any gentleman has a motion to make in regard to this matter I will hear it.

Mr. HALE. I move that Mr. Van Benthuyzen be permitted to take the stand as a witness and state what he desires.

Mr. OATES. I am opposed to that. It may be a repetition of what he has said. I move as a substitute for that that we hear his statement and his motion—I do not know what he wants—and that reporters go ahead and take it down, but that the statement shall not go into the record unless a vote of this committee puts it in there. Do you accept the modification?

Mr. HALE. I think he ought to state under oath whatever he wants to state.

Mr. OATES. I do not know what he wants. Let us see what he wants.

Mr. MILLARD. He can tell us under oath what he wants.

Mr. HALE. I do not think he ought to make any long speech to the committee.

Mr. HALL. I know nothing more about it than what has appeared by his first suggestion to the chairman, that he is under the impression that there are some conflicting statements, contradictory, perhaps, of his own testimony.

Mr. HANBACK. Let us recall him and have him testify.

Mr. HALL. That is not it. It involves his personal interest as an individual, and also an interest that he represents. He probably seeks to ask permission to give this committee information as to the names of witnesses whose testimony will tend to affect the question one way or the other. I think it is entirely proper for a witness who has been on the stand under these circumstances to be allowed to state to the committee what he desires.

Mr. HALE. He might state that to the Chairman and give the names of the witnesses.

The CHAIRMAN. My understanding of the offer of Mr. Van Benthuyzen was, that he came before the committee in order to make a request to be allowed to produce evidence on a certain subject. My judgment is that anybody has the right to do that.

Mr. EDEN. I think so.

The CHAIRMAN. Whether he had been on the stand or not. But I say further that I do not think he or any one else would have a right to appear here and make a statement of facts. But if he wants to produce evidence on certain points or subjects that have been before the committee or that he proposes to bring before the committee, I should say that he had a right to do so.

Mr. MILLARD. You can ask him the question.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what I have asked him already.

Mr. MOFFATT. There is one further objection I have in this matter, Mr. Chairman. Mr. Van Benthuyzen is in contempt of this committee. He has been here before it and repeatedly refused to answer questions which, in my judgment, were pertinent to this inquiry, and he now comes before us to ask of this committee a certain favor. Now, until he purges himself of that contempt and consents to answer any proper questions put to him, I object to his making any statement.

Mr. EDEN. Did he refuse to answer any question that the committee decided he should answer?

Mr. MOFFATT. I do not know that he did refuse to answer any question put by a vote of the committee. But he said repeatedly that he would not answer such and such questions, and that he did not propose to answer any such questions.

Mr. OATES. I remember being in the chair at one time when some point of that kind was made, and as the occupant of the chair I ruled against requiring Mr. Van Benthuyzen to answer the question, because it was outside of the scope of the inquiry.

Mr. MOFFATT. Sometimes that was so, but in addition to that, from day to day he said, "I refuse to answer that question."

Mr. OATES. I do not think he refused to answer any question which the committee voted he should answer.

Mr. MOFFATT. I suppose not.

Mr. OATES. It takes that to constitute contempt.

Mr. MOFFATT. Of course I do not mean technical contempt of the committee. But when a man says "I will not answer that question," and you haven't power to make him answer it, it is enough contempt for me.

Mr. HALE. My motion is that Mr. Van Benthuyzen be allowed to state his request.

The CHAIRMAN. My inquiry of Mr. Van Benthuyzen was for the purpose of bringing that out before the committee. It seems to me that that is a proper proceeding.

Mr. MOFFATT. When the chair interrogated him upon that question he commenced to pull out a document and read it, and that is what I did not want to go into the record.

The CHAIRMAN. I will not allow it if I can help it.

Mr. HALE. I accept the amendment as suggested.

Mr. OATES. All I wanted was to enable him to make known by a statement here what it was he desired to do, not to make it any part of the record, even if it is taken down.

Mr. MOFFATT. Why then should it be taken down?

Mr. OATES. If it is, I move that it be excluded and not be made any part of the record. It does not hurt anybody.

Mr. HALE. I should like to have the chairman ask Mr. Van Benthuyzen if he cannot put his communication in writing.

Mr. OATES. It seems that he has got it there in writing.

Mr. MOFFATT. I should object to that—to his reading a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. I think the committee will be content with the question.

Mr. OATES. Let him go on. We can stop him at any time.

The CHAIRMAN (to Mr. Hale). Do you withdraw your motion?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN (addressing Mr. Van Benthuyzen). The committee desires to know for what purpose you appear here to-day; and I suggest to you that it seems to be the sense of the committee that you should not now make a statement of facts, but merely indicate the purpose for which you desire to be heard.

Mr. VAN BENTHUYSEN. Since I left here there has been testimony given before this committee that would lead the outside world to suppose—

The CHAIRMAN. I think you are now going beyond my suggestion. Do you wish to introduce testimony here for any purpose?

Mr. VAN BENTHUYSEN. Yes; I want to introduce testimony.

The CHAIRMAN. On what point?

Mr. VAN BENTHUYSEN. On the testimony that has been given here recently by Mr. Sypher, Mr. Hill, Mr. Clark, Mr. Crawford, Mr. Dana, Mr. Reid, and Mr. Pulitzer.

Mr. HANBACK. And Mr. Jones?

The CHAIRMAN. Is it for the purpose of contradicting what they have testified to?

Mr. VAN BENTHUYSEN. I want to show that some—

Mr. MILLARD. I object to what he wants to show.

The CHAIRMAN. You need not state the facts. You understand what the purpose of the committee is?

Mr. VAN BENTHUYSEN. I do not hear everything that is said, and therefore I do not fully understand. If you don't want to let me make a statement of what I want to show, you can afterwards rule it out.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee does not seem to be disposed to have your statement. They want to know on what particular points you desire to introduce evidence.

Mr. VAN BENTHUYSEN. In regard to the charge of conspiracy on my part with officers of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. I ask you again if you want to contradict the testimony of the witnesses named by you?

Mr. VAN BENTHUYSEN. Not only to contradict them, but to show that some of them are unworthy of credence.

The CHAIRMAN. You want to attack the character of some of them?

Mr. VAN BENTHUYSEN. Yes, I do. I want to show that some of them are unworthy of credence.

The CHAIRMAN. We understand that.

Mr. HALE. I suggest that he be asked now if he has the names of the witnesses he desires to introduce.

Mr. VAN BENTHUYSEN. I want to show also that there was a conspiracy entered into between the Bell company and these people, and that improper means have been used—

The CHAIRMAN. I will ask you now to regard what I said to you, and merely answer the questions. You will have to follow the direction of the committee. Can you indicate the names of the witnesses whom you want to call?

Mr. VAN BENTHUYSEN. I will produce it. It is documentary evidence.

The CHAIRMAN. But do you want any witnesses called?

Mr. VAN BENTHUYSEN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Can you name them?

Mr. VAN BENTHUYSEN. I cannot name them all now.

Mr. HALE. About how many does he propose to produce?

Mr. HANBACK. And where do they reside?

Mr. VAN BENTHUYSEN. There are quite a number. I should have to write them down.

Mr. HALE. There are quite a number? Oh, well, that is enough.

The CHAIRMAN. It is a question now, whether the committee will go into the matter as indicated by the witness.

Mr. VAN BENTHUYSEN. I forgot to add that I would like to be represented by counsel also.

Mr. HALL. When will Judge Ranney return?

Mr. MILLARD. He will be back to-morrow morning.

Mr. HALL. I moved that this matter be referred to a committee composed of Mr. Boyle and Judge Ranney, and that they have an interview with Mr. Van Benthuyesen, and determine and report to the committee as to the matter of action.

Mr. MILLARD. I second that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. Put some other member on instead of me.

Mr. HALL. Then I suggest Mr. Oates.

Mr. OATES. Excuse me; I shall decline to serve on it.

Mr. HANBACK. Your motion is right.

Mr. HALE. I think we had better determine first whether we shall go into this part of the investigation.

Mr. OATES. I am perfectly willing to postpone the matter, as the gentleman on that side of the table desires, until Judge Ranney is here, and then, I think, Mr. Van Benthuyesen or anybody else who wants to produce evidence might come before the committee and state it fully, so that it does not take up too much of our time, and I do not care in what form he states it, so far as I am concerned, and then I shall be prepared to vote on it as to whether we will go into it or not. I think it will be time enough then for us to consider the testimony and how much further we should go.

Mr. HALE. This proposition would not involve too much, in my judgment, to go into it in that shape.

Mr. MILLARD. It is a matter we can safely leave to Mr. Boyle and Mr. Ranney.

Mr. HALE. They are safe men, I know.

Mr. OATES. I shall oppose any such motion myself.

Mr. HALL. I do not care anything about it. Mr. Millard and some of the gentlemen on the other side are objecting to this going into the record, unless he shall resume the witness stand.

Mr. MILLARD. I am in favor, if Mr. Van Benthuyesen has any important witnesses, that they should be brought here. He speaks of the testimony of Mr. Dana, Mr. Read, Mr. Pulitzer, and Mr. Clark, and they are all important witnesses; and if he has anything to show that they have in any manner testified untruthfully, I am willing to open the door and have them sworn.

Mr. EDEN. I think he certainly has a right to contradict them in any way, if he has evidence that he can contradict them, by which is important.

Mr. MILLARD. I think the extent to which we can go in that matter we can safely leave to Mr. Boyle and Judge Ranney.

The CHAIRMAN. I think that is a question for the committee itself.

Mr. OATES. I think the committee would have to decide it eventually. I do not think they would like to.

Mr. HALL. I am going to withdraw the motion. I am ready to vote to adjourn.

Mr. OATES. I move that the committee adjourn until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to, and the committee adjourned until Tuesday, May 18, 1886, at 12 m.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Tuesday, May 18, 1886.

The committee was called to order at 12.20 p. m.

The CHAIRMAN. I have the return of the testimony from New Orleans. I will open it. [Opens package.] The members of the committee can look at their leisure. General Johnson is present this morning to be further examined. I will recall him.

BRADLEY T. JOHNSON, who had been previously examined as a witness in the case, was recalled.

By the CHAIRMAN (Mr. Boyle).

Question. Is there anything you desire to say to the committee?—Answer. Yes, sir. When I left here on the 16th of April last, I did so after a promise to produce to the committee the correspondence between Col. Young and myself, relating to the bringing of the Government suit. I procured that correspondence from among my papers and left it in Baltimore last week when I went away to spend the week at Annapolis. I came over here with it on Monday a week ago, but the committee had no quorum. So I saw Col. Oates and went away on the understanding that I was to be notified when to come. I directed the correspondence to be sent this morning by express to Mr. Gardner, the secretary of the company. I saw Mr. Gardner a little while ago, and he had not yet received it. When it comes I will have handed to the chairman of the committee all my letters from Col. Young.

When I was examined before the gentlemen were rather pressing upon two points. One of those points is this: It appears that a paper was produced by Mr. Gardner and offered in evidence—a report of mine to the board of directors of the Washington Telephone Co., dated September 10, 1885, which is indorsed “Not acted upon, because of satisfactory provisions otherwise made.” I was interrogated as to what those satisfactory provisions were. I declined to give any information about them, because they were private arrangements between myself and my company, and were not within the purview of this investigation. I prefer now to state to the committee that they were provisions relating entirely to my own fees and the compensation I was to receive for professional services in connection with the suit. [Referring to book of the company.] The satisfactory provision that was made with me at that time, in lieu of the one proposed in that paper, was one relating entirely to compensation to be paid to counsel, and had no relation to the Government suit or any other public matter of any kind. Without offering this book in evidence or allowing it to be used in evidence, I prefer to show it to the committee for the purpose of showing what the arrangement was. I do not propose to allow the book to go in evidence, but prefer that Mr. Ranney, yourself (the chairman), and the gentlemen of the committee should see what it is. [Book submitted to the committee for inspection.] That is the satisfactory provision that was referred to and about which Mr. Ranney interrogated me. I knew exactly what it was, but I did not propose to communicate it, because it was a private professional matter. I do not propose to do it now, but I prefer letting you gentlemen know there is nothing to conceal and nothing that is wrong.

Q. You say it relates entirely to your fees and has no connection with the Government suit?—A. It has no relation to the Government suit at all. It is entirely a professional and personal matter between myself and the company.

By Mr. HALE:

Q. Between you and your own company?—A. Yes, sir; between me and my own company. It has no relation to the parent company or to any other suit except the suit that was then pending in Baltimore against my company, or the suit I was promoting which had been brought in Baltimore and was to be heard on the 15th of September. That arrangement was made on the 10th of September, and the hearing in Baltimore was to take place on the 15th of September. This report I made to my company was in regard to the arrangements for the defense of the suit; and the company made some other proposition to me which was satisfactory and which was accepted in lieu of the proposition I made myself.

Mr. HALE. That is a matter that is certainly none of our business.

The WITNESS. None of your business in the world; none in the world, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Is there any other matter that you wish to refer to?—A. I would like to say that I have instructed the secretary of the Washington Telephone Company to exhibit, to any gentleman of the committee who wants to look at them, all the papers and records of that company. I object to producing them as testimony, because I do not think they are competent testimony. I do not think the committee has any right to inquire into them. There is nothing to be concealed in the transactions of the company. They are open to the examination of any gentleman of the committee who desires to examine them—whenever they choose. I have examined the list of the stockholders of the company. I was interrogated as to whether a name on the list of stockholders was A. F. Gorman or A. P. Gorman. There is no such name as Gorman on the list, and nothing like it. I do not propose to offer the list in evidence, but only to let the gentlemen of the committee see it. There is no mystery about this matter, and I am only standing on my legal rights as to what I shall testify to and what I shall not testify to. There are two gentlemen who were members of Congress some time ago, who are stockholders of that company. One of them is Gen. Van H. Manning; the other is Col. Casey Young. Gen. Manning was elected a director of the company, I think, after the expiration of his term as a member of Congress, so that he was not a member of Congress at the time he became a stockholder. Col. Young was a member of Congress at the time he became a stockholder. These are the only two names on that list in any way connected with any Department of the Government so far as I know.

Q. What was the date of Mr. Manning's election as a director?—A. I couldn't tell you that.

Q. I ask it simply because you state it was after the expiration of his term as a member of Congress.—A. I don't think I remember when General Manning went out of Congress. I can only state it in that general way.

Q. He was not a member of the last Congress?—A. He was not a member of the last Congress. He was elected in the summer of 1885, sir, or the fall of 1885.

The CHAIRMAN. No.

The WITNESS. I mean as a director in this telephone company. He was not elected a member of Congress then. He went out of Congress on the 4th of March, 1885, did he not? He is not a member of this Congress.

Mr. OATES. He went out on the 4th of March, 1885.

The WITNESS. Very well. He was not connected with the Government at all when he became a stockholder in this company.

Q. Have you any other matter you wish to bring to the attention of the committee?—A. I do not want to take up the time of the committee or my own time either by appearing here again, and if you will allow me to go on a little irregularly about the correspondence I would like to explain some things. I ought to have it here and explain it to you as I go along. It ought to have been here this morning; I don't know why it is not. It will certainly be here during the course of the day and will be handed to the chairman. In March, 1885, I found a letter of mine to Col. Young, giving an opinion as to the expediency of bringing the suit in Memphis, Tennessee, by the Pan-Electric company against the Bell company, to enjoin them from slandering the title of the Pan company there, and advising as to the propriety of that action.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. That is a part of the correspondence?—A. That is a part of the correspondence.

Q. Which will be delivered to the committee?—A. Which will be delivered to the committee; yes. On the 8th of July, 1885, Col. Young came to see me in Baltimore, and there we made some further examination of the law on the subject. He must have left on the night of the 8th of July and got to Pittsburgh on the morning of July 9. On the night of July 9 he wrote to me fully about the Pittsburgh suit. You will see that letter. It is among the papers. After that I pressed him very much to proceed with the Pan-Electric suit in Tennessee, because I wanted that matter brought to a point. I proceeded to prepare a bill against the Bell company myself in order to bring a suit in Baltimore, if they once gave me any occasion to do so. They never did move against me until the 3d of July, 1885, when they published notices in two daily papers of Baltimore, notifying our customers that they would be sued for infringement of the Bell patent. To that I replied by the letter which is in my testimony in the record. I proposed bringing suit against them on the 20th or 22d of July. I have not the letters here to fix the date. I filed a bill in the State court to enjoin them from a slander of my title. The Bell company brought suit in the Federal court, I think, on the 16th of July. They accepted the issue I made with them, and brought a suit against the Pan-Electric company, the Washington company, of which I am the president, and the Washington company of Maryland. The court had no jurisdiction as to either one of the companies. They had no jurisdiction as against the Pan-Electric company, because that was not doing business in the district; they had no jurisdiction against my Washington company, because mine was a Tennessee corporation, and I was not transacting business within that district, and therefore they had no right to sue me. They had no jurisdiction against the Washington company of Maryland, because that was in the hands of a receiver of the State court, and they had no right to sue a corporation that was in the hands of a receiver of the State court.

When the suit was brought on the 16th of July, I was confronted with it; I was forced to issue on the Baltimore case, and I did not propose to back out and run away from a fight I had brought on myself, and I went into court and entered a special appearance for my company, not raising the question of jurisdiction at all, and meeting the issue they made. It stands that way now. You asked me before at what time the appearance of Mr. Stirling was entered. I find from the record that none of us ever did enter any appearance at all, and have not to this day. There was a special appearance for the purpose of moving to dismiss the bill on account of the pending litigation in Tennessee. That explains some portion of the testimony that has been given heretofore.

I find that about the 21st of July Colonel Young sent me a copy of Colonel Val Benthuyssen's letter to the Attorney-General, demanding that a suit be brought in the name of the Government against the Bell company to vacate their patent. I will give you a copy of Colonel Young's letter to me and the inclosed copy of Van Benthuyssen's letter to the Attorney-General. Both will be among the file of papers I will hand to you in the course of the day. So when I said the other day I had never heard of the Government suit until I came to the conference here in Washington on the 27th or 30th of July, I was mistaken. I had heard about it on the 21st of July preceding, by the letter from Colonel Young, but it made so little impression on my mind that I went right straight along in my own way, making all the preparations for the fight against the Bell company in our court. I never paid any attention to the Government suit at all. However, I heard about the act of Congress that had been passed authorizing a suit to be brought, and it turned out that the bill had never passed the Senate and therefore had not become a law; and then Mr. Von Briesen and myself had some talk on the subject. We discussed the general proposition, and I was quite satisfied the law was sufficient without an act of Congress.

In the State of Maryland, where I have resided and practiced law a good many years, and in the State of Virginia, where I have also resided and practiced law, it had been the custom from colonial times to vacate patents by scire facias and bill in equity. It was the common practice for a hundred and fifty years, and I can find for you fifty cases. It was the common practice in Virginia to do the same thing, and if any of you are sufficiently interested in the subject you will find a reference to it in Mr. Jefferson's Notes on Virginia, in a book that was written in 1781. He said it was the common practice to vacate patents by scire facias or bill in equity.

When Mr. Von Briesen and I discussed this matter, it all came to my mind, and I was satisfied that the general power existed without an enabling act. That was the reason why the suggestion that was made to me here in July made no more impression on my mind than it did. I never had a doubt that the suit would be brought, because I supposed we had a right to have the suit brought, and I did not suppose it was possible for the Attorney-General on account of any personal relations to interpose and defeat a great public right, or attempt to do so. I was here on the 30th of July, when I had the conference at the Ebbitt House with the gentleman in relation to the bringing of the Government suit. I was here again on the 3d of September and I saw the Solicitor-General, Mr. Goode, and asked him whether the suit had been ordered.

The suit was ordered on the 3d of September, and it was brought in Tennessee on the 9th of September. I think you will find those dates to be verified on the record. I tried to get a copy of the telegram that was sent to me from Memphis announcing the bringing of the Government suit. I inquired at the office in Baltimore, and I found they send all their dispatches off and put them in the paper mill as soon as possible, probably within thirty days, so that I can get no copy there. I cannot find a copy among my papers, but I know precisely what the telegram said. The telegram was a Western Union telegram, stating that the suit had been brought to-day—whatever the date was. I got it on the 10th of September.

Q. Do you desire to make any further statement?—A. That is all I have to say.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlemen of the committee may proceed to examine you.

By Mr. OATES :

Q. After the date of that meeting that you spoke of, at the Ebbitt House, along during August or the 1st of September, did you ever attend any conference held by members of the National Improved Telephone Company and the Pan-Electric company at Colonel Young's rooms, No. 1327 G street, in this city?—A. After the first meeting at the Ebbitt House, which was my first connection with it—July 27—from that time, during the month of August, did I attend such a meeting there? I am reasonably certain I did not. I am as certain as a man ought to be about such a thing. I don't think so. I haven't the slightest recollection of it.

By Mr. RANNEY :

Q. You say your conference at the Ebbitt House was on the 27th of July?—A. Yes, sir; the 27th and 30th. My name is registered there on the 30th, but I am satisfied I was there a day or two days before.

Q. Whom did you see there on the 27th?—A. I saw the same gentlemen I saw before. I saw Colonel Van Benthuyssen, of New Orleans, Mr. Huntington, of Mississippi, Col. Casey Young, and Col. George Gantt. I don't want to be tied to that date. It was about that time. I saw those gentlemen at that conference, whether on the 27th or the 28th I am not prepared to say.

Q. What makes you fix on that day?—A. Because I have a recollection that I was here on the 27th and 30th. I was over here to attend the committee a week ago yesterday and I went to the Ebbitt House and examined the register, and I am satisfied I saw my name registered here on the 27th. I looked for it this morning and I couldn't find it. You can see what the register shows.

Q. Don't you find your name is registered there for the first time on August 1?—A. No, sir; my name is registered the first time on July 30, according to what I find this morning, but when I examined it on last Monday I found my name registered July 27.

Q. What day of the week was July 30?—A. I cannot tell you.

Q. Were you not here on the 31st?—A. I think I was; yes, sir.

Q. Whom did you meet on the 31st?—A. The same gentlemen I have just named.

Q. Was Mr. von Briesen there?—A. He was.

Q. Was he there each time when you were there?—A. He was there twice when I was there, certainly, but I have an idea that the last time I was there he had gone off to New York.

Q. The last time?—A. I think so. I am not sure about that.

Q. Whom did you meet the last time after Von Briesen left?—A. I think I met precisely the same gentlemen. I have no recollection of meeting anybody except Col. Young and Col. Gantt, from Memphis; Col. Van Benthuyssen, of New Orleans, and Mr. Huntington, of Mississippi; I can't remember anybody else.

Mr. RANNEY. I have seen those records. Have they been put in yet?

Mr. OATES. The registers?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

Mr. OATES. No; they never have been put in.

Mr. RANNEY. The dates appear very clearly by the record.

The WITNESS. My name is registered there on the 30th of July, and the 3d of September, and I was satisfied it was registered on the 27th of July. I still can't understand why I could not find it this morning, because I certainly saw it there a week ago.

Q. Do you recollect having an interview there with these gentlemen on the 31st of July, when Mr. von Briesen was present?—A. I don't remember it, but I think it is entirely probable.

Q. Do you remember in what room it was held?—A. Yes, sir; perfectly.

Q. What room was it?—A. It was a corner room, probably in the 3d story, down on Fifteenth street. The Ebbitt House is on the corner of Fifteenth street, is it not?

The CHAIRMAN. Fourteenth street.

The WITNESS. It was down the hill towards Willard's; down Fourteenth street, towards the avenue.

Q. How long did that conference last?—A. The conference lasted some hours I would say. I got over here about ten o'clock in the morning, and the conference lasted all day, until probably three o'clock in the afternoon.

Q. Did Mr. von Briesen stay through it?—A. I cannot tell you.

Q. Can you tell us what was said there?—A. No, sir. I will tell you that the general discourse was on the subject of having a suit; the legal power of the Attorney-General to order a suit to vacate a patent. There was a general discussion between Major von Briesen and myself as to the power of the Government to order a suit to vacate a patent procured by fraud.

Q. The conference related to the Government suit?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there anything else discussed beyond the power of the Attorney-General?—A. No, sir; I can't say that. If you will ask me the direct question you are after I will answer you.

Q. I would like your recollection of that interview. As I was not there I am obliged to seek my information from you?—A. Yes; but you have got something you want to find out; you have something in your mind that you want to know about. I haven't the faintest idea of what it is. I don't remember any subject of discussion except that.

Mr. RANNEY. I don't want you to fly from anything you think I may have.

The WITNESS. No; I am not afraid of anything you have; nothing in the world.

Q. I want your recollection of what the interview was. Can't you tell us what the discussion was?—A. The discussion was as to the power of the Government to bring a suit to vacate a patent, without an enabling act of Congress.

Q. Was that all?—A. I would not be willing to say that was all. It was a conversation covering several hours.

Q. Was that the whole subject of conversation?—A. No; I don't think it was.

Q. What else was there?—A. I think the subject of conversation was very largely the means by which the patent was illegally procured and the evidence that could be procured to vacate the patent; the probability of people having been bribed in the Patent Office to procure the patent.

Q. Was there anything else that you can remember?—A. No; I can't remember anything else beyond that. The general scope of the discussion was as to the advisability of attacking the patent.

Q. Was there any conference as to where the Government suit should be brought?—

A. I expect there was; yes, sir. I think there was.

Q. The question where the Government suit was to be brought was talked over?—

A. Yes, sir; I think it was.

Q. That you had forgotten about. What was said on that subject?—A. I think there was considerable discussion as to where the Government suit should be brought. There was considerable discussion at the time about the law of the matter, as to what court had jurisdiction; in what district we could get jurisdiction.

Q. What was the discussion?—A. I don't know. I couldn't tell you that.

Q. Was any particular judge mentioned or discussed?—A. I can't say that. I think the judges were discussed and mentioned.

Q. Was there any judge that they talked about that they thought would be a good man to bring it before?—A. Yes, sir; I think they named half a dozen of them.

Q. Was Judge Baxter one of them?—A. Judge Baxter was undoubtedly one of them.

Q. Do you recollect what was said about him?—A. I can't remember anything specially; in general that Judge Baxter was a very brave and very honest man and a very good judge. I had known Judge Baxter at that time for a long period of time and had had knowledge of his career.

Q. Was there anything said about his reputation for hostility to patents?—A. I couldn't say that.

Q. You cannot say whether anything was said one way or the other?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you not aware of the fact that he was quite notorious for his hostility to patents, so much so that no patent lawyers would bring suits before him?—A. I was not. I know the judge before whom I practice had quite a character in that way and I advised against bringing the suit before him.

Q. Who was he?—A. Judge Bond, of Baltimore. Judge Bond is by no means friendly to the patent laws generally. His decisions do not run that way. I advised against bringing the suit in my own district, for the reason that it would require an exceedingly laborious examination, and I did not think Judge Bond was a patient enough man to do it.

Q. Was not your reason that some one said Judge Baxter was quite notorious for his hostility to patents and had made a reputation in that line?—A. I cannot say so, sir. I cannot say I remember anything of that kind.

Q. Can you remember anything that was said about it?—A. Yes, sir; there was a great deal said about Judge Baxter. I had known Judge Baxter in North Carolina as long back as 1852. I knew his character very well.

Q. I do not ask you for what you know. I want to know what was said here?—A. You want to know what was said, and therefore I will give you the reasons for my trying to remember what was said. What was said about Judge Baxter was quite in approbation of his general character and his force.

Q. His force?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. On what objective point was his force?—A. His force in trying a case on the merits of the case without regard to the people who were behind it and promoting it, and without regard to the power of a great corporation. I suppose Judge Baxter would be as fair a man as we could get.

Q. There was nothing said about his force as directed against patents generally?—A. Nothing about patent smashing; no, sir.

Q. You are sure nothing was said about that?—A. I am not prepared to say that; I am not prepared to say nothing was said. I don't remember anything that was said in that direction. After the suit was brought, or attempted to be brought in Memphis, Tennessee, there was a great deal of talk as to his being a patent smasher. I knew nothing about his reputation in regard to patents and did not hear anything about it until it came out in these publications after the suit was brought in Tennessee, when the charge was made that we selected Tennessee because of the reputation of Judge Baxter as a patent smasher. I knew nothing about it at that time. I did not know he had ever tried a patent case.

Q. You are quite sure he was discussed?—A. Certainly he was discussed. A judge in St. Louis was discussed, and a judge in Cincinnati was discussed. I couldn't remember the names.

Q. Was not the principal part of the conference in regard to the question as to where the suit should be brought?—A. The principal part of the conference was as to where the jurisdiction was. First, whether the Government had the right to bring the suit itself without an enabling act; and second, in what district the Government could get jurisdiction over the Bell company. Those were the two propositions we were laboring with.

Q. Are you speaking of the interview of July 30th or 31st?—A. I am speaking of the interview of July 30th or 31st.

Q. Which one?—A. Both of them.

Q. I have been talking of the interview of July 31st, when Mr. Von Briesen was there.—A. Mr. Von Briesen was there on the 30th also.

Q. Was Casey Young there on the 31st?—A. He certainly was.

Q. Was he there on the 30th?—A. He certainly was.

Q. What time in the day was that interview on the 30th?—A. After 11 o'clock in the morning?

Q. And before night?—A. From 11 o'clock probably until 3.

Q. Who was there on the 30th at that first interview? Name each one if you can.—

A. Mr. Van Benthuyssen, Mr. Huntington, Mr. Young, and Mr. Gantt.

Q. Where was that conference held?—A. In the room at the Ebbitt House that I have just described.

Q. Both of the conferences were held in the same room?—A. Yes.

Q. At that time was discussion had as to where the suit should be brought?—A. I cannot remember that, but I have no doubt it was. I have no doubt that the discussion of the 30th and 31st had relation to where the suit ought to be brought.

Q. I have looked at the record and taken a minute of it. It is to be brought here, and I am sorry it is not here this morning. I think you will find, if I am correct in my recollection, that Casey Young and Colonel Gantt did not come until the night Southern train of the 30th, and were there for lodging on that night; that they did not get there until the evening Southern train of the 30th of July.—A. It is quite possible.

Q. If that is true, you could not have had a conference with Colonel Young and Colonel Gantt.—A. I might have had it. They might have come in the afternoon train after dinner, and I might have seen them in the afternoon. They were not there probably before dinner, if the register so states. I put my recollection against the register that they were there on the 30th, the first day I got there. I don't care what the register states.

Q. Were you aware that Casey Young stayed here until the 7th of August?—A. I was not.

Q. Did you not see him after the other parties had left?—A. I cannot tell you that. I was here frequently during that time, but whether I saw him or not I cannot tell you.

Q. Did you visit him at his room on G street after the others had left?—A. I think that is entirely possible, sir, but I have no recollection of it. I have visited him at his rooms on Thirteenth or Twelfth street.

Q. 1327 G street?—A. I never was there at all. Where is G street? If you will give me some idea of the geography, I will tell you.

Q. G street is the next street to that on which the Ebbitt House is located. Did you meet him at his rooms there?—A. No, sir; I never was at that room.

Q. Were you not during that time arranging with him for the trial of the Baltimore case?—A. No, sir; I was not arranging with him about the trial of the Baltimore case. I was trying to get him to arrange about the trial of the Baltimore case.

Q. Did you do anything about the Baltimore suit between the 1st of August and the 15th of September?—A. Yes, sir; I made an engagement with Colonel Gantt for him to come on here and assist me with the hearing on the 15th of September.

Q. When did you make that arrangement?—A. I made that arrangement during the time you are speaking of, the early part of August.

Q. What else did you do?—A. I do not know.

Q. You don't know of anything else?

The WITNESS. What else did I do? What do you mean? I did a thousand things.

Mr. RANNEY. In the preparations for that hearing?

A. I prepared quite a mass of testimony. You have got a lot of it printed here. I have sent it to the committee. I prepared quite a lot of affidavits in the case.

Q. Your principal reliance was the expected Government suit, was it not?—A. No, sir; it was not.

Q. You said when you were here before you were hurrying that matter up.—A. I was. I thought the Government suit would be a bar to a subsequent procedure; to another procedure.

Q. Did you not talk that over in these conferences on the 30th and 31st of July?—A. Very much so; very much so.

Q. That was another subject?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That the Government suit would be a sufficient reason for the continuance of the hearing in Baltimore during the pendency of the suit?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you first talk that over?—A. I suppose I first talked of that when I first heard of the Government suit.

Q. When was that?—A. I told you just now it was on the 30th of July.

Q. You talked it over then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You thought then it would be a good thing to use for that purpose?—A. I thought so then, and I still think so.

Q. And you did all you could to secure it?—A. I did all I could to secure it.

Q. You thought a man could do a good deal, and you did all you could. Tell us what you did do.—A. I urged Colonel Young by letter and by telegram to hurry up the application that was to be made from Memphis. When I parted from the other gentlemen here in Washington on the 30th or 31st of July it was with the understanding that application was to be made from Baltimore, New York, Memphis, and New Orleans; that all the applications were to come here to have suits brought in the name of the Government to vacate the Bell patent. I pressed the forwarding of those applications all I knew how.

Q. When were you doing that in order to have all those applications come?—A. During the month of August.

Q. You were going to have all the applications from these various places converge?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What application were you going to get from New York?—A. Mr. Von Briesen was to send one from New York.

Q. On behalf of whom?—A. Our view of the law was this: That this was not a litigation that was to be set on foot by any party in interest or any opposition company, but was a litigation to be undertaken on the application of citizens; that any citizen of the United States had a perfect right to apply to the Attorney-General to have this suit brought. Mr. Von Briesen had a perfect right to make the application in his own name.

Q. In his own individual name?—A. I suppose so.

Q. Who else was to make application?—A. The Washington Telephone Company, represented by myself, from Baltimore.

Q. Who else?—A. The National Improved Company, from New Orleans, represented by Mr. Van Benthuyzen.

Q. Who else?—A. The Pan-Electric company from Memphis.

Q. Who else?—A. That is all.

Q. You were going to converge all those named.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was that arranged?—A. That was arranged at the meeting in July.

Q. Which one, the 30th or 31st?—A. I couldn't tell you that; I suppose it was the later one.

Q. Mr. Von Briesen was going to send an application as a citizen, was he?—A. I don't know about that. I supposed he was lawyer enough to send on a proper application in the ordinary way. I didn't know what form he would put it in.

Q. He was simply counsel for the National Improved Telephone Company?—A. He was.

Q. Do you think it would have made any difference so long as he was to sign a petition, whether he signed it as attorney for the company or whether he signed it in his own name as a citizen?

The WITNESS. Do I think it would make any difference whether he signed as attorney for the company or as a citizen?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

A. I don't think it would make any difference at all.

Q. Do you think it would make a better show?—A. I don't think so.

Q. What was the object in having him sign his name as an individual—as Von Briesen?—A. I didn't say the object was to have his name put down as Von Briesen. I said he was to forward an application from New York. I did not know how it was to be done. That was to be left to him, I suppose.

Q. So that all the parties you have named who were going to join you were parties who were being pursued by the Bell company for infringement?—A. I don't think that is so.

Q. Tell me any one that was not?—A. The National Improved Telephone Company was not being pursued by the Bell company.

Q. Had they not just been sued up in Pittsburgh, through their licensees?—A. I believe they had.

Q. Did you not know they had been notified that they were to be sued in New Orleans also, their own headquarters?—A. No, sir; and I don't believe they were so notified, either.

Q. Do you know anything about it?—A. No, sir. You asked me if I knew, and I said I didn't know it and I didn't believe it.

Q. You knew that Van Benthuyzen had come on here from Pittsburgh, where he had been beaten, very much exasperated?—A. Yes, sir; I knew that.

Q. His licensee was being pursued?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any one else that was not then being pursued as an alleged infringer of the Bell patent?—A. Yes, sir; I think I know several companies that were not being pursued by the Bell company.

Q. Those you have named?—A. Yes, sir; the National Improved Company had no suit brought against it, and no suit was threatened at that time. The Pan-Electric company had a suit brought against it in Baltimore. The Washington company and the Pan company both of them had been sued by the Bell company.

Q. It was a combination then of people who were being attacked as infringers?—
A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you wanted to call them citizens, did you?—A. No; I don't think there was any necessity for calling them citizens; they were citizens, you know; you couldn't deprive them of their rights as citizens, no matter what you called them.

Q. You did not understand they were acting other than to protect their own interests, did you?—A. I did not understand that question.

Q. They were more anxious to protect their own patents and give them supremacy than anything else, I take it?—A. No; I don't take it that way at all. The way I always understood it was that they proposed to break up the monopoly of the Bell company.

Q. And get one of their own?—A. Assuming the Bell patent was obtained by fraud, and that they would have a fair field for competition in the business.

Q. The breaking up of the monopoly would leave them with their patents?—A. They would be good for what they were worth.

Q. You stated the other day that after Casey Young went to Pittsburgh he made a report to you by letter of the result of his visit?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That letter I would like to have you produce.—A. I will have it here to-day.

Q. Have you not got it here now?—A. No, sir; not now.

Q. After he went back to Memphis subsequent to these interviews on the last of July and the 1st of August you had a continuous correspondence with him, had you?—
A. Yes, sir. You shall have those letters from him and my answers. You shall have the correspondence between Colonel Young and myself from that time up to the bringing of the Government suit on the 9th of September.

Q. You have them?—A. They will be here in the course of the day. I sent them over by express. They had not arrived this morning when I came up to the committee.

Q. Will you also furnish us with the telegrams?—A. I have not the telegram. I could not find the telegram.

Q. You had some, had you not?—A. I had a telegram on the 10th of September from Gantt & Patterson who were the attorneys in Memphis. I can recollect the telegram verbatim.

Q. During the month of August?—A. No, sir; it was dated on the 10th of September. I received it on the 10th of September. The telegram was dated Memphis, September 10th, was addressed to Bradley T. Johnson, Baltimore, and said "suit brought yesterday." That was about the telegram.

Q. In the record which you produced here of the last vote — ?—A. I did not produce that book to be used in evidence.

Q. Will you let me look at it?—A. Certainly, with pleasure. You may look at any book we have; you are welcome to do so.

Mr. RANNEY. It is already in evidence.

The WITNESS. I was going to ask the chairman if he would not strike it out from the evidence. I think it is very improper to have it in as evidence.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a matter to be submitted to the committee.

Mr. RANNEY. General Johnson submitted a report, says the book, on which no action was taken because of satisfactory provision already made for the defense of the suit by the Bell company against this company. It don't say what that satisfactory provision was.

The CHAIRMAN. He has stated.

The WITNESS (taking the book which Mr. Ranney had referred to and handing it to Mr. Gardner.) Now, Mr. Gardner, will you be kind enough to take this book, and don't let anybody have it.

Q. Will you tell us what that satisfactory provision was?—A. No, sir; I will not.

Q. You absolutely decline?—A. I absolutely decline. I have stated to the committee that it was a private professional relation between myself and my client, and I decline to let you know anything about it.

Q. It was a provision relating to the Pan-Electric company, was it not?—A. No, sir, it was not; it was a provision relating entirely to my fees.

Q. The preceding resolution on which that was based says there is now no occasion to sell the stock of the Pan-Electric company, and therefore—

Mr. HALE. That book was produced, as I understand, not to be used as evidence.

Mr. RANNEY. Would not you read the preceding—

Mr. HALE. Let me make a statement if you please. That book, as I understand, was produced by the witness for the inspection of the committee and not to be made public. I think the reading of the extract by Mr. Ranney to the committee was improperly divulging the contents of the book.

Mr. HALL. It was placed in our hands for inspection.

Mr. RANNEY. That same book was produced by Mr. Gardner without objection and used as evidence. A large portion of it was already in evidence, and will be found in the record of the committee.

The WITNESS. The book is not before the committee, I assure you.

Mr. RANNEY. It has been used in evidence.

The WITNESS. I ask the committee to strike out all extracts from the book. I ask them now to strike out what you have just read.

Mr. HALE. If that extract was allowed to stand by itself it would place the witness in a false light, unnecessarily.

Mr. RANNEY. I disregard what this witness says, and take the contents of the book as put in evidence during a former period through Mr. Gardner, the secretary and treasurer, who is the custodian of the books.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it in evidence?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes, sir; such portion as we found material, and this is one of the material entries.

The WITNESS. I ask the committee to strike out all of Mr. Gardner's testimony that does not relate to the officers of the Government. I have a motion to that effect before the committee.

Mr. HALL. I remember Mr. Camden testified to a memorandum on the back of a paper that was somewhat similar to the language just taken from the book, but I did not think the book was read in evidence.

Mr. RANNEY. This identical book was produced by Mr. Gardner, and I read these identical votes on the very same subject, which I claim was clearly right under the circumstances.

Mr. HALE. I am satisfied the quotation last read is improperly in evidence.

Mr. RANNEY. The quotation from the book was already in evidence. Preceding it was a reference to the sale of stock of the Pan-Electric company which the proposed to make before as a means of providing money to pay the expenses of the suit. That is alluded to here, and then comes this vote to which I have called his attention.

Q. Now I understand you to decline to answer what that arrangement was?—A. Yes, sir; I have answered before fully to the committee what the arrangement was, and I have given that book to the committee for the purpose of allowing them to satisfy themselves. If they choose they may examine the book as to matters pertinent to this inquiry, but with the distinct statement and understanding that that book shall not be used as evidence. I decline to allow the book to be put in evidence.

Mr. RANNEY. If the book had not been in evidence already I would have heeded your request; but as it was already in evidence I had a right to read from it.

The WITNESS. I ask the committee to strike it all out of Mr. Gardner's testimony. I move that all references to the book and all extracts from the book be stricken out. If there is any difficulty about the expense in renumbering the pages of the record, or anything of that sort, I offer to pay all the expense myself. That is my offer to the committee now.

Mr. HALL. The testimony referred to will be found on page 516.

Mr. RANNEY. Inasmuch as you decline to answer pertinent questions, I shall decline to question you any further.

The CHAIRMAN. Does any other gentleman of the committee desire to question the witness?

By Mr. HALE:

Q. The arrangement referred to in that extract was a private arrangement between you and your company as to your fee?—A. That is all.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. It had no reference to the Pan-Electric company at all?—A. None whatever.

By Mr. HALE:

Q. That is what was meant at that time by "satisfactory provision"?—A. Yes, sir; an arrangement satisfactory to me. It had no reference to the Government suit or the Pan-Electric suit.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. I suppose you regarded the conferences of the 30th and 31st of July as practically one conference?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Many things were discussed and rediscussed on those two days?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the result was that it was agreed that applications from different directions should be presented with a view of undertaking to put on foot a suit by the Government attacking the original Bell telephone patent. Was there any agreement at all made at that time with reference to the procedure, as to the matter of expense, or assigning different parties to different positions in the movement?—A. Not so far as I was concerned. I was a party to no such agreement, nor was there any such agreement made with my knowledge.

Q. It was just simply a conference between gentlemen representing different interests?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. All of which were affected by the existence of the Bell telephone patents?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I understood you to say, in reply to Judge Ranney, that you discussed the question of jurisdiction, as to where such a suit could be maintained against the Bell Telephone Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you discussed the question of the judges of the various United States courts?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I suppose there is no question but that in the conference you were anxious to secure the most available position you could?—A. The best one we could get.

Q. You did not hunt out a judge that you knew had hostile feelings towards your interests, or one that belonged to the Bell Telephone Company?—A. We were not willing to go to Massachusetts where the court was committed against us.

Q. Did you at the time of that conference know that any Massachusetts judge was interested in the Bell Telephone Company or had relatives that were largely interested; was that matter discussed?—A. No, sir; not to my recollection.

Q. How long have you been a practicing attorney?—A. I have been a practicing attorney, I am sorry to say, for thirty odd years.

Q. Did you ever know of a conference of attorneys in regard to a proposed litigation in which they sought to get hostile judges against them; or do they naturally try to get the best status they can for their clients?—A. That has been my experience with them, sir.

Mr. HANBACK. I guess that goes without saying.

Mr. HALL. I think probably it is different up in Massachusetts.

The WITNESS. They always pick out the hard places there. Their company always does that.

Q. In regard to this matter of the contents of this record and your relation to the transaction, I understand that you declined to answer, not because of any desire to withhold information, but because you think it is a matter purely personal?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that we have no right to inquire into it?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALL. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Does any other gentleman desire to examine the witness?

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Did you not know that then, in 1885, Judge Colt, who was the circuit judge of Massachusetts, had never tried one of these patent cases?—A. I did not know that.

Q. You were aware that the Federal courts of New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania, including Judge Gray and Judge Lowell, had passed on the Bell patent, were you not?—A. Yes, sir; I was. I was perfectly satisfied that two of the suits in Massachusetts were fictitious suits, gotten up for the purpose of getting a decision from the court. I was perfectly satisfied of that. I know Judge Lowell very well by reputation. I have read a great deal after Judge Lowell, and I have the very highest possible opinion of his ability. I say the same of Justice Gray also. I should not hesitate to go before either of them with a new case of first impression; but it would be utter folly to take the case before any judge where the court was committed up to the eyes to the opposite doctrine. No lawyer on earth would do that, that I ever saw.

Q. The courts of New York and Pennsylvania and New Jersey you wanted to avoid, I suppose. Is not that so?—A. I didn't care very particularly about that.

Q. You wanted to get the suit brought down South, did you?—A. Yes, sir; or out West would answer the purpose just as well.

Q. Where all the Pan-Electric people and the National Improved people live?—A. To bring it in that way would be much fairer to the public. It would be fairer to go down South, where all the Pan-Electric company live, than to go to Boston, where all the Bell company live, and where it is the general impression that the Bell company own a good deal more than they are entitled to own.

Q. But you knew in any case there could be an appeal to the Supreme Court?—A. Yes, sir; and I knew that to prepare a case for trial would probably cost $25,000, and that it would take three years to get it before that court and decide it; and if they got a perpetual injunction against us in one of those districts where the court was committed, and if we had our business closed up for three years, it would be utterly ruinous.

Q. You knew in any event the case would go to the Supreme Court; that it would be carried there on appeal or a writ of error, did you not?—A. No, sir; it is not true that any case can be carried to the Supreme Court by writ of error or appeal.

Q. Cannot every patent suit by bill in equity be carried there?—A. No, sir; some decrees cannot be carried up by appeal.

Q. In any suit connected with these patents there should be no question about the value of the patent, and there would be an appeal.—A. Oh, yes; I know there is such a thing as an appellate court. You can appeal from the circuit courts to the Supreme Court.

Q. You knew wherever you went the case could go to the Supreme Court on appeal?—A. We thought so; yes, sir.

Q. Honestly, now, was not this the situation: That you wanted to get before some court that would not grant the preliminary injunction? Was not that the trouble with your companies; that you knew preliminary injunctions would be granted?—A. I am perfectly willing to stand an examination upon my knowledge of the law of patents and Federal practice in injunction proceedings; but it appears to me it is rather an unfair proposition for you on the Bell side to examine me as to what I think in regard to the Bell case.

Q. I am not asking your opinion as to any one case.—A. You are asking me an opinion on the general proposition of law, then.

Q. I ask you if your trouble in this matter was not that all of your companies were sure to be enjoined on bills of equity brought by the Bell company?

The CHAIRMAN. That would hardly be the case where there was a suit on the part of the Government.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not refer to the Government suit.

The CHAIRMAN. They were not concerned with the matter of jurisdiction in the other cases.

The WITNESS. No, sir. We were of opinion then and I am of opinion now that if we had brought a proper suit at the proper time and in the proper court we could have enjoined the Bell company from proceeding against us by newspaper injunctions. You want to know if we did not want to bring a suit where we would not be enjoined by a preliminary injunction. I say yes, sir.

Q. I ask whether the trouble with these companies who were seeking to get a Government suit did not arise from the fact that the Bell company would proceed and get preliminary injunctions on bills in equity against them if they did not get somebody else to interpose?—A. I could not tell what the trouble was.

The CHAIRMAN. I think it might be taken for granted that if the Bell company wanted a preliminary injunction they would naturally go to a court where they thought they could get it.

Mr. OATES. I object to questions on this point. Mr. Ranney announced some time ago that he was not going to put any more questions to this witness. He is now examining him on the law.

Mr. EDEN. In regard to what a court would do.

Mr. RANNEY. The gentlemen on the other side have rehabilitated the witness by having him swear as to what was not in the agreement. I sought to find out what was not in it by asking him to tell me what was in it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does any other gentleman care to examine the witness?

The WITNESS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the committee if they have acted on the motion I made on the 16th of April with regard to striking out certain portions of Mr. Gardner's testimony. It is a matter of some importance to me to have that testimony expunged from the record, although I do not know how important the committee may consider it.

The CHAIRMAN. No action has been taken by the committee on that motion.

The WITNESS. If there is any question of expense as to striking it out, if the committee will permit me I will contribute the necessary funds for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. I believe you intimated you would like to be heard by the committee?

The WITNESS. I would rather be heard on the law if there is any question about the law. I am very clear the committee had no right to go into anything of that sort. I propose to furnish the correspondence between Colonel Young and myself to the committee with the understanding that it is not to be made a part of the record, unless I am here present to be examined in regard to it.

The CHAIRMAN. In regard to this paper (indicating paper) which you handed me, it is hardly worth while to show it to the members of the committee, or anything else that is not to be made a part of the record.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not want to see anything that you will not let me use.

The CHAIRMAN. I prefer not to, either. As to the correspondence which has been called for, if you are willing to have it go on the record it may be produced. But it will hardly be worth while to have it produced simply for personal inspection.

Mr. HANBACK. I do not see what value that will be, because we cannot comment upon it or take any action in regard to it.

Mr. RANNEY. If he says he is willing to show it to us, but is not willing to let it go into the record, and that we have no right to it, I decline to look at it.

Mr. EDEN. I suppose the correspondence is to be furnished for the action of the committee, and if the committee deems it competent it can be introduced?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALL. I understood the request of the committee to furnish certain letters was very much in the nature of a subpoena; that it was a sort of search warrant, only instead of being issued by subpoena it was a request of the committee. I understood

General Johnson to say he was willing to comply with it, and submit the letters, subject to the objection that might have originally been made to the request.

Mr. RANNEY. This investigation is in the nature of a search warrant. The resolution is a search warrant to search out the facts.

Mr. HALL. I think that is true. You have come pretty near to it.

The CHAIRMAN. If the correspondence is to be produced you had better be here and produce it.

The WITNESS. I will leave it entirely to the committee. If the committee think it is competent evidence the committee can do just what they choose with it. I put myself in the hands of the committee.

Mr. OATES. Where are the letters. If we are going to pass on them at all we had better do it now.

The WITNESS. They are not here yet, sir.

Mr. MOFFATT. I would like to ask General Johnson a question or two.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. Were you present at the hearing that resulted in the ordering of the present suit?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recollect when that hearing was closed?—A. I do not, sir.

Q. It was some time in October, was it not?—A. Some time in October or during the early part of November.

Q. Do you recollect when the decision was rendered?—A. I do not recollect the date. The decision was rendered some two or three weeks after the hearing terminated.

Q. Between the hearing and the decision did you see Secretary Lamar?—A. No, sir; certainly not.

Q. You are positive?—A. I am certain I did not. I saw him during the hearing, and spoke to him, just a casual salutation as I passed. That was all. I never saw him during that time.

Q. Between the time of the hearing and the decision?—A. Between the time I went before him as a judge up to the time of his decision I never saw him socially at all. I had no communication with him at all, directly or indirectly.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. Please state generally to what those letters between you and Col. Young relate.—A. You will find the first letter dated in March, 1885, in which I give an opinion as to the expediency of filing a bill in the name of the Pan company against the Bell company in Memphis. The Bell company, I was informed, was attacking the right of the Pan company to transact business. That was in March.

Q. Do any of them relate to the bringing of the Government suit?—A. The latter part of them do relate to the bringing of the Government suit; yes, sir; after the meeting here, I think. The letters in August do relate to it; half a dozen letters.

Q. Is there anything else in them about which you or somebody else has not testified?

Mr. RANNEY. Is not that going into the contents of the letters?

Mr. OATES. It is only a general question. I thought you wanted them.

Mr. RANNEY. I do. I want the letters themselves.

Mr. OATES. I don't know whether they are worth anything or not.

Mr. RANNEY. You can tell better by looking at them.

Mr. OATES. If they do not relate to the question about which we are inquiring we have no right to see them unless the witness thinks proper.

The WITNESS. I will file them with the chairman, and the committee can decide whether they are proper testimony or not. The committee are perfectly welcome to them if they think they are competent.

Q. Can you refer to that part of the evidence of Mr. Gardner which you think should be stricken out?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALL. It begins on page 525 and continues on page 526 and 527. Most of it is on page 527.

The WITNESS. I gave the chairman a marked copy of the record, on which I indicated what I thought ought to be stricken out. I would commence at the bottom of page 525:

“By Mr. RANNEY:

“Q. I see by your record, page 5, that the first meeting, held June 3, 1884, was held at Casey Young's office?—A. Yes, sir; so it appears. I was not secretary of the company at that time.

“Q. This is the record you have produced here?—A. Yes, sir.”

I think all that ought to go out down to page 528.

Mr. OATES. To what point?

The WITNESS. Down to the answer of the witness after the report to the directors of the Washington Telephone Company. To this point:

"The WITNESS (reading): After reading this I have received a telegram from Gantt & Patterson, attorneys at Memphis, stating that the bill by the United States against the Bell company has been filed in the United States courts there, and they will send a copy, which telegram I read you."

Down to and including that. In regard to the conversation between Mr. Rogers and Colonel Gardner, I know nothing about that. I have nothing to say about that. Then if you will go on to page 533:

"Q. This is a matter of memory, and I want to deal fairly with you, and I want you to deal fairly with me. Tell me the substance of anything that was said or what it was—not your argument about it, but your recollection.—A. I don't propose to enter into an argument, but my recollection is that we had some talk about suits."

I think all that about suits ought to come out.

Mr. OATES. Where does it begin?

The WITNESS. It commences down about one-third of the way on page 533. I think it ought all to come out down to page 534, where you will see the question, "Did you ever try to sell any stock to any member of Congress?" Not including that, but down to that. On page 535 the question is:

"At the close of the minutes I see you make this memorandum: 'General Johnson read a report, on which no action was taken because of satisfactory provision already made for the defense of the suit of the American Bell Telephone Company.'"

I think that ought to be stricken out, from there down to the question on page 536, by Mr. Millard. I think that refers to the private matters of the company and is not proper testimony before this committee.

The CHAIRMAN. I think you had better mark another copy. I may have the one you gave me, but I am doubtful of it. Is the committee through with the examination of Gen. Johnson? I know of no other witness to be called at this time.

The witness then left the stand.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Van Benthuyzen, the committee is now ready to hear anything you may have to say.

Mr. VAN BENTHUYSEN (handing a letter to the chairman). Mr. Chairman, I have embodied my wishes in a communication to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it the desire of the committee to have it submitted now or in secret session?

Mr. OATES. I suppose no objection will be made.

Mr. HALE. Probably all the members have seen it privately. I have.

The CHAIRMAN. I have not.

Mr. MOFFATT. I have not.

Mr. RANNEY. There are certain telegrams I have spoken about, and communications of Mr. Van Benthuyzen with the President, which are embodied in one of the Interior Department records I have before me, and sworn to. There is also a telegram to the Inter-Ocean on the 10th of September that he swore to.

Mr. HALL. Of whom are you speaking now?

Mr. RANNEY. Of Mr. Van Benthuyzen. He sent a dispatch to the Inter-Ocean on September 10, to which he testified when he was on the stand. I have here a copy in print, that has been sworn to; also a communication of his to President Cleveland, which was given out to the public. Those I want to put into the record.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you them there?

Mr. RANNEY. I told you where they can be found. They are in the Maryland record, sworn to by the party as taken out of the papers.

Mr. EDEN. That is a very roundabout way of putting in evidence, if it is evidence at all.

Mr. RANNEY. I thought you might possibly object on that account. If there is any doubt about it we will take a more direct way.

Mr. EDEN. I don't know whether it is important or not.

Mr. RANNEY. I spoke to the chairman about calling on the President to produce them, and he said we had them here, taken from the newspapers.

Mr. OATES. I don't care anything about the form if they are pertinent. If they throw any light on the question under investigation, I do not object to having them go in in that shape.

Mr. RANNEY. I thought there might be some technical objection, for instance, that he should have his attention called to them. He is here. I suppose any communication made to the President is public.

Mr. HALL. I suppose you would have to get a resolution from the House asking the President to produce the papers if not incompatible with the public business.

Mr. RANNEY. Oh, no. You asked Mr. Forbes what he said to the President on the subject. Why should not what Mr. Van Benthuyzen said to him be competent also?

The CHAIRMAN. I saw the President and he has no objection to having anything put in that passed between himself and Mr. Van Benthuyzen. He stated to me that nothing passed from him to Mr. Van Benthuyzen, but that he had a dispatch from Mr.

Benthuyssen. I was to call and get it, but I left the city before doing so. He was to have it hunted up for me.

Mr. RANNEY. It was given out to the public press. I did not know before where it was to be found. I have found it in the proofs and reply in the Maryland case, sworn to by a witness as having been taken from the papers of the date given.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any objection to allowing a copy of this dispatch to go in?

Mr. HALL. We cannot understand the proposition until we know what the dispatch is.

The CHAIRMAN. You will have an opportunity to learn.

Mr. HALL. I don't suppose there is any objection to it.

Mr. RANNEY. I will call attention to the parts I deem material.

The CHAIRMAN. It can all go in together. As to Mr. Van Benthuyssen's dispatches to the newspapers, I do not think the committee is concerned with them.

Mr. HALL. I am willing, so far as the letter is concerned, to resort to the ordinary method of producing evidence. I am willing that Mr. Van Benthuyssen shall be put on the stand and asked if he wrote such a dispatch, and I am willing to waive any question as to its being a printed copy.

Mr. RANNEY. Then there is the dispatch to the Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Mr. EDEN. I do not think that is evidence.

Mr. OATES. What is the point?

Mr. RANNEY. He testified in relation to having seen the reporter there and given him a dispatch, and he said he was surprised that he did not see it in the newspapers, and he made inquiry about it.

Mr. OATES. To what feature of the investigation does it relate?

Mr. RANNEY. It relates to the object of the suit.

Mr. EDEN. Is that a dispatch to a newspaper?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes; his dispatch to a newspaper.

Mr. OATES. How is that touched by the resolution?

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose we deal with one thing at a time. Here is the dispatch to the President. Is there any objection to putting that in?

Mr. RANNEY. It should be put in on the ground that it may have influenced the President. That was the ground on which Mr. Forbes' interview was introduced. Then there is on page 779 a letter to the President.

Mr. OATES. I don't suppose it amounts anything anyhow. I do not see any objection.

Mr. RANNEY. Then the dispatch he dictated to the Inter-Ocean on page 785.

Mr. OATES. There is a good deal of matter in already that is of no account. We may as well let this go in.

Mr. EDEN. It seems to me that putting in a dispatch to the newspapers is going rather too far.

Mr. RANNEY. It is only in connection with his testimony as to what he said to the reporter.

The CHAIRMAN. I think, gentlemen, that the dispatch to the President should go in, if there be no objection as to the manner of proving it. It is a printed copy.

Mr. OATES. I would not raise any objection to that.

Mr. EDEN. You are satisfied the President did receive the dispatch?

The CHAIRMAN. He told me he received a dispatch.

Mr. HALL. What is that record in which the copies are found?

The CHAIRMAN. It is the Bell company's proofs in the matter before the Secretary of the Interior. If there be no objection we will put in the dispatch to the President. It is on page 777 of the book. It may be taken from that. It is not necessary to read it.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, as to the letter of Mr. Van Benthuyssen to the President. It is stated that one was sent. My understanding was that there had been nothing received by the President except a dispatch.

Mr. RANNEY. There is also the dispatch he testified he gave to the reporter of the Inter-Ocean when he met him at Waukesha.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not see how that would be competent testimony.

Mr. RANNEY. I deem it material.

The CHAIRMAN. If it is offered, I will examine it.

Mr. RANNEY. He presents an application ostensibly from private citizens. He ostensibly was seeking a Government suit in the interests of the public and in the name of citizens; whereas, as a matter of fact, I say, his purpose and object was to have it brought in the interests of his own particular company, and with a view of preventing injunctions. The purpose is in order to show the fraud practiced.

Mr. EDEN. Do you refer to Mr. Van Benthuyssen?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes, sir; that he practiced a fraud by misrepresenting that it was an application in the name of citizens, whereas it was in fact an application in his own behalf in disguise. This is a dispatch in which he discloses his real purpose.

Mr. EDEN. To a newspaper?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes, sir. He discloses that his object was to get this suit. That was the advice on which he was acting, and that was the means he resorted to, and, the fact being proved, the House may find and the country believe it was a fraudulent conspiracy.

Mr. HALL. Is there a copy of the dispatch there?

The CHAIRMAN. It is in the book.

Mr. RANNEY. It is printed as taken from the Inter Ocean—the one he testified to. It is sworn to by a man who clipped it from the Inter-Ocean.

Mr. HALL. I presume these are correct copies. Those papers were subject to inspection by all the parties in that case.

Mr. EDEN. If we are not investigating Mr. Van Benthuyzen I do not see the necessity for the evidence.

Mr. RANNEY. We are investigating the object and purpose for the bringing of the suit.

Mr. EDEN. Not the object and purpose of Mr. Van Benthuyzen.

Mr. RANNEY. The reason for it.

Mr. EDEN. That is not the point.

Mr. RANNEY. Suppose Mr. Van Benthuyzen, in conjunction with Casey Young, treated as one person, should get up—

Mr. EDEN. A man can suppose anything, if he wants to.

Mr. RANNEY. It is a fact that the evidence tends to show that that application was in the name of certain men as citizens, which was a disguise of these two combined companies. Under the guise of individual names, keeping the names of the companies in the dark and out of sight, they presented to the Government an application for a Government suit, pretending it was done at the instance of individuals representing the public, whereas in fact it was a fraudulent device of their own to get the suit in behalf only of the companies which they represented.

Mr. EDEN. I suppose you want to show that Mr. Van Benthuyzen practiced a fraud upon some officer of the Government, and hold the officer responsible for it.

Mr. RANNEY. No, sir; it was a fraud practiced by the Pan-Electric company in secret combination with the National Improved Telephone Company, Mr. Van Benthuyzen being the agent of the latter and Casey Young being the agent of the former. It was a fraud on the public.

The CHAIRMAN. You have not made up your mind to that effect, have you?

Mr. RANNEY. I say that is the argument. If you ask me whether I have made up my mind on it, I say I have.

Mr. HALL. You do not need to say that.

Mr. RANNEY. I think it is perfectly plain.

Mr. EDEN. I think that has been understood some time.

Mr. RANNEY. I have no doubt it was intended as such, if you ask my opinion.

Mr. HALL. In the early part of the investigation you suggested that we should not make up our mind until all the evidence was in. You have departed from that advice.

Mr. RANNEY. I have made up my mind, as far as that is concerned, unless you can show proof to the contrary, and I have done it on the evidence.

Mr. EDEN. I will not make up my mind until the end of the investigation.

The CHAIRMAN. If this dispatch is proved to have come from Mr. Van Benthuyzen, it might be competent to contradict him. I cannot see that it would be competent for any other purpose.

Mr. HALL. The course of the committee heretofore has been to allow very broad inquiry as to the conduct and declarations of any of these parties, either as between themselves or with reference to the Government or its officials. This proposition is to introduce an act on the part of Mr. Van Benthuyzen in sending a dispatch to one of the public journals. The question arises as to the competency.

Mr. RANNEY. I claim it discloses the purpose of this proceeding on the part of Van Benthuyzen.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. I would like to show it to Mr. Van Benthuyzen. He can't hear a word that is said.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not material to show it to him.

Mr. HALL. It is apparent that that dispatch was sent after the action of the Government was had. It could have had no effect whatever in influencing the Government or any of the officials. I think the committee are quite competent to determine the motive and purpose from all previous conduct, without this after-publication. Of course it would be competent to contradict a witness, possibly.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not understand the objection is made to the mode of proof, by printed copy.

Mr. HALL. I suppose that book contains a true transcript. All the parties were present there.

Mr. RANNEY. I will state again my view of it. My claim is that it is competent as showing the dispatch which Mr. Van Benthuyzen has already testified to, in the first place. In the second place, it is competent and material as tending to show the object and purpose of his proceeding for the Government suit.

Mr. HALL. I think the suggestions made by way of comment upon the facts are hardly opportune now, and I do not think they are true, notwithstanding the gentleman has made up his mind. I think it must be known to every intelligent man that a suit brought by the Government, at whomsoever's instance, could not be a fraud in the sense indicated, because everybody would know it must be in the interest of all who had patents.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not say I have made up my mind as to the fraud on the part of the Government.

Mr. HALL. You said you had made up your mind as to the fraud on the part of the individuals who were inducing that action.

Mr. RANNEY. I said these men were making false pretenses in the matter of the bringing of the Government suit.

Mr. HALL. The records of the Government right here at the Capitol show probably one hundred patents of various kinds for receivers and transmitters. The owners of all these patents would be benefited by a successful suit by the Government. The idea that an application of that kind, whether it was in the name of individuals or of corporations, would not be for the direct and immediate interest of all parties involved, is a little too remote for any speculation at all. It is a subject of which fraud cannot be predicated. It is an improper use of the word fraud to apply it to any such situation, in my judgment.

Mr. RANNEY. It tends to show that these parties, knowing that Attorney-General Garland would not act on an application that on its face was made or was on behalf of the Pan-Electric company, sought to do it under a disguised name. It may have relieved the Attorney-General; but the individuals sought to do it under a disguised name.

Mr. EDEN. As they did not make this application to him at all, that is rather a far-fetched inquiry.

Mr. RANNEY. It tends that way.

The CHAIRMAN. Did Mr. Van Benthuyzen testify he had sent this dispatch?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. There is nothing in it to indicate that it came from him.

Mr. RANNEY. It was given to the reporter who sent it.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Van Benthuyzen stated that after reaching Milwaukee, I think it was, or some other point, he obtained an early issue of the Tribune, and not seeing any allusion to the action on this matter he sent a dispatch. I don't remember whether he sent a dispatch of that kind or a dispatch of inquiry as to why it had not been published. It is very easy to ascertain that.

Mr. RANNEY. He said the reporter of the Inter-Ocean was there; and he didn't happen to see it, and found afterwards it did appear. That is my general recollection of it.

Mr. HALL. I don't think it is very material.

Mr. RANNEY. The question is why those men signed as individuals, and why they did not sign as the Pan-Electric Company and the National Improved Company?

Mr. HALL. I suppose there are three hundred pages of this testimony to show, and everybody understands it.

Mr. RANNEY. Tending to show that they came to the Government in disguise, under a secret written agreement between the two companies?

Mr. HALL. I do not see how anybody is in disguise when he comes in his own proper person and under his own signature. I do not see how anybody can impose upon any one else in that way.

Mr. RANNEY. They conceal the written agreement between the two parties.

Mr. HALL. There is no evidence that they concealed it. They did not conceal it.

Mr. RANNEY. Casey Young says he did not tell Garland of it.

Mr. HALL. Nobody ever heard of a party making an application—

The CHAIRMAN. This discussion does not relate to any matter before the committee.

Mr. RANNEY. It is only as to the materiality of the evidence.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being made, I think the evidence is not competent.

Mr. HALL. As far as I am concerned, I do not interpose any objection on the ground that this is not the original.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection it may go in.

Mr. RANNEY. I think all such statements of the parties should be put in.

The CHAIRMAN. The paper itself seems to be nothing but a press dispatch from Memphis.

Mr. OATES. By every principle of law it would be, if genuine, admissible against Mr. Van Benthuyzen, but not against the other parties.

The CHAIRMAN. That would depend upon circumstances. Some allegation has been made that there was a conspiracy, and that this was one of the acts done in pursuance of the conspiracy. Assuming the conspiracy to be established, it would be competent evidence against them all.

Mr. OATES. Yes; but that is what I do not assume.

Mr. RANNEY. We do not need to assume that in order to dispose of this question.

Mr. HALE. It seems to be only an item of news sent off by the correspondent of the Inter-Ocean.

The CHAIRMAN. It ought to be identified as the dispatch Mr. Van Benthuyzen has spoken of.

Mr. HALE. It may be the correspondent got his news from Mr. Van Benthuyzen, but it is a dispatch from the correspondent of the paper as a matter of news.

Mr. HALL. I don't know whether Mr. Van Benthuyzen sent the dispatch or not.

Mr. OATES. I am willing it should go in under Mr. Ranney's offer as against Mr. Van Benthuyzen for whatever use he can make of it.

Mr. EDEN. Mr. Ranney insists it shows a conspiracy on the part of all the other parties.

Mr. RANNEY. I never insisted any such thing. I said the broad claim might be—

Mr. HALE. Do you insist on its going in?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

Mr. HALL. Where is the authority that this was sent by Mr. Van Benthuyzen?

Mr. RANNEY. Mr. Van Benthuyzen himself has testified to meeting the reporter of the Inter-Ocean, and discovering that the dispatch did not appear afterwards, and then finding the next day that it did appear. That is my recollection.

The CHAIRMAN. That was not a dispatch from Memphis.

Mr. HALL. I do not think we should admit it without some proof.

The CHAIRMAN. Let us ask Mr. Van Benthuyzen.

Mr. EDEN. I don't think Mr. Van Benthuyzen said he sent a dispatch from Memphis.

The dispatch in question was here shown to Mr. Van Benthuyzen.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Van Benthuyzen, I show you what purports to be a special telegram to the Chicago Inter-Ocean, dated at Memphis, Tennessee, September 9, 1885.

Mr. HALL. Before he answers I want to read what he said about that.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen, I propose that we do one thing at a time.

Mr. HALL. It is with reference to this very thing.

Mr. OATES. Let him state whether he sent it or not.

The CHAIRMAN. Look at that dispatch and state whether you sent that dispatch to the Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Mr. VAN BENTHUYSEN. Is this the only thing that I am to be interrogated about?

The CHAIRMAN. For the present, yes.

Mr. VAN BENTHUYSEN. I don't know anything about it, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Are you not aware whether you sent that?

Mr. VAN BENTHUYSEN. I never sent it. I never had any connection with it, and nobody that I know of ever had any connection with it. It is dated September 9. At that time I was in Waukesha, Wisconsin.

The CHAIRMAN. You say you did not send any dispatch from Memphis at that time?

Mr. VAN BENTHUYSEN. Not one; no, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you send that dispatch, or have it sent from any place?

Mr. VAN BENTHUYSEN. No, sir; I know nothing about it at all. I was asked if I saw these dispatches in the paper at the time, and I said I understood they came from Memphis to these journals in Chicago. I knew nothing about them, however.

Mr. HALL. After speaking of receiving a dispatch announcing that suit had been brought, he said:

"I received a telegraphic dispatch from Mr. Beckwith that the bill had been filed by him. The next morning I looked in the papers and found no reference to it whatever. I thought that was very strange, and I thought they would think probably I had led them astray about the matter."

There is nothing in the record to intimate that he sent it.

Mr. MOFATT. Read on.

Mr. HALL (reading): "It seems they did become a little alarmed about it. Mr. Busby, the editor of the Inter-Ocean, had, I suppose, telegraphed down to his paper, and he had a notice of it in there, which notice came from me."

Mr. MOFATT. That is it: "Which notice came from me."

Mr. HALL (continuing to read): "But there were no press dispatches; no associated press dispatches. I was very much annoyed, and I telegraphed down to find out what was the matter, and I received a message back that all the messages with reference to that had been suppressed by the associated press at Memphis. The next morning, the 11th, I bought the Chicago Tribune, and I found a very elaborate description of the bill in a special dispatch from Memphis"— which is this.

Mr. EDEN. It seems that somebody else has been getting up a conspiracy.

Mr. RANNEY. There seems to have been a nest of them, in regard to this suit.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it still desired that this dispatch shall go in?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Let it go in.

Mr. EDEN. With the evidence of Mr. Van Benthuyesen.

The CHAIRMAN. That is in. This is the dispatch he refers to, I suppose, that was in one edition of the Inter-Ocean and not in the other.

Mr. RANNEY. He said he saw the reporter of the Inter-Ocean at Wankesha.

The CHAIRMAN. That was to make inquiry why the statement had not appeared, and he found another edition of the paper in which it did appear. I believe there was a letter to the President also, was there not?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes; a letter to the President.

Mr. HALL. I understood that letter was introduced.

The CHAIRMAN. We will let them all go in together, to show what was the state of Mr. Van Benthuyesen's mind at that time.

The papers in question are as follows:

[From the Daily Inter-Ocean, Chicago, Sept. 10, 1885.]

THE TELEPHONE WAR.—SUITS BY SOUTHERN PARTIES TO TEST BELL'S CLAIMS.—A SAMPLE BILL.—LOCAL VIEWS.

[Special telegram to the Inter-Ocean.]

MEMPHIS, TENN., Sept. 9.—On the petition of Watson Van Benthuyesen of New Orleans, Charles P. Huntington of Mississippi, J. R. Beckwith of New Orleans, George Gantt and others of Memphis, and the presentation of evidence to the United States district attorney that Bell did not discover the art of transmitting speech by electricity or invent the telephone, the district attorney, Judge Carry, submitted said evidence to the Department of Justice at Washington, and requested permission to institute suit in the name of the Government, to annul both of the Bell telephone patents. After investigation by the Department of Justice, permission was granted, and the bill of complaint was filed this day at Memphis, in the United States circuit court, Messrs. J. R. Beckwith, of New Orleans, George Gantt, the Hon. Casey Young, and General Wright, of Memphis, being appointed special Government attorneys to assist in prosecuting the suit.

The suit is a novel one, as it is brought in the name of the Government to annul or recall the patents issued to Bell, and the documents filed bring out many points of special interest to telephone and telegraph men. The attorneys here claim that the effect of filing the bill will be to suspend proceedings of the Western Union and Bell telephone people against other telephone companies, and that the result of the suit may be the breaking down of the monopoly in telephones.

(The New York Times, Tuesday, September 29, 1885.)

THE TELEPHONE LAWSUIT.—PRESIDENT CLEVELAND'S ATTENTION CALLED TO THE MATTER.—MR. VAN BENTHUYSEN JUSTIFIES THE SUIT TO CANCEL THE ORIGINAL PATENT ON THE BELL TELEPHONE.

CHICAGO, Sept. 28.

Mr. Watson Van Benthuyesen, president of the National Improved Telephone Company, who is the chief promoter of the suit to cancel the original patent on the Bell telephone, this evening sent the following dispatch from this city to President Cleveland:

His Excellency GROVER CLEVELAND,

President of the United States, Washington, D. C. :

DEAR SIR: I had the honor of addressing to you the following telegraphic dispatch yesterday:

The editorial in yesterday's New York Tribune addressed to you is a tissue of lies with reference to General Garland. The petition for the Government suit against the Bell Telephone Company was not signed by a single person owning stock in the Pan-Electric Telephone Company. The evidence presented to warrant the suit is overwhelming, and, owing to the extraordinary methods of the Western Union Telegraph Company and the Bell Telephone Company, is absolutely necessary for the protection of the public. The commendation of the press is almost universal, and the Department of Justice is extolled everywhere for its action. General Garland did not authorize the suit. He was absent from Washington, and permission was granted by the Acting Attorney-General, which he was compelled to do in the interest of the general public.

W. VAN BENTHUYSEN,
Original Petitioner.

Now it is alleged that General Garland owns stock in a competing telephone company. I have no personal knowledge of this fact, but if it is true, and he had been in Washington, and had refused permission to institute this suit simply because of his personal relations to another telephone company, it would have been an act of injustice to the public that would have reflected severely upon the present administration. It must be borne in mind that the courts will not permit fraudulent issue of patents to be made a defense in infringement suits, and this question can only be taken up by the Government. The bill of complaint in this suit shows that the Bell patents were obtained by fraud, misrepresentation, false suggestion, and deceit; that Bell's discovery of the art of transmitting speech by electricity is absolutely false; that the decisions obtained from the courts in favor of the Bell patents were obtained by collusion and untruthful admissions. Philip Reiss discovered the art and gave it to the world in 1862, long before Bell was ever heard of, as will be seen by the accompanying extracts (which are only a few out of many even more positive) sent by mail. The Reiss instruments, as made in 1862, transmit articulate speech perfectly, and I hold myself in readiness to exhibit them in full operation to the Government. The original Bell patent shows no instrument that transmits speech, and no instrument therein mentioned or as described by Bell ever did transmit speech. I have proof to show that the first instrument with which Bell transmitted speech was in no wise described in his patent, but was the fac simile of an instrument described in a caveat filed by Elisha Gray for a speaking telephone on the same day that Bell filed his application for an improvement in multiple telegraphy, and which has been distorted by decisions of courts in collusive suits to cover a speaking telephone. I have an affidavit of the examiner who passed Bell's application to issue showing that by a violation of the law and rules of the Patent Office, Gray was deprived of his rights. I have an affidavit showing that Bell or his attorneys was made acquainted with the contents of Gray's caveat in violation of law.

The first successful transmission of speech by electricity by Bell was after his patent for an improvement in multiple telegraphy had been issued, and was made with the fac simile of one of the instruments described in Gray's caveat. The transmission of speech by Bell at the Centennial was by the fac simile of the other instrument described in Gray's caveat, and it is not at all likely that Bell would have left out of his application for a patent all mention of two instruments that would work successfully, and mentions in his patent instruments that will not transmit speech. Gray, under erroneous advice, and in the belief that Bell, having first publicly exhibited a successful telephone, entitled Bell to priority, wrote letters that have been construed as an admission by Gray that Bell was the first inventor. This Gray would not have done but for this erroneous advice, as his (Gray's) caveat, its drawings and clear description of a speaking telephone, gave him priority, regardless of what Bell did after this caveat was filed.

In conclusion, I beg leave to add that the remarkable fact is also shown in the interference cases that they were carried on without Gray's authority, and the examiner's argument was all in favor of Gray, but the decision was in favor of Bell because of the action of the courts in the collusive cases. No greater wrong has ever been perpetrated in any country than has been perpetrated under the so-called "Bell" patents, and the strong arm of the Government should correct the wrong done really through the wrongful acts of its own agents. If the law had been carried out, Gray would have filed his application in pursuance of his caveat, and would have exhibited successful speaking telephones. Bell could only show a "multiple telegraph" apparatus (that cannot transmit speech), for which he would have received his patent, while Gray would have received a patent for a "speaking telephone." Your earnest attention is necessary in this to prevent further wrong.

Very respectfully,

W. VAN BENTHUYSEN.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything else, gentlemen? Let us dispose of the request of Mr. Van Benthuyssen. I have a letter from General Sypher also.

Mr. HALE. Hadn't there better be an executive session?

Mr. OATES. I think not.

Mr. HALE. I do not think the statements ought to be made public through this committee.

Mr. OATES. I have no objection in the world to making them public.

Mr. HALE. There are aspersions cast on witnesses on both sides, and this is done merely in the form of a statement to the committee. If it was under oath, of course it would be all right.

The CHAIRMAN. It is a request he makes to the committee.

Mr. HALE. Yes; but some of the matter contained in that request I do not think is proper to go before the public in this way.

The CHAIRMAN. I have not read it.

Mr. HALE. I have read it. If he goes on the stand and testifies to those things, that would be different.

The CHAIRMAN. I adhere to what I said yesterday. Any mere statement of fact by Mr. Van Benthuyzen should not be allowed to go on record. If he has any witnesses, that is another thing.

Mr. HALE. There are statements that affect the character and standing of witnesses.

Mr. HALL. I looked through it carefully, and I do not know that it is obnoxious to that objection. A man cannot make a statement without saying what he expects to prove.

Mr. HALE. Perjury is charged.

Mr. OATES. He is responsible for that, not the committee.

Mr. HALE. It ought not to be made public by the committee unless it is stated under oath.

Mr. HALL. He asks that that may be done.

Mr. HALE. It is simply a statement addressed to the committee.

Mr. EDEN. I take it Mr. Benthuyzen would have a right to have the records show that he offered to introduce certain testimony upon certain points. It is for the committee to determine whether the testimony shall be received.

Mr. OATES. That is a legal rule.

Mr. HALE. Let him come before the committee and make the offer. Here is a statement sent to the committee by him.

Mr. HALL. He came here personally and offered to make his statement and was told he had better put it in this shape. Now he has addressed a communication to the committee.

Mr. HALE. My suggestion yesterday was that if he wanted to say anything he ought to come before the committee and testify as a witness.

Mr. OATES. As I understand it the proposition now is not to have matter that lies within his own knowledge and that he can testify to. It is a motion that he makes to this committee to allow him to appear by counsel and introduce evidence of certain matters and things. If we hear him, I do not see why we should give him a half-way hearing or a private hearing. Anything he says reflecting on anybody else he is responsible for, not this committee.

Mr. HALE. What he says I think he ought to say under oath.

Mr. OATES. If he sees proper to make the motion without oath, that is for him. It is for the committee to vote on the motion and determine whether we will allow him to produce the evidence he offers to produce.

Mr. HALE. There are some serious charges made against individuals.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen, we can dispose of this matter. Is there a motion?

Mr. OATES. I think we had better have the papers read, so that every member may know their contents.

Mr. HALE. I move we first consider the matter in executive session.

The CHAIRMAN. I will state the motion. The gentleman from Missouri moves that the communication of Mr. Van Benthuyzen be considered in secret session.

Mr. HALE. There is also a communication from Mr. Sypher. I want to include both in my motion.

Mr. EDEN. Yes; the proposition and counter-proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri moves that the communications from Mr. Van Benthuyzen and J. H. Sypher be considered in secret session. Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. OATES. I only want to say, before taking a vote on it, that except as to our own action with reference to subpoenaing witnesses and shaping this investigation, all we have done has been done in public, and I am opposed, for the sake of anybody, to going into secret session about this matter. I am in favor of considering it openly, and letting everybody know exactly what is done.

Mr. RANNEY. I agree with the gentleman from Alabama in that position. It seems to me that this is the case: Mr. Van Benthuyzen having seen testimony that has been put in here, and having testimony within his knowledge with which he desires to deny or refute anything affecting himself by his own or other evidence, should be given the opportunity to do so.

Mr. OATES. I speak of him and Mr. Sypher and everybody else.

Mr. RANNEY. I should object to taking any written statement from him. If there is anything he can prove by his own testimony, he has a right to go on the stand, and it is the duty of the committee to recall him if they think he can refute anything as a matter of fact.

Mr. OATES. I have only read a part of his communication. He makes a motion for the committee to hear him and allow him to produce evidence upon certain questions. I do not know exactly what those questions are. It strikes me the committee ought to hear this motion as we hear any other business, and then decide whether we will allow it or not.

Mr. RANNEY. I agree with you.

Mr. HALL. I understand he is attempting to furnish this committee with the sources of information that may be material to certain questions.

Mr. HALE. I understand the proposition now is whether that communication shall be read to the committee in public.

Mr. OATES. And considered in public.

Mr. HALE. My proposition is to first determine in executive session whether we will make it public.

Mr. RANNEY. I make the motion that we do not receive, to go on the public record, this statement of Mr. Van Benthuyzen in writing.

Mr. HALE. That is the effect of my motion.

Mr. RANNEY. I am perfectly willing that he should go on the stand and testify to any facts within his own knowledge.

Mr. EDEN. That is not what he asks.

Mr. OATES. That is not what he asks.

Mr. EDEN. He makes a motion before the committee for leave to introduce certain witnesses to prove certain alleged facts that he says affect his testimony and affect him. I think he has a right to make that motion, and I think he has a right to have the records show he has made it. It is for the committee to determine what course shall be taken.

Mr. OATES. I see he starts out by claiming he has a right to vindicate himself, and states his grounds.

Mr. EDEN. If the committee think it is not a proper subject of investigation, he at least has the right to make the request and have it appear of record.

Mr. HALE. He wants to have witnesses come before the committee and make the statement under oath.

Mr. OATES. As far as I am concerned I have not got to the question whether we will do that or not. The only question is whether we will hear his motion and his application in open session or in secret session.

Mr. HALE. My point is, that it ought not to be presented to the committee in public until the matter has first been passed on in private, for reasons that are apparent on the face of that communication.

Mr. EDEN. If the committee refuse to hear the testimony, he has a right to show by the record that he offered to produce it.

Mr. OATES. I think so.

Mr. HALE. Let him come as a witness and make that offer, and not present a written communication.

Mr. EDEN. This is not his own testimony, but the testimony of somebody else. He could not swear to it himself. He says that there are other people whom he wants to introduce to testify to it. I assume he could not swear to it himself.

Mr. HALL. When any person goes to a member of the committee and gives the names of witnesses you do not expect that to be under oath?

Mr. HALE. No; but this is a man who has been a witness.

Mr. HALL. He does not appear in the province of witness, but simply to tell the committee where the information can be obtained.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HALE. Is it on that motion or on the objection to receiving the communication in this shape?

The CHAIRMAN. The motion has been stated. As many as favor the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Hale] will say aye; contrary, no. [After the vote.] The ayes seem to have it; the noes have it. The motion is lost.

Mr. HALE. Now, what shape is the question in? I object to receiving that paper in public.

The CHAIRMAN. That was the effect of your motion.

Mr. HALE. My motion was to go into executive session. Now I object to reading that paper in public.

Mr. OATES. Let us vote on that.

Mr. EDEN. I move that the committee consider the application made by Mr. Van Benthuyzen.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the committee proceed to consider the motion of Mr. Van Benthuyzen which he has presented to the committee.

Mr. HALE. Is it intended by that motion to give this communication to the stenographer and have it placed on the record?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; and Mr. Sypher's also.

The motion of Mr. Eden was then put and carried.

The CHAIRMAN. The papers will be submitted to the committee.

Mr. OATES. I suggest that they be read to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. I will read them. [Reading.]

WASHINGTON, May 17, 1886.

DEAR SIR: In the progress of the investigation of certain matters connected with the Pan-Electric and American Bell Telephone Companies by the select committee of the House of Representatives, of which you are the chairman, much testimony has been taken, the tendency, if not the purpose, of which was to prove me guilty of a conspiracy with certain public officers and private individuals to induce the bringing of a suit in the name and under the authority of the United States Government, to annul certain telephonic patents granted to Alexander Graham Bell, and now claimed as the property of the American Bell Telephone Company, and this, too, for the purpose of advancing my own private interest and that of my alleged fellow-conspirators.

This is a grave charge, and it is but natural that I should desire to defend myself against it by every proper and lawful means, as far as I may be permitted by the committee to do so within the scope of the resolution under which it is acting.

To enable me to do this I respectfully ask of the honorable committee to accord me such privileges and facilities as are, I believe, universally allowed by the laws and usages governing all tribunals of every kind charged with the duty of investigating matters of this nature that may be alleged against any citizen, that is the right to be heard by the counsel, to introduce witnesses in my own behalf, and to be confronted with and allowed to cross-examine those who have been or may be called to testify against me.

If these rights are allowed me by the committee I propose—

First. To submit competent documentary and oral evidence to establish the fact that some of the witnesses who have testified in support of the charges referred to are charged in their respective communities as wholly unworthy of credit. These witnesses are J. Hale Sypher, E. N. Hill, and Joseph Pulitzer; the two former of whom have testified, as shown by the record, that they originated the calumnies that gave rise to this inquiry, and the latter in his testimony has assumed the whole responsibility of publishing them to the world.

Second. To show by the cross-examination of witnesses who have already been examined, and by the testimony of others yet to be called, that the American Bell Telephone Company has resorted to and used undue and improper means to scandalize and influence public officials, and improper methods to secure successful results in the Patent Office, and through that office the courts of the United States.

In pursuance of these ends I respectfully ask that the following witnesses may be summoned before the committee:

Hon. James O. Broadhead, Hon. Wm. C. Jones, Hon. Celsus Price, Wm. H. Swift, esq., Herman Hansler, esq., Col. John Knapp, Geo. W. Bailey, esq., Hon. Robert A. Campbell, Mr. Joseph Bogy, jr., Hon. John B. Finney, Col. Grin. Prather, John A. Dillon, Editor Henry W. Moore, managing editor, and Ignatz Kappner, business manager of the Saint Louis Post-Dispatch, all of Saint Louis, Mo.; and John A. Cockrell, assistant editor of the New York World, and Wm. Swan, of Boston; and I ask to have recalled the following witnesses who have already testified: J. Hale Sypher, E. N. Hill, Joseph Pulitzer, T. C. Crawford, S. N. Clarke, A. G. Boll, Gardiner G. Hubbard, Wm. R. Driver; and that the latter be required to produce the minute-book, stock-books, and cash-books of the American Bell Telephone Company and all contracts made by said company.

I propose also to show that it is not true that in the contests already had and the efforts to secure a Government suit against the Bell patents through myself or my company is the work of any Democratic or other political element; the facts being that in all these contests Republicans have been in the majority and the principal portion of the expense has been paid by Republicans, and the attorneys against the Bell companies are nearly all Republicans of the highest respectability and standing.

I believe that all the testimony I shall offer to introduce is fully authorized under the terms of the resolution of inquiry and the course of examination which has already been taken by the committee.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. VAN BENTHUYSEN.

Hon. CHARLES E. BOYLE,

Chairman Select Committee of House of Representatives, Investigating Telephone Matters.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 18, 1886.

MR. CHAIRMAN: I observe from the public prints that a person by the name of Van Benthuyzen has requested permission of this committee to impeach the testimony of myself and other gentlemen who have testified before you. This man is quite notorious for his impudence, audacity, and unscrupulous transactions. I hope you will afford him the amplest opportunity to refute any statements made by me, here or elsewhere. While I invite and challenge the closest scrutiny into my private character and public acts, by this honorable committee, I shall not permit my record to be interpreted or judgments to be passed upon me by any such man as Van Benthuyssen.

Very respectfully,

J. H. SYPHER.

The CHAIRMAN. I have a letter from Dr. Rogers also.

Mr. OATES. Let us have the whole thing.

Mr. EDEN. Yes, let us see what the doctor has to say.

Mr. HALE. It is pretty spicy reading, worth reading if life was a little longer.

Mr. EDEN. Is Dr. Rogers's letter on the same subject?

The CHAIRMAN. I presume this letter was intended for the committee. It is addressed to me as chairman of the committee.

Mr. J. HARRIS ROGERS (to the chairman). If you will allow me, I think it was only intended for yourself.

The CHAIRMAN. Then I will not read it. There is nothing in it to indicate that it was to go before the committee except that it is addressed to me as chairman.

Mr. HALL. I suppose that it is a confidential communication.

The CHAIRMAN. I will so treat it. Now, gentlemen, the matter is before the committee. What is the pleasure of the committee?

Mr. HALE. I confess, myself, I do not know what to do with them.

Mr. HALL. I think it is entirely proper to consider them—as to whether we will take the testimony. It is not a difficult subject to consider, I think.

The CHAIRMAN. The first matter before the committee, as I understand, is that Mr. Van Benthuyssen asks, in the first place, to be allowed to introduce testimony in this respect: "To submit competent documentary and oral evidence to establish the fact that some of the witnesses who have testified in support of the charges referred to are charged in their respective communities as wholly unworthy of credit. Those witnesses are Mr. Sypher, Mr. Hill, and Mr. Pulitzer, the two former of whom have testified, as shown by the record, that they originated the calumnies that gave rise to this inquiry, and the latter in his testimony has assumed the whole responsibility of publishing them to the world." It would probably be better to submit these requests separately.

Mr. HANBACK. Is it not a fact that there is oral and documentary evidence which he desires to present?

Mr. RANNEY. He does not say that he has any documentary evidence.

The CHAIRMAN. No; it is a question whether he shall be allowed to attack the reputation of the witnesses named, they having testified before this committee.

Mr. HALE. He submits the proposition as a whole, does he not?

The CHAIRMAN. I can see that part of the testimony offered might be competent and the other part not competent.

Mr. OATES. It is competent for the committee to consider the whole or any part of it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does any member of the committee desire to offer a motion?

Mr. EDEN. I do not think the committee should go into a general investigation of that kind.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not see that General Sypher's testimony is material at all. I think he communicated no fact to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. It will simplify the matter if some gentleman will make a motion that we shall or shall not admit this evidence.

Mr. EDEN. I move that we shall decline to go into an investigation on that point which the chairman has just read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that this committee will not receive testimony under Mr. Van Benthuyssen's first offer, to show that Messrs. Sypher, Hill, and Pulitzer are charged in their respective communities as wholly unworthy of credit.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, looking into the resolution of the House under which this committee was created, and which gives the committee all the power and authority that it has, I think we have, in our efforts to fully discharge the duty devolving upon us as set forth in that resolution, in a good many instances exceeded our powers in our search for evidence. If we undertake to enter upon the inquiry, or the request rather, of Mr. Van Benthuyssen, I think we will assume all the functions of a court and get entirely outside of the question, for most of the purposes stated there are outside of our authority. We have found ourselves on more occasions than one in the predicament of seeking testimony here which we did not have the power to compel. I think we have indulged in about as much latitude as could be expected. While every one may have his own opinion concerning the evidence already adduced, I do not think it advisable to extend the investigation to the degree indicated in this application. This application to be allowed to put in rebutting testimony opens the gates very wide, and if granted, would protract this investigation indefinitely. Therefore I will offer this resolution just at this time as an amendment or substitute.

(To Mr. EDEN.) If you will withdraw your resolution, I will offer this as a substitute.

Mr. EDEN. You had better read it and then we can see what it is.

Mr. OATES. I think you will accept it. The resolution I have drawn reads as follows: "Resolved, That no other witnesses be subpoenaed or called to testify before this committee. The documentary evidence which is relevant may be introduced, and witnesses who have testified may correct any error in their testimony or be recalled to testify about any new matter which has been admitted into the record since the examination of such witness or witnesses."

Mr. EDEN. Very well; I will accept that.

Mr. RANNEY. Be kind enough to read that once more.

Mr. OATES read the resolution, as requested.

Mr. EDEN. That does not apply to documentary evidence, I understand.

Mr. RANNEY. I have some documentary evidence which I desire to offer at the proper time.

Mr. OATES. Under that resolution, we should treat the register of the hotel as documentary evidence.

Mr. HALL. Would that allow any witness to be recalled in reference to any document that may hereafter be introduced?

Mr. OATES. Yes, to explain any new matter in it.

Mr. EDEN. You cannot get in documents as evidence unless it is by agreement.

Mr. OATES. Well, I think we have been pretty liberal in regard to putting in documents so far.

Mr. HALL. I do not know what may be produced in the way of documents. It may become necessary to call some witness in connection with a document.

Mr. OATES. I will say to Mr. Hall that this is not intended by me to operate harshly or to cut off anything which is just and right.

Mr. EDEN. If any person should be affected under it, that person would have a right to come in and make a statement.

Mr. OATES. If it was alleged as untrue he might.

Mr. MOFFATT. How would that affect the matter of the telegraphic dispatches? We may have to subpoena some one else in order to get at them.

Mr. OATES. Well, that is documentary evidence.

Mr. EDEN. Let it be understood, then, as you say, that they are documentary evidence and can come in.

Mr. RANNEY. Has anything been heard from Mr. C. P. Huntington?

The CHAIRMAN. Nothing.

Mr. OATES. Nothing since he sent the certificate of his doctor.

Mr. HALL. Suppose, Mr. Oates, that you add to the end of your resolution, "unless in explanation of documentary evidence hereafter introduced." For instance, Mr. Ranney says that he has letters which he desires to introduce. I do not know what they are. But in regard to them, or documents that any member of the committee might want to introduce, if necessary, witnesses should be allowed to explain them.

Mr. RANNEY. The documents I refer to are nothing except what are before the committee.

Mr. OATES. Are they not all of them letters to or from some of the parties who have testified as witnesses?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

Mr. OATES. Then they can be recalled under this resolution.

Mr. EDEN. If a person is reflected upon by anything contained in a document, he should have a right to come before the committee and explain the matter.

Mr. HALL. I move that it include all documents hereafter to be submitted.

Mr. RANNEY. That was practically the determination the other day.

Mr. HALE. I am ready to vote for that resolution at any time, but if I understand the practice, I think having communications before us specially, we ought to make some disposition of them.

Mr. OATES. This disposes of them. It cuts them off.

Mr. HALE. Suppose you add to the resolution that this request be not granted. That may be the indirect effect of it.

Mr. OATES. We have here a request for the introduction of new witnesses. Of course, if this resolution is adopted, it knocks all that out.

Mr. EDEN. It disposes of all that.

Mr. HALE. Yes; it would if it was in the resolution, but the resolution is too general.

Mr. OATES. That was the pending question when the resolution was submitted.

Mr. EDEN. This will cover all that Mr. Van Benthuyzen proposes, as I understand it.

Mr. OATES. I prefaced the introduction of it by stating that I thought we had gone fully enough into evidence touching all these matters, and therefore I offered that resolution.

Mr. EDEN. This resolution would dispose of Mr. Van Benthuyzen's request.

Mr. HALE. I think we ought to dispose of these formal communications now before the committee.

Mr. RANNEY. Then suppose you make a motion to that effect.

Mr. OATES. I think the Chair would rule that my resolution would dispose of them.

The CHAIRMAN. That was my understanding; that this request was before the committee for consideration when the gentleman from Alabama offered this resolution.

Mr. HALE. I make this as an amendment, "that the request of General Sypher and Mr. Van Benthuyzen be not granted."

Mr. OATES. The very language of the resolution, "that no other witnesses be subpoenaed or called on to testify before this committee," includes that.

Mr. HALE. If the proposition was not pending, that would be sufficient, but there is a pending proposition undisposed of before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdrew his motion, and there is no motion before the committee but this.

Mr. MOFFATT. I submit that there is one point in the request of Mr. Van Benthuyzen not covered by this resolution. He asks leave to introduce, among other things, documentary evidence on these points.

Mr. OATES. If he brings documentary evidence the committee can judge whether it is proper or not.

Mr. MOFFATT. But he asks to impeach them in that way.

Mr. RANNEY. That resolution applies to documentary evidence.

Mr. MOFFATT. That leaves this question of Mr. Van Benthuyzen's introducing documentary evidence open. The best way is to consider and act upon it definitely.

Mr. RANNEY. This resolution does not preclude Mr. Van Benthuyzen from introducing documentary evidence.

Mr. MOFFATT. I do not want documentary evidence introduced by him. Why not say that we will not grant his request, and that would be the end of it. I think Mr. Hale's view of that is correct.

Mr. EDEN. I think the resolution covers the whole thing.

Mr. RANNEY. I think it does.

Mr. OATES. In order that we may have no further trouble, I will consider that as an amendment.

Mr. HALL. In regard to the suggestion of the gentleman from Missouri, and also in regard to some remarks made as to the relevancy and materiality of the testimony of General Sypher and Mr. Pulitzer, in my opinion their evidence is material. But as to many of the facts stated by them of course there is no controversy. But there might be in the minds of some persons a doubt as to whether they have stated all the facts; whether there are not some material facts omitted, and I regard, so far as the whole aspect of their testimony is concerned, the matter of character as material, and while I am not in favor of going into that question now, in consequence of the lateness at which this proposition is laid before the committee, I do not want the action of the committee to assume such a shape that it shall leave the impression that we declined to go into the investigation of character because we believed those witnesses or did not believe them; and hence I object to the suggestion which has been made two or three times that we decline to go into that in a general way. The resolution now is a proper one and covers it.

Mr. HALE. I do not think there is any conflict whatever as to the testimony of Mr. Pulitzer; that is my recollection.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Pulitzer did not swear to any fact at all except that he got this communication from his regular correspondent and stated that he was responsible for what had been published. He did not testify to any of those facts.

Mr. EDEN. I do not think that this action of the committee is to reflect upon their testimony or to build it up, but to leave it just as it was.

Mr. HALE. That is my understanding.

Mr. OATES. I have added to this resolution, and I will read it again. [Reading:]

"Resolved, That no other witnesses be subpoenaed or called to testify before this committee. That documentary evidence which is relevant may be introduced, and witnesses who have testified may correct any error in their testimony or be recalled to testify about any new matter which has been admitted into the record since the examination of such witness or witnesses, or in explanation of documents hereafter introduced, and that the motion of Mr. Van Benthuyzen be denied."

Mr. HALE. Why not include the motion of General Sypher also?

Mr. OATES. There is no motion in his communication; his is only a letter.

The CHAIRMAN. Do I understand the gentleman from Illinois to withdraw his motion?

Mr. EDEN. Yes.

Mr. HALE. I am satisfied with the resolution.

Mr. HALL. I understand that General Sypher's application is practically the same as that of Mr. Van Benthuyzen.

Mr. OATES. No; I do not think he made any motion.

The CHAIRMAN. He merely desires to be heard.

Mr. HALL. It is practically a request of that kind; and I move to amend that resolution by striking out the last words about Mr. Van Benthuyzen and substituting these words: "That all pending propositions to take further testimony be refused."

The CHAIRMAN. I will state to the gentleman from Iowa that General Sypher does not ask to be permitted to produce any testimony whatever. He merely concurs in the request of Mr. Van Benthuyzen, and proposes to ask that he be given scope to attack him. A refusal of Mr. Van Benthuyzen's request would cover the whole ground.

Mr. OATES. General Sypher has made no request. He has just said that he was willing to meet it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Alabama. Those who are in favor of its adoption will say aye—

Mr. OATES. I move a call of the committee so that we can have a record of the vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The clerk will call the roll.

The eight members of the committee present voted in the affirmative, Mr. Millard being absent.

The CHAIRMAN. The ayes have it; it is agreed to.

Mr. RANNEY. I have some documentary evidence that I desire to offer at the proper time.

The CHAIRMAN. I want to put into the record the majority and the minority reports of the House Judiciary Committee on the question of the power to institute Government suits for the revocation of patents.

Mr. OATES. I have no objection, and I think in that connection we had better have the opinions from the Interior Department on the same question put into the record.

Mr. EDEN. They have been put in.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a separate matter.

Mr. OATES. Have you got those?

The CHAIRMAN. I have one set.

Mr. RANNEY. It seems to me, as these reports are public documents now before the House and the country, there is no need of encumbering this record with them again, is there?

Mr. OATES. I think it is just as well to let them go into the record.

Mr. HANBACK. It tends to preserve them.

Mr. RANNEY. I have no objection, except that it encumbers the record. They are public documents.

The following are the reports referred to:

[House Report No. 1003, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

CANCELLATION OF PATENTS FOR INVENTIONS AND DISCOVERIES.

The original resolution (No. 100) asked—

"That the Committee on the Judiciary be directed to inquire and report to the House, accompanying the report by a bill if deemed best—

"First. Whether under existing law, and if so under what law, the Attorney-General has authority at the instance and in the interest of private corporations or of individuals, in the name and at the expense of the United States, to institute and carry on or defend against suits to cancel or annul letters patent issued to citizens of the United States under the laws thereof on account of inventions or discoveries, said United States having no pecuniary or other interest therein; and

"Second. Whether if said authority exist, and its continuance be deemed wise in the judgment of the committee, the law conferring the same should not be made so specific as that parties in interest would be apprised with certainty in what cases and under what conditions they might look to the Government of the United States to undertake the burden of their litigations in that behalf."

The House adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be required to answer the questions by said resolution No. 100 propounded, and advise the House as to the present state of the law on said subject, and report any amendment deemed needful, if they find that the law in that regard needs amendment, and that the committee may report at any time."

Answering, your committee says, that should a suit to cancel or annul its letters patent be begun by the United States, and should the bill aver that the United States had "no pecuniary or other interest therein," i. e., in the patent, without qualifying words, it would be dismissed upon demurrer. No court would try a cause in which the party suing appeared to have no interest.

Should the United States, in such a suit, omit that allegation, but aver that they complained only "at the instance and interest of private corporations or of individuals," and with no view beyond protecting those private interests, we suppose the suit would be dismissed upon the ground that for such private interests statutory remedies had been prescribed. For these reasons, considering the first question literally, your committee answer it in the negative. We do not see how who paid the expenses of the litigation could be material, except with a view to learn whether the suit were only to protect such purely private rights asserted.

In 1685 Sir Oliver Butler's case was decided in England (see 3d Levinz R., 220). In Queen vs. Aires, 10 Mod. R. 354, in 1717, the court, Parker, C. J., said:

"As to this, Sir Oliver Butler's case is an express authority * * * that the Crown de jure ought to permit subjects to sue in the name of the King" to vacate the King's patent.

This language comes not from Butler's case, but from a remark by the Attorney-General or reporter about that case in another report of Queen vs. Aires, 10 Mod. R., 258. The only question in Butler's case was whether the King could have his grant canceled. But the doctrine is recognized in 3 Bl. Com., 260, quoted below.

Butler's case was relied on by Crittenden, Attorney-General, in 1850, in United States vs. Hughes, 11 Howard R., 557, and the grant was canceled. Butler's case was cited with approval in Mowry vs. Whitney, 14 Wallace R., 434. But in 114 U. S. R., 244, the court, by Miller, J., in Minor's case, said it was a grave question whether officers of the United States could allow the use of the name of the United States in suits for private interests only.

Section 4918 Rev. Stat. U. S. allows persons interested in interfering patents to have patents declared void in a court of equity; but that judgment affects only the parties to that action and those holding under them by title derived after such judgment. Sections 4919, 4920, 4921, and 4922 cover the defenses which may be made by persons sued for infringement.

The general law of equity jurisdiction and these statutory provisions seem to us to provide ample remedies for all cases purely private in which the judgment sought is to affect private interests only. Perhaps, therefore, the "grave question" suggested in 114 U. S., ante, need not be raised. (See Mowry vs. Whitney, 14 Wallace, 434.) In such purely private suits, in England and here, the private person must pay expenses of the litigation.

But letters patent for inventions and discoveries may be judicially canceled at the instance of the United States, suing for the general public. As to the grant of these patents, Congress stands for the public or sovereign.

Dyer reported two cases (Rex vs. Esten and Penwarren vs. Thomas), from which he concluded—

"That where there is only one patentee who has committed a cause of forfeiture, of which office the King has not made yet any new patent, there the patentee shall not be ousted by the King except by scire facias at the suit of the King, &c. (Dyer 198^a.) In King vs. Clarke, decided in 1674, it was said, 'The question was upon the grant of the King. Nudigate—That the King's patent shall be void in these following cases: 1. Where he is misinformed in his grant (1 Co., 52). * * * 3. If the King shall be deceived in matter of fact or matter of law, it is void (10 Co., 112; 1 Co., 46), &c. (Freeman, 172.)"

In 4 Coke's Institutes, 8, speaking of the court of chancery, it was said: "When the King granteth anything that is grantable, upon a false suggestion, the King by his prerogative, jure regio, may have a scire facias to repeal his own patent."

In 1684 a grant by the King of Great Britain was canceled because obtained "by surprise and by false particulars," and that, too, though it was urged that under such law "no patentee can be safe, nor should the King's seal be of any force." (Attorney-General vs. Vernan, 1st Vernon's R., 276-9.)

That case was followed in King v. Sir Oliver Butler, in 1685, where the grant was "surreptitiously and fraudulently" procured (sec. 3, Levinz R., 220).

That grant was to hold fairs at a place so near as to interfere with other fairs under an older grant. It was decided by Lord Chancellor Finch, assisted by North and Jones, who gave judgment for cancellation. Upon writ of error to House of Peers it was submitted to six judges, who unanimously held: "The King has an undoubted right to repeal a patent whenever he is deceived or his subjects prejudiced;" and therefor he cited precedents. There is a shorter report of the same case in 2d Ventris, 344. In 1717 Butler's case was relied upon in Queen v. Aires (10 Modern R., 354), as above quoted. Blackstone, in his Commentaries, published in 1776, defined the King's letters patent as "grants, whether of lands, honors, liberties, franchises, or aught else besides." (1 Bl. Com., 346.)

On the next page he said:

"When it appears from the face of the grant that the King is mistaken or deceived either in matter of fact or matter of law, as in case of false suggestion, misinformation, or misrecital of former grants, or if his own title to the thing granted be different from what he supposes, or if the grant be informal, or if he grants his estate contrary to the rules of law, in any of these cases the grant is absolutely void." (Ib., 347.)

In telling of the remedy by scire facias for canceling patents, Blackstone said:

"This may be brought either on the part of the King in order to resume the thing granted, or if the grant be injurious to a subject, the King is bound of right to permit him (upon his petition) to use his royal name for vacating the patent by scire facias." (3 Bl. Com., 260.)

And for this Blackstone cited Dyer, Freeman, Coke, and Levinz, as hereinbefore mentioned. Chancellor Kent followed Butler's case by name in 1814 to vacate a patent "for fraud, irregularity, or mistake," in Jackson v. Lawton (10 Johns. Reports). Following it, Attorney-General Wirt held that a grant by the United States, in which there was a mistake, might be judicially corrected "at the instance of the United States or by the pre-emptors by authority in the name of the United States" (1 Op. Attys. Gen., 458). In 1842 Mr. Legaré so held, citing Butler's case; and reaffirmed it in 1843 (sec. 4, Op. Attys. Gen., 149).

In Stone's case (2 Wallace R.) the Supreme Court of the United States said that a patent might be judicially canceled when issued by fraud or unadvisedly or by mistake, or by one without authority, or to one where it should have been to another. And in Minor's case (114 U. S. Reports, 233) that court held the right of the United States to judicially cancel its grant to be as broad as that of a private person to set aside his contract for like reasons.

True, the grants in these American cases were of lands, as was that in Vernan's case, ante. But in the cases from Dyer and Freeman, and Sir Oliver Butler's case, and in Queen v. Aires, they were not of lands but of monopolies.

It is remarkable that our acts of Congress of 1790 and 1793, governing the patents for inventions and discoveries, allowed courts to declare them void when "obtained surreptitiously by or upon false suggestions." The very words were borrowed from the cases of Vernan and of Butler, cited above. Under those statutes, and until the remodeling of the whole system by the act of 1836, one sued for infringement might so defend as to have a patent, void for those reasons, canceled by the court. Since then such defense can procure a decree operative only between the parties to the suit and their subsequent assignees, as already stated. (Rev. Stats. U. S., sec. 4918.) Of that we speak later.

In 1856 our Supreme Court held that—

"A bill in equity lies to set aside letters patent obtained by fraud, but only between the sovereign making the grant and the grantee." (Field v. Seabury, 19 Howard's R., 323.)

That was a patent for land.

In Doughty's case, 6th Blatchford, the court (Blatchford, J.) said:

"For any such alleged invalidity the only remedy would be a direct proceeding by the United States to vacate the patent.

"The seal of the United States and the signatures of the proper officers to the grant must be respected, in the absence of fraud, as long as the United States themselves do not question the grant. This is familiar law with regard to all grants by sovereigns."

That was for an invention.

The principle was recognized in Rubber Company v. Goodyear (9 Wallace's R.) and in Mowry v. Whitney (14 Wallace's R.), and see 112 U. S. R., 358 and 365, the case of Mahn v. Harwood. We do not mean that this question has been by those cases judicially determined, but only that in determining the questions at issue the law was treated as settled, as here stated.

In United States v. Frazier (22 Fed. Reporter, 106) Judge Blodgett proceeded upon the ground that the United States made no appearance, and that their name was used colorably to cover private interests only. In the same volume Judge Wallace held, in November, 1883: "There is no distinction between letters patent for an invention and for land as regards the rights and remedies for vacating them when obtained by fraud." (United States v. Gunning, 18 Fed. Reporter, 511.) This case was reaffirmed by Wheeler, J., in 22 Fed. Rep., 653, and 23 Fed. Rep., 668. It was for a patented invention, and decided in New York in 1884. That case was put upon 19 Howard, Field v. Seabury, ante, and expressly disagreed with the case of the Rumford Chemical Works, decided in Rhode Island in 1876. That was a bill, to vacate letters patent for a discovery, brought not by the United States, but by "George H. Williams, as he is Attorney-General of the United States of America." It was demurred to because it stated no case, because informant averred no lawful authority for the suit, that the suit was not in the name of United States, and that the Attorney-General, in the form used, had no authority to sue, because the United States is not a party to the suit, &c. (See Attorney-General v. Rumford Chemical Works, 2 Banning and Arden, 302.) The decision dismissing the case was put on this last ground. (Ib., 315.)

The court held that if the action could be maintained it must be in the name of the United States. All else in it was obiter and not at all necessary or appropriate to the logic which reached that conclusion.

The ground for dismissal, that the United States must be the complaining party, was certainly a safe one. For in Mowry v. Whitney, 14 Wall., 434, the decision was put upon a demurrer because the United States was not a party complainant, nor did it appear that the suit was at the instance or by the authority of the Government.

But as the Runiford Chemical Works case from Rhode Island was, by House Report No. 4, first session Forty-eighth Congress, made by the Committee on Patents, treated as stating the law on its obiter dicta, a short review of it in that regard is appropriate.

The foregoing answers the remark of Judge Shipley in that case from Rhode Island, that Sir Oliver Butler's case had not been followed. The foregoing answers, perhaps, sufficiently his claim that a difference between grants to land and grants to monopolies exists, because the United States owns the lands, but does not own the monopolies, which it grants. We have shown that neither Coke nor Blackstone made any distinction between grants of lands and of other things. The United States does not own the monopolies, but it has the right to grant them, and protect their grantee in their uses. The United States owns that right and its lands alike only in trust for the public. This was well enforced by Marshall, Chief Justice, in 1832, in Grant v. Raymond (6 Peters's Reports, 218). Speaking of the act of 1793 ante, he said: "The great object and intention of the act is to secure to the public the advantage to be derived from the discoveries of individuals" in consideration of "the exclusive right to make up and sell the things discovered for a limited time."

And in Butterworth vs. Hoe (112 U. S. R., 59) speaking of the clause in the Constitution allowing such grants, the court said:

"The legislation based on this provision regards the right of property in the inventor as the medium of the public advantage derived from his invention, so that in every grant of the limited monopoly two interests are involved—that of the public, who are the grantors, and that of the patentee."

It is absurd to speak of the United States granting if it had naught to grant.

In the Rhode Island case it was said that the granting of a patent by the Interior Department was a judicial proceeding. Taney, Attorney-General, said it was only ministerial, in 2 Opinions Attorneys-General, 455, in 1831. Mr. Webster so contended in arguing Field vs. Seabury (19 Howard ante, p. 233) in 1832, and so said Mr. Cushing, Attorney-General, in 8 Opinions Attorneys-General, 270. It is called quasi-judicial in 114 U. S. R., 51. But what of it? The most solemn judgments of the highest courts may be set aside for fraud.

The Rhode Island case mentions that English patents contain in them the stipulation that if contrary to law or fraudulent, &c., they may be set aside, and that ours have no such reservation. The law enters into every contract; is as much a part of it as if therein written. Said Miller, J.: Such a grant "can only be avoided by a direct proceeding by way of scire facias or bill in chancery to set aside the grant for some reason which made its original issue a wrongful act. In such case the Government which issued the patent, by its Attorney-General or other proper officer, in a court of competent jurisdiction obtains a decree setting the patent aside, whereby it is rendered of no avail against all persons interested in the matter as well as the Government." (Mahn v. Harwood, 112 U. S. R., 365.)

Such pleadings must aver that public interests are involved and how. For, as our Supreme Court has said:

"The general public is left to the protection of the Government and its officers." (14 Wallace R., 441.)

The public, "the people," by the Constitution vested in Congress certain prerogatives which in England belonged to the Crown. But Congress and Crown hold them pro bono publico. The possession of the powers implies the duty to use them pro bono publico, and hence the expression that "the general public is left to the protection of the Government or its officers" above quoted. Congress is empowered to secure "for limited times, to authors and inventors, the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries" in consideration of the promotion of "the progress of science and useful arts" (U. S. Constitution, Art. 1, sec. 8) and the benefits thereby to come to "the people," upon which so much of their wealth and comfort depend. The contract is made in the name of the United States. If procured by fraud, or accident, or mistake, there ought to be some way to set it aside and thereby protect the general public. We believe the old way, under the acts of 1790 and 1793, by which it could be done upon the suggestion of the defendant in an infringement suit, was merely cumulative upon the right of the United States as one of the contracting parties to have it declared void, and that it was left out of the acts of 1836 and 1870 because it was deemed best that the United States only should pray to cancel its letters patent.

It may be said the United States may not sue except by direct law so authorizing. The cases above cited for canceling patents for land have been judicially sustained, and no statute has specially authorized those suits. The Constitution, article 3, section 2, says there may be "controversies to which the United States shall be a party," and that her courts may have jurisdiction in them, and in "all cases arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority." Here is a controversy about a contract to which the United States is a party, and which contract is made pursuant to a law of the United States passed to enable it to perform a great constitutional trust. It seems to be not only the right but solemn duty of the United States to see that her seal attached to such a contract shall not cover a fraud. The mere fact that some private person may receive special benefit from such action does not affect the question when the suit is brought by the United States to protect "the general public." The criminal laws are enforced wholly in the name and at the sole expense of the United States, generally upon the suggestion of individuals. And prosecutions sometimes inure to individual profit, but the purpose is to protect the general public. When such a suit needs to be brought it must be commenced by the Attorney-General or his authority. His duty is to conduct and argue any case, in any court of the United States, in which the United States is interested, or have it done. Should there be no Attorney-General, or he be absent or under disability, the Solicitor-General of the United States has the power to act in his stead (Rev. St., U. S., 347, 349, 367).

From the beginning of the Government such suits have been allowable. Of late years they have been frequently brought by the Department of Justice, upon the suggestion of the Department of the Interior. A list of some of those suits is hereto attached as an exhibit, showing the patent and by what officer in the Department of Justice the suits were commenced or by whose authority the name of the United States was authorized. There are many forcible reasons why the right should not be restricted. It is safe to trust two such Departments. Lest the disposition to grant valuable monopolies to honest inventors be destroyed, it is best to leave it easy for the Government to attack all letters patent "surreptitiously or fraudulently" obtained. Your committee do not deem any amendment of the law in this regard as needful, and therefore recommend that the resolution do lie on the table.

[House Rep't 1003, part 2, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

The original resolution (No. 100) asked—

“That the Committee on the Judiciary be directed to inquire and report to the House, accompanying the report by a bill if deemed best—

“First. Whether, under existing law, and if so, under what law, the Attorney-General has authority at the instance and in the interest of private corporations or of individuals, in the name and at the expense of the United States, to institute and carry on or defend against suits to cancel or annul letters patent issued to citizens of the United States under the laws thereof on account of inventions or discoveries, said United States having no pecuniary or other interest therein; and

“Second. Whether if said authority exist, and its continuance be deemed wise in the judgment of the committee, the law conferring the same should not be made so specific as that parties in interest would be apprised with certainty in what cases and under what conditions they might look to the Government of the United States to undertake the burden of their litigations in that behalf.”

The House adopted the following resolution:

“Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be required to answer the questions by said resolution No. 100 propounded, and advise the House as to the present state of the law on said subject, and report any amendment deemed needful, if they find that the law in that regard needs amendment, and that the committee may report at any time.”

The undersigned members of the Committee on the Judiciary, dissenting from the report made by the majority on the foregoing resolutions, respectfully submit their views to the House, as follows:

A presentation of the present state of the law as required involves a review of decisions made and of legislative action had upon the subject of the inquiry.

Two cases reported by Dyer are cited to sustain the claim that our Attorney-General has authority to bring suit in the name of the United States to repeal or annul a patent granted for an invention.

In the first, Rex v. Eston, Dyer, 197*b* (1561), judgment was given canceling letters patent held by the defendant of the office of sergeant-at-arms and a per diem fee, for life, and the letters were canceled upon default, on the ground that the defendant did not perform the office, but absented himself.

The second, Penwarren v. Thomas, 198*a* (1561), is a suit between individuals claiming the office of bailiff, one by inheritance, in fee-simple, and the other by letters patent, for life. The letters were revoked, and Penwarren was restored to the office.

Neither case gives any valuable suggestion upon this inquiry.

The King v. Clarke, Freeman, 172 (1674), so far as applicable, holds only that the King's patent is void when he is misinformed in his grant, and also where he shall be deceived. The King v. Sir Oliver Butler (3 Levinz, 220), in the House of Lords (1685), is relied on by the majority, and is cited in cases cited in the report. Let us see what application and authority it has. The mayor and citizens of Rochester held the city under a farm-rent of £12 per annum, and by ancient right held a market every Wednesday and Friday, receiving tolls, &c. The King, by letters patent (reciting an inquisition ad quod damnum, finding that it would not be to the damage of the King or any other person), granted to defendant a market to be held in Chatham, 1½ miles away on other days. In the proceedings instituted it was alleged that the writ of inquisition was executed the day of its date, 30 miles from Rochester, and without notice to the mayor, &c., and surreptitiously and fraudulently in deceit of them, and that the grant was to the damage of Rochester and of the market there, and that by reason thereof these letters patent were void. Upon demurrer joined the case was heard in chancery (1680), and is reported (2 Ventris, 334). The chancellor overruled the demurrer and said: “And where a patent is granted to the prejudice of the subject, the King of right is to permit him upon his petition to use his name for the repeal of it in a scire facias at the King's suit, and to hinder multiplicity of actions upon the case.”

The case then went up to the House of Peers, and this review is reported in 3 Levinz, 220. In this report, answering the objection that scire facias does not lie to repeal such patents, because there is another remedy by the common law, the judges of the House answered, “That the King has an undoubted right to repeal a patent wherein he is deceived or his subjects prejudiced,” citing cases of patents for toll, for markets, and the like, asserting the King's right, and saying that “it is jure regio by the common law, and in none of the cases was it any question whether the writ would lie, but only the manner of pursuing it.

The case in the House of Lords is reported at much length, and although it asserts, as above, the doctrine that in such a case “The King has an undoubted right to repeal a patent,” it does not appear to adopt the position of the chancellor below, that "The King, of right, is to permit [the subject], upon his petition, to use his name for the repeal of it," consequently the latter doctrine, quoted in many books as decided by the House of Lords, 3 Levinz, 220, is without that high authority.

In The Queen v. Aires, 10 Mod., 258 and 354 (1717), certain fairs in Derby had been granted to defendant.

It was alleged that the writ ad quod damnum was clandestinely executed, and that the grant damaged previous grants to the Earl of Rutland, who had fairs 4 miles distant.

This allegation was sustained by a jury. In this case the Attorney-General in his argument refers to Butler's case and says, page 260: "3 Lev., 220, where it was held that the Crown de jure ought to suffer the subject to use their name." And the chief justice deciding the case (p. 354), and apparently adopting the statement, says, "Sir Oliver Butler's case" (with a reference to 3 Lev., 220), "is an express authority that a scire facias is the proper way; and that the Crown de jure ought to permit subjects to sue in the name of the King;" thus the holding of Lord Chancellor Finch decided The Queen v. Aires, and has come down through the books with the authority of a decision of the House of Lords.

It seems that out of cases like the foregoing the common-law doctrine, coming to us by inheritance, if at all, originated and took form.

The Attorney-General v. Vernan, 1 Vernon, 276 (1684). This is a bill in equity to set aside letters patent conveying valuable landed estates from the Crown to Colonel Vernan, obtained for excessive undervalue, upon false suggestions, and in secrecy and haste.

It is analogous to the case of an owner bringing suit to cancel a conveyance obtained by false representations and undue influence, without adequate consideration, but much of the reasoning set forth is inapplicable to our laws or to our times, and the case is of no weight in determining the authority of the United States to cancel or repeal a patent for an invention.

Although it is now legal to repeal a patent for an invention in England by proceedings by scire facias as in the market patent case of Sir Oliver Butler, the right is recognized by statutory law.

The patent system of Great Britain was remodeled by the act designated "Patent law amendment act of 1852," which adopts to some extent the American procedure, but adheres in some respects to ancient forms and the royal prerogative.

The right of repeal of letters upon trial at scire facias is expressly recognized in sections 35 and 41.

The form prescribed by statute provides that the letters patent shall be upon condition that if it shall appear during the term granted, to the sovereign or to six or more of the privy council, that the "grant is contrary to law, or prejudicial, or inconvenient to our subjects in general," or that the invention is not new, or that the patentee is not the true and first inventor, the letters shall become void.

The continuing difference between the systems as affected by ancient governmental dissimilarities and the royal prerogative is illustrated by a quotation from section 16 of this modern act.

"SEC. 16. Provided also, That nothing herein contained shall extend to, abridge, or affect the prerogative of the Crown in relation to the granting or withholding the grant of any letters patent; and it shall be lawful for Her Majesty, by warrant under her royal sign manual, to direct such law officer to withhold such warrant as aforesaid, or that any letters patent for the issuing whereof he may have issued a warrant, as aforesaid, shall not issue, or to direct the insertion in any letters patent to be issued in the manner to be herein provided of any restrictions, conditions, or provisos which Her Majesty may think fit, in addition to, or in substituting for, any restrictions, conditions, or provisos which would otherwise be inserted therein, under this act, &c."

Coming to the American cases claimed to give support to the position of the majority, they will be found to be mainly cases involving patents for land. It must be kept in mind that "a land patent (so called) is only a deed of bargain and sale; it has nothing of grace or generosity or royal favor."

Jackson v. Lawton, 10 Johnson, 23 (1813), was an action of ejectment. Kent, Ch. J. Plaintiff claimed under letters patent dated October, 1811, defendant under letters dated March 12, 1812, which alleged a mistake in the issuing of the first letters, and defendant being in possession under the last patentee.

The question decided was that the elder patent is the highest evidence of title, and that neither the junior patent nor parol evidence of possession, or payment thereunder, could, in this action, be received against the first letters patent. All else is obiter. It is evident that the case of patents for invention were not included in the reasoning, as the English practice is discussed with an assertion as to ours, but with no reference to the then existing statutory authority for repealing such patents.

It is unquestioned that the Supreme Court has decided that the United States has full authority to initiate and conduct suits to cancel and annul patents for land obtained from it by fraud, misrepresentation, or mistake. (Cotton v. The United States, 11 How., 229; The United States v. Hughes, 11 How., 552; Field v. Seabury, 19 How., 323; The United States v. Stone, 2 Wall., 525; The United States v. Minor, 114 U. S., 233.)

In Cotton v. The United States, the court said:

"It would be a strange anomaly, indeed, if, having the power to make contracts and hold property as other persons, natural or artificial, they were not entitled to the same remedies for their protection."

And this is the law as to lands patented (or granted) by the United States.

The United States v. Hughes et al., the court, through Mr. Justice Catron, says:

"In this country the lands of the United States lying within the States are held and subject to be sold (under the authority of Congress) as lands may be held and sold by individual owners or by ordinary corporations, and similar remedies may be employed by the United States as owners that are applicable in cases of others. This, we think, is manifest.

* * * * *

"Under existing regulations, Goodbee had the right to enter the land in dispute in exclusion of others, and he did so; and the United States, as owner, having been paid for the land, was bound to make the purchaser a title in the same manner that an individual would have been bound under similar circumstances.

* * * * *

"It is manifest that if the agents of an individual had been thus imposed upon, the conveyance could be set aside because of mistake on the part of such agents and fraud on the part of the second purchaser in order that the first contract could be complied with. Nor can it be conceived why the Government should stand on a different footing from any other proprietor."

Minor's case holds the same doctrine.

Attorney-General v. Rumford Chemical Works, 2 Bann. & A., 298, holds that—

"The decisions in the Federal courts sustaining proceedings in equity to vacate letters patent granting lands obtained by fraud, furnish no precedent in case of letters patent for inventions. The United States as an owner of lands has equal rights, and is entitled to equal remedies with an individual owner. In granting lands the United States conveys that in which it has the fee.

"In issuing letters patent for inventions nothing is granted which belonged before to the United States. The issue of the letters patent is in compliance with an act of Congress. The rights and remedies of the parties are dependent solely on the statutory enactments, and do not grow out of any previous ownership of the supposed subject of the grant, as in the case of a conveyance of lands."

The cases relating to patents for inventions are, upon the question at issue, few and inconclusive, and the law is not yet determined.

Doughty v. West, 6 Blatch., 429; letters patent for an invention. No fraud is claimed.

The question litigated and decided was upon an alleged infringement, and whether Draper, under whom plaintiff held, was the first inventor. The court held that he was, and also held that if the reissue was done unintentionally, through a blunder, that would not avail in this action. All else as to vacating patents is not necessary to the determination of the case.

The quotation in the report from Mahn v. Harwood, 112 U. S., 365, is from the dissenting opinion, and the matter quoted is not involved in the decision nor referred to in the prevailing opinion.

Rubber Company v. Goodyear, 9 Wall., 788. This case arose upon the extension of a patent for an invention and is between individuals. The defendants alleged that the extension was procured by "fraud and collusion, by fraudulent suppressions and concealments from and by false and fraudulent representations to an officer."

The court decided that it could not go behind the action of the Commissioner to inquire into such frauds.

The suggestions of the opinion that such question could be litigated in some other proceeding in accordance with the principles of general jurisprudence, and that the case of a patent for an invention is as strong or stronger than one for land, are, it is respectfully submitted, unnecessary to the decision of the case and plainly obiter dicta.

In Mowry v. Whitney (14 Wall., 434) the plaintiff sought to have declared void ab initio the reissue of a patent, the suit being commenced after the term of reissue had expired, on the ground of fraud in such reissue.

The court holds "that no one but the Government, either in its own name or the name of its appropriate officer, or by some form of proceeding which gives official assurance of the sanction of proper authority, can institute judicial proceedings for the purpose of vacating or rescinding the patent which the Government has issued to an individual, except in the cases provided for in section 16 of the act of July 4, 1836."

The citations, reasoning, and statements tending to the conclusion that the Attorney-General has authority to institute such judicial proceedings—though entitled to very high respect by reason of being permitted by this great court to go upon the permanent records—are, nevertheless, only incidental to the decision, and are outside of the case decided.

United States v. Gunning (circuit court; in equity, 1883), 18 Federal Reports, 511, on demurrer claiming that the United States cannot maintain a suit to vacate letters obtained by fraud.

The court holds that "A bill in equity lies to set aside letters patent obtained by fraud, but only between the sovereignty making the grant and the grantee," and in terms holds directly against Attorney-General v. Rumford Chemical Works, 2 Bann. & A., 298.

Were this a decision by the Supreme Court the question would be settled, but as it is not, one inferior court holds that the English rule established under the influence of the doctrine of prerogative obtains under the patent system and laws of the United States.

And another court of equal weight and authority holds the reverse, and until the court of last resort shall pass upon the question it must remain open and undetermined. United States v. Gunning, above cited, is not reaffirmed by Wheeler, J., in 22 Federal Reports, 653, nor in 23 Federal Reports, 668, as to the question in controversy.

In 22 Federal Reports, Wheeler, J., says that the question whether this bill to set aside the patent for fraud can be maintained by the United States "has been settled in this case, except upon appeal, by the decision of Judge Wallace overruling the demurrer."

And there he leaves the question.

In 23 Federal Reports, the judge neither decides the point nor intimates his opinion upon it.

In United States vs. Frazer, 22 Federal Reports, 106, the Attorney-General permitted the use of the name of the United States to a private party to cancel a patent for an invention obtained upon a fraudulent ground which might, under the statute, have been litigated in a suit between the parties.

It is decided that the case presented is not one in which the United States can authorize the use of its name to carry on a contest between individuals.

The court says:

"The practice here inaugurated will, if followed, transfer nearly all litigation on patents, except mere questions of fact as to infringement, to the office of the Attorney-General, instead of leaving it in the hands of the persons directly interested. The bill in question is not authorized by any special statute of the United States. There is a statute that authorizes the bringing of a bill between interfering patentees, when two patents are issued for the same, or substantially the same, device, and the fact that Congress did not authorize bringing a bill of this character is certainly a strong argument in favor of the view that it was not intended that bills of this character should be brought, and that they intended if a party took a patent he should take it subject to being defeated by those interested in its defeat, by traversing any and all facts upon which his claim to a patent is based."

Some very important suggestions upon the principles affected may be found in the language of the court in United States v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S., 71:

"It would be a very dangerous doctrine, one threatening the title to millions of acres of land held by patent from the Government, if any man who had a claim or grudge against his neighbor can, by indemnifying the Government for costs and furnishing the needed stimulus to a district attorney, institute a suit in chancery in the name of the United States to declare the patent void."

And in another land case, United States v. Minor, 114 U. S., 244:

"And it may become a grave question, in some future case of this character, how far the officers of the Government can be permitted, when it has no interest in the property or in the subject of the litigation, to use its name to set aside its own patent, for which it has received full compensation, for the benefit of a rival claimant?"

The Attorney-General v. The Rumford Chemical Works, 2 Banning & Arden, 298 (circuit court, district of Rhode Island, 1876), is worthy of very careful consideration. The suit is brought upon information, by "George H. Williams, as he is Attorney-General of the United States of America," at the relation of George v. Hecker, &c., and involves a patent for an invention and reissues.

Among several grounds set forth in the information, it is alleged that one reissue was wrongfully and fraudulently obtained. The decision is upon demurrer, and involves the question of the right to initiate and maintain the suit.

The case is heard before Shepley and Knowles, JJ., and the opinion of the court is given by Judge Shepley. The questions involved in the inquiry under consideration are elaborately discussed.

It is decided by the court that—

"A patent for a useful invention is not, under the laws of the United States, a monopoly in the old sense of the common law. The whole patent system of the United States rests upon the basis of the constitutional provision conferring upon Congress the power to promote the progress of science and the useful arts, by securing, for limited times, to authors and inventors, the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries.

"This grant is not the exercise of any prerogative to confer upon one or more of the subjects of a Government the exclusive property in that which would otherwise belong to the common right.

"To the legislation of Congress, and to this alone, we must resort under our form of government, for guidance as to the extent, limitations, and conditions of the respective rights of inventors and the public, and as to forms of remedy and the remedial jurisdiction, as well as the remedy itself, under our system of patent law. * * *

"For the protection of the general public, in place of the provision for a proceeding in the nature of a scire facias to repeal the patent, to be instituted within three years, as provided in the act of 1793, it is sought to provide safeguards against the issue of letters patent upon false suggestion and ample security against any injury to the citizen, to whom it opened every possible defense against injury resulting from any mistake or oversight of the Commissioner in issuing the patent. In fact, any defense against a patent that can well be imagined was left open to the citizen whose interests were affected by it, excepting only the one which in Whitney v. Mowry the Supreme Court decided was not open, the question of fraud upon the Government in obtaining the grant."

The fact that there was another question in the case does not obscure the decision upon this.

By the Constitution the people clothed Congress with sovereign power, subject to the limitations in that instrument contained, as to patents for inventions and discoveries, and all things relating thereto.

The language of the Constitution is:

"The Congress shall have power:

"To promote the progress of science and useful arts, by securing for limited times, to authors and inventors, the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries.

"To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers."

This involves the governmental function of giving special protection to certain persons in consideration for the benefits they bring to the general public. The result is our patent system. True, the executive power is vested in the President; it is difficult, however, to see how he or his subordinates can execute laws that do not exist. But it is claimed that the common law of England is the source of this power to repeal a patent.

The common law is adopted only so far as it is applicable, and it would be an extreme stretch of construction to hold that a right growing purely out of the kingly prerogative attaches itself, by application of the common law of England, to our Executive in a matter intrusted by the Constitution wholly to Congress. But it is claimed that by necessity, as needed power of action is not discovered elsewhere, outside of Congress, it must inhere in the law officer of the Government. It is more reasonable to say that this power remains dormant in Congress until Congress sees fit to act, and that it may act in special cases or by a general statute.

Congress very early made provision for encouraging the inventive disposition by providing protection to inventors.

The people, recently successful in their war, were in no spirit to permit an executive power akin to the kingly prerogative. The public reliance was not upon sovereign grace and favor or the protection of a prerogative royal in its nature, but upon the Constitution, Congress, and the courts.

The First Congress under the Constitution, April 10, 1790, passed "An act to promote the progress of the useful arts." By section 1 patents were authorized upon petition to the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, and the Attorney-General, and those officers, or two of them, had authority to cause letters patent to be made out, which should bear the teste of the President and the United States seal.

By section 4 it is provided that upon oath or affirmation made before a judge of a district court within one year after the issuing that a patent "was obtained surreptitiously by or upon false suggestion," an order to show cause should issue to repeal the patent, and providing that "in case no sufficient cause shall be shown to the contrary, or if it shall appear that the patentee was not the first and true inventor or discoverer, judgment shall be rendered by such court for the repeal of such patent or patents."

By an act of the Second Congress, passed February 21, 1793, the foregoing act was repealed and a more elaborate one substituted.

The Secretary of State was made the authorizing officer, who made the letters patent, submitting them to the examination of the Attorney-General.

Section 10 provided that upon oath or affirmation, made before a judge of the district court within three years after the issuing, that the patent "was obtained surreptitiously, or upon false suggestion," a rule to show cause might issue in proceedings to repeal the patent, with power of repeal similar to that of section 4 of the act of 1790.

The Fifteenth Congress (1819) gave the circuit courts original cognizance of all suits relating to inventions and patents.

The Twenty-fourth Congress passed the patent act of July 4, 1836, which repealed all former laws and established the Patent Office under the Secretary of State and the management of a Commissioner of Patents. (The Secretary of the Interior was substituted in 1849.)

Section 15 provides that a defendant sued for damages for making, using, or selling a patented thing may, among other defenses, plead and prove that plaintiff "had surreptitiously or unjustly obtained the patent for that which was in fact invented by another, who was using 'reasonable diligence in adapting and perfecting the same,'" which provision is continued into section 4920, Revised Statutes.

Section 16 provides that in the case of interfering patents, or when an application is refused on the ground of interference, the applicant or the person interested in such patent may have remedy by bill in equity, and the court may adjudge either patent void, in whole or in part, or direct the issuance of letters patent as the facts may require, the judgment, however, to bind only parties and those holding under them, and here the clause providing for repeal or cancellation when the patent "was obtained surreptitiously or upon false suggestion" was omitted.

By the act of 1870 any person interested in any one of interfering patents, or thereunder, may have relief against the interfering patentee by a suit in equity, and any patent may be declared void, in whole or in part, which provision is carried into section 4918 of the Revised Statutes. But by no enactment in force after July 4, 1836, is any authority for the "repeal" of any patent issued, and no statute exists authorizing the President, the Attorney-General, the Secretary of the Interior, or any other official, in the name of the United States or otherwise, to institute a suit to repeal a patent.

Congress having provided for an application on oath, specifications, models, an examination by experts, investigations as to priority, appeals to examiners-in-chief, to the Commissioner, to the supreme court of the District, with a subsequent remedy by bill in equity, with the rights secured in suits touching infringements and those provided in behalf of defendants in the five subdivisions of section 4920, it is not surprising that the old remedy by scire facias, or its equivalent, a bill in equity for repeal, should have been dropped; but it is hardly to be credited that it was intended to be retained as a part of our common law, silently and by implication. It seems more probable that it was omitted as unnecessary.

This condition of the law has not been unnoticed by Congress, but in 1882 (Forty-seventh Congress) a bill, entitled "To enable the courts of the United States in cases of fraud and misrepresentation to declare a patent void on application of the Attorney-General," was introduced into the House and replaced in committee by a substitute and submitted, with a report stating that—

"The law, as it now stands, and has stood since 1836, provides no way in which a patent can be declared void except upon the ground of interference with some other patent, and then only upon the suit of some rival patentee, or of some person claiming under one of the interfering patents. * * *

"For forty-six years prior to the act of July 4, 1836, provisions were in force whereby, upon proper complaint by any individual filed in any district court, and other due proceedings had, a patent could be declared void on the ground that it was obtained surreptitiously and upon false suggestion; but at present the general public have no protection against harassment and vexation from invalid patents, and the Government no power to repeal the grant of the same, however strongly it may be convinced that a patent has thus been wrongly granted."

In 1884 (Forty-eighth Congress) a bill intended to reach similar results, and entitled "A bill to enable the courts of the United States, in case of the improper grant of letters patent by reason of fraud and misrepresentation, to declare a patent void on application of the Attorney-General," was reported from the Committee on Patents. The report was substantially the same as that submitted to the former Congress and was read to the House, and the bill passed the House without opposition.

The report, under the inquiries submitted to this committee, says:

"The mere fact that some private person may receive special benefit from such action does not affect the question when the suit is brought by the United States to protect the general public.

"The criminal laws are enforced wholly in the name and at the sole expense of the United States, generally upon the suggestion of individuals. * * *

"From the beginning of the Government such suits have been allowable.

"Of late years they have been frequently brought by the Department of Justice upon the suggestion of the Department of the Interior. * * * It is safe to trust two such Departments."

We answer, such suits were allowed until 1836 by the authority of Congress upon application to the judiciary. It is a question before us whether since that date the litigation has been based upon law or only upon an assumption of authority. That suits have been initiated only proves that an Attorney-General or an Acting Attorney-General or an Assistant Attorney-General has deemed himself authorized. The cases named in the exhibit are practically without consequence.

Beyond all, the fact remains that that court whose potent word is the final end of all legitimate controversy has not yet spoken.

No law requires the Department of the Interior to divide with the Department of Justice the responsibility of bringing a suit.

Whether "it is safe to trust two such Departments" may well be left to be decided, after the fact in any given case.

The suggested enforcement of remedies against these patentees as against criminals is passed without comment.

The quotation seems to imply that the Attorney-General may move "upon the suggestion of individuals," and that "some private person may receive special benefit from such action." Just here lies the danger. Under the law, as set forth in the report, and as the majority advise it should remain, a single officer of the Government, without statutory authority and with only a general responsibility, may attack in the name and at the expense of the United States, with the aid of such assistant attorneys as the public purse may command, and possibly at the instance of a rival or upon the suggestion of opposing private interests, any existing patent.

Few private persons could long withstand the overwhelming effect of such a warfare through the half dozen years necessary to reach a final determination, if one were then reached.

Immense financial results would depend upon the knowledge, the judgment, the independence, and the integrity of one official person.

Legislation looks to the future. Will the fact that one holds high office and is honored and learned, always justify placing upon him such unshared responsibility and power?

It is a lesson of familiar history that a personage honored as solicitor-general, attorney general, member of the privy council, and lord high chancellor of England, one learned in the law beyond his peers, and so intellectually endowed as to grasp all the knowledge of his time, was yet unworthy of such a trust as this.

The following conclusions are arrived at:

(1) That the authority to cancel or annul a patent for an invention or discovery in a suit between private parties on the ground that the same was obtained by fraudulent collusion with an officer of the Government, or surreptitiously by or upon false suggestion, does not exist.

(2) That the public interests require that authority should exist in the Government under proper restrictions to bring suit, in the name of the United States, to repeal and annul any such patent so obtained.

(3) That under the statutes and decisions of the United States it is a matter of grave doubt whether authority now exists permitting a suit by the United States to annul a patent obtained as above stated, which doubt can only be determined by a decision of the court of last resort.

(4) That in case it shall be authoritatively decided that the right to bring suit for the cancellation of a patent claimed to have been obtained by fraudulent collusion with an officer of the Government, or surreptitiously by or upon false suggestion, now rests with an officer of the Government, acting upon his own motion, or at the instance of another, according to his judgment, or at his pleasure, to attack, in the name and at the expense of the United States any patent now in life, or such as may at any time exist, with no restraints or limitations except such as shall appertain to judicial proceedings after the suit is commenced—it is a power and responsibility that Congress should place, define, and restrict.

(5) That in case it shall be decided that no authority exists on the part of any officer or Department of the Government to institute such suit, it is equally the duty of Congress to establish and limit such power.

This minority recommends the enactment of the following bill:

A BILL to provide for the repeal and cancellation of patents in certain cases.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Attorney-General is, upon the request of the Secretary of the Interior, authorized to bring suit, in the name of the United States, to repeal and cancel any unexpired patent for an invention or discovery, whether original, reissued, or extended, whenever it shall appear that the public welfare will be promoted thereby, and also that such patent was obtained by fraudulent collusion with a public officer, or surreptitiously by or upon false suggestion: Provided, however, That no such suit shall be commenced until the circuit justice of the circuit where the suit is to be brought shall, upon cause shown, authorize the bringing of such suit: And provided further, That no issue shall be litigated in such suit which can be legally litigated in a suit between private parties.

SEC. 2. That such suit shall be brought by a bill in equity in the United States circuit court, and the place of trial shall be in accordance with existing law, and the court shall have power to declare such patent void in whole or in part, and to cancel and annul the same.

SEC. 3. That neither the United States nor the Attorney-General, or any person or party in the name of the United States, shall bring or maintain any suit to repeal or cancel a patent, either in whole or in part, except under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 4. That from any judgment or decree rendered in the premises appeal shall be, at the instance of either party, to the Supreme Court of the United States, in the same manner and under the same circumstances as is now provided by law in other judgments and decrees of circuit courts in causes arising upon patents for inventions.

SEC. 5. That this act shall not apply to or in any manner affect any suit or legal proceeding pending at the time of its passage.

A. X. PARKER,
E. B. TAYLOR,
W. P. HEPBURN,
L. B. CASWELL.

We are of the opinion that the first question propounded is properly answered in the negative; that there is no authority for a suit in the name of the United States brought for the purpose of vacating a patent for an invention, except when it is based upon a state of facts which cannot be regarded by the court and made available in an infringement suit, and that in no case can the name of the Government be properly lent to a suit in the interest only of private parties. It is a question which admits of grave doubt whether, in the absence of any statute providing for it, such a suit can be brought and maintained at all. The question cannot be regarded as decided by the United States Supreme Court, and the decisions in the circuit courts are conflicting on that point. But the better doctrine seems to be that a patent for an invention may be vacated, in a suit brought by the Government in the interest of the general public, when obtained surreptitiously or by fraud. So far as this, and to this extent only, we concur in the report of the majority; and we join in the report of the minority except so far as the same is qualified by what we have said above.

A. A. RANNEY.
JOHN W. STEWART.

The CHAIRMAN. I believe the opinion delivered by the Secretary of the Interior is already in the record. I also offer the opinion of Assistant Secretary Jenks.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not think that ought to go in there myself.

The CHAIRMAN. My opinion is that they ought all to go in—the opinion of Mr. Jenks and of Mr. Muldrow.

Mr. OATES. I understand that in the Secretary's opinion he does not seem to quote the authorities, because he made up his opinion, it seems, from the conclusions in these other opinions. I have never been able to see the others.

The CHAIRMAN. I will state the view I take of it. These opinions were before the Department of Justice when this last Government suit was ordered, and, I have no doubt, gave the reasons upon which the Department proceeded; and, as the character of the action of the Department of Justice is a question here, the ground on which it acted ought to appear.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not remember, but I have a sort of recollection that it was said that they acted on the Secretary's opinion.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not remember.

Mr. OATES. I think so, but I have been informed by some one who has read them that they gave different reasons for their conclusion, and there was a citation of different authorities. But the Secretary made up his opinion without citing these authorities or giving their reasons at all, and I would like to see them.

The CHAIRMAN. We will take steps to procure them. I will postpone this matter for the present and make inquiry.

Mr. RANNEY. I am not aware of the manner of proceeding at the Department. Did they sit as a board?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, as a board. I will withhold Assistant Secretary Jenks's opinion and make inquiry.

Mr. RANNEY. There are certain other things I desire to have put in the record by and by.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all I know of for the present. [To Mr. Ranney.] Have you a list of the applications made to the Department of Justice for suits where they were refused?

Mr. RANNEY. I could not find one list among my papers. I am sure that Mr. Clay brought us one when he was here one day, and he said he brought another copy.

The CHAIRMAN. Those were the ones refused. I want the other one.

Mr. RANNEY. Those which you had contained them both. He brought it one day, but I do not find it among my papers. He said at his last hearing that you had a copy of it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any objection to the admission of this paper? [Exhibiting.] •

Mr. EDEN. What paper is that?

Mr. RANNEY. It is an application for an injunction pendente lite. It is an extract from the minute-book of the circuit court at New Orleans. It is a motion made by Mr. Beckwith.

Mr. EDEN. What have we to do with that?

Mr. RANNEY. It shows that he made an application and was using the fact of a Government suit to support it as soon as he could. Mr. Van Benthuyzen testified in regard to it.

The CHAIRMAN. I see no date here. The date of the motion does not appear.

Mr. OATES. It is just following out to their extreme ends all the facts and consequences of the bringing of a Government suit.

The CHAIRMAN. It is claimed that the Government suit was brought for the purpose of affecting the pending suits and that it was intended to use it with a view to prevent the granting of preliminary injunctions in the several suits. And this offer is made, as I understand it, in that view, to show that the Government suit was attempted to be so used in the New Orleans case.

Mr. HANBACK. I think General Johnson has said that he was very anxious to use it in that way.

Mr. RANNEY. It was used there for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any objection to the admission of this paper?

Mr. RANNEY. It affects the parties as showing they were endeavoring to use the Government suit.

Mr. OATES. I cannot see the force of it.

Mr. HALE. You say that is an application for a preliminary injunction in New Orleans?

The CHAIRMAN. It is a motion made on that application, I understand it.

Mr. RANNEY. It is a motion made in the suit for a preliminary injunction in New Orleans, and they appeared and moved for a continuance of that matter because of the pendency of this Government suit.

Mr. OATES. That was their reason for making that motion there.

Mr. EDEN. I think in one of the New York cases it was allowed where a similar application was pending in another court. There is nothing unusual about it.

Mr. RANNEY. That was on an entirely different ground.

Mr. HALE. I think if we admit a part of that record, we ought to admit it all.

Mr. RANNEY. The only material portion of it is that they resisted the motion for a preliminary injunction on the ground of the pendency of the Government suit, and that that was the object in getting it.

Mr. OATES. You say that was their object in getting it. I draw this distinction. That was the object of Mr. Van Benthuyzen, Mr. Huntington, and those men in bringing that suit down there. That was, no doubt, the stimulating cause of their activity. But at the same time it is not a circumstance, or it is not a fact which fastens any responsibility on or tends to show any wrong on the part of any Government officer.

Mr. RANNEY. There are two questions; I make a distinction. Unless the Government officer was cognizant of the fact that it was—that that was the object. The Pan-Electric Company and the National Improved Company combined by a written agreement.

Mr. OATES. You have not carried that knowledge to any Government officers?

Mr. RANNEY. I say I separate the two things. First, what was the object and purpose of the parties in the first place in trying to get a Government suit under the guise of using the names of private citizens and concealing this written agreement? That shows what their object was. The next question is, did they deceive the Department in order to get their Government suit, and deceive it by withholding their secret arrangement between themselves? Did they deceive them? If so, the Government officers are exempt from blame; they are not parties to it or brought into it. But, in the first place, did these parties do it themselves? Were they guilty of it? Did they succeed by deception in getting it? That is one thing. Or did they get it with the Government officers participating in the knowledge? That is another thing. In either aspect it would be important.

Mr. OATES. If parties not Government officers were guilty of deception in obtaining a suit, we will say for the sake of the argument, wrongfully, why our report of that fact would not be a solution of any question referred to us at all.

Mr. RANNEY. Yes, it would.

Mr. OATES. Not at all, for we have no right to investigate into the affairs of people not connected with the Government. But if we could show that there was such a combination and purpose, and the knowledge of that was carried to, or there were circumstances even sufficient to put the officers of the Department of Justice on the inquiry, and they in that way participated in bringing a suit for that purpose, why, then it is highly material. But I do not think there is evidence even tending to establish that sufficient to admit this sort of evidence, because it would simply show what motives outside parties not connected with the Government may have had.

Mr. EDEN. The ground of objection is this: It does not make any difference, so far as this question is concerned, whether the suit was rightfully or wrongfully brought. If it had been rightfully brought, these parties would have done just what they did do. So that it does not throw any light on these transactions at all. No matter with how much propriety it may have been, either; to us there is no benefit in it. This is the simple action of these parties after the suit was ordered, and I think it does not throw any light on the matter we are investigating at all.

Mr. OATES. It might be argued inferentially that that was the motive, but it occurred after the fact, after the suit was ordered, and I do not think it is competent myself.

Mr. HALE. I think the inference sought to be drawn from that motion is too remote from the testimony in this case. We cannot always see what reasons or motives lawyers have.

Mr. RANNEY. It seems to me that the evidence is not only competent, but highly material. Mr. Oates says we are not investigating anybody except Government officers. I disagree with him in regard to that.

Mr. OATES. What power or authority have we to investigate private citizens?

Mr. RANNEY. If that were true, this committee has spent many weeks in vain.

Mr. OATES. That is the point I make.

Mr. RANNEY. Otherwise on that same assumption we had no right to put in the agreement of August 4, 1885, and no right to put in the agreement of August 27, 1885.

Mr. OATES. Why so?

Mr. RANNEY. Because they related to private individuals.

Mr. OATES. But Government officers and a member of Congress were connected with the writing of that agreement.

Mr. RANNEY. Casey Young was not an officer of the Government.

Mr. OATES. But Senator Harris was, and he signed it.

Mr. RANNEY. It is a matter where the whole Pan-Electric Company was involved. Our authority is to examine into the suits brought and the reason and authority therefor, and all the circumstances and facts connected therewith—a very broad inquiry. Now, there are two branches to this inquiry, as I have already stated. The first part affects these individuals and may be confined to them; it may or not affect Government officers. There is some evidence in this case, from which it may be claimed or argued, by way of inference, that the Attorney-General was aware of the fact because he was a director, and from the statement he gives it may be possibly claimed that he was aware of it. It is material. It affects these parties. The question, I say, is this: Why did these men seek that Government suit? Was it in the interest of the public? If so, the Government would be authorized, in my view of the law, under some circumstances, to grant the application. Or was it in the interest of a few individuals combined together for their own interest, and for their own interest only? What was their motive and object? That is the very thing we have been inquiring about. Their motive and object was to use it, first, in the Baltimore suit. That evidence has already gone in. They did use it for that purpose in Baltimore, it is admitted, and is competent as bearing on that. And hence I say that Mr. Van Benthuyzen's object was to use it in behalf of his company, because the two agreements were joint, embracing both of them. He had a suit pending or threatened, and he immediately uses it for that purpose. It is important as showing his intent.

Suppose the Government should now find that the Acting Attorney-General had been deceived, and that this Government suit was the achievement of a conspiracy, and it should now be disclosed that it had been obtained from him by fraud and deception under a disguised motive by a conspiracy or agreement between the two parties for purposes independent of the public good. Supposing that should appear in this investigation? The question is, if the Government had been defrauded into a Government suit on a false pretense, whether it would not be their duty to stop a suit brought on a false pretense on the same ground that patents are annulled when obtained by fraud. It is to disclose facts based on this, as the evidence now tends to show. It is to disclose, in fact, whether the Government was not induced to grant a Government suit, to give an order for a Government suit, through fraud and for an evil purpose.

Mr. HALE. That only applies to the motives of Mr. Van Benthuyzen.

Mr. RANNEY. It affects the question of whether there was a fraud practiced on the Government.

Mr. HALE. It only affects his motive.

Mr. RANNEY. It affects the purpose.

Mr. HALE. It affects the motive and purpose both.

Mr. EDEN. If it is our duty to ascertain whether this Government suit ought to be dismissed or not because there was fraud practiced on Government officers, we ought to set aside this resolution we have just adopted and go into a further investigation of the subject. We have not got any evidence now from which we have any ground to infer anything of the kind, because it has not been within the line of our investigation.

Mr. RANNEY. We are authorized to inquire into the reason and authority for the bringing of this suit, and all the circumstances and facts. We are not to pass our opinion on what should be done on those facts, and I shall not pass any. But when you disclose all the reasons and facts, if it does appear that that Government suit is the achievement of a conspiracy, obtained under a false pretense for one purpose when it was actually for another purpose, then a state of facts is presented for action, but not for our action.

Mr. EDEN. I am not going to assume anything of the sort in the absence of testimony.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me make a suggestion. As I understand this evidence is offered in the same line that evidence has already been received, that is to say, on the allegation that one of the purposes in obtaining the Government suit was to use it in private suits pending for the purpose of preventing the granting of injunctions. I only want to suggest one fact, and that is, that this suit in which these affidavits were offered, was not pending at the time the Government suit was ordered, and, therefore, it could not have been intended to use the order granting that suit in this particular case.

Mr. RANNEY. Oh, yes. The National Improved Company had been sued through their licensee in Pittsburgh. They would not come in there so as to be bound, and they had reason to apprehend that they would pursue them, and as soon as the hot weather was over they did bring a suit, in September, and it had been brought before the final suit was obtained, before the hearing of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. I have not the date of the bringing of the New Orleans suit.

Mr. RANNEY. It was brought while the second application was pending.

Mr. OATES. The precise question before the committee is simply this: Judge Ranney offers evidence of a motion which was made after the Government suit was ordered, or was begun, at Memphis, on the 9th of September, in the motion that was made in the suit between the Bell Company and the National Improved Company, of New Orleans, based on the fact that this suit had been ordered. Then it is a circumstance which is offered in evidence here transpiring after the act committed by the then head of the Department of Justice of which complaint is made—an act performed by some of the parties who were very active and solicitous in getting that suit ordered. The question now is whether that is competent evidence—whether the subsequent action and conduct of the parties who were acting in that application for that suit ought to be admitted here for any purpose connected with this inquiry, and Judge Ranney cites the case of the Baltimore suit.

Mr. RANNEY. But where a man acts right after it in a certain way it is evidence of what his intentions were.

Mr. OATES. Very good; but the acts which it is attempted to show in this case, and which Judge Ranney says had already been done in the Baltimore suit, are not the acts of any officer connected with the Government, and, unless we may admit that the acts of those persons not connected with the Government were illegal and their purpose was wrong, we may admit that for the sake of argument; I use it to illustrate why we admit it as a fact; yet, unless there is evidence which brings that to a knowledge of or shows a participation in it by officers of the Government, no action of this committee can in anywise affect it, and, therefore, I think it is immaterial.

Mr. RANNEY. If you concede that the Government did not know anything about it, that it was concealed from them; yet it is competent as showing the reason why people sought to get it under the guise of and in the name of citizens.

Mr. OATES. I can see very well how it can be a very potential argument, and may have some effect in the pending suit to show that the Government had been deceived in the bringing of a suit for the annulment of the Bell patent. But I cannot see how it affects—

Mr. RANNEY. You do not see the effect of the written agreement?

Mr. OATES. Oh, I admit that they did enter into a combination, but at the same time, there is, I take it, no knowledge of that character traced to the Department of Justice, that I am aware of, except, as you say, you may argue it from circumstances.

Mr. HANBACK. Let me make this one suggestion. You admit that there was this agreement made there?

Mr. OATES. Of course; that speaks for itself.

Mr. HANBACK. There were officers of the Government connected with it?

Mr. OATES. I know that.

Mr. RANNEY. Senator Harris signed the agreement, and he was a Senator.

Mr. HANBACK. Is it not perfectly competent to show by this testimony, and is it not competent testimony of the actions of copartners in different places? Is it not proper to show what they did do?

Mr. OATES. Suppose a wrong act had been committed for which a civil suit was pending for damages out of the Department of Justice for ordering a suit, could you charge them with damages for one of the effects or consequences? No, sir; not at all by any law in existence, unless a statutory one.

Mr. HANBACK. It may tend to show, may it not, that they had previously formed this combination?

Mr. OATES. No; it does not throw any light on that question; it was a subsequent transaction.

Mr. HANBACK. I know it was.

Mr. OATES. It is a circumstance, but I do not think it throws any light on the question.

The CHAIRMAN. It must be very hard for the stenographer to report this discussion.

Mr. HANBACK. Would it not tend to show, for instance, as between these officers of the Government and Mr. Van Benthuyzen, that they came together and had meeting after meeting in which they agreed that they would do this thing; that they would by a certain process obtain from the Government the privilege of having a suit brought in the name of the Government of the United States, and that as soon as they could get that then they would interpose that fact of the action of the Government of the United States as a bar to all suits brought by the Bell Telephone Company?

Mr. OATES. Do you not assume there too much? I do not think there is any evidence that Mr. Harris or anybody else at that time, being a member of Congress or holding a Government office, met together time and again with Mr. Van Benthuyzen. Mr. Harris was at one of the meetings, and signed that agreement as acting president, but there is no evidence that he was at the Ebbitt House or at any of their consultations. Col. Young was there, but he was not a member of Congress at that time.

Mr. EDEN. If we take this evidence upon the assumption that there was any wrong in it, we must take the position that the Government never should order a suit in a case of that sort, because if it was ordered somebody might take advantage of it to interpose an objection to having an injunction issued. That is one of the necessary consequences that may follow an ordinary suit, and we may just as well stop at once and say that the Government should not order a suit at all.

Mr. RANNEY. It is to show that the object and motive of these moving parties was to get a suit for that purpose.

Mr. HALL. You have already got in evidence the main fact, that they tried to get a suit.

Mr. MILLARD. And that they used it for that purpose.

Mr. OATES. There is this fact running all through it: that their purpose was to fight the Bell Company in every way they could, and beat them in any way they could in the courts.

Mr. RANNEY. This was the last hope they had, and the only one. It should not be forgotten that Mr. Van Benthuyzen was examined on this very question—and it is conflicting testimony, too—without objection.

Mr. HANBACK. My brother Oates says there is no testimony upon this subject of foreknowledge as to what the action of the Department should be. There is, what I conceive to be, testimony, whether it is to weigh for anything.

Mr. OATES. We will discuss that hereafter.

Mr. HALL. The question is whether they resorted to improper means to secure their object; whether any telephone stock was used to corrupt officers; whether members of Congress were approached. It seems futile to me to attempt to prove that these men desired to have the benefits of a suit brought by the Government, because that was the very thing they were trying to get.

Mr. RANNEY. You must take into account the motive.

Mr. HALE. I take the ground that Van Benthuyzen's motive was immaterial.

Mr. RANNEY. Although he was in combination?

Mr. HALE. He was not an officer of the Government, or connected with the Government in any way.

Mr. RANNEY. In the light of the contracts he was in combination.

Mr. HALE. If we should go into the motives of all the men in these various companies, we should have a big job before us. As I understand it, the question is on the admission of the paper.

The CHAIRMAN. That is it, and I am ready to give my opinion about it.

Mr. OATES. Let us have it.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to me that we would have had no right to inquire into the conduct of Mr. Van Benthuyzen or any other private citizen if it had not been alleged and claimed that some testimony has been given to associate or connect him with Government officers. That alone has made the testimony as to the acts of these private people admissible here. We have gone on certainly from the beginning proving the independent acts of Mr. Van Benthuyzen and the other private parties on the allegation that they were not acting alone or for themselves, but they were acting in conjunction with Government officers, and their acts have been proved—not to affect them, but to charge the Government officers on the allegation that they were combined together. It is claimed, also, as I understand it, that one of the purposes in having this Government suit brought was to use it in the private suits then pending to prevent the granting of these preliminary injunctions. That has been claimed, and evidence has been given before the committee that such use was made of it in the Baltimore suit, and it has also been proved that the parties who were instrumental in having the Government suit brought desired it for that purpose. There is some evidence in that direction, that they were anxious to hurry it up; Gen. Johnson has so testified to-day. Here is evidence offered to prove that it was for that purpose. In that view it is competent, it seems to me, and I hold that it is admissible.

Mr. HALE. Is that motion signed by Mr. Van Benthuyzen, or by the attorneys?

The CHAIRMAN. It is a certified copy of a motion made in this proceeding.

Mr. HALE. Is there any name signed to the motion?

The CHAIRMAN. No; it is a motion made by Mr. Beckwith, counsel, who was one of the applicants for the Government suit, if I recollect rightly.

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. He appears here as attorney for the National Improved Telephone Company, Mr. Van Benthuyzen's company. I think the evidence ought to go in, and if there is no further objection it will go in.

The following is the certified copy above referred to:

Circuit court of the United States, eastern district of Louisiana. Continuance of application for injunction pendente lite.

[Extract from the minute book. November term, 1885.]

Court met pursuant to adjournment.

Present, Hon. Don A. Pardee, circuit judge; Hon. Edward C. Billings, district judge.

American Bell Telephone Co. et al. vs. National Improved Telephone Co. et als., No. 11150.

This cause having been called for trial of the application for an injunction pendente lite, the following motion was presented by the defendants:

"On motion of J. R. Beckwith, counsel for National Improved Telephone Company, one of the defendants, and of E. H. Farrar and A. G. Brice, counsel for the Crescent City Telephone Company, one of the defendants, and on suggesting to the court the proceedings on file in this cause had before the Hon. Secretary of the Interior of the United States, the Commissioner of Patents, and two assistant secretaries of the Interior, organized as a commission for the purpose of answering an inquiry propounded by the Solicitor-General of the United States, as to whether the Government should bring an action to annul and recall the telephone patents issued to Alexander Graham Bell, and set up in this cause as the basis of the complainants' demand;

"And on further suggesting to the court the answer of the said commission to the said inquiry on file herein; and on further suggesting that the Department of Justice of the United States is now preparing a bill in equity to be filed for the purpose of annulling and recalling the said patents set up by the complainants;

"And on further suggesting to the court that your honors will not give effect to the said patents of the complainants so attacked as against the patents of the defendants which are not attacked by the Government, and that it is manifestly proper that the motion for an injunction pendente lite should not be heard until the suit so to be brought by the Government is disposed of;

"The said defendants move this honorable court to continue the application for an injunction pendente lite herein indefinitely, with leave to the complainants to renew the same whenever the said Government suit so to be brought is disposed of."

On consideration whereof it was ordered that said motion be cumulated with the application for an injunction pendente lite herein.

The hearing of the application for an injunction pendente lite was then proceeded with. Bayne & Denegre, Thomas J. Semmes, James J. Storrow, and Edward N.

Dickerson for complainants; J. R. Beckwith, Farrar & Kruttschnitt, A. G. Brice, and John M. Bonner for the defendants.

And after hearing evidence and the arguments in part of counsel for complainants, it was ordered that the matter lie over until to-morrow at 11 a. m.

CLERK'S OFFICE.

I certify the foregoing to be a true copy from the original records in this office.

Witness my hand and seal of said court at the city of New Orleans the 19th day of April, 1886.

[SEAL.]

E. R. HUNT, Clerk.

Mr. OATES. I see that Mr. Marean is still here, Mr. Chairman, and I think we ought to dispose of the question connected with him, one way or the other.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, and we ought to dispose of Mr. Hill's question also. Is there any motion in regard to the disposition of Mr. Marean? Mr. Marean is manager of the Western Union Telegraph Co., and he has declined to produce the dispatches called for in the subpoena directed to him.

Mr. HANBACK. Under the rules of his company and directions of his superiors.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; under the rules of the company and the instructions of his superior officers.

Mr. HALE. I move that we take no further steps against Mr. Marean with reference to these telegrams until the subpoena particularly specifies what is wanted.

The CHAIRMAN. It is moved by the gentleman from Missouri that no further proceedings be had under the subpoena duces tecum issued to Mr. Marean, manager of the Western Union Telegraph Co.

Mr. RANNEY. Has the subpoena been made as specific as it can be?

Mr. MILLARD. Can it be made more specific?

Mr. HALE. Oh, yes; you can describe the telegrams. We argued this whole question yesterday.

Mr. MILLARD. How can you be more specific?

Mr. HALE. If you cannot find the testimony, that is your misfortune, I reckon. The question is, whether the subpoena is sufficiently specific to enable them to produce the documents referred to. I have examined the law a little in regard to that subpoena, and I am satisfied that we cannot enforce the production of the papers called for.

Mr. HANBACK (to Mr. Marean). Have you the subpoena?

Mr. MAREAN. Yes, sir. [Handing the subpoena to the chairman.]

The CHAIRMAN. Is the committee ready to act upon the motion? The motion is, that the committee proceed no further with reference to the subpoena directed to Mr. Marean.

Mr. RANNEY. It seems to me that we ought first to get these telegrams.

Mr. HALL. I move this as a substitute: That, in the opinion of the committee, the witness is excused from complying with the subpoena in the manner and form issued.

Mr. HALE. The effect of the motion would be the same, would it not?

Mr. EDEN. I think it ought to be understood that we are all in favor of having the papers if there has been a proper foundation laid by the subpoena issued; that we should endeavor to get the witness to produce the papers.

Mr. HALL. That is the reason I changed the motion.

Mr. HALE. I do not care what form it is put in.

Mr. RANNEY. It seems highly important that we should get the information. So far as Mr. Harris and Mr. Young are concerned they ought to give their written consent that their telegrams should be produced. Before acting upon the motion, I wish to ask Mr. Harris, Mr. Young, and other witnesses we have had here, whether they are willing to give their written consent to the production of these telegrams. Probably they will agree to it. But if they do not, in my judgment, the telegrams are too important not to resort to all the power we have to get them. They are communications between these parties relating to this Government suit, and in any conflict of evidence are very material.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. So far as I am concerned, I have no disposition to conceal any telegram on that subject, and I presume that Senator Harris has no such disposition.

Mr. RANNEY. Then are you willing that they shall be produced?

Mr. YOUNG. Upon this condition: That I be allowed to prosecute this investigation beyond the limits fixed by the resolution of this committee this morning. It would be agreeable to me and, I think, to the gentlemen associated with me, that this investigation should go very much beyond the limit that it has now reached. More than two months this investigation has been continued, and no witness has been summoned by us. If we are allowed to summon witnesses now, to appear by counsel, I will join in an application to all the telegraph companies to produce every telegram I have ever received or ever sent in reference to this matter. I have not the slightest objection to it.

Mr. RANNEY. Will you not do that without coupling your assent with a condition?

Mr. YOUNG. I do not think I ought to do that, for this reason: I have been detained from my business for more than two months by this investigation, and have been subjected to any amount of annoyance—though that is a matter not for the committee to judge; I do not want to be detained here two months longer unless I may be permitted to go into such investigation as I think proper for the vindication of myself and of the gentlemen who are associated with me. I think we have the right to appear by counsel and to summon witnesses who may be examined and cross-examined upon any charges preferred against them.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not care to discuss it. You decline to give your assent except as coupled with a condition?

Mr. YOUNG. No, sir. I want to add that it will take three or four weeks to get all these telegrams, because some were sent from Memphis, some from Saint Louis, some from Hot Springs, and others from New Orleans. I can refer to my book. I see the subpoena calls for dispatches sent by me to officers of the Government, but I never sent a telegram to Mr. Garland or Mr. Goode or any officer of the Government on this subject, unless, perhaps, to Senator Harris, if he can be called an officer of the Government. I never had any correspondence with them, never wrote them a letter, and never sent a telegram on this subject. I will look over this book, and if I can tell the committee where they were sent from I have no objection to doing so. I see that I paid for a good many telegrams that were sent by other parties, because they were sent in the interest of the company, but I cannot tell where they were sent from nor when, except by the dates on the book. On the 1st of September I sent one for Col. Gantt to somebody. The book does not show to whom; and I see on September 28th there is one to Van Benthuyzen; that must have been sent from Hot Springs, because I was there at that time. I see another one for Col. Gantt, but it does not say where it was sent from or to. I presume it was some telegram he sent in the interest of the company to somebody. I do not know to whom; perhaps to Gen. Johnson, of Baltimore, or Mr. Van Benthuyzen, or Mr. Beckwith. Col. Gantt would hand me a little memorandum of expenses incurred for the company, and I would enter it on the book. Here is one dated October 9 that I sent to Senator Harris, I take it, from the fact of being directed to him. That must have been sent from Hot Springs, because I think he was here at that time, and if I had been here I would not have sent him a telegram. I think I know what that is about.

Mr. RANNEY. We do not want your statement with reference to the contents of the telegram; we want the telegrams themselves.

Mr. YOUNG. I was just explaining. I have not the slightest objection to every telegram being produced.

Mr. HALE. I think we had better have a vote on that question.

Mr. HALL. As I understand, the motion before the committee does not involve the question of securing this evidence at all.

Mr. MILLARD. Let me make this suggestion: Here is this company sending these telegrams to different parties; suppose the subpoena should be so framed as to refer to these particular telegrams in the book, and let him take the book.

Mr. OATES. I object to any investigation of that kind until we dispose of the question, and then, if anybody wants to examine Col. Young with reference to procuring definite information upon which to base another subpoena, I have no objection.

Mr. MILLARD. As I understand, the manager raises the point that the subpoena is not sufficiently specified. Here is a book showing the different telegrams sent and received. Let the subpoena cover the telegrams referred to in this book.

Mr. OATES. That is not a part of his subpoena.

Mr. MILLARD. Make it a part.

Mr. OATES. We will have to make another one.

Mr. MILLARD. I understood him to say yesterday that he had them from the 1st of October. I call for the yeas and nays on the question.

The CHAIRMAN (to Mr. Hall). What is your motion?

Mr. HALL. That, in the opinion of the committee, the witness is excused from complying with the subpoena to produce the dispatches in the manner and form in which the subpoena is issued. That is the substance of it.

Mr. RANNEY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HALL. In support of the motion I want to say that it is not in any sense or manner in opposition to the production of the testimony. It is purely a legal question, as I understand it, as to whether the witness should be compelled, under the pains and penalties of refusal to obey the subpoena, to comply with it. I have given the subject some little attention, and my understanding is that the subpoena is not one that any court would enforce.

Mr. HANBACK. Let me say that I do not understand that even the House has any authority in the matter, and I think this committee is powerless. If the witness declines to answer a question the committee cannot help itself. If we had had the power we might have had half a dozen witnesses in jail who have refused to answer questions, but we have accepted their refusals silently right along and with the best grace we could. What is the use of sitting here, wiser than owls, going through the form of considering whether we will present a witness to the House for contempt when we know very well that the House cannot commit him?

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, when Mr. Hill was before us and declined to answer, a motion was made by Mr. Ranney to report him to the House as being in contempt, and pending that motion the committee adjourned, and the motion has never been disposed of yet. I have examined the case of Kilbourn vs. Thompson, and have become satisfied that this committee has no power whatever, nor indeed has the House of Representatives any power, to commit a witness for contempt under such circumstances. The inquiries in that case were concerning executive officers, and the decision of the Supreme Court holds that the legislative department, to which the House of Representatives pertains, cannot exercise any such power as that. In this matter I shall vote for the motion of the gentleman from Iowa, because, in the first place, I do not think that the dispatches are sufficiently described; and, in the second place, if the witness were to refuse to produce them, I do not think we have any power to deal with him.

Mr. MILLARD. If your doctrine be good law, then a Congressional committee cannot pursue any investigation.

Mr. OATES. I just ask you to read that decision of the Supreme Court. That is the doctrine of the Supreme Court.

Mr. EDEN. I am inclined to think that if we had a subpoena that came within the rules of that corporation they would comply with it.

Mr. OATES. It will be remembered that Kilbourn was committed and afterwards sued the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House, with others, and recovered $10,000 damages for false imprisonment.

Mr. HANBACK. He first got a verdict of $100,000, and afterwards $60,000, and finally compromised on $10,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. Hall), and upon this the yeas and nays are called. The clerk will call the names of the members.

The yeas and nays were as follows:

Yeas: Messrs. Boyle, Oates, Eden, Hall, Hale, and Hanback.

Nays: Messrs. Ranney and Millard.

Yeas, six; nays, two.

Mr. EDEN. I wish to state that I voted in the affirmative simply for the reason that I think the subpoena is not in proper form.

The CHAIRMAN. That has been stated.

Mr. RANNEY. That can be remedied.

The CHAIRMAN. I suggest that the subpoena go into the records.

Mr. EDEN. Yes.

The subpoena is as follows:

By authority of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America.

To J. P. LEEDOM, Sergeant-at-Arms, or his Special Messenger:

You are hereby commanded to summon M. Marean, manager W. U. Telegraph Co., to be and appear before the Pan-Electric Select Investigating Committee of the House of Representatives of the United States, of which the Hon. C. E. Boyle is chairman, and produce all dispatches to or from each of the following-named persons to or from each other: Hon. Casey Young, Hon. A. H. Garland, Hon. Isham G. Harris, Gen. Joseph E. Johnson, Wm. McCorry, Wm. Van Benthuse, Col. Geo. Gantt, Bradley T. Johnston, C. Siexias, and Hon. John Goode, between July 8th, 1885, and August 10th, 1885, between August 10th, 1885, and the 15th day of September, 1885, between Sept. 15th, 1885, and the 1st day of January, 1886, and between January 1st, 1886, and the 1st day of May, 1886. Said dispatches sent to or from the following offices: Washington, D. C., Memphis, Tenn., Pittsburgh, Pa., and New York, N. Y. Said dispatches relating to a Government suit or matters concerning the Pan Electric Telephone Co., or its subordinate companies, in their chamber in the city of Washington, on Monday, May 17th, 1886, at the hour of 12 o'clock m., then and there to testify touching matters of inquiry committed to said committee; and he is not to depart without leave of said committee.

Herein fail not, and make return of this summons.

Witness my hand and the seal of the House of Representatives of the United States, at the city of Washington, this 14th day of May, 1886.

[L. S.]

J. G. CARLISLE,
Speaker.

Attest.

JNO. B. CLARK, Jr.,
Clerk.

Mr. MILLARD. I move now, Mr. Chairman, that the chairman be instructed to issue a definite subpoena referring to every dispatch appearing upon the company's cash-book. I think such a subpoena could not be objectionable under the rule of the company.

Mr. OATES. I think that would be putting a hard job upon the chairman.

Mr. MILLARD. It ought to be done.

Mr. OATES. I move to amend that motion by substituting the name of the gentleman from New York (Mr. Millard) for that of the chairman.

Mr. MILLARD. Will you agree to vote that the witness should obey such a subpoena?

Mr. OATES. If he refuses I shall vote that he cannot be compelled, because that is the law. I do not want to vote against the law and give the witness the right of action for damages against the Sergeant-at-Arms.

The CHAIRMAN. In the Kilbourn case the plaintiff sued the committee.

Mr. HALL. You have no right to ask us what our votes shall be until the question comes up.

Mr. RANNEY. I think there is a statute under which such cases can be sent to the grand jury here.

Mr. MILLARD. I withdraw the motion, and now move that the chairman frame such a subpoena as he deems necessary, for the production of the dispatches, and see that it is properly served upon the manager of the Western Union Company.

Mr. OATES. I move as a substitute for that, that the gentleman from New York be named as the one to prepare the subpoena in place of the chairman.

Mr. MILLARD. I have been trying to get the dispatches while you have instructed the manager that he need not produce them.

Mr. OATES. And I say so to the full committee.

Mr. MILLARD. You said outside of the committee room, to the manager of the company, before he had appeared before the committee at all, that under the law he need not produce the dispatches. That is the instruction you gave him.

Mr. OATES. I never instructed him, sir. I told him that, in my opinion, the law would not compel him to do it; and I tell you and everybody else so.

Mr. MILLARD. That is as I understand it.

Mr. OATES. But I never instructed him.

Mr. MILLARD. You stated to him that the law would not compel him to produce them?

Mr. OATES. In my opinion; I say that now.

Mr. EDEN. I understand that there is no objection on the part of the company, if I understood the witness aright, to produce all the telegrams we want, under a proper subpoena. And if Mr. Millard or any other member of the committee will ask for the production of a dispatch that has any bearing upon this investigation, and will ask for such a subpoena coming within the rules of the company or the law, I will vote for it.

Mr. RANNEY. There is a statute, I am sure, to the effect that a man can be punished who does not comply and gets in contempt of the House; he may be reported to the grand jury.

Mr. MILLARD. My motion is within the suggestion.

Mr. HALL. They cannot send a man to jail for a thing that Congress has no right to call upon him to do.

Mr. EDEN. We ought to have some sort of information if there was a subpoena to this company that has some bearing upon this investigation. I do not think we have a right to issue a subpoena to this corporation to produce all the dispatches that ever passed between a lot of gentlemen; but if any member of the committee has any reason to believe that a certain dispatch or any number of dispatches has any bearing upon this question, let the fact be stated and the subpoena issued.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, I will say this—I do not know that it needs any motion, I believe every member of the committee is agreed on that—that if a subpoena be gotten up that describes the dispatches desired, in a legal shape, that subpoena will be issued and served; I take that for granted. I do not believe there is any member of the committee who will vote against that. At the same time, I am not disposed to vote that work on the chairman. If any gentleman desires it, and will undertake to prepare one, I feel satisfied it will be served, and to that I have no objection in the world, and if the witness will obey it and bring in the dispatches having anything to do with this inquiry, I shall not object to receiving them at all. But I state again that if he were to resist, it is my legal opinion that we cannot punish him for contempt.

Mr. MAREAN. Mr. Chairman, may I make a suggestion? I do not think I testified yesterday that I would not obey the subpoena and bring the dispatches. That might have been inferred from the rules. Of course I would not commit myself until a proper subpoena has been served, and then I should follow the instructions of my superiors.

Mr. EDEN. I did not understand that there was any objection on the part of the corporation to produce them.

Mr. MAREAN. There is no objection, and the rule so states.

Mr. HALL. The company is bound to protect itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York (Mr. Millard) moves that the chairman be directed to issue such a subpoena as in his judgment will be within the rule of law, and sufficient to procure the production of these dispatches. The gentleman from Alabama (Mr. Oates) moved an amendment.

Mr. OATES. I moved to substitute the name of the gentleman from New York for that of the chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The chair is disposed to hold that out of order, as that is a duty imposed upon the chair under the statute, and cannot be turned over to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HALL. I move as a substitute that the chairman issue subpoenas for the production of any dispatches which are sufficiently described by any member of the committee to the chairman to justify the issuance of such subpoena.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has heard the substitute offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. OATES. If the chairman gets sufficient information so that he can do it. It is not right to direct him to perform an impossibility.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. Hall).

The substitute was agreed to.

Mr. HALL. Now I offer a motion in regard to Mr. Hill. I believe his case has not been acted upon:

That in view of the character of Mr. Hill's testimony relative to the individual who furnished him the alleged information that Attorney-General Garland attended a meeting with Mr. Young and others at 1327 G street, and the fact that that statement was excepted from the article prepared by him and published in the Tribune and World, and his refusal to disclose the name of his informant, the matter is not of sufficient importance or consideration to justify this committee in insisting further on his answering the question or in reporting to the House his refusal to answer.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has heard the resolution offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HALE (to Mr. Hall). Wont you be kind enough to read that again? I did not get the point.

Mr. Hall read the resolution again.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the resolution just read.

Mr. HALE. It seems to me that that involves a question that we ought to pass upon when we come to make up our report, because it relates to the force and effect of our testimony. It is rather deciding that question in advance.

Mr. OATES. That does not express any important reason. I do not think we have the legal power. I endorse that resolution, but for another reason. I am disposed to let it go entirely, because I do not think we have any power, nor has the House any power, if we report him to the House, to punish him.

Mr. RANNEY. Has not the House the power to turn him over to the grand jury of the District of Columbia to be tried criminally?

Mr. OATES. No, sir; none in the world.

Mr. RANNEY. Have you looked at the statute?

Mr. OATES. I do not care for forty statutes in the face of the decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. EDEN. That question was not before the Supreme Court under the statute.

Mr. OATES. Their opinion was based upon Constitutional grounds.

The CHAIRMAN. I desire to say a word upon this matter. I was not present when Mr. Hill was examined, but I have understood, and understand from this resolution, that the question he refused to answer was this; It seems that he stated, in the article prepared by him, that Mr. Garland had attended a certain meeting at some place in this city; that that article was published, with that part of it or that statement of fact omitted; and that in his examination here Mr. Hill stated that he had no personal knowledge as to Mr. Garland's attending that meeting, but that that had been told him by some other person, and he declined to tell who that other person was. Now, it seems to me that having stated that he had no personal knowledge of Mr. Garland's presence at that meeting, there the matter was at an end, and that when the committee went beyond that and tried to prove what some one had told him as to Mr. Garland's attendance there it went beyond any rule of evidence under the law, and was an attempt to prove a fact by hearsay. Mr. Hill did not pretend to know that the Attorney-General was there, did not allege that, but said that he had been told by some one that the Attorney-General was there.

Mr. HANBACK. Right there, Mr. Chairman, would it not be proper to ascertain who hat party was in order to procure his testimony?

The CHAIRMAN. No; I think not; I have never known it to be done in any court in a matter where I have been concerned, to compel a witness to disclose the name of another witness by whom a competent or relevant fact might be proved. That cannot be done. I think, therefore, that the question to Mr. Hill, while it might have been asked properly, and while such questions have been asked during the course of this investigation, yet, when Mr. Hill had answered, it proved nothing. It did not prove that the Attorney-General was there, and did not prove any fact relevant to this inquiry. If answered, it would merely disclose the name of a witness who, he would allege, could prove the fact. That is not competent testimony. An answer to it cannot be compelled.

Mr. OATES. I do not know that it is very important. In one aspect I think your view is very sound law, but I hold a somewhat different view. In a controversy where the party against whom the evidence is offered might object to it as hearsay, yet suppose that what he had said or published—it was not published in a newspaper it is true, but still, it was published in that letter which he put in circulation—had been defamatory matter, for which Mr. Garland had brought an action, and he being called as a witness and asked that question, it seems to me it would be relevant and pertinent as matter of law in a case of that kind.

The CHAIRMAN. As evidence against Hill?

Mr. OATES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. But we are not sitting here to prove anything against Hill; his conduct is not under investigation.

Mr. OATES. But, Mr. Chairman, any statement by him or other evidence that tends to impeach or contradict him is relevant evidence.

The CHAIRMAN. I agree entirely that if this evidence were sought to be introduced simply to affect Mr. Hill, it would be competent, but where it is sought for the purpose of proving a fact affecting other parties it is not competent.

Mr. HALL. I think the jurisdiction of this committee with reference to that goes farther than ordinary investigations in courts. We have admitted a good deal of evidence that would not have been admitted in courts, and we have admitted it on the ground that we are seeking for information.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa will remember another fact—that this resolution looks to our right to punish Mr. Hill in case he refuses to answer. You must therefore ask him a legal question; you cannot punish him for not answering an illegal question.

Mr. HALL. If some property had been stolen and Mr. Hill were to appear before us and state that he knew where it was but would not tell, I think he could be compelled to tell.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not the case. Suppose Mr. Hill in that case should say, not that he himself knew, but that he knew another man who knew where it was?

Mr. HALL. Still the resolution simply disposes of the case. I do not care anything about the resolution itself. Mr. Hill is here, and the order still stands for him to appear to abide the decision of the committee as to what will be the result of its consideration of his refusal to answer. I am perfectly willing to let it drop as it is.

Mr. OATES. Suppose you withdraw the resolution and move that the committee take no further action.

Mr. HALL. The country has had before it Mr. Hill's testimony, and it stands to-day with an imputation that there is authority somewhere for the alleged fact that Attorney-General Garland attended that meeting, and therefore I thought my resolution a proper one.

Mr. HALE. I understand now that Mr. Hill says, outside, that he has seen his informant, and that his informant tells him he was mistaken.

The CHAIRMAN. He had better swear to it.

Mr. OATES. I move that the matter be postponed until the next meeting of the committee.

Mr. RANNEY. I object to this statement made outside.

Mr. OATES. Give him an opportunity of coming here.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not care for what Hill or anybody else says outside.

Mr. HALL. I withdraw my resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa withdraws his resolution. Is there any other matter to bring before the committee at this time?

Mr. RANNEY. There are some letters of Mr. Goode's and Mr. Harris's.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, I think we have worked long enough to-day. Let them go till another time. I move that we adjourn until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to, and at 4.07 o'clock p. m. the committee adjourned until 12 m. to-morrow, Wednesday, May 19, 1886.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Wednesday, May 19, 1886.

The committee was called to order at 12.40 p. m.

Mr. HALL. Are there any witnesses to examine to-day?

The CHAIRMAN. I know of none.

Mr. RANNEY. Has a subpoena been issued for the clerk of the Ebbitt House?

The CHAIRMAN. No, I believe not. I did not know his name, and I understood you to say yesterday that you would see that he came before the committee.

Mr. OATES. In order to dispose of that question, I move that Judge Ranney and Mr. Hall be deputed to go to the Ebbitt House and examine the registers and other books to ascertain what is necessary.

Mr. RANNEY. I have been to the hotel and examined the books. I know about them.

Mr. OATES. Perhaps two members of the committee had better go there together and examine them and make a report of the result to the committee. That would answer every purpose.

Mr. HALL. I understand it is simply in regard to a few names, to ascertain the date of the registry.

Mr. RANNEY. That is all. The books show when they came and when they left.

Mr. HALL. The books show when they registered.

Mr. RANNEY. Yes, and they show exactly when they left. They keep a book there showing that.

Mr. HALL. The register itself would not show when they left.

Mr. OATES. You could see when they registered and whatever else the books show.

Mr. RANNEY. There are two books there, which show exactly when they arrived, at what time of the day or night, and when they left.

The CHAIRMAN. You have heard the motion of the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. Oates).

Mr. RANNEY. I am willing to consent to that with the understanding that if the subcommittee cannot agree about the facts and what the books show, that we can summon the clerk here and examine him about them.

Mr. OATES (after a consultation with Mr. Ranney). I will change my motion and move that the chair appoint two members of the committee to go to the Ebbitt House for this purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Oates] that a subcommittee of two be appointed to examine the register and other books at the Ebbitt House with a view of ascertaining the time of the arrival and the departure of the several parties named.

Mr. RANNEY. I think we had better summon the witness here and let him bring the books. That is the quickest and easiest way.

Mr. MOFFATT. I think, under the circumstances, we had better have the witness here before the committee.

Mr. MILLARD. Is the witness at the Ebbitt House?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes; he is the clerk there. I do not remember his name.

Mr. OATES. My idea was that we could get through with it easier in that way than any other. I will withdraw the motion if there is any objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, I will send a subpoena for him.

Mr. HALL. I suggest that the subpoena had better be in the form of a note indicating what is desired, as he probably cannot bring with him all the books necessary to furnish the information.

The CHAIRMAN. It is to cover only the period mentioned.

Mr. HALL. I suggest that the subpoena have a memoranda attached to it indicating what is wanted, so that he can examine the books, and get the data without bringing so many books with him.

Mr. RANNEY. I am informed that the name of the clerk in question is C. E. Gibbs.

The CHAIRMAN. I called on the President this morning in regard to the correspondence with Mr. Van Benthuyzen. I believe there was given, yesterday, a dispatch of September 28. That is already in evidence, and I have the original before me. It embraces a dispatch of the day before, September 27, so that we have the two dispatches. I have, also, a letter from Mr. Van Benthuyzen to the President, dated October 10, 1885. I find that it also was published in this volume of proofs in the Baltimore suit. It is not in evidence. Is it the desire of the committee that the letter of October 10, addressed to the President by Mr. Van Benthuyzen, shall go into the record? If there is no objection, it can go in. It is the letter of October 10, 1885. I have the original here. In this book it appears to be taken from the New York Times.

The letter referred to is as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, October 10, 1885.

To his Excellency GROVER CLEVELAND, President of the United States:

DEAR SIR: In accordance with my letter of September 23, 1885, and in view of the circumstances that have occurred since that date, I beg leave to call your attention to the following facts, and have the honor to submit, at the end of this, a few extracts of evidence, showing that Philip Reiss, of Germany, discovered the act of transmitting speech by electricity, and did so transmit speech, and gave his discovery to the world, without conditions and without price, long before A. G. Bell was ever heard of as an inventor. These extracts, and the fact that the "Reiss" instruments transmit and receive articulate speech, clearly and distinctly show conclusively that A. G. Bell did not discover the "art." Philip Reiss made several forms of instruments embracing every principle now in use.

The Bell Telephone company adroitly fixed attention to the poorest forms, and both the Bell company and the defendants in their collusive suits, the decisions in which they claim gave Bell priority of invention, were interested in suppressing and did suppress the facts concerning Philip Reiss and his instruments. So extraordinary have been the conduct of those suits, that in one instance, notwithstanding the fact that the "Reiss" instruments transmit and receive speech clearly, the judge had the unparalleled effrontery to assert that a "a century of Reiss could not have produced a speaking telephone."

In the New York Tribune of Sept. 29th, one E. N. Dickerson, attorney for the Bell company, made the following statement:

"On the 8th of July Mr. Van Benthuyzen's company was enjoined in Pittsburgh, he being present and setting up all the defenses which are in the Memphis bill."

This is a deliberate attempt to deceive the public into the belief that all the evidence in the Memphis case has been considered and passed upon by the Pittsburgh court, and is the same evidence.

This is not true, and the lawyer who would make such a deliberate and gross attempt to deceive should be disbarred and not be permitted to practice in any court. In the Pittsburgh case none of the defendant's evidence was examined or considered, and the conduct of the court was of such an extraordinary character that the defendants withdrew all their evidence from the case, and not one particle of it was considered.

When inventions are brought up and then put in interference by the one owner for the purpose of getting decisions to suit his purposes to destroy competing patents, and judges deny physical facts, and attorneys misrepresent proceedings in court, it is time for the Department of Justice to lend its aid to undo a great wrong; and I respectfully represent that a company that asserts its claims to be impregnable, and yet is clamorous against being made defendants in a suit wherein they know those claims will be thoroughly investigated and properly weighed, is entitled to no consideration.

If suits can be instituted only after consultation with the Department where a wrong or error originated, it is scarcely possible the remedy would be available, as the presumption is, the Department, under such circumstances, would be reluctant to admit error or wrong.

Fortunately, in this case, the present Commissioner of Patents was not in office when the Bell patent was issued.

If this remedy did not exist, and if, upon application of the Bell company, the courts ought to grant preliminary injunctions on the plea of judicial comity, because of decisions in collusive suits, no final hearing could be obtained until the life of a competing patent is so nearly terminated as to be of little or no value.

EXPERIMENTS IN TELEPHONES BY PHILIP REISS.

Affidavit of Dr. I. Hoffman, Consulate of Paris, France.

Dr. Hoffman says he was present at a lecture (by Philip Reiss, in Geisen, Germany, September 18, 1864), on an instrument Reiss named the "telephone," and that "there cannot be the slightest doubt that words were transmitted and successfully reproduced by the apparatus, and this aroused great enthusiasm," the following professors being present: Magnus, Muller, Eisenlohr, Bohn, Weideman, Holtzmann, Weber, Reusch, Greis, and Ottingen.

Jahres-Bericht des Physikalischen Vereins zu Frankfurt am Main für das Rechnungsjahr 1860-'61, published in 1862, pp. 57-64, "on telephony" by means of the galvanic current, by Philip Reiss:

"How, indeed, could a single instrument reproduce the combined effects of all the organs occupied in human speech. * * * Hitherto it has not been possible to reproduce the tones of human speech with a distinctness sufficient for every one. The consonants are for the most part reproduced pretty distinctly, but the vowels as yet not in equal degree."

Journal of the German-Austrian Telegraph Association, vol. 9, pp. 1, 35, 36, 1882:

"The operation of the apparatus is as follows: 'By speaking into it, or by singing, or introducing the tones of an instrument, chords and melodies were transmitted with marvelous accuracy in the practical experiments hitherto made, while single words in reading, speaking, etc., were less distinctly recognizable, although even in these the inflection of the voice, as interrogation, exclamation, surprise, calling, etc., were clearly reproduced.'"

Reiss prospectus form, Pisko's Neue Apparate der Akustik, Wien, 1865, p. 241:

"Besides the human voice there can be produced, according to my experience, just as well the tones of good organ pipes." And in speaking of the magnetic call attached to the Reiss instrument, Pisko says:

"Simple signals can, by agreement at both stations, be given by opening and closing the circuit one, two, three, or four times. For example: One stroke, sing; two strokes, speak."

Dingler's Polytechnic Journal, vol. 169, p. 399, 1863:

"The experimenters could even reproduce words."

Translation from Didaskalia, May 12, 1863: "Mr. Reiss gave an historical outline of the origin and development of his idea of the practical possibility of the transmission of tones in a galvanic way."

Deutsche Industrie-Zeitung, 1863; Chemnitz, No. 9, April 17, 1862, No. 16, p. 85 and p. 184:

"Mr. Q. writes us that by means of the telegraphic conductor, with which the apparatus of Mr. Philip Reiss was connected, two remote parts of the city were united.

"All present capable of judging," Mr. Q. adds, "who availed themselves of the opportunity of witnessing the experiments, agreed that the possibility is before us of making oneself understood verbally at any distance in the way shown by Mr. Reiss."

Handbuch der Angewandten Elektrizitätslehre, von Karl Kuhn, 1865, pp. 1017, 1021; pp. 97, 98:

"The working of the two apparatus—the transmitter being placed at one station and the receiver at the other—is as follows: By speaking or singing * * * in the practical experiments made thus far it was possible to transmit, with astonishing faithfulness, chords, airs, &c.; while reading, speaking, &c., single words were more indistinctly heard."

Herr Philip Schmidt, brother-in-law of Philip Reiss, and now acting paymaster in the Imperial German Navy at Wilhelmshaven, says:

"He (Reiss) succeeded finally in reproducing at a distance words and whole sentences."

Heinrich Hold says:

"I helped Mr. Reiss to make many of his experiments, and have spoken and sung into the telephone, the same being generally heard and understood."

Das Neue Buch der Erfindungen, vol. 2, p. 400, published by Otto Spamer, in 1872, Leipzig and Berlin, speaking of Reiss's discovery, says:

"It sounds more than fantastic if it is stated that it is possible to converse through the electric telegraph wire to hundreds of miles with a distant person, so that this one should say that his bodily ear perceived our voice with all its peculiarities; that he shall hear the melody which we sing; that if we laugh, he shall feel as if he stood beside us; and yet this possibility has already become an actuality."

Philip Reiss was a professor in a German institute—a consumptive, struggling with poverty and death, and so very poor as to be unable to place his discovery before the world for commercial purposes, to his financial advantage.

This keen appreciation of his gratuitous services to the world, and its want of appreciation of his labor, is very vividly portrayed in the closing paragraph of his autobiography, as follows:

"As I look back upon my life, I can indeed say with the Holy Scriptures that it has been labor and sorrow. But I have also to thank the Lord that he has given me His blessings in my calling and in my family, and has bestowed more good upon me than I have known how to ask him. The Lord has helped hitherto; He will help yet further."

And at this day the drawings and specifications of those instruments, as left by Reiss, are so clearly described in form and measurement, particularly this cone transmitter and electro-magnet receiver, that these instruments, when made now without the slightest change from his directions, transmit and receive articulate speech clearly and distinctly, and they are in every principle the successful telephones of this day.

Very respectfully,

W. VAN BENTHUYSEN.

The CHAIRMAN. Then there is a dispatch from Mr. Van Benthuyesen to the President dated February 13, 1886.

Mr. HALL. That is not set out in that Baltimore record?

The CHAIRMAN. No. It is dated at New Orleans, February 13, 1886.

Mr. RANNEY. Let me see that, if you please. Was it not put in yesterday?

The CHAIRMAN. No, it was printed subsequent to the printing of that volume. It reads as follows:

To his Excellency GROVER CLEVELAND:

A detailed statement from me to you of the origin and circumstances attending the origin and subsequent application to the Department of Justice by me to institute a suit to vacate the Bell telephone patent on the ground of fraud and prior invention will, I think, stop the slanderous attacks on General Garland, and at the same time will show how Mr. Garland made a mistake in believing that the application was made in behalf of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company. No one connected with the Pan-Electric Company had any connection with my application, nor did any Pan-Electric stockholder sign the second petition, and all statements to the contrary are untrue. If you desire I shall make this statement, I can have it ready to mail Monday evening. Please answer me at my expense.

W. VAN BENTHUYSEN.

The CHAIRMAN. In reply to that the following was sent:

WASHINGTON, February 14, 1886.

To WILLIAM VAN BENTHUYSEN,
New Orleans, La. :

The President has no desire to express concerning the matter mentioned in your telegram.

D. S. LAMONT,
Private Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN. I am authorized by the President and by Colonel Lamont to say that that is the entire correspondence, and that no reply whatever was made to the preceding dispatches or to the letter.

Mr. OATES. It is very brief.

The CHAIRMAN. On the one side it is.

Mr. RANNEY. And contains quite a remarkable statement on one side, too—I mean from Mr. Van Benthuyesen.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any other matter before the committee?

Mr. EDEN. I suppose that all the proofs used in the Interior Department ought to be put in.

The CHAIRMAN. Not all of them, because they fill a large volume—two volumes, in fact.

Mr. EDEN. I supposed that was the arguments.

The CHAIRMAN. No, there are no arguments in it; it is all proofs.

Mr. EDEN. Then there ought to be some selection made. I have not examined them myself.

The CHAIRMAN. A great many of the papers have been produced and marked, but I do not think all of them have gone into the record—indeed, I do not know what is in the record; I have not kept up with it.

Mr. EDEN. Some one had better look that matter up and have it attended to.

The CHAIRMAN. It would be well to have an adjournment for a day or two, so that the members of the committee might inspect the record and see what documents have been put in.

Mr. OATES. I do not see what good it would be, in my own case, unless I had the record of the proceedings before the Interior Department to compare with. I have not got that.

Mr. RANNEY. I understood that the Bell Telephone Company had sent each member a copy.

The CHAIRMAN. That was but one volume of it.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. I handed two or three copies in to members of the committee. This is the only copy I have left.

Mr. RANNEY. What is that?

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. It is the record before the Interior Department, the first volume, which contains the petition, proofs, &c.

Mr. RANNEY. It is the proofs and reply.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. I handed in two or three copies of it to the different members of the committee, and this is the only one I have left.

Mr. RANNEY. During the early part of the session somebody furnished members of the committee with the first volume. I had one and several members had one.

The CHAIRMAN. It would take some time to look over the record and this volume.

Mr. EDEN. Are there any witnesses to be recalled? That was a matter we left open.

Mr. RANNEY. There are two witnesses whose examination has not been concluded. I mean the Rogerses.

Mr. EDEN. I supposed we were through with them.

Mr. RANNEY. No; it was distinctly stated that they would be called again; and, as I have said several times, in regard to these letters which we have here produced, which have been printed, there are quite a number of them which I desire to put in.

Mr. EDEN. That does not involve the question of the calling of witnesses?

Mr. RANNEY. Not necessarily, although Senator Harris indicated a desire to be present when the letters from him were put in.

Mr. EDEN. Then I suppose it would be proper to let him know.

The CHAIRMAN. They had better be put in now, and then the witnesses can have an opportunity of seeing them.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. I do not know exactly the limit of the resolution passed yesterday by the committee, or how far it would allow any additional proof. Under one clause of the resolution of inquiry referred by the House to the committee, I did desire to present what I consider very important testimony in reference to the reason for instituting the Government suit. Little or no testimony has been submitted on that subject, and I have in my possession—it has been furnished me—what I consider very important evidence. The committee can determine whether it is competent or not.

The CHAIRMAN. You may submit it if it is within the terms of the resolution.

Mr. EDEN. Is it documentary evidence?

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. Yes, it is documentary evidence, and witnesses can be called if desired. I have it in the shape of a sworn statement. I have not got it here with me. If you have a meeting to-morrow perhaps it would be better for me to get it all together. I do not happen to have it all here this morning. I speak now in order that I may not lose the opportunity of presenting it.

Mr. MOFFATT. Is it anything which was presented to the officers of the Government at the time of the ordering of the suit?

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. Yes, it embraces facts that were presented at that time.

Mr. MOFFATT. Of course the authority and reason for instituting the suit, if the suit was already commenced, could not be well founded if it was not submitted to the Department.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. This was submitted to the Department.

Mr. RANNEY. We have gone into everything concerning the first suit, and so far as the second suit is concerned it appears in the record in part, and we cannot go outside of that.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. If the committee will permit me I will remark that the record abounds with evidence that was not even referred to in the record before the Interior Department as to the reason for bringing this suit. More than a dozen witnesses were interrogated, somewhat in detail, as to why it was necessary to commence a suit of that sort when, as it was maintained, all the questions then presented could have been litigated in a private suit. I could show quite a number of witnesses on that point.

Mr. HANBACK. In regard to the testimony up there? Was it by affidavit?

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. No, I speak of witnesses who have been introduced here who testified as to the reason for bringing the suit.

Mr. HANBACK. I thought you referred to testimony introduced there.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. Oh, no.

Mr. EDEN. I do not think witnesses were interrogated as to the reason for bringing the suit.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. Yes, I was interrogated on that point, and so was Mr. Goode, Mr. Garland, and others.

The CHAIRMAN. If it states facts about the bringing of the suit it could be introduced.

Mr. EDEN. I think anything used before the Interior Department would certainly be proper to come before the committee.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. Neither my testimony or that of General Bradley Johnson or Mr. Goode was taken before the Interior Department, and we have all been examined on the very same point. I can submit it to the committee, and they can determine whether it is competent or not.

Mr. RANNEY. That raises the question whether we are going in to try the question presented before the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. No, it does not go outside of the limit of this inquiry so far as it has gone.

Mr. RANNEY. If we are going to revise that hearing and go into all the evidence before them, and see whether the Secretary of the Interior formed a correct judgment in regard to it or not, it is an important question for the committee to determine.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. If they had been accepted as conclusive reasons for it, there would have been no necessity for investigation. It was all in a public record before this resolution was passed by Congress, and Congress knew it as well before as after the creation of this committee.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Ranney has been insisting all along that there were a great many reasons outside of the record operating upon the officials.

Mr. RANNEY. I am not aware that I have gone outside of the record before the Interior Department, except to show that there was a fraud practiced upon them.

Mr. EDEN. I think if Colonel Young has any evidence that he wants to offer, documentary evidence, he should submit it and then we can determine what to do with it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question can be determined only when the evidence is offered.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. I only wanted to inquire if the committee were going to have a session to-morrow. I have not all the papers with me.

Mr. EDEN. Can you submit them to-morrow?

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. Yes.

Mr. EDEN. I think we had better have a meeting to-morrow.

Mr. OATES. Yes, if any witnesses are to be recalled.

The CHAIRMAN. I know of none personally. If any gentleman knows of any he can give their names.

Mr. EDEN. I understood that Mr. Ranney wanted to recall somebody.

Mr. RANNEY. There are only one or two questions I desire to put.

Mr. EDEN. I did not know, of course, how many. It can be done as well now as at any other time. One of them was here yesterday.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. I noticed in the papers this morning that a deposition in this matter had been taken in New Orleans. I never heard of it until I saw it in the papers, and I do not know what it is.

Mr. EDEN. It is the deposition of Mr. Beckwith, I think.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. I have never seen it, but Mr. Beckwith will be here in a day or two, and it might be proper for him to explain.

Mr. EDEN. If it is necessary for him to make any explanation about it, the resolution the committee adopted yesterday does not prevent that.

Mr. RANNEY. It is his own deposition, giving in detail—

The CHAIRMAN. It has not been presented to the committee yet.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. I saw by the paper this morning that it was read to the committee. I would like to look at it.

Mr. RANNEY. I thought it was in the record.

Mr. OATES. That was spoken of or suggested, but it was not put in.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. I was told also by the committee after the close of my testimony that I could look over it and correct any mistakes or inaccuracies that have occurred. I would like to do that sometime. I thought it would be well to note them on a piece of paper, and to mark the passages.

Mr. EDEN. When could you do that?

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. To-morrow. I have not the paper here.

Mr. OATES. Have you not corrected any of them?

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. I have marked the places on the book. They are mere verbal corrections; they don't amount to anything.

Mr. OATES. I think that portion of the testimony is already stereotyped.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. There are some things there which the committee will see at once are mistakes or omissions. In one place it says thirty-nine millions where it ought to be one million, and you will see at once that that is a mistake.

The CHAIRMAN. You say you are not ready now to make your offer of testimony?

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. No; I have not got it all with me; it is at my room.

Mr. OATES. Is there anything else that you want to testify about that you are ready to go on with now?

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Can you not make your corrections now?

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. I have a number of them noted on a piece of paper I have, and perhaps I had better read them from the piece of paper rather than to go through this record.

The CHAIRMAN. Can you do it now?

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. No; I cannot.

The CHAIRMAN. To-morrow you will be ready to do so?

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. Yes; I will be ready to-morrow.

The CHAIRMAN. I have the opinions delivered by the two assistants to the Secretary of the Interior, and also that of the Commissioner of Patents, Mr. Montgomery, and I offer them. They were furnished to me by Mr. Montgomery. I called on him this morning to get authentic, reliable copies.

Mr. RANNEY. Are they the opinions as they were finally left?

The CHAIRMAN. They were so sent to me by the Commissioner of Patents, and I presume they are correct; at least, I should not imagine that they had been altered or changed.

Mr. RANNEY. I did not mean exactly what you seem to imply, that there has been anything altered; I did not mean that anybody has tampered with them. [After examining the opinions.] I should like to have the parties come and verify these.

The CHAIRMAN. I will offer the opinions delivered to the Secretary of the Interior by his assistants and by the Commissioner of Patents under the application for the Government suits.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not object to their going in when they are verified. I am not certain that these are the opinions (if I was I would not insist on it) as they were actually left and acted upon by the Secretary of the Interior.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any reason to doubt their correctness or authenticity?

Mr. RANNEY. Suppose it be true that they first wrote an opinion and then afterwards, as finally delivered and used, there were others written? I want those that were finally used.

The CHAIRMAN. These are furnished to me by the Commissioner of Patents as the opinions delivered in the case, and of course they are the final opinions.

Mr. OATES. They would hardly be printed unless they were.

Mr. RANNEY. Well, I would like the fact about it.

Mr. HALL. Do you refer to the printed opinion of Mr. Jenks?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, and the opinion of Mr. Muldrow.

Mr. HALL. They were produced and identified before the committee by the witness.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, and by Mr. Goode.

Mr. RANNEY. The opinion of the Secretary of the Interior is already in the case.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. Is there any objection to these going in? If not, they can go in.

Mr. RANNEY. I shall object until they are verified. I think the ones sent to the Department of Justice should be the ones to go in.

The CHAIRMAN. The original papers?

Mr. RANNEY. Oh, no; certified ones from the Department of Justice.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is any question as to their correctness or genuineness I should like to know it.

Mr. RANNEY. I have reasons which I do not want to state, because they might be erroneous. But the final ones that went to the Department of Justice I do not object to.

The CHAIRMAN. The only way to get them would be to have certified copies made.

Mr. RANNEY. Those I would be content with, if they are certified to.

The CHAIRMAN. I will send these opinions to the Department of Justice to see whether they correspond with those on file. I was about to suggest that perhaps the opinions delivered to the Secretary of the Interior were not sent to the Department.

Mr. RANNEY (after a consultation with the chairman). I have explained to the chairman my reasons, and I think he will recognize the propriety of examining the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The opinion of Mr. Montgomery comes directly from him with an indorsement on it. I have sent a subpoena for the clerk of the Ebbitt House to come before the committee to-day with his books.

Mr. RANNEY (searching among some papers). There is a letter of Mr. Garland's of September 20, 1883.

Mr. OATES. To whom?

Mr. RANNEY. To Dr. Rogers, I suppose. It was produced among the Rogers letters.

Mr. OATES. It was not produced among the Rogers correspondence, for every one of those from Mr. Garland was returned by the subcommittee. [Referring to printed list.] There is one of Mr. Garland to Dr. Rogers of October 4.

Mr. RANNEY. Don't you find this one there of September 20?

Mr. OATES. No.

Mr. RANNEY. There is a letter from Colonel Looney of September 19, 1885, letter No. 8, referred to on page 2 of the printed document.

Mr. OATES. You had better read it.

Mr. RANNEY. This is the letter.

[Office of Looney & Looney, attorneys-at-law, Masonic Temple.]

MEMPHIS, TENN., September 19, 1885.

MY DEAR FRIEND: Your letter received. I am making a desperate effort to sell some stock, but have failed up to this moment, but will still continue my efforts. The last bill filed against the Bell Telephone Company with the approval and consent of the Department of Justice will certainly wake up and startle the Bell people. It is a regular cyclone. The bill is simply carrying out a suggestion of yours made some time ago, and I think it will succeed, but too late, I fear, to do us much good. Young is sick at Hot Springs. He has made a mistake of nearly $100,000 of my stock. The last $50,000 sold to Thompson is all charged to me, as well as the Nutz stock. We will make him fix it up when we meet him in Washington. I would like very much to see you and have a long talk. I have announced myself a candidate for governor, and believe I will make the trip. Of course, these things are uncertain, but I will make the best fight I can for the nomination, and hope to win. Remember me to all your family.

Your friend,

R. F. LOONEY.

Dr. J. W. ROGERS.

Mr. EDEN. That is directed to Dr. J. W. Rogers, is it not?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes; from Colonel Looney.

Mr. OATES. For what purpose do you offer that? Wherein is it relevant to the issue or to any of the issues before us?

Mr. RANNEY. It is a part of the correspondence between Colonel Looney and Dr. Rogers in this affair.

Mr. OATES. A good deal of the correspondence between Col. Looney and Dr. Rogers has nothing to do with the matter.

Mr. RANNEY. It is the same class of evidence we have been putting in. He was one of the promoters of this Pan-Electric company.

Mr. OATES. That is all true, but how can it throw any light on the matters we are investigating?

Mr. RANNEY. I think it does; it relates to it.

Mr. OATES. How so?

Mr. EDEN. It has nothing to do with the bringing of the Government suit, and nothing to do with the organization of the company.

Mr. OATES. And neither one of those men was in Government office.

Mr. RANNEY. It is a part of the Pan-Electric scheme which has been under investigation all through here, and the same class of evidence has been put in.

Mr. EDEN. That seems to have been a part of Colonel Looney's scheme.

Mr. RANNEY. He was acting in concert with the rest, and was one of the promoters.

Mr. EDEN. He was one of the promoters, but not in selling the stock.

Mr. RANNEY. Yes; in the sale of the rights.

Mr. EDEN. He never sold any of the stock of the company.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not want to discuss it.

Mr. EDEN. I do not want to discuss it, either, but I do not want it to go on the record unless it has some bearing on the matter we are investigating.

Mr. RANNEY. I prefer to have the chairman here if we are going to act upon it.

The CHAIRMAN (resuming his seat at the table). What is the question?

Mr. RANNEY. I am putting in the correspondence here of Colonel Looney with Dr. J. W. Rogers.

Mr. OATES. And Mr. Eden raised an objection.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the objection?

Mr. OATES. The objection is it has nothing to do with the investigation, and it is unnecessary to encumber the record with it. Colonel Looney and Dr. Rogers had a right to write to each other just what they pleased and anything they wanted to about their private matters. It was their interest.

Mr. RANNEY. It is not a private matter. Colonel Looney and Dr. Rogers were the men attending to this business of selling State rights and putting this thing on the market. It is the official correspondence between those men, who were the active agents and promoters of this enterprise, acting in concert with the company and for the company.

Mr. OATES. Does that show any sales of territorial rights, or tend to show it, even? I think we have got testimony on that point as to all the sales that were made by members of the company.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not want to discuss the weight of the testimony now.

The CHAIRMAN. I think it is of the same character as the testimony which has been given.

Mr. RANNEY. I believe the stenographer took it down as I read it, so that it is already in the record. On page 17 of the printed collection of letters, those reported by the sub-committee as material, there is a letter, No. 248, which I desire to have put in the record. There is also a letter of a previous date, No. 246, on page 16. Letter No. 251 is already in, I believe. I desire to have the letters numbered 246, 247, and 248, all from Colonel R. F. Looney, put into the record at this time, also letter number 250. I think those are all of Colonel Looney's letters that I care to have go in. I will not trouble the committee with any more of them.

Mr. OATES. I object to all of them for the same reason and on the same ground as stated before. Letter No. 247 is not addressed to anybody.

Mr. RANNEY. It relates to the business of the company and speaks for itself—that is No. 248 does. The two next are personal letters; I do not care anything about them.

Mr. EDEN. One has no date to it and is not addressed to anybody.

Mr. RANNEY. Which one is that?

Mr. EDEN. No 247.

The CHAIRMAN. Was Colonel Looney one of the directors of the company?

Mr. RANNEY. He was the man who had charge of all the business in the South in the selling of State rights, and who was given about $800,000 worth of the stock.

The CHAIRMAN. That was given to him by Dr. Rogers; he held his stock under Dr. Rogers. But it seems that he was recognized afterwards and made a director of the company. I would like to hear about that. [To Colonel Young.] Was not Colonel Looney a director of the Pan-Electric Company a part of the time?

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. I believe so; I am not quite sure about it.

Mr. MOFFATT. Yes; I think he was.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. I am not sure about it, but can tell by the book.

The letters put in evidence by Mr. Ranney are as follows:

No. 246.

R. F. Looney to Dear Friend.

OFFICE OF LOONEY & LOONEY,
ATTORNEYS AT LAW, MASONIC TEMPLE,
Memphis, Tenn., June 26, 1884.

MY DEAR FRIEND: Your flaming advertisement appeared in the Appeal this morning. It really has started things up considerably, and I will feel the pulse on the subject at once, and will advise you if there is any chance to sell. I will leave for Chicago on Thursday, the 3d of July; wish I could meet you there. We could sell stock, I think. Before I leave I must make some arrangement about the $2,100-note, which will fall due before I return, as I expect to go to Washington and to Philadelphia to see you. * * * is indorsed as you know and holds the mining stock as collateral. The mining stock is worth a great deal more than the note, but at this time of depression I do not believe it will bring more than the debt. They have notified me, both the bank and the indorser, that it will not be renewed. Write me by return mail what to do about it.

Did you sell to Peyton and Dunn the Pan-Electric stock? I hear good news all around about the telephone. I hear Boyle is moving rapidly towards success. We will come up all right very soon with Georgia, Tennessee, and Alabama, Arkansas, and Louisiana. Answer my last letter at * * * Pennsylvania. What are the New York "fellows" doing? Remember me very kindly to Harry and all the family. I would like to meet you and Harry at Chicago.

Very truly, your friend,

R. F. LOONEY.

Tell Jim I expect him at Chicago.

No. 247.

R. F. Looney. (No address; no date.)

* * * on the 28th of this month. What shall I do with it? I think I can renew it, but can't tell. Advise me at once what you wish done. I am making an effort to raise you some money, and will telegraph you if I succeed. It is hard to get money now since the New York panic, but it is moving off. The banks had a "big scare."

I had a telegram last night from James. The boys will send the money to Washington to-morrow; that is, the $10,000. I will in a few days, I think, sell Tennessee and Georgia. I have not heard from Saint Louis. I suppose everything is all right there or I would have heard. Will telegraph you if I succeed in raising the money. Keep me posted. Have had nothing from Washington since I left except by telegraph. Remember me kindly to Harry and all the family.

Very truly, your friend,

R. F. LOONEY.

No. 248.

R. F. Looney to Dear Friend.

MEMPHIS, TENN., October 21, 1884.

MY DEAR FRIEND: I am in receipt of your letter this morning in answer to mine written from New Orleans. It does not matter as to the request I made in regard to trading stock for a debt of mine. I could not make it. I felt the pulse and it would not go; in fact, money matters are so tight here that nothing can be done worth doing. But I thought and expected you would not hesitate to grant my request, but it is all right. I have done more than any one else would or could have done towards reaching money out of the telephone, and in one case, in offset to the Thompson matter, to which you refer, I gave you and Harry all the money raised by sale of stock, when one-half was mine, and when I needed it badly. In fact, I have made trades and raised the money when no one else could. Whatever the telephone is to-day, and whatever money you have received, and whatever local stock, and whatever prospects we have, the company is indebted largely to my humble self. My time and money have been given almost exclusively to the business without compensation or charge by me. Every dollar that has come into the treasury of the company has been through men whose services I enlisted.

I recite these facts as an excuse for the request I made you in my letter from New Orleans. However, I am willing (perfectly so) to abide our contract in the future, and do in the future as I have in the past. But I cannot in the future, as I have in the past, give all my time and pay all my expenses in the service of the company, but I will go on and sell stock to the best advantage as per agreement. Our local company here is complaining greatly about the advertisements in our local papers of the Penn Company. I do not think they hurt, but they do no good, and I wish you would order them out. It would please them here if you would do so.

Well, my old friend, read this below, and read it "slow." I have this morning closed the following trade. I sold to Dr. Samuel Watson 40,000 of Pan-Electric Tel. stock, as follows: 100,000 of San Francisco mining stock, in Mexico, and $2,500 in notes due the 22d of December, with interest. The notes are gilt-edged, and indorsed by Samuel Watson, who is as good as gold, and I expect to have the money and send your part by the time this reaches you. The mining stock I do not regard as valuable if the mine is a good one, but no money to start it. I would have traded without it on your telegram or without your telegram. It is over $6 per share, and I could not have sold it at all without taking the stock. As soon as I finish this letter I will go out and hunt the money for the notes. The paper is first-class, and there is no doubt about the money. "Genius," "genius," "genius!" you say. I say, "luck," "luck," "luck!"

It is important that the New Orleans company should be satisfied that no sale of improvements or inventions was made to Ewing.

I have only one-quarter of the Avalanche, and will sell that, I think. We have a lawsuit about the other half, but if I had the Avalanche you could come in. Will talk it all over with you when we meet. Remember me to Harry. I hope he will be well when you receive this. Kind regards to all your family.

Your friend,

R. F. LOONEY.

Move into the city quick.

No. 250.

R. F. Looney to Dear Friend.

MEMPHIS, TENN., May 15, 1885.

MY DEAR FRIEND: Your short note received, and I was very glad to hear from you. I was also glad the "Arkansas traveller" had not wronged me. I have not had a line from "Casey" since I left Washington, except a word inclosing my stock, in which he is short $50,000 or more. But I fear under the present management it is worthless; hope not. Have you seen Alexander or General Armstrong lately? Write me all about prospects and millions. I have withdrawn my son's application for any office, and feel ashamed that I ever permitted him to apply for any position. I find that it is easier to help others than to have them help you. I have spent my life serving other people, but have generally found them so entangled that they could not help me. But it is all right. I want nothing "unless it comes from the people; A. Johnson."

You will understand this, but say nothing. I can take care of myself.

Remember me to all of the family, and tell Harry I want to hear from him.

Your friend,

R. F. LOONEY.

Mr. OATES. I would like to know what that last letter has to do with this investigation.

Mr. RANNEY. The first part relates to the business of the company. You can strike out the last part of it if you want to.

Mr. OATES. You might find something in almost everything relating to the whole human family. I do not see how it could be considered competent evidence for any purpose.

Mr. RANNEY. It says, "I have not had a line from 'Casey' since I left Washington, except a word inclosing my stock, in which he is short $50,000 or more. But I fear under the present management it is worthless; hope not."

Mr. OATES. We are not authorized to inquire whether Casey was short $50,000 of stock or not.

Mr. HANBACK. That relates to the business of the company.

Mr. OATES. Yes, in a certain sense, but it does not prove anything.

The CHAIRMAN. It is a question whether it is material, perhaps. I think we generally ought to adhere to what I before stated, that the correspondence of Colonel Looney with members of the association, or declarations of his to outside parties, would be competent in view of all the testimony offered here.

Mr. EDEN. These letters are not addressed to anybody; we do not know to whom they are addressed.

The CHAIRMAN. Colonel Looney's connection with the company was very intimate. If I am correct in my recollection, he was a director.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. He was a director, as I see from this book.

The CHAIRMAN. He was? They would be competent, then, if they are material.

Mr. EDEN. That is the point. I say they are not material.

Mr. OATES. It is not everything that a man may admit or say concerning the matter you are inquiring about, but is it an admission or statement that is important or throws light on the question that you are inquiring about? That is the point. I do not see anything in all this that throws any light upon it at all.

Mr. RANNEY. They are a part of the transactions connected with this company which we are investigating. We are not trying specific charges or introducing evidence on specific issues.

Mr. OATES. We have no right to investigate anything except that which we are directed to investigate. I know it is in the line of a great deal that you have offered already and that I have objected to frequently, and there is much in this record that I think is utter trash and not good evidence for any purpose and ought never to have gone in.

Mr. RANNEY. With all respect to you, I do not think you are so familiar with it as you ought to be.

Mr. OATES. I have not made it my study all the time as you have, that is true. But I am familiar enough with it to know something about what is evidence.

Mr. RANNEY. I think it is within the scope of the inquiry and in the line of evidence that has been put in.

Mr. OATES. The latter part of the proposition I will admit, but not the former.

The CHAIRMAN. I think the evidence is competent. As to weight or materiality, we have not drawn the line very closely.

Mr. EDEN. I make another point in regard to these letters. They are not addressed to anybody, and it is not shown that Colonel Looney ever wrote them all, and I want that to appear in the record.

Mr. RANNEY. The original letters are all here, and have been examined by a committee, and these have been selected and taken out as a material, and reported as such.

Mr. OATES. They were reported as possibly material.

Mr. RANNEY. The original letters are here.

Mr. EDEN. The committee did not report these letters as evidence.

Mr. RANNEY. They are reported among the material letters by a subcommittee.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is any question as to their genuineness they ought to be proved.

Mr. EDEN. I do not know whether they are genuine or not. They are not addressed to anybody.

Mr. HANBACK. Those are the letters we examined.

Mr. OATES. I do not think it makes any difference whether they were written by Colonel Looney or not.

Mr. HANBACK. I do not think there is any question about their genuineness.

Mr. OATES. Well, it is just the same whether they are genuine or not; they do not prove anything. My objection is to their irrelevancy and because they will incumber the record.

The CHAIRMAN. I am informed that we cannot get the clerk from the Ebbitt House to-day. He is not at the hotel, and will not be back until 4 o'clock.

Mr. RANNEY. There are some letters from Senator Harris that I desire to introduce at this time, and the first one is dated January 17, 1884, and is addressed to the Hon. A. S. Hewitt. It reads as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE CHAMBER,
Washington, January 17, 1884.

MY DEAR SIR: Allow me to introduce to you my friend, Dr. J. W. Rogers, and his son, Mr. J. Harris Rogers, who wish to confer with you about a public matter, of which they will explain to you. They were formerly citizens of Memphis, Tenn., but for several years past have been citizens of the city of New York. They are gentlemen of talent and thorough culture. You may and probably will remember the son as the former electrician of the House. I hope that you may find it convenient to grant them an interview.

Yours, respectfully,

ISHAM G. HARRIS.

Hon. A. S. HEWITT.

Mr. EDEN. On what page is that?

Mr. RANNEY. I have read it from the letters published in the World. It was reported by the subcommittee as immaterial. It is No. 53. There cannot be any objection to that. I also find a letter from Senator Harris dated January 12, 1884:

MY DEAR DOCTOR: In answer to yours of the 10th inst., I have to say that I have received and read the poem, and that it requires no bribe to secure its reading. It will be read with interest by all into whose hands it will fall.

Very truly, your friend,

ISHAM G. HARRIS.

Mr. EDEN. I do not object to that. I think it shows the merits of the poetry. I think it should be in the record.

Mr. HANBACK. The poem ought to be put in, too.

Mr. RANNEY. I am very glad there is something Mr. Eden agrees to.

Mr. EDEN. Yes; I agree to that. I want the reporter to be careful and note that correctly.

Mr. RANNEY. And be careful to get Mr. Eden's remark.

Mr. EDEN. And Judge Ranney's, too.

Mr. RANNEY. At last we have got something in that he fully appreciates.

The next is a letter, dated October 2, 1884, from Isham G. Harris to Dr. J. W. Rogers:

DEAR SIR: I will see General Johnston at 10 o'clock this morning and will talk to him about the matter. There is only about $3,500 in the treasury at this time, and as we have reason to expect more soon, is it not well to leave the question until we have some money worth dividing? I know Young is opposed to dividing. He opposed the last dividend.

Respectfully,

ISHAM G. HARRIS.

Dr. J. W. ROGERS.

Also the following:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., February 13, 1883.

DEAR SIR: Yours of the 11th instant reached me only an hour since, in answer to which I have to say that at the first blush your suggestion strikes me with favor, and I see no impropriety in gentlemen holding official positions, as Atkins and myself do, becoming interested in an enterprise such as you suggest. Atkins and I will be glad to confer with you or Harris or both at any time that may be found convenient and discuss the matter further.

Respectfully,

ISHAM G. HARRIS.

Dr. J. W. ROGERS.

WASHINGTON, July 5, 1883.

MY DEAR SIR: I called yesterday and again this morning and again this evening, but unfortunately found Harry absent. Please inform me by note about when the telephonic transmitter will be ready. Direct up to the 7th to the Fifth Avenue Hotel, New York. Colonel Young is going soon to San Francisco, and wants to carry some with him. Both he and I think there is a big thing in these transmitters, and they can be readily introduced. I promised Young to tell him about when they or a part of them will be ready, so that he could fix his time when to start to California. Young and Garland are going to consult and determine this week as to the best law for us to organize under. I go to New York to-night and Boston on the 8th and will reach Bar Harbor, Maine, on the 11th and hope to be here again in fifteen or twenty days.

Respectfully,

ISHAM G. HARRIS.

Dr. J. W. ROGERS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 28, 1884.

Messrs. J. W. and J. H. ROGERS:

DEAR SIRS: Your letter of yesterday was received at 11.30 to-day, and shown as soon as practicable to Senator Harris and Col. Young, and it was agreed that I should, Congress being in session, direct Col. Young's secretary to carry the contract for Washington with Messrs. Gustin & Harlan to the colonel. However, the young man was absent, so I left written instructions for him. All this made it evident that the contracts could not be dispatched by to-night's mail, and so I wired you. They will go as soon as possible, however, but I doubt if they can reach you to-morrow. Would it not be feasible for Mr. Harris Rogers to come Saturday, as you have been intending, while Dr. Rogers remains to attend to the Pennsylvania business? We have several conditional proposals for which instructions are necessary. These people want to see the instrument as it is in common use, they say, not as it is for exhibition, so they went to see Harlan & Gustin's customers using theirs. Myers writes the same thing from Indianapolis. So I was pining to have the result of your recent labors. If you give them to us at once you will find in a short time that the Pennsylvania contract will be a small part of your wealth. Telegraph me your wishes on receipt of this.

Yours, very truly,

J. E. JOHNSTON.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., December 2, 1884.

PROFESSOR BAIRD:

DEAR SIR: Allow me to introduce to you Professor J. Harris Rogers, of this city. Mr. Rogers is the inventor of the Rogers or Pan-Electric telephone and several other electrical inventions. He wishes to examine the telephone invented by Philip Reis, one of which I understand to be at the Smithsonian, and will probably be glad to have an opportunity to see if it can be made to talk.

I shall be greatly obliged if you will give him all the facilities for such examination as are consistent with the interest of the Institution. Mr. Rogers is in all respects worthy and reliable.

Respectfully,

ISHAM G. HARRIS.

Mr. HALL. These letters you are introducing are taken from a newspaper publication.

Mr. RANNEY. They are among those reported as immaterial.

Mr. HALL. Is there any objection to having the statement made of the date of their publication in the paper in which they appear?

The CHAIRMAN. It can be stated. They appear in the World of February 3, 1886.

Mr. HALL. Were the others that were introduced in the same paper?

The CHAIRMAN. I think they have all been read from the same paper.

Mr. RANNEY. I next read a letter dated August 5, 1883, from Isham G. Harris to Dr. Rogers:

MEMPHIS, August 5, 1883.

DEAR SIR: Our friend, Col. R. F. Looney, puts considerable interest in our electrical inventions and regards them as of great utility and value. He is, as you know, a man of fine capacity for negotiating and working up an enterprise, and exhibits great energy in such matters. If interested in it, he would, in my opinion, be serviceable to us and our enterprise.

In view of which facts I am in favor of interesting him in it on liberal terms, and think it a matter worthy the consideration of the executive committee, as to whether it is not wise policy to dispose of a part of the undisposed-of one-tenth interest to him on such terms as will put him actively in the field of negotiation. I think it not improbable that he can arrange to unite on reasonable terms our telephonic transmitter and exchange with the Rogers telephone, which in my opinion would be a big thing for us.

At all events, if he becomes interested he will go actively to work in the interest of the company to utilize its property.

Respectfully,

ISHAM G. HARRIS.

Dr. J. W. ROGERS.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Stenographer, I desire you to note by whom these letters are introduced.

Mr. RANNEY. Here is another letter from Isham G. Harris:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., February 18, 1884.

J. HARRIS ROGERS, Esq., or Dr. J. W. ROGERS:

Allow me to introduce to you Captain John N. Baffenger, of St. Louis, Mo. Captain B. wishes to experiment with our telephone, and probably contract with us for its use in certain territory.

Please show him all he wishes to see, and oblige,

ISHAM G. HARRIS.

ABELINE, TEX., September 6, 1883.

MY DEAR SIR: In answer to yours I have to say that I am greatly gratified at the flattering prospects of the Pan-Electric, and while I would like to see Col. Looney interested, and think he would be of value to us, I would not be willing to give him the tenth interest nor more than $50,000 of it, or thereabouts.

After consulting with you, Gen. Johnston, Harry, Atkins, and Young, I offered Gov. John C. Brown an interest of $50,000. He thinks he can be of service to us, and will do his best; and I have no doubt that he can be of very great service to us.

I sent him a note to you to-day, and he will be in Washington about the 15th inst.

I am and have been very busy here, but will leave for Memphis about 20th inst. My kind regards to Harry.

Your friend,

ISHAM G. HARRIS.

Dr. J. W. ROGERS.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., May 14, 1884.

My DEAR SIR: Neither Harry or yourself have any occasion for mortification or explanation. I went to New York on the business of the company, and needed the aid of Harry. I had no other thought than that the company would pay expenses, and intended to advance them myself and see that the company paid them.

Hence I have not expected either Harry or yourself to reimburse me. You owe me nothing on that or any other account.

Unfortunately my financial condition is such as to make it impossible for me to make the trade suggested by you.

I am compelled to raise $4,000 or $5,000 in the next few days to meet engagements already made.

Respectfully,

ISHAM G. HARRIS.

Dr. J. W. ROGERS.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all the letters published in that edition of the World be introduced in the manner in which they were published, instead of selecting a few out of the whole publication, and putting them into the record. That will save the labor of reading them and give us the benefit of them. I do not know that I have seen that edition of the World.

The CHAIRMAN. Cannot the desire of the gentleman be reached by offering all the letters published in that paper of that date?

Mr. RANNEY. I have no objection. They can put in every letter. Several of them are now in. I was only putting in those that were not in. But I have no objection.

Mr. EDEN. Those that have been put in once it is unnecessary to put in again.

Mr. HALL. I was going to suggest, if the motion was sustained, that those that have been already read could be withdrawn so as to put them in the order in which they were published in that paper.

Mr. RANNEY. You may put in the letters themselves, but not the publication. That is the difference. If there is any letter that I have omitted that the gentleman from Iowa wants put in, it can be done.

Mr. EDEN. I should like to inquire at this time whether the gentleman proposes to put in all the letters that the subcommittee decided were not legitimate as testimony?

Mr. HALL. I do not understand that the subcommittee decided that anything was not legitimate testimony, but only that they were not material.

Mr. EDEN. I mean as not material.

Mr. HALL. Instead of culling out letters in this way, I think we should have the benefit of the judgment of Mr. Pulitzer himself in the arrangement he made of them. I call for the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves that all the letters published in the World of the 3d of February be incorporated in the record as in evidence.

Mr. OATES. We had better put in all if we put in part.

Mr. EDEN. I do not want to vote for it, but if we are to put in any of the letters let them all go in.

Mr. RANNEY. If they are to go in, I want them to go in as letters and not simply as published letters.

The CHAIRMAN. They go in as letters. Their being published in the World does not make any difference.

The motion was put, and it was agreed to.

The letters in question, in addition to those already read by Mr. Ranney, are as follows:

U. S. SENATE CHAMBER, Oct. 4, 1883.

DEAR SIR: Here are the papers returned signed and acknowledged by Gov. Brown all right. You and Harris had better go or send over the papers and have them recorded. I believe you know the officers there. Please see to this as soon as you can. I return the articles I borrowed from Gen. Johnston.

Truly, &c.,

A. H. GARLAND.

J. W. ROGERS, Esq., City.

UNITED STATES SENATE CHAMBER,
Washington, Sept. 20, 1883.

DEAR SIR: I have gone through the New York laws and have drawn up a form for an association in the rough, which I send you. Please look it over and make memoranda to fill in the blanks. Be particular in stating the objects and purposes of the company. Make the statement broad and comprehensive. This form covers, as you will see, telephoning. A similar one will be necessary for telegraphy, so make a full statement as to that likewise. Will you do this and have it all ready and meet me with Gen. Johnston here at the Senate Judiciary Committee room to-morrow at 10.30 a. m. ? and we will put it all into shape, and I will have a clerk to draw them off neatly and readably for us. I name this place as I have books and papers all here convenient.

Truly yours,

A. H. GARLAND.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., October 62, 1885.

Dr. J. W. ROGERS:

DEAR SIR: I want to see you when you come to the city. But not knowing when you are in, don't know when to call. My object is to talk to you about the telephone, and chiefly to say to you that everything in the way of newspaper, hotel, or street discussion from our side of the question is hurtful, and I beg that you say nothing on the subject through the press or otherwise, except so far as you may choose to discuss the matter with us who are interested.

Respectfully,

ISHAM G. HARRIS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 23, 1884.

J. HARRIS ROGERS:

MY DEAR SIR: Since writing in reply to your note to the Pan-Electric Telephone Company I have seen several members of the company, who reminded me that the telephones you ordered were expressly for the contractors, mainly those here, and that a gentleman who wishes to purchase our right, in Missouri is waiting to see Mr. Harlan's lines. That is why anxiety for your return has been expressed. I have had that anxiety, without doubting that you would come here when the object of your work in New York was accomplished.

Yours, very truly,

J. H. JOHNSTON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 25, 1884.

J. HARRIS ROGERS, Esq.:

MY DEAR SIR: I have your telegraph of this morning. You are the judge of the time of your leaving New York, but I give circumstances here that you can consider. There is a gentleman from the West here with $75,000 in hand to be paid for our privilege in Missouri, on a royalty of $10. To my mind's eye that is attractive. Think of the necessary expenses that sum would cover, leaving a dividend, and the market value it would give our stock. But this gentleman will not contract until he has seen Harlan's lines in operation. So I beg of you to send as soon as possible eight or ten telephones to sway this customer. Now, we have also to help Myers as much as we can with a small number of instruments that will enable us to show in cities how much it is worth. We promised Harlan fifty, first ten to be delivered as soon as they could be made, and the use of these by Harlan's customers is to decide our $75,000 bidder. Now, take these matters in connection with what you have before you and come to us with eight or ten instruments as soon as practicable.

J. E. JOHNSTON.

PARTHENON HEIGHTS,
Bladensburg, Md., September 29, 1885.

Hon. AUGUSTUS H. GARLAND:

DEAR SIR: I notice that the Republican papers are making a desperate effort to show that you are prostituting your office for private ends, and have just written a letter to the Post and one to the New York Tribune, which sets the matter in the clearest light possible. Indeed, the editorial in the Post yesterday (Sunday) was inspired by me. I will still exert myself to keep the matter straight. Meanwhile we must secure the greatest patent lawyer in the world for the United States, or we will be defeated, and they will then raise a greater hue and cry than ever. We must succeed, and it is as certain as that you exist that the art of telephony, claimed and sworn to by Philip Reis and this fraud alone, cancels the patent. But watch your men and Van Benthuyzen, or they will sell out to the Bell company and make it appear finally that the United States never had a case, and that you, as a great lawyer, must have known it. Don't trust it to three or four little squires. Get the biggest lawyers in the world, if the Government should have to pay them $100,000 apiece. Get Edmunds, who will be the next President, if you are not, or some patent attorney whom he may recommend. If Casey Young is permanently disabled, employ me in his place, and even if I am not a "lawyer to hurt," they can't bribe me.

Yours, faithfully,

J. W. ROGERS.

WAR RECORDS OFFICE, 2005 G STREET, N. W.,
Washington, D. C., October 31, 1884.

Dr. J. W. ROGERS:

MY DEAR DOCTOR: I send the inclosed papers to you at the request of our common friend, Gen. A. B. Upshur, who is one of the finest business men I ever knew, and who ought to be in charge of the company's office in this city. Gen. Johnston was to see me this morning, and I urged on him to open and keep open a Washington office with an intelligent, courteous gentleman in charge. I hope you and Harry will urge this. You have caught several tartars. My dear Rogers, stick to the friends whose "adoption is tried." You have enough to make you a big fortune, but you must have proper confederates. Big names do not always win. Acknowledge receipt.

Your friend,

MARCUS J. WRIGHT.

WASHINGTON, December 22, 1883.

DEAR SIR: Your note of the 21st was received yesterday afternoon, and I saw Mr. J. Harris Rogers immediately in regard to its contents, as officially I can communicate with no one but him in regard to the stock which is borne on the company's records as his.

I reminded him that the sale of stock is not permitted by the company, and also that such sales, even if not prohibited, would be very dangerous. For if the enterprise should not succeed, all concerned in them would be considered by the public as swindlers. I mean all concerned, all of us.

Most respectfully, yours, truly,

J. E. JOHNSTON.

Dr. J. W. ROGERS.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., Feb. 20, 1883.

Allow me to introduce to you Gen. Joseph E. Johnston. Please show him and explain to him the inventions that you were kind enough to show me on Sunday evening, and oblige, respectfully,

ISHAM G. HARRIS.

Dr. J. W. ROGERS, or J. HARRIS ROGERS.

SUNDAY MORNING, 1883.

DEAR SIR: Shall we retain the charter papers till to-morrow to consult Senator Garland?

Yours, very truly,

J. E. JOHNSTON.

J. HARRIS ROGERS, Esq.

WASHINGTON, March 23, 1883.

DEAR SIR: I beg you to let me know when you are ready to commence trials with the rented wire. I am looking forward to them with intense interest.

Very truly, yours,

J. E. JOHNSTON.

J. HARRIS ROGERS, Esq.

MEMPHIS, TENN., March 25, 1883.

MY DEAR DOCTOR: I am in receipt of your letter of the 18th inst., which I found awaiting me on my arrival Friday night. I have examined the New Jersey statutes and do not find their provisions so favorable to us as you seem to conclude. Acting upon your suggestion, Senator Harris has prepared and sent to Nashville an amendment for our general laws of incorporation, which will give us all the corporate rights and privileges which we desire. I am afraid, however, that the legislature will adjourn before it can be passed. I find that the Maryland laws in respect to incorporations are extremely liberal, and I think we would encounter no difficulty in obtaining such a charter as we want in that State. Harry must necessarily be incurring some expense and I would suggest that he draw upon the other members of the company for their pro rata share of it; it is better to keep the financial part of the business closed up as we go along. He might draw for the amount each one is to pay in installments of say $25 or $50 at a time. In notifying the members of this matter he and General Johnston can use my name if necessary. I am going to Arkansas in a short time and you had better look up your land titles in that State and send them on to me.

Your friend,

CASEY YOUNG.

[Law office of Young & Martin, 254 Second street.]

MEMPHIS, TENN., April 14, 1883.

DEAR DOCTOR: I look at the matter as you do—that to fully develop and present to the best advantage the various inventions will require perhaps more money than we could ourselves advance, and that to raise it we had possibly better sell some one or more of the inventions or a sufficient amount of stock for the purpose. I am still of the opinion that we can sell the telephone appliance, as I wrote you before, for enough money to carry our other things along until we can put them on a firm basis, and I recommend the experiment. I think I could sell the right to use them in Memphis for $5,000.

I had a talk with Henry Montgomery yesterday, who is a practical telegrapher, and moreover a man of very large wealth, and he said if the "cylinder" improvement would do what I told him it would, it was worth millions; but he asked me a great many questions about it which I was unable to answer. I have thought it would be a good idea for us to get him to go in with us if we can.

I will see Senator Harris to-day and confer with him about the charter. We can get one under the Tennessee law as broad as we desire it, but I am afraid that chartering here would not give us very high standing in the financial world.

Yours, truly,

CASEY YOUNG.

WASHINGTON, April 14, 1883.

J. HARRIS ROGERS, Esq.:

DEAR SIR: I have just received your letter of the 7th, with your father's to the executive committee, but none from Mr. Young.

I have examined the financial columns of the Herald without finding the name of the "American Postal Telegraph Company," so cannot judge of the value of the offer. Is the "embossed system" that in which the cylinder with tin-foil is used? If so, I estimate it above all the rest. But can have no opinion in regard to the offer until informed of the value of the stock to be paid in. Please find it in "report of stock sales," and inform me.

Very truly, yours,

J. E. JOHNSTON.

Mr. Young thinks that the use of your telephone may be sold in Tennessee and neighboring States.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.

DEAR PAPA: The inclosed was handed to me to-day at the house by Mr. Baffenger. He wants to see the telephone work. He owns the right of Missouri and Louisiana of Bell telephone. He says he will be here until Saturday. Went to see Looney this morning. Gen. Johnston was there. He wanted to know if there were any instruments in the laboratory. I told him that it was locked up. He then said that there was a gentlemen here who wanted to talk. I told him he would have to write or telegraph you, that I was not authorized. Two men called to-day to see about adv.; said they would wait and see you. Am glad to hear Harry caught the thief. Hope you all are making millions. * * *

Affectionate son,

JIM.

Dr. J. W. ROGERS, J. H. ROGERS,
315 Four-and-a-Half street, Washington.

1023 CONNECTICUT AVENUE,
Washington, D. C., Feb. 23, 1884.

J. HARRIS ROGERS, Esq.:

DEAR SIR: I have just received your letter of yesterday addressed to the Pan-Electric Telephone Company within, but to me without.

I think that you are mistaken as to the terms of contracts with Myers and Harlan. But my object in writing now is to say that Mr. Garrett desires to "investigate" our telephone with a view to purchase if satisfied with it. For that reason I hope that you will be able to return very soon, that we may not leave him time to change his mind.

Please telegraph me where to expect you. Or can your brother James give me the patent to show Mr. Garrett?

Yours, very truly,

J. E. JOHNSTON.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8, 1883.

Dr. J. W. ROGERS:

DEAR SIR: Your note of this morning and inclosures were duly received.

I submitted Col. Looney's letter with Mr. Young's indorsement to Senator Garland, who agrees with me in the opinion that the proposition explained cannot be acted on until our meeting on (about) the 3d. I have telegraphed this to Col. Looney.

The account will be attended to without delay.

Yours, truly,

J. E. JOHNSTON.

WASHINGTON, 10.15 P. M., March 26, 1884.

Dr. J. W. ROGERS and J. HARRIS ROGERS, Esqs.:

DEAR SIRS: On receiving your first dispatch (at 1.15) I sent it to Senator Harris, who keeps our contracts. He replied immediately that he would comply with your request.

Your second dispatch came about three and a half hours after the first. I carried it to the Senator's lodgings, and, he being absent, left the dispatch with a note telling him that I cannot break Col. Young's locks. This I telegraphed to you at once. I regret this very much, for I will do anything for your advantage that does not seem to me wrong.

I do not see, however, how those who insist on the impress of the seal of the party of the first part can be satisfied with its impression by the other party. I do hope that when they see the missing sheet supplied they will be willing to wait until a seal can be obtained without violence.

With best wishes, yours, very truly,

J. E. JOHNSTON.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, Jan. 25, 1884.

J. H. ROGERS, Esq.:

DEAR HARRY: I have a telegram from the Bell office in Boston, saying that Mr. Vail was absent to day, but would answer me to-morrow, and I have answered saying that we will be there on Monday morning. Hence I go on to New York to-night and will leave there for Boston Sunday, and shall expect to meet you at the Parker House, on Monday morning. His former letters have assured me that he would be pleased to see us at any time, if I would give him a day's notice.

Therefore I have given the notice, and as we have no time to lose, I am certain that it is best to go at once.

Your friend,

ISHAM G. HARRIS.

WASHINGTON, March 24, 1885.

MY VERY DEAR FRIEND: Your kind and characteristic letter was received several days ago. In answering it as I would wish to do I recognize at the threshold the poverty of the English language to in any way adequately express the unfathomable depths of gratitude I feel, and the genuine and sincere thanks that well up in my bosom and overflow the surroundings like a deluge. This may sound like hyperbolic language and gushing homonymy, yet every word of it is true, for in the very innermost recesses of my heart your kindness is encoysted, and will nestle there as its chiefest gem until its latest pulsation will sound the knell of time. "Could I wreak my thoughts upon expression," the burning language necessary to be employed, would light the vestal fires anew and glow forever there as the fixed stars in Heaven shine, bright and beautiful and glowing as a golden burnished sheen. Your letter came to me like the grateful dew upon the parched and withered herbage, renewing its verdancy and rendering its dreariness beautiful. The expressed well-wishes and homage of one kind heart is worth living for, and makes one feel that life is not altogether vain. The experience of life has taught me that it is a boon of priceless value, for when genuine, as I know yours to be, it is a casket adorned all over with flowers, and is as rare in the casket of dear memories as the Koinour is among the family of gems. To say that I thank you with all my heart is but the most feeble portraiture of my feelings. Your letter struck me at a time when "sorrow brooded over me like a funeral pall; when all hope withering fled and mercy sighed farewell." I felt truly sad and isolated, and my thoughts were gloomy and saturnine. Need I tell you, therefore, how timely and welcome your letter was to me, and how fruity and rich were its effects upon my soul, redolent of perfumed souvenirs and dear memories, awakening bright hopes and vaulting aspirations as fresh as the aurora of morn bespangled with its dewy diamonds. In conclusion may I express the wish and breathe the prayer that your life on this earth be so serene and happy and exempt from all its ills, that in its transition from this to a better world the change will scarcely be perceptible.

I am, as I ever hope to be, your true and grateful friend,

R. C. WINTERSMITH.

Dr. J. W. ROGERS, Washington, D. C.

MEMPHIS, TENN., September 30, 1880.

MY DEAR SIR: I think the services of J. W. Rogers, esq., of Washington, D. C., could be used with great benefit to the Democratic party in the present canvass, and I write this note to suggest that they be engaged at once and he sent to speak to the Northern and Western States. He is a gentleman of much scholarly culture, extensive information, and possessed of many superior powers as a popular orator. I know of no man who would be likely to arouse more enthusiasm among the masses than he would.

Yours, very truly,

CASEY YOUNG.

Hon. JOHN G. THOMPSON, Washington, D. C.

MEMPHIS, August 16, 1884.

MY DEAR FRIEND: I have just arrived home, read your letters, and have seen Young. He had received our letter, which had upset him considerably. He denies emphatically that he ever said the Rogers telephone was worthless, and he denies with emphasis that he has any interest whatever in the Harlan-Long attempted swindle; professes perfect loyalty and the deepest interest in the success of our telephone. It is booming in the West and here. Alabama is finished up and the money will be forwarded next week. I saw Boyle in Chicago Wednesday last. He expected to close Illinois, Iowa, Michigan, and Kansas within ten days. He went to Detroit Wednesday night. He has strong connections with most every State. I believe Young means to be true and stand with us against Long and Harlan. I hope Governor Harris will take hold of the matter, and this fall Harry and General Johnston with him will in some way get rid of Harlan if he does not come to terms. We are on high ground now and should have perfect harmony. I think for all the future we will have Casey's hearty co-operation. He is so situated that he can do nothing else. Should he fail to do this he would incur the displeasure of Gov. Harris, Gen. Johnston, Garland, Atkins, Brown. He is talking for us big now here. I will spread myself next week on the stock and the market is splendid. My son will hand you this. I want him to see Harry and all of your family. He is a chip of the old block, and is the friend of the Rogers family. Trade for that house for me quick and I will be with you. Everything is moving here splendidly. Give my love to Harry. Tell him he must come to Memphis. The Alabama telephones are the best ever made. You can talk 100 feet from them and fire clear every "pop." They go to Mississippi next week and Louisiana. Boyle tested with the Bell telephone in Minnesota 150 miles. None of them could talk ninety miles, failed completely except the Rogers telephone, which talked as well the 150 miles as it did 150 yards. Boyle says he can whisper through it across the continent.

Very truly, your friend,

R. F. LOONEY.

WASHINGTON, March 28, 1883.

J. HARRIS ROGERS, Esq.:

DEAR SIR: I have just learned from a note from Dr. Rogers, dated 26th, that you are at work in New York, and regret very much that you did not before leaving Washington inform me of your intention, that whatever service I am capable of might have been rendered.

Very truly, yours,

J. E. JOHNSTON.

WASHINGTON, March 29, 1883.

J. HARRIS ROGERS, Esq.:

DEAR SIR: I have just received a letter from your father, the terms of which make me think that he and (perhaps) you have not observed the fifth paragraph of the terms of our association, which makes it necessary that I should at least witness the experiments to be made over the rented wire.

It is expedient, of course, that one of us should be at each end of the wire during its use. In that respect we are properly placed now.

Very truly, yours,

J. E. JOHNSTON.

You will see in the eighth paragraph of the "terms" that I am a member of the executive committee.

WASHINGTON, March 31, 1883.

J. HARRIS ROGERS, Esq.:

DEAR SIR: I have your favor of the 30th. I should like much to be in your laboratory whenever anything is going along the line. And shall see your operator there this morning on that subject.

I agree with you—that it will be best to exhibit first the automatic telephone, especially in view of our being limited to assessment of $150 each member for expenses. See 5th par. of "terms."

In reference to sales at nominal prices—I can see no advantage to be derived from it at present.

Very truly, yours,

J. E. JOHNSTON.

WASHINGTON, April 3, 1883.

J. HARRIS ROGERS, Esq.:

DEAR SIR: I have just seen your father's telegram announcing your illness.

I regret it much, not only on your own account, but because it prevents trials to-night from which I expected much gratification. I suppose, however, that what I saw last night gave a fair idea of the most important of your improvements.

I am compelled to leave Washington to-night on business that cannot be postponed, in Danville, Va., with W. S. Patton & Sons, bankers. That will be my address.

Very truly, yours,

J. E. JOHNSTON.

Is it necessary to make any other trials on the rented wire?

WASHINGTON, April 3, 1883.

J. HARRIS ROGERS, Esq.:

DEAR SIR: I have just received your favor without date.

I observed the broad seam in the tin foil, but was confident that you would correct the arrangement.

As to the sale of stock—I think that we cannot gain, but must lose by selling it at nominal prices. That is the ground of my objection.

Very truly, yours,

J. E. JOHNSTON.

WASHINGTON, April 7, 1883.

J. HARRIS ROGERS, Esq.:

DEAR SIR: I have received your letter via Danville and the engraved certificates of stock, also the printed pamphlet intended, as you say, for a substitute for that printed by our association itself.

Let me suggest, in the most friendly spirit, that the association authorized an executive committee to direct its business and that no one member of that committee can act as the whole. I have, as delicately as I could, called your attention to this twice. Let me now beg you to make no expenditures without the consent of a majority of the committee.

In your letter of the 5th you speak in terms of the last trial of the cylinder that I suppose that there is no necessity for further trial. Is it not so?

The pamphlet for which you propose a substitute was the contract upon which our association is founded. No one person, therefore, can put it aside. The association established its office in Washington. In your pamphlet two offices are proposed as permanent, without authority, it seems to me.

Very truly, yours,

J. E. JOHNSTON.

WASHINGTON, April 7, 1883.

J. HARRIS ROGERS, Esq.:

DEAR SIR: I have your note of yesterday. It seems to me that we should lose greatly by selling stock before the completion of the trials that will show the value of your invention in rapid telegraphy, at least.

Before I left the laboratory last night a message from you was received to the effect that these trials require improved instruments, the making of which will cost ten days. In that connection let me take the liberty of suggesting to you the financial prudence of it, lessening your daily expenditures and keeping them within the limit of assessments the association imposed on the executive committee.

Could not the transmission by the tin foil be proved as fully with a short wire as a long one, and as well at one place, therefore, as two?

Very truly, yours,

J. E. JOHNSTON.

WASHINGTON, April 19, 1883.

J. HARRIS ROGERS, Esq.:

DEAR SIR: Your telegram in relation to the American Postal Telegraph Company's stock is received.

I think that after complete experiments show the value of your two chief inventions our stock will be at least equal to any other not yet put upon the market.

I have put the case before Mr. Young, but think the bargain would be very injurious to us.

Very truly, yours,

J. E. JOHNSTON.

WASHINGTON, April 21, 1883.

J. HARRIS ROGERS, Esq.:

DEAR SIR: I had not time yesterday to tell you how much satisfaction your letter of the 21st gives me. It adds to my anxiety to witness the trial of the new instruments and of the telephone. Were not the instruments to be ready four or five days ago? And has not a material part of the time of rent of the wire expired? For these and personal accounts I am very anxious for the speedy commencement of the trial.

As we use the wire at night, I suppose the attendance in court cannot interfere.

Very truly, yours,

J. E. JOHNSTON.

MEMPHIS, April 27, 1883.

Dr. J. ROGERS:

My DEAR SIR: In answer to yours of 20th instant, I have to say that L. P. Cooper, who holds the claim against you to which your letter refers, was absent from the city until yesterday, when I had an interview with him, and he agrees to accept the Pan-Electric stock at 50 cents on the dollar in satisfaction of the debt and interest. The notes were put in suit and a judgment obtained, which Cooper paid, and the judgment was transferred to him, but when ready to consummate the agreement I will see that the judgment is satisfied and that a receipt is given you in full.

I have talked to my nephew, James M. Harris, about your Arkansas lands. He thinks this a good time to dispose of them if you wish to do so at nominal rates. He has had the control of a great many of those Arkansas forfeited lands, selling them in their forfeited condition at 25 to 30 cents per acre. I authorized him some months since to sell mine, which he did, my opinion being that it was the best possible disposition that could be made of them.

Very respectfully,

ISHAM G. HARRIS.

H.

P. S.—I will be in Washington by 20th May.

WEDNESDAY MORNING, 1883.

DEAR SIR: I presume that Gov. Harris told you yesterday of his intended trip to Texas and the proposition that there shall be a meeting of the association immediately after his return, when Hon. Mr. Young, Col. Looney, and Gen. Brown can be present.

I did not see you and Senator Garfield on the subject yesterday, believing that the governor would do so.

I have written to Col. Looney in relation to the subject of his letter to your father.

Hoping that the above meets your approval, I am, yours truly,

J. E. JOHNSTON.

1023 CONNECTICUT AVENUE,
Washington, Aug. 3, 1883.

J. HARRIS ROGERS, Esq.:

DEAR SIR: To my great disappointment, I find nothing in regard to Philip Reis in the Encyclopædia Britannica nor in a voluminous biographical work. This, however, makes the article you lent me no less interesting. It will be returned by the bearer.

In asking you for a receipt for Gov. Harris's payment I forgot that I had given him one. I beg you, therefore, to interline on your receipt (herewith) after "Received of" my name and the word "for," to relieve me of responsibility to the governor.

Very truly yours,

J. E. JOHNSTON.

I requested Messrs. Atkins and Garland to remit you $102.87, one-third, and Mr. Young to remit $97.87, one-third. I forgot to mention this when we were together.

MEMPHIS, Oct. 4, 1883.

Dr. J. W. ROGERS:

MY DEAR SIR: I herewith inclose letter to Gen. Johnston. Not having his Washington address, I send it to you for the information of yourself and Harris, and for prompt delivery to Gen. Johnston.

Respectfully,

ISHAM G. HARRIS.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., Jan. 14, 1884.

Gen. J. W. DENVER:

DEAR SIR: In answer to your note of this day, I have to say that I have used the Pan-Electric telephone in my rooms for some time, and think it vastly superior to any telephone that I have ever seen.

And upon a somewhat careful examination, my opinion is that it does not infringe the Bell or any other patent.

Respectfully,

ISHAM G. HARRIS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 18, 1884.

J. HARRIS ROGERS, Esq.:

DEAR SIR: Your note dated 26th (16th?) is just received. I am very sorry that the Rubber Company is so slow, for we may suffer in consequence. Our Washington contractors are already impatient, and those for Ohio, Illinois, &c., have already asked for instruments.

In reference to an "unanswered" letter of yours to me, I have received but one in the present month, and Gov. Harris undertook to answer that one orally, as he did next morning.

The proposal to pool our stock was duly received, and generally agreed to. So you have no cause for anxiety on that subject. Do urge the workmen.

Yours, very truly,

J. E. JOHNSTON.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., Feb. 13, 1884.

MY DEAR DOCTOR: Gen. Johnston and myself both thought it proper to call a meeting of our company at once to consider Harry's letter, and he called it for this evening at 7 o'clock at my room and requested me to notify you.

I still think there is some strange mistake about this matter and that it ought to be corrected if possible before it goes any further. Harry's letter very clearly implies that there has been a demand for the stock alluded to and a refusal to deliver it, but I do not know of any reason whatever for this conclusion. I have in many instances, when you have sent me an order for stock, promptly delivered to the party presenting it exactly the kind of instrument agreed upon by every member of the company as I understand it. If you are in the slightest dissatisfied with existing agreements I have no doubt but all the gentlemen connected with the matter will readily acquiesce in any new arrangement you may desire to make or surrender the entire matter back into your hands. For myself I would not incur the imputation of bad faith towards our friend for all the telephones in the world.

I would like for you to come a little while before the hour of meeting so we may talk the matter over.

Yours truly,

CASEY YOUNG.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., Feb. 29, 1884.

J. HARRIS ROGERS, Esq.:

DEAR SIR: I have just received your telegram asking for remittance of $300, and inclose Col. Young's check on the Sergeant-at-Arms, House of Representatives, for that sum.

Hoping to see you very soon, especially as the question of conflict of patents may be,

I am, very truly yours,

J. E. JOHNSTON.

MARCH 21, 1884—8 p. m.

Messrs. J. W. and J. H. ROGERS:

DEAR SIRS: Your note was received at nightfall, and I have been trying to no purpose to find other directors to accede to your request. I will see enough members early in the morning (to-morrow) to act in the case, and I am not afraid to promise you their assent.

I will communicate their action promptly.

Very truly yours,

J. E. JOHNSTON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 10, 1884.

J. HARRIS ROGERS, Esq.:

MY DEAR SIR: The meeting of which I advised you yesterday occurred last night, Messrs. Harris, Young, and myself attending. We found, however, that no satisfactory settlement of accounts could be made without your personal assistance, and therefore agreed that I should request you to designate a place and time (outside of the sessions of Congress) at which it will be convenient to you to meet us to settle. We offer for the purpose the places we control, viz, Senator Harris's committee room, or quarters at No. 208 D street, northwest, or Col. Young's quarters, No. 606 Thirteenth street, northwest, or my house, No. 1023 Connecticut avenue.

Yours, very truly,

J. E. JOHNSTON.

WASHINGTON, July 5, 1884.

Dr. ROGERS:

I had intended to call and see you about the Cooper matter, but have been so busy that I found it impossible to do so.

I herewith return the postal telegraph stock.

You have a statement of the exact amount of the judgment that Cooper held against you, which you paid in this stock at fifty cents on the dollar. Cooper wishes to exchange this postal-telegraph stock for Pan-Electric.

I have drawn what I suppose to be a sufficient transfer, which you will please have executed and deliver to my son Charlie.

Respectfully,

ISHAM G. HARRIS.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18, 1874.

Dr. J. W. ROGERS and Prof. J. HARRIS ROGERS:

DEAR PAPA AND HAI: Gen. Johnston has just called in reference to a letter from Gen. Gaines, head of our telephone in New Orleans. He gave it to me to read. It's a letter of about ten pages. It all amounted to this—the N. Improved Tel. Co. says that "if your assignment of all your future improvements is not on record in the Patent Office, they have got you down in black and white in a contract made by you to them to give all future improvements." In another part of the letter he says the N. I. T. Co. "says that Mr. Marble did not say that Hall's present patents did not infringe those sold to Ewing—they do," &c. He says also that unless this is disproved in the first place by you in an affidavit setting forth that you never did make such a contract and that Marble shall send them word immediately that he did refer to Ewing's patent, that they will be in a bad way. Gen. Johnston wants you to make an affidavit to the effect that you did not assign your future improvements. He says it's all foolishness to think that you would sell yourself and everything that you might invent in your lifetime. He says he is confident that there is no such thing, but says it is absolutely necessary that you make said affidavit, and wants me to send it to him. I send you other letters from New Orleans people. Am getting uneasy about you all; have heard nothing from you for two days. Am well and hope nothing is the matter. Give my love to mamma and say I will get her dresses so soon as they are ready. If you can make such affidavit send in right away. Aff. son and bro.,

JIM.

OFFICE OF THE PAN-ELECTRIC TELEPHONE COMPANY,
Washington, D. C., July 26, 1884.

DEAR DOCTOR: I inclose you, under direction your uncle, Dr. J. W. Rogers, two certificates of stock for fifty shares each—one in the Pan-Electric Telephone Company and one in the Pan-Electric Telegraph Company—which shares of stock have been put to your credit on the books of the respective companies.

I think the stock valuable, and will within a reasonable period be worth in the neighborhood of par. I know all about the business affairs and financial condition of your uncle, and while the enterprises which he has been promoting will, I think, develop most valuable results, he has saved but little money, nearly all which he has realized have been used in making his instruments still more valuable and in bringing his various enterprises before the public.

The Pan-Electric Association proper, embracing all of Harry Rogers's inventions, but no stock books have yet been prepared for that; when they are you will have fifty shares issued to you.

Yours, truly,

CASEY YOUNG.

Dr. J. W. ROGERS,
Memphis, Tenn.

OFFICE OF THE PAN-ELECTRIC TELEPHONE COMPANY,
Washington, D. C., October 18, 1884.

J. HARRIS ROGERS, Esq. :

MY DEAR SIR: You have no doubt observed the published statements of the "National Improved Telephone Company" in New Orleans—to the effect that our instrument infringes theirs and belongs to them—as a condition of your contract with them gave all improvements and inventions you might subsequently make to that company.

Mr. Marble is preparing a statement for us at Governor Harris's request. He is clear on the point of infringement, but thinks that your assistance would be very valuable to him, and therefore begs you to come to his office Monday morning. Before Mr. Marble made this request I saw Mr. James and begged him to ask you to make an affidavit to be sent to New Orleans for publication in our defense. It would be conclusive.

With friendly regards to your father, I am

Yours, very truly,

J. E. JOHNSTON.

WASHINGTON, February 26, 1885.

J. HARRIS ROGERS, Esq. :

DEAR SIR: Your note of yesterday came to hand duly. I regret very much the inconvenience to which you are put by your agent's failure to sell the Florida land. But, as the man in the novel says, "Better luck next time."

Did Mr. Marean give any indications during the trials of his opinion of the Automatic Telegraph? He promised me a copy of his report, but seems to have changed his mind, for I have not received one.

Yours, very truly,

J. E. JOHNSTON.

I return the two notes inclosed with yours.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 27, 1885.

Dr. J. W. ROGERS :

DEAR SIR: I fear you have been thinking me very negligent, but the delay in acknowledging your note is due to the difficulty of getting people together to learn their views.

As we have been unable to sell a single share of stock, and therefore have raised no money, we are compelled to conclude that we cannot make our contest with Bell and assist you as we wish to do.

In reference to the application for the consulship, I spoke to the gentleman you named to me, but, to my great disappointment, found that in such matters his hands were tied by some State complications in the distribution of offices. I regret this very much, but still cannot see how you can fail to win, having such advocates.

Yours, very truly,

J. E. JOHNSTON.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., December 12, 1885.

Dr. J. W. ROGERS :

DEAR SIR: I shall be glad to see you on Monday or Tuesday next, if convenient for you to come to town.

It is important to our telephone interests.

Respectfully,

ISHAM G. HARRIS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 23, 1885.

J. HARRIS ROGERS, Esq. :

DEAR SIR: Your note of yesterday is just received.

In relation to the fact that there has been no attempt to bring any of your inventions but the telephone into use, if you will consider, the want of the means is the cause. We considered the matter of electric light, and the obstacle in the way of bringing it into use in this city was that the expense was too great for our resources.

But we will have a meeting of the board as soon as Colonel Young returns, which it is important that you should attend, where you will, of course, have opportunity to express your wishes. Colonel Y. is expected before Monday. If you should be in the city that day, where could a notice of the meeting find you?

Yours, truly,

J. E. JOHNSTON.

BALTIMORE AND OHIO TELEGRAPH COMPANY.

(No date.)

Dispatch to Mr. Ch. Reynolds, editor Baltimore Herald:

By reference to my letter you will see that I do not say as you state, "That Mr. Garland is indebted to me for getting him appointed," but "for my efforts to get him appointed." Those efforts may be summed up as follows: Ambages longe sunt.

J. W. ROGERS.

PARTHENON HEIGHTS,
Laboratory, December 14, 1885.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Your letter requesting me to come and advise about the telephone received. I seldom leave the house and never go to town, but would be happy to see you at any time.

My advice, however, would not be regarded by your board, which has ignored it hitherto and treated Harry as a cipher, even to suppressing his views throughout the book they have published on his telephone and in the whole Pan discussion, while cheek by jowl with his enemies.

My original pamphlet, which was the basis of our original organization, contains all the advice I could now give, and suggests that stock issued on their "patents," and "the future possibilities of electricity," would enable us to raise money enough to monetize and develop the association.

All these inventions are tied up and dormant, except the telephone, the least valuable, in my judgment, of them all. Garland has played the big dog and Casey the little dog—this is not private—and I have instructed an agent to sell my interest in it, about $300,000, for $10,000 cash, to meet mine and Harry's pressing liabilities. If not sold in bulk next week I will cut it up in certificates of my own and sell them, for I can get $10 a share on small certificates, while very few persons would venture so large an amount as to take the whole.

Your friend,

J. W. ROGERS.

P. S.—The above $300,000 carries with it the Looney stock, placed in his hands as a kind of trust, described in our contract, one-half of which he gets on every sale he makes from about $600,000 telephone stock.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything more for the committee at this time?

Mr. RANNEY. There is one brief despatch or a couple of dispatches in the New York Times, one publishing an interview with Mr. Van Benthuyzen sent from Chicago, which I should like to have introduced, and if there is any question about its genuineness, I want Mr. Van Benthuyzen called to prove it. It is possible that they might be objected to on the ground that Mr. Van Benthuyzen's attention has not been called to them.

Mr. OATES. What interview is it?

Mr. RANNEY. It purports to be an interview with Mr. Van Benthuyzen in Chicago, and published in the New York Times of September 28 and 29, 1885. I have sent to the Congressional Library for a copy and I have sent to the Clerk of the House for a copy of it. The Librarian says it has gone to the binder's to be bound and he has not got it, and I have sent to the Clerk's office, and he has not got it. But the reporter of the Times, who was here, says that he has a copy at his office and will have it here tomorrow.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is any question affecting the admission of them, it can be raised when they are offered.

Mr. RANNEY. One of them purports to be an interview with Mr. Van Benthuyzen, telegraphed from Chicago. Mr. Van Benthuyzen may go away, and objection may be made that his attention was not called to them.

Mr. HALL. I never heard of a proposition to bind a man by an interview in a newspaper without showing the article to him.

Mr. RANNEY. Under the strict rule of law, undoubtedly it would not be competent. Anticipating that objection, I made the suggestion, although there is enough under which it would be competent here as showing the course of the Times, and it might go in as to that fact.

Mr. EDEN. Do you want to prove which side of the question the Times has been on?

Mr. RANNEY. That already appears.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any other matter to bring before the committee at this time?

Mr. OATES. There is nothing except General Johnson's motion to strike out a portion of Major Gardner's testimony. That has not been disposed of.

Mr. RANNEY. There is another thing. There is what is called the Adams book. None of the witnesses have produced that. It was a part of the documents spoken of by Mr. Goode as coming from District Attorney McCorry. It is a part of the papers he had before him when he acted. Colonel Young said he had a copy.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. I have one at home, I think; I am not sure. I think General Bradley Johnson would have one.

Mr. RANNEY. We do not want to keep a copy of it.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. If I had it I would let you have it. I expect if the chairman will write to General Bradley Johnson, or to Dr. Adams himself, he can get one.

Mr. RANNEY. I sent to get a copy of it myself, but I found they were getting scarce, so I borrowed a copy of Mr. Storrow.

Mr. HALL. Of Mr. Storrow, the attorney of the Bell Telephone Company?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes, I borrowed it of him, and he says it is the only copy that he has. It is a very interesting document.

The CHAIRMAN. General Bradley Johnson has made a request or motion that certain portions of the testimony of Major Gardner should be omitted, and he has left a copy of the testimony here, marked with the parts indicated which he wants stricken out.

Mr. RANNEY. With a request to have those portions expunged?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, stricken out. I submit the matter to the committee, so that any member can make a motion in regard to it.

Mr. RANNEY. I move that the request be denied.

Mr. HANBACK. I second that motion.

Mr. RANNEY. I make the motion for these reasons: Mr. Gardner was summoned here as the clerk or treasurer of the corporation and the proper custodian of the books. He has produced the evidence and put it under the call of the committee. Now, General Johnson, who is president of the company—not the custodian of the books or the dictator of what the man shall testify to—comes and moves to strike it out. The request does not come from the company itself by the authority of the directors. The custodian of the books and the man acquainted with the facts has put the books in, or portions of the books, and now the president, who is not the custodian of the books, moves to strike it out, and he does not come with the authority, so far as shown, of the directors of the company. It is his individual request. In the next place, whatever is put in, is right in the line of the inquiry, is competent evidence in the line of the inquiry that has been made. The chairman—to illustrate—has had the president and treasurer of the Bell Telephone Company furnish portions of their record which has been printed in our testimony without objection.

Mr. HANBACK. I make another point, too, that the committee is to be the judge of the materiality of all the testimony that is offered, and the striking out process could not be permitted in view of that fact. It is not legitimate and should not be considered. Besides, it does not do him any harm.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, the motion which Mr. Ranney proposes is scarcely necessary, and it seems to me does not put the matter in good form. General Johnson made the motion which is before the committee to strike out, and the question is whether we will do it or not, and I think a vote ought to be taken on the motion made by General Johnson. He put it on the ground that the testimony which he moved to strike out is a disclosure of the private affairs of his company, and on the assumption that it might be used to their detriment, being a private matter, a matter concerning their private affairs, which the committee could not compel a disclosure of, and he wanted it stricken out for that reason. I have looked over the evidence, and while I think it of very little consequence to the committee, in the inquiry the committee is pursuing, I think it also of very little consequence to General Johnson's company that it should be stricken out. And as it went in without any objection, and I do not see any disclosures in it which would be an admission of record which could hurt his company, I cannot see the necessity of striking it out.

Mr. RANNEY. As for the gentleman's criticism about the form of my motion, I think he is laboring under a misapprehension.

Mr. OATES. I merely meant to say that the motion was unnecessary.

Mr. RANNEY. I beg pardon, you made the remark that the motion was made by General Johnston. I made the motion to deny his request.

Mr. OATES. It was a motion made by General Johnson.

Mr. RANNEY. He cannot make a motion; he could make a request. A motion comes from within a body, not from the outside.

Mr. OATES. On that assumption a lawyer could not make a motion in court. The court would have to make it for him.

Mr. RANNEY. No; a lawyer is within the court; he is an officer of the court.

Mr. OATES. General Johnson, as president of the company, stated that he made that motion as counsel for his company.

Mr. RANNEY. That is mere technicality; it is not worth discussing. I do not care whether the vote is taken affirmatively or negatively. I only made the motion to bring the matter up before the committee. Either is proper.

Mr. HALL. I understood from General Johnson's testimony the other day that not recognizing the right of the committee to inquire into the private affairs of his company, he desired to have it go on record that an objection was made. I do not suppose that General Johnson cared specially about it, but felt it was his duty to make the objection, and to protest against any improper interference with the affairs of his company. I think the suggestion made, however, that this record was brought by the clerk, the mere physical custodian of it, amounts to nothing. The president of the company, as the highest officer, would have the right of course to object to its use, and to move that it be struck out. But in view of the fact that no special objection, except that stated by General Johnson, was made, I should be in favor of keeping it in evidence.

Mr. HANBACK. What is the pending motion?

The CHAIRMAN. It is that the request of General Johnson shall not be granted.

Mr. RANNEY. If General Johnson has not produced that correspondence which he said he would produce—

Mr. HALL. Let us settle this question now.

Mr. RANNEY. If he has not produced that correspondence he stands in contempt of the committee, and I will not entertain a motion of a gentleman outside who is in contempt. He has declined to answer certain questions.

Mr. EDEN. I cannot see what difference it makes to General Johnson's company whether it is stricken out or not. Of course it is public now, whether it is stricken out of the record or not. There may be something in the objection he makes that it is an investigation into private matters.

Mr. HANBACK. It is the same thing, in a larger sense, that occurred in regard to the Bell company. A list of the stockholders of the Bell company has been published in our testimony.

Mr. HALL. But this contained the private proceedings of a corporation independently of the stockholders.

Mr. EDEN. The objection that was made to that part of the record was that it would not affect the officers of the Government we are inquiring about. I notice, by looking at the minutes, that I objected to some of this evidence at the time on the ground that it was not within the authority given to the committee. I do not see any good purpose to be accomplished now by striking it out. I think a part of it at least we had a right to keep out.

Mr. RANNEY. As affecting their private affairs?

Mr. EDEN. As not affecting anybody we are authorized to inquire about.

Mr. RANNEY. Why did you not make an objection in regard to the inquiry into the private affairs of the Bell company?

Mr. EDEN. I had met with so much opposition in making objections that I had become timid, and thought probably the objection would come with better grace from the other side. I only want to say that I do not see that anything can be accomplished now by striking it out.

The CHAIRMAN. The request of General Johnson is that all of the testimony on pages 517, 518, 519, 520, 521, 522, 523, 524, 525, 526, 527, and 528, and part of the testimony printed on pages 534 and 535 shall be stricken out. The gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. Ranney) moves that the request shall not be complied with. As many as favor the motion will say aye.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, while on the simple motion made as to General Johnson's request I should vote aye, recognizing the motion in the present shape as stating that General Johnson is in contempt, I will vote no.

The question was put and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANNEY. I call for the ayes and noes.

The CHAIRMAN. The result has been announced, and it is too late. If there is no objection, the yeas and nays will be ordered.

Mr. RANNEY. Never mind. I will waive it.

Mr. HALL. Is it understood that the clerk from the Ebbitt House will be here to-day?

The CHAIRMAN. I am informed that he will not be here to-day.

Mr. RANNEY (to the chairman). Did you request Dr. Rogers to come here?

The CHAIRMAN. I will do so, or I will issue a subpoena if you desire it. I will send word in some way.

Mr. OATES. I move that the committee adjourn until 1 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to, and the committee adjourned until Thursday, May 20, 1886, at 1 p. m.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Thursday, May 20, 1886.

The committee was called to order at 1.20 p. m.

The CHAIRMAN. I am informed that the witness from the Ebbitt House is present.

CHARLES E. GIBBS came before the committee, and was duly sworn.

By the CHAIRMAN (Mr. Boyle):

Question. What is your place of residence?—Answer. The Ebbitt House.

Q. What position do you fill at the Ebbitt House?—A. Cashier and bookkeeper.

Q. How long have you had that place?—A. Between six and seven years.

Q. Were you employed there in that capacity during the summer of 1885?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you the Ebbitt House register for the latter part of July?

The witness produced the book called for.

Q. Is the book which you produce here the Ebbitt House register for the months of July and August, 1885?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does it run into September?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Under date of July 29, in this register, I find the name of Charles P. Huntington, of Mississippi. Can you tell whether he arrived at the Ebbitt House on that day?—A. Yes, sir; he did.

Q. At what time in the day?—A. For dinner.

Q. That would be at what time?—A. Any time between 2 and 7 o'clock.

Q. His is the second name for dinner, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that would indicate that he arrived early in the afternoon?—A. That might be, or it might be that he arrived as late as 4 or 5 or 6 o'clock.

Q. Are there not five or six names after his?—A. No, sir; only one after his for dinner.

Q. I see also the name of H. Van Benthuyzen following that of Charles P. Huntington; do you know whether they came together?—A. I do not; no, sir.

Q. Do you know that Mr. Van Benthuyzen came at that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. It is the next succeeding name, is it?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, one name follows the other.

Q. To what room was Mr. Huntington first assigned?—A. Mr. Huntington was first assigned to room 232.

Q. Was he afterwards changed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To what room?—A. No. 7.

Q. Mr. Van Benthuyzen was assigned to what room at first?—A. No. 108.

Q. And was his room changed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He was changed to what room?—A. To 232.

Q. I see some marks here following the name of Mr. Van Benthuyzen.—A. I guess those were made by the clerk; he got the names mixed.

Q. Mr. Van Benthuyzen, then, was changed to the room which Mr. Huntington vacated?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I do not know that it has any significance, but I want to get at all the facts. Can you state how long Mr. Huntington remained at the hotel?—A. Only from the books.

Q. Please turn to the book and ascertain.

Mr. HALL. In his answer let him state what book it is.

The WITNESS. This is my ledger.

Q. The hotel ledger?—A. Yes, sir. It shows the time of arrival, the length of time they stay, and the time to which they settle their bills. Charles P. Huntington came to dinner on the 29th of July, and left after breakfast on the 4th of August; he was there six days.

Q. After dinner, you say, on the 4th of August?—A. After breakfast; that makes just the even days.

Q. How long did Mr. Van Benthuyzen remain?—A. He came to dinner on the 29th of July, and he left after breakfast on the 4th of August.

Q. He seems to have arrived at the same time with Mr. Huntington and to have departed with him?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. He left after breakfast on the 4th of August?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Q. The entries indicate that they had been there continuously meanwhile, do they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I see the name of Gen. Bradley T. Johnson under the date of July 30, 1885; do you know that General Johnson was there at that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time in the day does the book indicate that he arrived?—A. To breakfast.

Q. That would be before 2 o'clock.—A. That would be before 11 o'clock.

Q. How long did he remain?—A. He went off that day, the same day.

Q. He had no room assigned him?—A. I do not think he had.

Q. There is nothing on the book to indicate that, is there?—A. No, sir.

Q. I see the name of Hon. Casey Young under the same date, July 30. Did Colonel Young arrive at the hotel on that day?—A. Yes.

Q. And also the name of Hon. George Gantt.

Mr. RANNEY. Right under it?

The CHAIRMAN. One following the other.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you state what time they arrived?—A. They arrived for lodging, after 10 o'clock at night.

Q. Have you any recollection of the fact of their coming?—A. No, sir.

Q. Can you state how long they remained at the hotel?—A. Yes.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. What does the book indicate about the time they arrived?—A. That they came there for lodging.

Q. Do you know what time in the evening the southern train gets in, or did get in at that time?—A. That train gets in, I think, somewhere in the neighborhood of 11.15.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I call your attention to this. Were they the last arrivals on that day?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. 11.15 in the evening you mean?—A. Yes, sir. Mr. Young came there for lodging on the 30th of July, and left after tea on the 1st of August.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Col. Young had room 212?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the length of Col. Gantt's stay?—A. Gantt came there for lodging on the 30th of July, and left after tea August 1.

Q. He came and departed with Col. Young?—A. At the same time; yes, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. Are you looking beyond that, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. I am looking to the 4th of August; I wanted to cover that period.

Q. Do you know whether Gen. Bradley T. Johnson was at the hotel at any other time before the 4th of August?—A. I do not. He comes in and goes out often; simply comes in in the morning and registers his name.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not find his name.

The WITNESS. You will find it at different times through the book along about that time.

Q. I wish you would look at the book and state whether he was there at any other time than on the 30th of July?—A. I couldn't say, and for this reason: Because we don't post up unless they stop there.

Q. I mean on this book (the register.) You can tell from his handwriting very readily.

Mr. RANNEY. Look and see if he was not there on August 1st.

The WITNESS (after examination). No, sir.

Q. Do you say, then, that he was there only once from the 30th of July to the 4th of August?—A. That is the only time he registered.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Does he appear to have staid over night at that time?—A. No, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I call your attention to the date of September 3; was General Johnson at your hotel on that day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At what hour in the day did he arrive?—A. In the morning.

Q. Did he remain over?—A. No, sir.

Mr. RANNEY (to the chairman). You will find that Mr. Casey Young and Mr. Huntington stopped at Wormley's; they did not stop at the Ebbitt House. They arrived at Wormley's on September 2, and I have seen their names registered there, and Young swears that they stopped there.

Q. Did he stop over?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, I want to know whether General Johnson was at the hotel at any other time between the 27th of August and the 11th of September than the time last named. Look at the register and ascertain.—A. (After examining the register.) He was there September 3d.

Q. That day is the only time, is it?—A. That is the only one.

Q. You might extend your examination to the 15th.—A. (After examining further.) That is all.

Q. He was there only the once between the 27th of August and 15th of September, and that was on the 3d of September?—A. Yes.

Q. Does General Johnson usually stop at your house?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. If General Johnson should come there at any time and not have any room or meal, would he put his name on the book?—A. He would be very likely to do it.

Q. If he came to see some individuals in their own room, without stopping at the house other than to call on the individuals and have interviews with them?—A. Then he might come and not put his name on the book.

Q. Will you look under date of July 30 and see whether there was a Mr. Keasbey there from New Jersey?—A. (After examination.) I find the name, A. Q. Keasbey.

Q. How long did he stay?—A. He did not stop over.

Q. A. Q. Keasbey, Newark, New Jersey; how long was he there by the book?—A. He didn't stop over, and if he didn't stop over that night we wouldn't keep any record of it.

Q. What is B for?—A. Breakfast. He came for breakfast, and went away that day some time.

Q. You spoke of the time the Southern train gets in at night; do you know when it leaves in the morning?—A. The first one in the morning leaves at 6 o'clock—the early train.

Q. What is the next train?—A. At 11 o'clock.

Q. Have you any means of stating whether Mr. Van Benthuyzen and Mr. Huntington, on the 4th of August, left on the 6 o'clock train or on the 11 o'clock? They seem to have been there at breakfast.—A. (After examining book.) No, sir.

Q. You cannot tell?—A. No, sir; they went after breakfast; they may have had breakfast as early as five o'clock, or they may have had it up to half-past ten o'clock.

Q. What is the train usually taken by people going south?—A. The 11 o'clock train.

Mr. HALL. You say they usually take the 11 o'clock train?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know where Mr. Young went to when he left there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did he take his meals there at the Ebbitt House?—A. I couldn't tell you unless I had my meal-book.

Q. Will not this book show?—A. No, sir.

Q. I suppose you were in no position where you could see who came and visited them at their rooms?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know Attorney-General Garland?—A. No, sir.

Q. You do not know him personally?—A. No, sir.

Q. In July you only find General Johnson's name there on the 30th?—A. Only one day, the 30th.

Q. Do you not find it there on the 31st?—A. No, sir.

Q. He swears that he was there on the 31st. Then, it appears that he did not register.—A. He did not register on the 31st; no, sir.

Q. He lives in Baltimore?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So if he came in and spent a few hours and left it might not appear on the book?—A. It might not appear on the book; no, sir.

Q. His coming, then, to your house at that time was exceptional with him; it was not his regular place of stopping?—A. Oh, no. He often comes in; he has been coming there for quite a long while. He comes in for breakfast, or possibly does not have anything, and simply puts his name on the book.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I think you misunderstood my question. I asked you whether he was in the habit of stopping at your house when he came to this city?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know whether he stops at any other hotel?—A. I do not; no, sir.

Q. You do say that he frequently comes to your house?—A. Frequently comes there; yes, sir.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Mr. Keasbey got there for breakfast in the morning?—A. Yes.

Q. Then he came on the night train; the train comes in from New York in the morning.—A. I don't know what time.

Q. There is a night train comes from Newark, and gets here in the morning?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. That is all.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. In speaking of the arrival and departure of guests at the Ebbitt House, you do not speak of their arrival and departure to and from the city of Washington, do you?—A. Oh, no. You mean in regard to the time they get there and leave?

Mr. HALL. Yes.

The WITNESS. No, sir.

Q. You simply have these books at the hotel, by which you are able to form an opinion of the time they leave the hotel?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they may have been in the city before and after the time shown for their arrival and departure?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As a matter of memory do you recollect the presence of Mr. Van Benthuyzen, Mr. Casey Young, and these other gentlemen at the hotel?

The WITNESS. At that time?

Mr. HALL. At that time.

A. Yes sir.

Q. You remember seeing them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember whether they had any conferences at their room?—A. I do not know.

Q. You do not know anything about that?—A. No, sir.

Q. Consequently you would not know who called upon them and who did not?—A. No, sir.

Mr. HALL. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. That will do, Mr. Gibbs.

Mr. RANNEY. I have here two copies of the New York Times that I spoke of yesterday, of September 28th and 29th, 1885, containing what purports to be an interview with Mr. Van Benthuyzen in Chicago.

Mr. HALL. I want to make another inquiry of Mr. Gibbs before he goes.

Q. I will ask you whether your attention has been heretofore called to these names on the hotel books?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. By what persons?—A. By Col. Young.

Q. Anybody else?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nobody else has been making any inquiry about them?—A. No, sir.

Q. When was it Col. Young first called your attention to it?—A. The time he arrived and left.

Q. When did he make the inquiry?—A. I guess half a dozen times in the last four or five months.

Mr. HALL. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. I see Mr. Clay here.

CECIL CLAY recalled and further examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Mr. Clay, have you the papers that you were to produce?—Answer. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen, Mr. Clay produces here a list of the cases in which applications were made for the right to bring suits in the name of the Government, and in which the applications were allowed, together with the letters in each case. He has also produced heretofore a list of cases in which applications were refused, and he will produce another similar list.

Mr. RANNEY. He did produce that.

The CHAIRMAN. I know; and my recollection is that the last I saw of it you had it, and as you are not able to find it he will have to make another. I want them to go in together.

The WITNESS. I am making out a similar list to that, of cases that were refused.

Mr. RANNEY. Let me make another search. [After search.] I do not find them. The statement that I saw was a statement showing what was done with each application.

The CHAIRMAN. I think that is all we want with Mr. Clay to-day. He will please send us a list of the cases refused.

The CHAIRMAN. I have a letter sent me some days ago by Mr. Montgomery, Commissioner of Patents. I do not know that he desired that it should go in. It is furnishing information that we requested him to furnish. I will submit it to Mr. Ranney, because he made the request.

Mr. RANNEY. (After examining the letter.) I think that is already in.

The CHAIRMAN. Young Mr. Rogers is here. Is it desired to put him on the stand?

Mr. RANNEY. Before that occurs, I want to put in the interview in the New York Times of September 28th, referred to yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. What does it purport to be?

Mr. RANNEY. It purports to be what I stated some time ago, a telegraphic interview with Mr. Van Benthuyzen in Chicago. I also desire to put in the one in the Times of the 29th of September.

Mr. OATES. I suggest that we had better have that identified as being correct, by Mr. Van Benthuyzen, who is present, unless it is admitted.

Mr. EDEN. I do not think that the committee ought to assume the correctness of what purports to be an interview printed in a newspaper. I do not think Mr. Van Benthuyzen or anybody else could be bound by it.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Van Benthuyzen is here, and if it is desirable he can be examined.

Mr. EDEN. I think Mr. Van Benthuyzen ought to be allowed to state whether it is correct or not.

WATSON VAN BENTHUYSEN recalled and further examined.

By Mr. RANNEY :

Q. In the New York Times of September 28, 1885, there is an article, which I desire you first to read, purporting to be an account of an interview with you at Chicago. Will you read it and tell me whether that interview occurred.—A. (After the witness had examined the interview referred to.) Well, I have no recollection of any specific interview like this, but I have no doubt it is correct if they say so. A great deal of this is matter taken from a letter I think that I wrote the President; I presume it is correct, but I cannot recollect now any specific interview of that kind. I know I talked to a number of gentlemen there connected with the press, and I presume that is correct; I do not know.

Q. Do you not recollect reading it in the Times after it was published?—A. No, sir; I have no distinct recollection of reading it, though I have no doubt I did so, because I was reading the New York Times daily.

Q. Will you look at the article in the first column of the New York Times of Tuesday, September 29, 1885, and tell me whether you sent that? That article is over your own signature.—A. It is a copy of a letter that I telegraphed to the President. I presume I gave a copy of it to the gentleman who represented the Times there; I do not think I telegraphed it; I may have done so, but I don't think I did.

Q. It seems to be over your own signature?—A. The letter is mine; it is the letter I telegraphed to the President. The date of it seems to be left out, but that is a copy of a letter that I telegraphed to the President.

Q. Did you furnish it to the Times?—A. I presume I gave them a copy.

Q. Are you not aware that it is only a portion of the letter you sent to the President?—A. Only a portion of the letter? No, sir; this is the whole letter, I think.

Q. Have you compared them to see?—A. No, sir; I have not.

Q. Were there not attached to your letter to the President some long extracts from books in regard to the Reis patents?—A. Ah, that was a subsequent letter.

Q. Did you not pay for the insertion of this article in the Times?—A. No, sir; I did not; I was not called upon to do so. I have no recollection of ever paying the Times for anything, except recently, while I was at home. I noticed that Mr. Jones testified here that there was an advertisement of ours put in the Times, and that it had not been paid for by my company. I knew nothing about it. I had been away from New Orleans so much that I knew nothing about any bill of that character not having been paid. But the moment I saw that testimony given by Mr. Jones, I directed the secretary of the company to investigate the matter immediately. He found a bill for $56, and a draft was sent him at once. That was about two weeks ago, I believe; since Mr. Jones gave his testimony.

Q. Has the Times inserted all of your other articles without pay?—A. Well, I have never had any articles. When they came to me and asked for any information I had or anything I could give them, I have given it to them, and at times I think I have voluntarily offered them matter that I thought was of interest to them. They have never charged me anything except where it was matter put in as an advertisement. These gentlemen came to me and got information sometimes, and they did not charge me for putting it in; I suppose they considered it in the nature of news.

Q. You are aware, are you not, that they have published a great many articles of yours in the last six months; telegraph letters or copies of them, &c.?—A. Yes, sir; but, according to my recollection, they have all been published as news. I have no recollection ever paying for anything except this one bill, and I don't recollect what that was for; I recollect the amount was either $56 or $58.

Q. Do you remember saying that the reason you did not send the whole of one of your letters to the President to be published was because they would charge you so much for it?

Mr. OATES. I desire here to raise an objection, as the witness was not recalled to be examined generally.

The CHAIRMAN. On what do you base your object on?

Mr. OATES. Because under the rule adopted by us it is not competent to examine him generally.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the resolution?

Mr. OATES. Yes, sir; he is called for the purpose of identifying the paper, and Mr. Ranney is proceeding to examine him generally, and I object to it.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not recall the terms of the resolution. There is something in it in regard to recalling witnesses, and allowing them to be examined in reference to matter adduced since their previous examination. I do not know whether this would be within the resolution or not.

Mr. EDEN. It is not at all confined to the introduction of the paper.

The CHAIRMAN. It need not necessarily be confined to this particular paper. If it is intended to affect the question raised by the testimony of Mr. Jones, it would be within the resolution.

Mr. EDEN. Mr. Van Benthuyzen having been a witness himself, if there is anything he wishes to explain, or anything that he wants to rebut, he would have the right under the resolution to testify, but that is not what he is being examined for now. This is bringing out new matter.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not understand that the resolution is confined to cases where the witness himself desires to be examined; but the witness may be recalled for examination upon matters introduced since his previous examination. Mr. Jones has testified since the previous examination of Mr. Van Benthuyzen, regarding the publication of one of the articles in the Times, and the charge for it. I think the proof as to pay for the articles published in the Times would be within the exception. (To the stenographer.) Please read the question to the witness.

The stenographer read as follows:

"Q. Do you remember saying that the reason you did not send the whole of one of your letters to the President to be published was because they would charge you so much for it?"

The WITNESS. Who would charge me?

Mr. RANNEY. The newspaper—the Times.

A. No, sir; nothing of that kind ever occurred that I know anything about.

Mr. RANNEY. That is all. I now desire to put in those two articles.

The WITNESS. None of these articles were ever put in by me as advertisements, nor were they ever paid for, so far as I can recollect. They were sought from me, according to my recollection, by the gentlemen representing not only the Times but other papers in Chicago. They were all used and published as news.

Mr. HALL. This is the New York Times.

The WITNESS. I know; but the New York Times has representatives in Chicago who called on me at the hotel.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Have you looked at your dispatch or letter to the President as published in the Times?—A. Here is a letter of mine to the President published in the Times.

Q. Do you say that is or is not complete?—A. That letter, I think, is complete.

Q. Something has been said as to a letter of yours to the President in which reference was made to the invention of the telephone, and citations or quotations from works upon the subject; is that this letter, or some other letter?—A. That was subsequent to this.

The CHAIRMAN. That is already in evidence, I think.

The WITNESS. That was a letter that contained a large number of extracts from German publications showing that Philip Reis invented the telephone and transmitted articulate speech by electricity.

Q. You say that letter was subsequent to this?—A. That is my recollection. According to my recollection, I had intended to send those extracts with the letter, but I subsequently changed my mind, and then wrote another letter and added those extracts to it. It may be that I made mention of something of the kind in this letter.

Q. I show you the letter of October 10, 1885. State whether that is the letter you speak of where the extracts were given. Just glance at it, and state whether that is the letter.—A. Mr. Boyle, I think that is the letter I sent. I will not vouch for the correctness of this publication, of which the letter you show me forms a part, for, as I have said before, I have discovered that publications of this character are not correct as a general thing. But I know that I sent a letter of that character about that time.

The CHAIRMAN. That will do.

The WITNESS. Mr. Boyle, I do not know that it is necessary, but I would like to make a little explanation about a statement that Mr. Von Briesen made here with reference to the payment to Mr. Wilbur. I presume Mr. Von Briesen's statement is correct. When I was on the stand before I was asked if I had paid Mr. Wilbur anything. I never did pay him anything, except I gave him $2 to pay for the affidavits he made before a notary public. Mr. Von Briesen was employed by our company to gather testimony and evidence, and had a running account with our company, and when he paid out anything he charged it to the company. Of my own personal knowledge I do not know that he paid that money, although I may have been in the room at the time; I did not see it, and I did not know anything about it except that I knew he was going to retain Mr. Wilbur to hunt up some matters here in the Patent Office; so that my original statement was absolutely correct. I have paid him no money, and I knew nothing about any money paid him, nor was I at home when Mr. Von Breisen sent his account; whether that charge was in that account of his or not I don't know.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all. Is there any objection to these newspaper interviews going in? They need not both go in, as one is already in.

Mr. HALL. It ought to be stated, I suppose.

Mr. RANNEY. I want it published as a whole, and not a part of it.

The CHAIRMAN. One thing at a time. Is there any objection to the interview of the 28th of September going in? If not, it can go in. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. RANNEY. I am not certain, Mr. Boyle, whether the other one is already in or not. I have an impression that only a portion of that is in.

The CHAIRMAN. Then we had better compare and see if it is.

Mr. RANNEY. If it is in you will know where it appears.

The CHAIRMAN. Here it is.

Mr. RANNEY. The whole of it?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANNEY (after examining). It seems to be the same published entire in the New York Times of September 29, 1885; it is the same one that was put in yesterday.

Mr. RANNEY. Was this second one put in yesterday?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, all the communications to the President, three telegrams and the letter, have been put in.

The following is the interview referred to, from the New York Times of Monday, September 28, 1885:

“THE TELEPHONE MONOPOLY—SOMETHING ABOUT THE EFFORTS TO BREAK IT—MR. VAN BENTHUYSEN IN EXPLANATION OF HIS RECENTLY MADE CHARGES AGAINST THE BELL COMPANY.

“Chicago, September 27.—Mr. Watson Van Benthuyesen, of New Orleans, President of the National Improved Telephone Company, of Louisiana, who was instrumental in bringing the suit against the Bell Telephone Company to have its patents declared void, is at the Grand Pacific Hotel, in this city.

“Concerning this suit Mr. Van Benthuyesen said to-day: ‘On the 12th of July last I wrote Attorney-General Garland requesting him to institute suit against the Bell Telephone Company under a law passed at the last session of Congress making it incumbent on him to proceed against patents issued fraudulently, or having fraudulent claims, at the request of any citizen. I charged that A. G. Bell was not the inventor of the telephone. Speaking telephones were invented previously by Reiss, Vanderweier, Pickering, Cross, and Edison, and Bell was not the inventor of any telephone, and the Bell patents are not valid in whole or in part. I also charged that the Bell patent of 1876 is not being used; that it is without value, and that the transmission of speech at the present day by the Bell company is by the use of what is known as the Blake transmitter, which was an infringement of the Edison patent, which latter patent Edison claimed was an improvement on Reiss, and that the Blake transmitter was largely in use in this country three years before being patented, and therefore the patent was void. I charged further that vocal and other sounds were transmitted telegraphically long before Bell was heard of. I therefore requested that proper proceedings be had to relieve the people of the great wrong perpetrated in the issue of claims, giving to these patents the exclusive right to transmit articulate speech by electricity, asking that such proceedings should be instituted in Memphis before Judge Hammond. It turned out, however, that there was no such law as that referred to. It passed the House, but disappeared before reaching the Senate, and is supposed to have been stolen. So I withdrew the letter and followed the provisions of the statute.

“‘The attempt of the Bell Telephone and Western Union Telegraph monopolies,’ continued Mr. Van Benthuyesen, to make it appear that Attorney-General Garland had given the permission to institute the Government suit against the Bell company in Memphis, and that it was improper for him to do so, because he is connected with a competing telephone company, is characteristic of those two concerns. Mr. Garland did not grant the permission. He was not in Washington. He was out in Arkansas somewhere when permission was granted. I had first made written application to have this suit instituted direct to the Department of Justice. After I ascertained that the statutes provided a different course from that I have outlined, I then, with the assistance of others, presented the case to Judge McCorry, district attorney at Memphis, giving him overwhelming evidence that Bell did not invent the telephone, nor did he discover the art of transmitting speech by electricity. These proofs were so convincing that Judge McCorry immediately laid them before the Department of Justice, and asked permission to institute the suit, which was promptly granted. We then applied to have four attorneys appointed special Government attorneys to assist, and J. R. Beckwith, George Gantt, Col. Casey Young, and Gen. Wright were appointed. The permission to institute the suit was given by the acting Attorney-General during the absence of Mr. Garland. If Mr. Garland had been present and had refused to grant permission because of his personal relations to another telephone company, it would have been a great wrong and imposition that he should permit his private affairs to prevent his performing a duty to the public. The Pan-Electric Telephone Company has no interest in the National Improved Telephone Company, and the suit at Memphis was petitioned for by the citizens and not by telephone companies, and the expense attending it is provided for by subscription. Not a single man who is mentioned as having stock in the Pan-Electric company signed the petition for this suit. The Associated Press dispatches from Memphis when the suit was instituted were suppressed. The Bell attorney threatened me with serious consequences for attacking the validity of the Bell patents, and then lied about it, and now they object to being made defendants in a court of justice wherein there will be no opportunity for their peculiar tactics, which make them more dangerous to the liberties of the people than a standing army.'"

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. J. Harris Rogers is here.

Mr. RANNEY. There are some more documents and letters that possibly better go in. In the Tribune there were some letters not published in the World.

Mr. OATES. Whose were they?

Mr. RANNEY. Casey Young's.

Mr. OATES. I suggest that they be left until Mr. Young comes on the stand again.

Mr. MOFFATT. Is Mr. Young to be here to-day?

The CHAIRMAN. He will not be here. I heard from him this morning, and he is quite unwell.

Mr. RANNEY. They could go into the record and be printed, and then if he has anything to say about them he can state it.

Mr. OATES. I think we had better leave them until he comes on in connection with something that he wants to say.

Mr. RANNEY. It is immaterial to me whether they go in now or hereafter.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Rogers, will you take the stand?

J. HARRIS ROGERS was then recalled and further examined.

By Mr. RANNEY.

Question. There has been something said here about the American Postal Telegraph Company. What do you know of a combination with that company, and how did your father and yourself happen to have stock of the American Postal Telegraph Company?—Answer. I have not any stock of the American Postal Telegraph Company myself, but my father has, and it was on that account that I declined advising our board as to whether they should consolidate or not. If you desire, I can tell what I know about the propositions that were made.

Q. I saw in a published pamphlet that there was a combination between the two companies, your father's company and that. Have you got that?—A. Yes, sir; I brought it here in the letter book. I think I have it in my office now.

Q. Your father knows best about it, does he?—A. Yes, sir; he knows all about it and the origin of it.

Q. We had something of it in chief. There seems to have been a combination between the two companies.—A. Between the American Postal Telegraph Company and the Pan-Electric Company?

Q. Yes; or the Rogers Telegraph company, one of the two, I do not know which. I think it was the Rogers company in Pennsylvania and the Pan-Electric company.

Mr. HALL. Let the witness tell.

Mr. RANNEY. Tell me how it is.

A. My father put in two millions of the American Postal into the Rogers Telephone and Telegraph Company.

Q. What was that company?—A. That was the Pennsylvania company, a sub-company of the Pan-Electric company.

Mr. RANNEY. That general fact is all that I care for about it. I will put a question in regard to it. I do not know that I remember when that interview was held at which you were invited and your father not invited, and which you did not attend because your father was not invited. When was that?—A. There has been some misunderstanding about that. I never was invited. It was on G street, at Casey Young's rooms. I stated in my testimony that I thought it was on H street, but I suggested that it was near a church with a gold cross on it. It was, in fact, on G street, near the church there.

Q. What do you know about that interview?—A. My brother came out to the country and told me that Colonel Young was very anxious to see me; that Colonel Gantt had come a thousand miles to see me, and that I had failed to meet him, and he had gone home. So I drove in the buggy to the Ebbitt House and called at the office and asked for Casey Young. They told me he had left, and that I could probably get his address, they thought, by going to the baggage or the carriage man of the hotel. I did so and he told me that it was on G street, and having seen Casey Young at a house in that vicinity some ten years previous, the first time I ever met him, I went there, and after inquiring at two or three places I found him. He then went over pretty much the same conversation that he had had previously with us at our house.

Q. You need not repeat all that. That is the time when you say that he told you the same story that he told you before, about the Government suit?—A. It was alluded to. I was with him several hours.

Q. I do not care to go over it only to identify that particular allusion to your father.—A. I was alone at first, and subsequently my father joined us.

Q. Now about the meeting which you had.—A. Well, I was in and out several times during that day and thus saw Colonel Young, who was also in and out. I had made an arrangement to meet my father there, but left word, in the event my father should come and find me absent, that he would find me at the Ebbitt House. I also said to Colonel Young that I would like for him to remain, so as to tell my father that he need not go to the Ebbitt House, but still would find me at Colonel Young's rooms. The idea of my going to the Ebbitt House! I had not been asked to go there. But this was an engagement I had made with my father. Colonel Young said: "They don't want the old man around there." He said: "Van Benthuyzen and that crowd." I am not sure that he used Mr. Van Benthuyzen's name, but that was the idea conveyed to me, that C. P. Huntington and the National Improved people were at the Ebbitt House, and he said: "I don't want the old man around there; they don't like him; they are angry with him." But I was never asked to go.

Mr. EDEN. The witness is repeating testimony that he gave before.

Q. I only want to fix the place at which that meeting to which you refer was held. It was on G street?—A. Yes, sir; on G street next to F street.

Q. Do you mean the meeting held between you and Colonel Young, or the one at which they did not want your father to come?—A. That was on G street at Casey Young's room, when they were having a conference at the Ebbitt House and where we spoke of the Government suit, and when Casey Young told me that he was drawing up a contract with the National Improved Company, and that we wanted their money, and they wanted our organization.

Q. You need not go over the testimony. I only wanted to fix a date. In regard to that interview to which your father did not go, did Colonel Young tell you what occurred there?—A. No, sir; he told me that he was drawing up a contract so as to avoid any future litigation in the event that we should be successful.

Q. There is one thing more. Since you testified before, Mr. Gardner has been before the committee and stated that he drew up two or three copies of that contract. He says that he never told me or anybody of it. How did I learn that?—A. Through me—I mean indirectly you got it through me.

Q. How did you learn it?

The WITNESS. About the copies?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

A. Well, the day after Colonel Young left the place that we are speaking of, I called to see him, and they told me that he had gone. Finding that Colonel Young had gone, I went around to the office of the Pan-Electric company—the Washington company—and I met Major Gardner. I was very anxious to see this contract that Colonel Young was preparing the day before, or that he had mentioned the day before, with the National Improved company. So I asked Major Gardner if he had heard the contents of it, and he said that he had made several copies of it for Colonel Young, and also that Colonel Young had intended to have it copied by a type-writer, but that he did not know any one that he could trust it with, and that he had brought it to him and requested him to make several copies, and he had made them. I asked him what the contents of it were. "Well," he said, "I copied it, and you know how it is in copying; I don't remember what was in it." I said, "Very well, Colonel Young told me about the substance of it," which I related to him, thinking that probably after he saw that I was pretty well posted, he would give me the rest, the full agreement, the contents of it. He said that what I had related was about the contents, but that in copying it he did not remember what it was, and spoke in an off-hand way, so that I saw he did not want to give me the information I desired, and I left.

Q. It was from that that you inferred or understood that he knew about it?—A. Of course. And then I went to Senator Harris's room directly, in my buggy, and I asked Senator Harris the result of the interview at the Ebbitt House. There were several gentlemen present, and he asked me to take a seat. I declined and told him I was going into the country, and just wanted to know about what had been done. He said "They had a conference up there, and I took the responsibility for our company, or the Pan-Electric company." He said, "I do not know that I had any such power, but I was satisfied that all would have agreed to the responsibility I incurred, and Mr. Van Benthuyzen took the responsibility for the National Improved company."

Q. He took the responsibility to do what?—A. The responsibility of signing. Now I want to state here that there were several persons present, and he did not speak of it as the National Improved company. He said, "I took the responsibility for our side, and Mr. Van Benthuyzen took the responsibility of signing for his company." I asked him what was the substance of it, and he said, "We entered into an agreement that we would fight the common enemy together." Several parties were present and he was very guarded in his language. He said, "We entered into an agreement that we would fight the common enemy together, and that no compromise should be made without discussion at which both parties should be present." That is substantially what he told me.

Q. Did he say anything to you about there being a provision in it for a Government suit?—A. No, sir. Other parties were present, and he did not say anything about a Government suit. I supposed, however, that he knew about it, for I knew about it. Colonel Young told me all about it, and I supposed he had informed Senator Harris.

Q. Is there anything else you want to state? Those are the only two things that occurred to me that I wanted to ask you about.—A. No; I am at the pleasure of the committee. I do not know anything further.

Q. I did not know but what there might be something else you desired to state. I do not remember any of your testimony which has been contradicted.—A. I noticed in Senator Harris's testimony that he was not certain whether he signed that first contract here or in Memphis.

Q. I remember that. Right there let me ask you this: How long was that interview with Senator Harris, where he told you that he had signed, after the interview that you had with Casey Young?—A. It was the next day. I drove from Major Gardner's office down to Senator Harris's. I noticed in Major Gardner's testimony that he said he thought it very strange that I came around to enlighten his mind on the subject of the conversation I had with reference to the Government suit. I saw an article some time after my father's letter in the Tribune, headed "Defense of Garland," I believe, and there was an article in some paper here stating that the whole affair could be settled by Casey Young's coming out and denying what the Rogerses said; that he might deny it, and that would be the end of it. I tried to recall to mind and see who I had told, and I remembered having a conversation with Major Gardner, and I went directly to see him, and when I got there I met a colored man named John at the door, and I said to him, "I am going up stairs to ask Major Gardner some questions, and I want you to come into the room and be a witness to what transpires." I walked in, and proceeded to see whether this gentleman remembered that conversation, and whether he would acknowledge before this witness that he did. At first he apparently admitted that he knew of it, but upon my asking a little more specifically about it, he said, "Well, I don't remember anything about it much." He said, "Mr. Rogers, you know I am a lawyer, and," he says, "the more trouble we make—it won't do any good at all. You know I am a lawyer,"—and I never knew it from that day to this.

Q. You asked him if he remembered what?—A. The conversation I had with him at the time. The very day that Colonel Young went over this affair at his room on G street, Colonel Young sent for me at his room on G street to get a certain instrument, and I then saw Major Gardner and talked about the Government suit with him, and then returned to Colonel Young and told him that Major Gardner knew all about it, and Colonel Young expressed surprise and said, "Confound it; I told General Bradley Johnson and Mr. Henkle about it, and because it is so good they could not keep it."

Q. You went over that before; I do not care to repeat it. Is there anything else that occurs to you?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. You speak of a meeting at Colonel Young's room on G street. Do you mean that you met anybody there except Colonel Young?—A. I met Colonel Young first, and subsequently my father, and during the day a colored boy was frequently in there—a mulatto who has waited on Colonel Young for many years.

Q. You do not mean to say that there was any meeting held of telephone people for consultation there?—A. No, sir; except my father, Colonel Young, and myself.

Q. Was there any other meeting held at Colonel Young's room on G street?—A. No, sir; that was the only time I saw Colonel Young there. Previous to that I met Colonel Young at our residence, where he told us that Mr. Garland had determined to bring the suit. I would like to suggest that I noticed in my testimony—

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You have been asked if you had any meeting when you and your father were present. I want to understand if you mean to say that the meeting to which your father was not invited was at Colonel Young's room?—A. Was it at Colonel Young's room on G street? Oh, my father came in subsequent to the time I was first there.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. A meeting of whom?—A. Of Colonel Young, my father, and myself.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was there ever a meeting of the persons interested in the Pan-Electric and the National Improved companies, the parties spoken of here, to which you were invited, and at which it was said your father's presence was not desired?—A. I mean to say that there was a meeting at the Ebbitt House—

Q. At any house.—A. From all this testimony, I will say yes, that there was at the Ebbitt House.

Q. Were you invited to a meeting at the Ebbitt House?—A. I was not.

Q. Then you do not mean to say yes?—A. I was not invited—

Q. You do not mean to say yes, then? I asked you whether there was a meeting of parties interested in the Pan-Electric and the National Improved companies?—A. I was judging from what I heard then through Colonel Young and other parties that were carrying on negotiations and were in daily consultation at the Ebbitt House.

Q. Were you invited there?—A. No, sir; I was not. Upon my suggestion that I was going around there and that I had made an appointment to meet my father there Colonel Young said, "No; we do not want the old man there."

Q. That was after Colonel Gantt had left?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had not the other parties left also?—A. No, sir; I judge not, for a negro boy came and told Colonel Young that Mr. Van Benthuyzen and Mr. Wilbur were waiting at the Ebbitt House for him.

Q. You were not invited there at all?—A. No, sir; I was not.

Q. What was said as to your father's presence not being desirable at any meeting?—A. He said, "They don't want the old man around there; those gentlemen"—referring to the National Improved Company men that were at the Ebbitt House—"they don't want to meet him." He says, "They are angry with him, and they don't want the old man around there."

Q. That, I understand you now, was when you stated to Colonel Young at his rooms on G street that you were going to the Ebbitt House to meet your father?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And had no reference to a meeting between your father, yourself, and the other persons?—A. Oh, no. But I supposed, being a very heavy owner in the Pan Electric Company, and as our associates were having daily conferences there, that I would be invited and consulted. But upon this suggestion that they did not want my father there, I never went. I would not push myself where I imagined that they did not want me.

Q. My recollection of your former testimony was that it was a formal meeting at the Ebbitt House to which you were invited, and that it was stated that they did not want your father.—A. No, sir; I never stated that it was a formal meeting. I expect you got that from my father's pamphlet, in which he says there was a meeting.

Q. No; I have not read the pamphlet. You have said that after you had learned that the agreement had been written and copies made by Major Gardner, you made some inquiry of Major Gardner as to the contents of the agreement, and then you went to Senator Harris's room?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you found other persons there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did Senator Harris say at that time that he had signed the agreement, or that he had made the agreement?—A. He told me that he had taken the responsibility to sign for the Pan-Electric people, for our association or ourselves. I don't remember that he said "Pan-Electric." He said, "I have signed for our company, and Mr. Van Benthuyzen signed for his."

Q. You remember that he used the word "signed"?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And not the words that he had "made the agreement," or acted for your company?—A. That was very forcibly impressed on my mind.

Q. What was?—A. That he had signed the agreement; that he had taken the responsibility upon himself.

Q. I want to get the words he used; whether he said he had acted for your company in making an agreement, or whether he actually stated that he had signed the paper?—A. I am thoroughly of the belief, and it was impressed on me at the time, that he said he had signed.

Q. Signed the paper?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the date? Do you recall it?—A. It was the day I was told at Colonel Young's room that he had gone.

Q. Do you know anything beyond that regarding the date?—A. It was the day after the conference at the Ebbitt House.

Q. The conference at the Ebbitt House you speak of was when the agreement was made?—A. The day when I saw Colonel Young and he told me that he was writing up the agreement and wanted me to look at it. I left early that day and came back the next morning to his room and he was gone, and it was on that day that I went to Senator Harris's room and Major Gardner's, but not in regard to this information from Major Gardner. I went to Senator Harris and he told me—

Q. You are not able to fix the date independently?—A. No, sir; I think it was about the first of August. I have no data except that.

Q. Do you mean the first day of August?—A. No, sir; I have no data as to that. It was immediately after the conference at the Ebbitt House.

Q. You repeat the words "conference at the Ebbitt House." I asked you before whether you meant the occasion when the agreement was made between Colonel Young or Senator Harris and Mr. Van Benthuyzen.—A. It was the day after —

Q. I say was that the occasion, was that the conference that you speak of?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any knowledge as to who was present at that conference?—A. I have not—not of my own knowledge, except what Colonel Young told me and what Senator

Harris told me. Here is another point. I did say something more to Senator Harris. I said, "Senator, I am afraid that these men will get the advantage of Colonel Young. He seems to be very uneasy about our patent, and I am afraid that they will get the advantage of him. He is under the impression that the National Improved Company own all our patents, and he told me yesterday that they had told him that the Pan-Electric people did not have any receiver at all, upon which I gave him a number of receivers." Senator Harris said, "You need not be troubled about that. I was down at the Ebbitt House, and those gentlemen said nothing to me about it, and I guess Colonel Young drew a little upon his imagination." He said, "I was at the Ebbitt House and they said nothing of the kind to me."

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. There is one thing about which there may be a mistake. You have spoken of a meeting at Casey Young's room when you and your father were there only.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have spoken of a meeting at the Ebbitt House, too. I want to know whether, by anything that was said, you understood that they had a meeting at Colonel Young's room also.—A. No, sir; I never heard of their having a meeting at Colonel Young's room.

Q. I misunderstood you.—A. This meeting on G street you seem to confuse because my father was there at one time.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I gathered from your statement that there was no meeting at all on G street, but that you simply called at Colonel Young's room.—A. Yes, sir; I called at Colonel Young's room, my father and I. It was not a meeting of the board at all. He wanted to ask me about Mr. Marble's decision as to whether the New Orleans people owned our patent or not. He asked me about some patents, and he got in the buggy with me and we went down to Mr. Marble's office and got his report upon that subject.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. Who was this, Casey Young?—A. Yes; and he then returned and told me he was going back to the Ebbitt House and would meet me after a short while, on the same day, at his room, and then my father, Colonel Young, and myself were there together on the same day. That is the only day I ever met Colonel Young there.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Were you familiar with that book of Dr. Wellington Adams?—A. I glanced at it when it was published. It seems to be a compilation of what is in most books on electricity. I have glanced at it, but never have read it through.

Q. You have seen it so that you recognize it as Dr. Wellington Adams' book [handing a copy of the book in question to the witness]?—A. I never saw any of the copies bound like this.

Q. You will see that that was published in pamphlet form, with board covers put over the pamphlet covers. Look at the beginning of it.—A. Yes, sir; this seems to be it.

Q. You recognize that as the book, do you?—A. Yes, sir; I do.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. What book is that?—A. The book that was prepared by Dr. Adams, of Saint Louis, for the Pan-Electric company.

Q. Are you familiar with it?—A. As I said, I only glanced at it. It is simply a compilation of what you find in most books on electricity.

Q. You do not know whether that is the genuine book or not, do you?—A. Unless I should read every page, I could not say. It has the general appearance of the book.

Q. You only glanced at the title just now?—A. I glanced at the drawings.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. That book was gotten up by Dr. Adams for your Pan-Electric people, and was circulated by your people?—A. I do not think it was ever circulated. I never was able to get but one copy, and Colonel Young told me he did not want anybody to have them.

Mr. RANNEY. There was another copy put into the Public Library here, or should have been.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. I do not quite understand about your going up to Colonel Young's room on this occasion. How did you find out that he had a room there?—A. I told you very clearly how I found that out. I will tell you again if you like.

Q. I should like you to do so.—A. My brother came to my residence in the country—you want to know how I found out? I went to the Ebbitt House, and the clerk told me Colonel Young had gone, and that the carriage man could probably tell me where he had gone, and I saw him, and he told me it was on G street, and I walked around there, and inquired at several doors and found him.

Q. In your testimony before, you had it on H street?—A. Yes, but I stated it was near a church, with a big gold cross on it, and this is near the church.

Q. You are familiar with that part of the city of Washington, are you not?—A. No. I remember that church, because the first time I came here I went there and I took it to be a Catholic church.

Q. Then you knew where it was, and knowing that, you located it on H street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it is only since you read the evidence that you have found out it was on G street where Colonel Young stopped, isn't it? That is the way you discovered the mistake, is it not?—A. I was not sure when I told you it was on G or H street, and hence I told you it was under the shadow of that church, so that you could find it.

Q. Do I understand that you and your father had made an arrangement to meet at the Ebbitt House that morning?—A. No, sir; I thought you meant with Colonel Young.

Q. You spoke of an arrangement you and your father had to meet at the Ebbitt House.—A. We made this arrangement: that I would wait until he came, but in the event that he should come and find that I had gone, he would then find me at the Ebbitt House. I thought probably Colonel Young would take me over to the Ebbitt House.

Q. I understand you to say that you had made an arrangement to meet at Colonel Young's room before you found out where Colonel Young's room was?—A. No, sir.

Q. That is according to your present statement?—A. I would give you the whole history if you would like to hear it, but it would cover the whole day, and I wanted to save time. My father came in—

Q. Came in where?—A. Into Colonel Young's room.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Hall, if you could suspend your examination at this point, some of the members would like to go into the House and vote on an important question.

Mr. HALL. I do not care particularly about pursuing the inquiry further.

Mr. OATES. Then I move that the committee adjourn until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to, and the committee then adjourned until Friday, May 21, 1886, at 12 m.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Friday, May 21, 1886.

The committee met at 12.30 p. m.

The CHAIRMAN. The Attorney-General is present this morning, at the request of a member of the committee, to be further examined.

Hon. A. H. GARLAND then came before the committee, and was further examined, as follows:

By Mr. OATES:

Question. Mr. Attorney-General, have you read the testimony given before this committee by Mr. Von Briesen?—Answer. No, sir. I saw in the Post something that purported to be his testimony.

Q. Look at that part of his testimony on page 924, to which I call your attention, and see whether it accords with your recollection, or whether you have any statement to make about it.—A. There are one or two mistakes in that testimony. He did call at my office, as he states, and submit that this letter of Mr. Van Benthuyzen was not the proper means or mode of beginning such an investigation. I did not express any opinion as to its being the proper mode. Then he expressed a desire to withdraw the letter, and I remarked that I had no objection, but it was out of my jurisdiction; it was in another office. That is all I said in reference to the letter. He is mistaken in reference to my making any remarks about applications being filed there afterwards, and what had become of them. I was positively silent as to that. While I could very well, under section 347 of the Revised Statutes and the precedents in the Department of my predecessors, have said that and have said more, yet I did not choose to say it. I acted just as I did the day before, or the day Mr. Von Briesen and these other gentlemen were there together. I simply stated to them that I could not act in the matter; and questions about the procedure and the practice were proposed, to which I declined to say anything; and Mr. Young, I think it was, said, "the Attorney-General is right about that. He cannot discuss these other questions if he cannot act on the matter." I preserved that silence throughout purposely and with premeditation, having come to the conclusion, as I stated to the committee before, that that was a proper course to pursue. I did so with Mr Humphreys, when he came afterwards.

Q. Do you say Mr. Von Briesen is mistaken in declaring there that you said of another application that you would refer it or have it referred to some other officer?

—A. I never spoke of any other application; I never said what would become of it or made any declaration about it. I would much rather have taken it and acted upon it myself, as outrageous as that would have been, than to have told him any such thing as that. I think Mr. Von Briesen was simply mistaken. I think he supposed it, and drew his own conclusions. If there is anything I am positive about in this whole matter it is that one point, for I had made up my mind. I was afraid I expressed it to these gentlemen who came to me, Mr. Humphreys and others, a little curtly, too much so, possibly, for a public officer, who ought to be polite to all people. To that extent and on those two points Mr. Von Briesen is mistaken. While I am free to say to the committee that I could have done that, and could have done more under the precedents in my Department and under the law as I read section 347, yet I abstained purposely from saying a word about any other application or any future efforts.

Q. It was at one time alleged and published to some extent that you attended or visited Colonel Young's rooms, 1327 G street, while conferences were being held there between people interested in the Pan-Electric company and in the National Improved Telephone Company. Were you ever at Colonel Young's room, No. 1327 G street?—

A. I never was at Colonel Young's or anybody else's room there. I never was in the house; never in my life. I never was at Colonel Young's room during all these times but on two different occasions, and not then at No. 1327 G street. I never knew Colonel Young had a room at 1327 until I saw, on reading the Post, this matter you speak of. I will repeat in this connection, so that the committee will not forget it, what I stated before, that I do not think I ever attended a regular meeting after the Presidential election in 1884, and I am sure I never did after the inauguration, anywhere. If the committee have any other questions to ask me I shall be glad to answer them, after which—

Q. I will ask you one more question. Did any person intimate to you that there would be an application made, or did you ever intimate to any one that an application could be made or that it would be an opportune time to make one during your absence at your home in Arkansas?—A. Never; no, sir. Nobody ever mentioned that to me, nor did I ever mention it to anybody.

Mr. OATES. I do not desire to put any other questions.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. I understood you to say that you told Mr. von Briesen, when he came to ask for leave to withdraw that letter, the same as you told the gentlemen before when several called?—A. No, sir; I say I told him the same as I stated here in my examination before. The withdrawal of the letter was not mentioned on the first interview.

Q. If I remember your testimony before, you were then under the impression that Mr. von Briesen came to you to ask leave to withdraw that letter subsequent to the interview you had with the others?—A. Yes, sir; that was my impression and my recollection in the multiplicity of these matters.

Q. On a subsequent day?—A. Yes, sir. I think he states that he came and called on me the next day.

Q. Is that your recollection?—A. That is my recollection; yes.

Q. That he came separately, on another day?—A. He came separately from those gentlemen, but whether he came alone or not I am not certain.

Q. You have a recollection of an interview when Casey Young, Mr. Van Benthuyssen, Mr. Huntington, Colonel Gantt, and Mr. von Briesen were together. That is the interview you remember?—A. Yes, sir; that is the interview that took place on the last of July or the first of August. I have never identified the date precisely.

Q. Do you remember that interview?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you remember another interview with von Briesen?—A. I think it was the next day he came up, probably.

Q. Is your memory distinct enough to tell me the conversation that occurred on each day, separating them?—A. Yes, sir. I think I have told it. I can tell it again.

Q. Take the last one first, if you please.—A. He stated to me he did not think this was a proper letter; he did not think that this letter of Mr. Van Benthuyssen's was a proper mode of starting this inquiry. I expressed no opinion as to that, for I did not have any opinion about it. Then he expressed a desire to withdraw it. I told him he had my permission, so far as that was concerned, but that it was out of my jurisdiction, in another office.

Q. That was the second interview?—A. Yes, sir. He said nothing to me about any future application to anybody else, and I said nothing to him. If he had said it I should have made no reply beyond the one I made on the previous occasion, and that was that they must hunt their own remedy; that I had none to suggest.

Q. Do you think when he said that he was there alone?—A. I have an indistinct recollection that somebody was with him. I do not know particularly that any one was with him on the same mission, but I think there was somebody else in the room.

Q. Going back to the first interview, I will ask you to state who did the talking.—A. I think on reflection it is possible Mr. von Briesen did most of the talking. I was uncertain about that before. I think he did most of the talking until this gentleman—whoever he was—I think Mr. Young—said “the Attorney-General is right about it, and can’t give any opinion.”

Q. When the four gentlemen came together you think Mr. Van Benthuyzen did the talking?—A. I said on a previous occasion I was uncertain whether it was he or Mr. von Briesen. They were both strangers to me up to that time.

Q. I am now speaking of the time when the four gentlemen came together.—A. I know what you are speaking of.

Q. At that time who did the talking?—A. I have just answered that when I was here before I was of the opinion that it was Mr. Van Benthuyzen.

Q. Can you now remember what he said?—A. Oh, yes. The reason I do not recollect distinctly which it was is that they were both strangers to me. I never saw them before that I know of. The other two gentlemen, Colonel Gantt and Colonel Young, I was well acquainted with. He said—whoever it was that spoke—that they wanted to make an application for the use of the name of the United States to have a suit brought to test the Bell Telephone patents; and they had books and papers with them.

Q. Mr. Van Benthuyzen said that, did he?—A. Whoever it was did the talking. I did not inspect any books or papers, and they did not present any to me. They had some. I said I could not consider the proposition. They asked me why I could not, and I said “because I am the attorney for a rival company, and a stockholder in it, and I have never severed my connection with it.” Then they commenced arguing the question with me, whoever it was did the talking, and I told him I could not argue it, and could not hear it argued and would not; and I cut the matter off right there.

Q. As you understood it, they wanted to make an application then?—A. They did not say then. They said, “We want to make an application.” I do not know whether they were then going to make it, or were ready to make it, or what.

Q. As you understood it it was to be made at that present time?—A. I did not have any particular understanding about it. I just give you their language.

Q. That was what Mr. Van Benthuyzen said?—A. I do not know, as I repeat to you, whether it was he or the other gentleman.

Q. I beg your pardon. I understood you to say your impression was Mr. Van Benthuyzen said it.—A. That was my impression before when I was here, and I am still of that impression. I am not certain of it. I say it was whoever did the talking.

Q. When he said he wanted to make an application did you say that he had already an application before you?—A. Oh, no.

Q. You knew the fact that at that time there was already a pending application?

The WITNESS. Before me?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

A. I knew the Van Benthuyzen letter had been referred by me on the 14th of July to the Interior Department.

Q. If he said he wanted to make an application then, and there was one already in, it would seem to be a little inconsistent?—A. He did not say that he wanted to make it then. He said that he wanted to make it. I did not ask him when, and did not wait for any explanation. I cut it right off.

Q. Did you have in mind then the fact that there was already an application pending which you had referred by letter to the Interior Department?—A. No, sir; I did not think about it then at all. It did not enter into my mind, because that was sixteen days after the letter had been referred, I think; about sixteen.

Q. Did he not object to its having been sent to the Interior Department?—A. Not to me; I never heard of it.

Q. Mr. Van Benthuyzen said he and Mr. Huntington went to see you first alone, and that he expressed a dissatisfaction that it should have been sent to the Interior Department.—A. I have no recollection of it if he did. I had made up my mind, as I stated before, to make short work of this matter, if it came to me, after the letter of Mr. Rogers and the letter of Mr. van Benthuyzen. I studied out the question to see what my relations should be to it, and I came to that conclusion—

Q. I call your attention to Mr. Van Benthuyzen’s own testimony—

Mr. HALL. What was your conclusion? Let us have it all.

The WITNESS. As I stated before, that I should not touch it at all, one way or the other.

Q. I call your attention to the fact that Mr. Van Benthuyzen swears he and Mr. Huntington went to you first, and alluded to the fact that his application had been referred to the Interior Department, and deprecated it, and then a conversation ensued, and he told you he should come again the next day with his attorney, Mr. von Briesen, for whom he was waiting; and he says that they went the next day, and Mr. von Briesen had the talk with you; that he was the spokesman. Do you remember how that was?—A. I remember Mr. von Briesen came to ask for permission to withdraw this letter, which I said he had my permission to do, but that I had no control over the letter; it had gone beyond my jurisdiction.

Q. If he had an application before you at that very time, and was asking to withdraw it, he probably said something about another form of application.—A. He did not to me, that I recollect of. I told him I should not hear any conversation about it.

Q. Mr. von Briesen said that he went there after having a day's consultation with his client, and that he was the spokesman. He says he went in with them to see you and said to you that he had examined the matter—I do not give his exact language—and he had concluded that that was not the proper form of application; that he wanted to withdraw the application that had been made, and was going to make another application through a district attorney to whom he was to present affidavits; that the application was to come in that way; and he wanted to know of you whether, when it came, you would act upon it promptly.—A. That is the first I ever heard of it; in this testimony.

Q. And that you said in substance you had always been of the opinion that such applications should be referred to the Interior Department.—A. That is the first I ever heard of it.

Mr. OATES. Wait a moment. I object, unless Mr. Ranney will read from the printed testimony.

The WITNESS. Oh, no, do not object; let it come.

Mr. OATES. He is stating the testimony according to his recollection.

The WITNESS. This is the first I ever heard of it—in reading this testimony. It is all new to me.

Q. I think I recollect distinctly what Mr. von Briesen said. He said you said to him you always thought those applications should go to the Interior Department, but that you did not say whether you would send it there or not?—A. No; I never said anything about it.

Q. Do you remember what you said on that subject?—A. I did not say a word on the subject—I repeat that I did not say a word on the subject—except about the withdrawal of the letter.

Q. If Mr. von Briesen was the spokesman, and those four men were there, what did they ask for?—A. He asked for nothing; only he said, "We want to make an application to bring a suit." He did not say whether he wanted to bring it then or when, and I did not ask, because I had no questions to ask.

Q. Did he not say they were going to apply first to a district attorney and put in their affidavits there, and that they would get his recommendation; that that was the course to be pursued?—A. No; he did not say that to me.

Q. Do you remember what he did say on the subject?—A. He did not say anything on the subject, because I told him I should hear nothing beyond this letter, and I did not even discuss the propriety of the course of Mr. Van Benthuyzen's letter.

Q. If there was a pending application already before your Department, and he came and asked to withdraw that, and that you agreed to?—A. I agreed to it as far as I had jurisdiction. The thing had passed out of my Department.

Q. In the first place he wanted to withdraw that application. What then?—A. I do not know; I never asked him.

Q. Did he not state?—A. No; he did not state to me.

Q. What did he come to you for then?—A. I have no idea; none in the world. I never talked with him on the subject.

Q. Have you any idea what those four men came to you for at that time?—A. Yes, sir; they said they wanted to use the name of the United States to bring a suit. They stated that very fully. There was no misunderstanding their language. They did not state when they wanted to make the application.

Q. You already knew that they wanted to bring such a suit, because Mr. Van Benthuyzen had an application in?—A. His letter had gone to the Interior Department, and he had been informed of the fact.

Q. Mr. Von Briesen says, and you will pardon me for calling attention to it particularly, because here is a conflict of evidence that may be considered serious—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has no right to say there is a conflict of evidence. He may put his question to the witness and let him answer, and the committee will determine whether there is conflict of evidence or not.

Mr. OATES. As Mr. Ranney says there is a conflict of evidence, I again suggest that he read to this witness those parts of the evidence about which he wishes to interrogate him.

Mr. RANNEY. I agree to that. I supposed he was familiar with it.

The WITNESS. No; I have read none of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The chair calls attention to the expression used, "conflict of evidence"—

Mr. HALL. The gentleman assumes that the Attorney-General has read the testimony.

Mr. RANNEY. I thought it was fair to assume that he had read it, and I supposed it would be conceded that there was a conflict, because the Attorney-General says Mr. Von Briesen is mistaken.

Mr. MILLARD. The evidence is on page 924.

Mr. RANNEY. And also on page 929, where it is stated on cross-examination. I will read from page 924:

"I arrived in Washington on the 29th. I looked up Mr. Wilbur on the 30th, and he gave us his affidavit, the one which, no doubt, this committee is acquainted with. On the next day we called at the office of the Attorney-General, and I had that affidavit in my hand when I called. The letter which Mr. Van Benthuyzen had written to the Attorney General did not strike me as a proper means or mode of beginning such an investigation or of starting the machinery for beginning a suit in behalf of the United States. I had previously ascertained how the suit of the United States versus Gunning had been started, and I thought that was a proper precedent for anything to be done in a similar case afterwards. I told the Attorney-General that I thought this letter was not a proper one; that his office could not be set in motion to relieve any citizen or to relieve the public from the pressure of this patent, if it is an unjust patent; that that could only be done upon presentation of proper affidavits to some district attorney, just as had been the case in the Gunning suit; and that if he would have no objection I would see to it that proper affidavits were presented to some district attorney, who could then recommend to the Attorney-General whatever action he saw proper; but that I would withdraw that letter. The Attorney-General told me that he would not be in a position to act in any matter concerning a telephone case, because he was a stockholder in one of the companies; and that if any application came it would be referred to some other officer, as he personally would not like to do anything in it; and as to withdrawing the letter, he coincided with me and said that that was proper. That is about the substance of our conversation."

Now I will read the statement of it on page 929. I assumed the Attorney-General had read it. I asked Mr. von Briesen to state it again, just as though he had not stated it, and this is what he said:

"The exact substance of what I said was, that I had been informed that Mr. Van Benthuyzen had written him a letter which he had referred to the Department of the Interior, and by the Department it had been sent to the Patent Office. That in my opinion that was not a proper and correct means of starting his Bureau in an investigation as to the propriety of bringing such a suit, and that in my opinion the practice pursued in the Gunning suit was the proper one, which was that the district attorney, upon affidavits, and upon ascertainment of the respectability of the parties making the application, would recommend to the Attorney-General then whatever action he thought proper, and the Attorney-General might act upon that recommendation and order the suit to be brought or not. The Attorney-General then replied that he had always thought that any such application should be referred to the Patent Office. I remember replying that I did not think that was a proper mode of procedure, because we charged the Patent Office with dereliction of duty, and to make it sit in judgment on itself in a case of this kind would not, in my opinion, be a proper proceeding; that I thought the other proceeding was better. He did not commit himself in reply, but simply said that whenever a proper application was filed his Department would do with it what ought to be done. He did not say that he would not send it to the Patent Office or that he would. But that he did not choose, apparently, to discuss that question with me. He then said, 'Moreover, if any application is made, I shall not be able to take charge of it, but it will be referred to another officer of the Department, because I am interested in a telephone company.' That is about it. I wanted also to show him this affidavit of Mr. Wilbur, which I told him I had in my hand, and which I said was a paper which would satisfy him as Attorney-General that such a suit ought to be brought. But he declined to see it."

There are some questions following that perhaps had better be read in that connection:

"Q. Did he say what other officer of the Government it would be referred to?—A. I do not remember that he did particularly specify any officer. He may have said it would be referred to the Solicitor-General; I am not sure. I think he mentioned one or several.

"Q. He said he could not attend to it, but it would be referred to another officer of the Department?—A. To the proper officer of the Department.

"Mr. MILLARD. The witness says he thinks he mentioned one or several to whom it would be referred.

"The WITNESS. I am not quite clear whether he mentioned the Solicitor-General only, or whether he mentioned him in connection with some others.

"By Mr. MOFFATT:

"Q. But he mentioned the Solicitor-General?—A. I am not clear about that, either. But afterwards, this action of the Solicitor-General having been had, it was frequently commented upon, and I may say that my recollection upon that subject was not as clear as it ought to have been. He may have mentioned it.

"By Mr. RANNEY:

"Q. What did you say to that, after he had said that much?—A. I had nothing more to say except that I would withdraw that application or letter of Mr. Van Benthuisen.

"Q. You told him at this very interview that you would then withdraw that letter?—A. I told him at the very beginning that I did not think that letter was the proper means of starting it, and that I would withdraw it.

"Q. And that ended the interview, did it?—A. To my recollection it did. It was a very short interview."

I supposed you had read that testimony before you testified.

The WITNESS. No, sir. I read simply in the Post what purported to be his testimony.

Q. You see he says he had but one interview with you, and that he left that very night. You think he had two interviews?—A. Yes, sir; very short ones, both of them. They were shorter than the time it took you to read that testimony, both of them put together.

Q. Four men came in there to have something done, or to do something, or to request something. If you do not consider it as being too inquisitive—

The WITNESS. Not at all.

Q. (Continuing.) I would like to have you state what those four men wanted.—A. I have stated it about thirteen times, but I can state it again. I can only state what they said. I do not know what they wanted.

Q. I call your attention to the interview and to the testimony—A. What they really wanted I do not know. I can only state what they said they wanted: "We want to use the name of the United States to bring a suit to test the Bell Telephone patent." That was the remark. I remarked in reply "I cannot consider that. I am interested as a stockholder and as the attorney of a rival company." Then a question or two was asked about what should be done, and the procedure.

Q. Do you remember what the question or two was?—A. I do not now; something about the way of proceeding; but I turned right away, and then Mr. Young, I think it was, or some other gentleman, said I was right; if I could not consider the original question I could not consider that.

Q. Did they say anything about going to a district attorney?—A. I don't recollect what they said. I paid no further attention to it. I was determined to cut the matter off with some degree of abruptness; I was a little too abrupt, I am afraid, but still I did it.

Q. You have now no recollection of an interview between yourself, Mr. Huntington, and Mr. Van Benthuisen on the previous day?—A. No, sir; not on the previous day. These interviews were at a time when I was visited a great deal, as I stated when I was here before. A great many people came and went, and a good many people would be in the room on different business at the same time.

Q. I want to put one question to you again. It may be a repetition. When they said they wanted to bring a suit, or to have you bring a suit, was it in your mind then that there was already a pending application?—A. No, sir; I never thought about it at all.

Q. Mr. Von Briesen says that at the beginning of the interview he said he wanted to withdraw the pending application. Was it in the same connection that that request was made?—A. I do not recollect that. The only recollection I have, as I stated, is his asking to withdraw the paper. The paper had gone out of my jurisdiction.

Q. Neither have you any recollection, as I understand you; that he told you they wanted to withdraw that application and proceed in another way?—A. No, sir; I do not recollect anything about his speaking of proceeding in another way, but I should have paid no attention to it if he had said it. When he asked to withdraw the letter, I immediately replied, "It is not in my jurisdiction; I have no objection to anything you may do with it." The second conversation I made much shorter, because I thought I had said enough before for them all to understand my position about it.

Q. Mr. Von Briesen testifies that it was at the same interview; that there were not two separate interviews. Are you confident about that?—A. Yes, sir. Then Mr. Humphreys came afterwards, and I made the same reply.

Q. Mr. Humphreys did not come until October?—A. I say away afterwards; and I made the same reply to him.

Q. That was after this controversy arose?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that is of no consequence?—A. The only consequence it is to show I was perfectly consistent from the beginning in the position I took about it.

Q. Are you confident Mr. von Briesen did not allude to the question whether certain applications should not go to the Interior Department?—A. I know he did not. It would have been nonsense for him to allude to it, because I had sent it there already. So far as it affected my action it was nonsense.

Q. Mr. Van Benthuyzen says he became satisfied that there would have been an adverse report from the Interior Department, and that is the reason he wanted to get it away. Do you recollect whether he said anything about that?—A. He said nothing of that sort to me. I never knew his reason at all. I never heard him or anybody else state the reason. I supposed, if my suppositions are worth anything, that he withdrew it because he found out there was no such law as his letter was based upon. That was the supposition I had.

Q. But nobody said so?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nothing was said on the subject at all?—A. No, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. I have called your attention to what I call the discrepancies between your testimony and von Briesen's.

The WITNESS. Yes; that is right.

Mr. RANNEY. In my mind they were important, and I wanted to call your attention to the specific points of difference.

The WITNESS. That is right, sir.

Q. Had you known Mr. von Briesen before, sir?—A. No, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. That is all.

The WITNESS. With the permission of the committee, I would like to say a word further. I saw in the Post what purported to be testimony given by Mr. Dana, of the New York Sun. He stated, if the Post reported it correctly, in response to a question put by Mr. Millard, that if he had been in my place he would have protected his Department against this suit; and when questioned further he said he would have smashed it. I do not know that it is testimony that amounts to anything as testimony. It is a supposition, and I will give the committee a supposition in reply. I think possibly that much is due to me, although I care very little about the whole matter, so far as that is concerned, for I have only taken one course from beginning to end. It is conceded upon all sides that I had no proper authority to act upon this matter, because I was a stockholder and an attorney of another and rival company. My relationship to that company had not changed from the 31st of July to the 1st of October, when I got back and found what had been done. The same disability, to use the noun derived from the verb in section 347 of the Statutes, existed as it did when I declined to act in the first instance. If that disability existed then, and I could not institute the suit, I want to put the question to Colonel Dana and the committee, how could I smash it? If I had not the ability or the qualification to institute it, how could I smash it? I thought I would put that in, by way of reply to that part of the testimony.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Your view of it is that you had no power to meddle with the suit at all?—A. None at all. I declined on that ground. I had not been denuded of my disability or disqualification when I came back from my home. The same disqualification existed. If a judge upon the bench says he is disqualified to sit in a case and goes off and the case is tried, in the Supreme Court for instance, and the remaining judges undertake to decide it, and then a motion is filed to reconsider, that judge cannot come up and say, "I will sit in the case and pass upon the motion to reconsider, although I could not try the original case." That would be parallel to my "smashing" (whatever that means) this suit, which Dana had as much jurisdiction to smash under the law as I had.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You did not regard a Government suit as the absolute right of any individual who applied for it, did you?—A. No, sir; but I regarded it as resulting ultimately to his benefit.

Q. But supposing you had been satisfied as a Government officer that the public interests did not require that suit. What was there in the way of your acting against your private interest as an individual and an owner of this stock in favor of the public interest and smashing it?—A. There is no difficulty in the question at all.

Q. Do you think there would have been any impropriety in your acting against your personal interest if you were satisfied the interests of the public would be benefited thereby?—A. There were a number of gentlemen who were differently situated, and who wanted this suit. I was not the only person interested. Here was our company and the other companies. If I was forbidden by my situation in the case to consider the matter in the first instance, I should be delighted for some one to tell me how I could have considered it in the second instance.

Q. Would there not be a difference in a case where no Government suit could properly be brought, unless there were considerations embracing the whole public interest?—A. Yes; and for this reason, as I started to tell the committee when I was here before, and they said they did not want to hear it, I had letters from some of the ablest patent lawyers in the United States saying it was my duty, notwithstanding my interest, to have considered that case and brought the suit.

Q. But I understand you to say that a Government suit cannot be brought in behalf of private interests only; that it must be brought, if at all, in a case where the public interests demand it. I understand you to agree to that?—A. I do not exactly understand the question.

Q. As a public officer, do you understand you would have a right to lend the name of the Government to have a suit brought in private interest only?—A. Yes, sir; we do that very often.

Q. In a case of this kind, to annul a patent?—A. We do that very frequently. We lend the name of the United States to bring suits to annul patents for land. Hardly a week passes without that.

Q. You and I may understand the matter differently. Do you understand it is allowable for the Attorney-General of the United States to lend its name to a suit to vacate a patent in the interest of private parties only?—A. No, sir; not properly speaking; but very often the name of the United States is lent for use upon the relation of a private party.

Q. To annul a patent?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It may be to annul a patent for land?—A. Patents for inventions also, on the relation of A B to annul a patent that has been granted to C or D.

Q. For an invention?—A. Yes, sir; for an invention.

Q. Then you do understand it is the duty of the Attorney-General to lend the Government name to a suit to annul a patent for an invention in the interest of private parties only?—A. Yes, sir; that is, I understand his interest may be a very remote one. He may derive from it what he expects. Still he can petition for the use of the name of the United States, or I can do so, and it will be given to me, and the suit will then be instituted on the relation of A. H. Garland to vacate a patent for an invention.

Q. In the interest of private parties only?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You think it is allowable?—A. Yes, sir. It is not, strictly speaking, for the interest of private parties. The Attorney-General is doing a public act on the relation of this man.

Q. Who is one of the whole public?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And who may be embraced in what you would regard as the public interest?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But does not this consideration embrace not only him but the rest of the public, in determining whether a suit should be brought?—A. Oh, yes; so far as that is concerned it becomes then public question and not merely a question affecting an individual or a single company.

Q. So that you do not understand that a private individual can make a request to have a suit brought, as a matter of law, for himself alone?—A. Oh, no; it must involve some public question.

Q. Then what harm was there in you as Attorney-General, looking at the question broadly and comprehending in your consideration the whole public, and if you come to the conclusion that the public interest did not require this thing to be done, to say so in your office. That would be against your private interest.—A. Because it was a question that I, on account of my interest was prohibited from considering. It was enough for me to know that here was a rival company that might ultimately be benefited by the procedure.

Q. If you acted against your interest do you think anybody would complain of that?—A. Before I could do that I would have to consider the question, and the disability would arise upon consideration, in the first instance.

Q. Was not the thing you would have to consider one that comprehended the whole public?—A. Yes, sir; and the Pan-Electric company and myself included.

Q. That was but a mote, a single drop in the ocean?—A. But we do not measure disability by the yard or inch, you know.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. If a judge renders a judgment in a case where he is disqualified by statute on account of interest, although the judgment is against his interest it is void, is it not, just the same as though it were in his interest?—A. It would be a question whether it would be void or voidable, according to whether the record would show the interest or not. It would be voidable if the record showed his interest.

Mr. OATES. Some courts hold it to be void and some voidable.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Considering your interest, would you have considered it a dereliction of duty if you had said to Mr. Goode when you went away, "Such an application will come and

I wish you to give it a very careful examination"—A. Yes, sir; I would consider that to be stepping outside of the line of my duty under the law, and my authority too.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. I would like to ask you one or two questions, as I was not present during your examination. I understood you to say that you consented to the withdrawal of this letter of Van Benthuyssen's?—A. I consented so far as I had the right to consent, in this language: "I have no objection to you withdrawing it, but it is out of my office and jurisdiction."

Q. It had been referred to the Patent Office under your direction?—A. It had been; yes, sir.

Q. I want to call your attention to this point: Whether Mr. von Briesen stated to you the purpose he had in view in withdrawing it?—A. No, sir; he did not. As I stated to Mr. Ranney, I only had a supposition. I never had any information at all as to why this letter was withdrawn, but I had a supposition, which, as I stated, does not amount to anything.

Q. Of course you knew that the withdrawal would prevent an opinion or a decision by the Patent Office?—A. Yes; I took it for granted it would, if they had not already passed on it, of which I knew nothing.

Q. Did you not understand at that time that the withdrawal was with the view of having an application in a different way?—A. No; I had no understanding about it at all. I just simply took the facts and I drew my own conclusion for what it was worth.

Q. Did you not understand that an application was to be made by these gentlemen.

The WITNESS. To whom?

Mr. MILLARD. Either to Goode or some one else?

A. No, sir; I had no understanding about it.

Q. I ask you that question with reference to a statement in your letter to the President?—A. You asked me about my understanding. I say in that letter "I supposed."

Q. I will call your attention to it particularly, and then you can make such explanation as you wish. You say "After the interview with the gentleman already spoken of, I supposed they would come to me with an application after the statement I had made, to either refer the matter to the Solicitor-General or to present it to you." You did suppose an application would be made?—Ans. Yes, sir. You asked me if I understood. I had no understanding at all about it. I say, as I said in that letter, I supposed that would be the course, because the law indicated that course, and I presumed they knew the law. That was their object. I had no understanding about it. I supposed if they were in earnest about this matter that they were not going to let it rest there, but there was no indication from them to me that they were going to do it, or from me to them that they could do it or ought to do it. You see I used the word "supposed."

Mr. MILLARD. Yes; I see you did.

The WITNESS. I did not use the word "understand" or "understood." It was a supposition based upon section 347 of the Revised Statutes.

Q. You left on the 23d. Did you see Mr. Goode before you left?—A. Oh, yes; I saw him several times; I don't know how many.

Q. Did you see him with reference to the business he would have on hand during your absence?—A. No, sir; Mr. Goode had been absent a long time about a very important case, and we talked about that more than anything else. He brought down the bills of the lawyers that assisted him there, and we were a good deal troubled about how to get them paid.

Q. Is it not customary when you leave town to call the attention of your immediate subordinate to such business as may come up in your absence?—A. There is a misunderstanding about the subordinate; I have no subordinate when I am away, nor, (under section 347 of the Revised Statutes) when I am disabled; Mr. Goode is my equal; he is there just as I was.

Q. He is your equal in your absence?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But not in your presence?—A. He is no subordinate of mine only when I am here. As he was going to act for himself, I thought it was proper to let him do so. There was nothing lying over; I had finished up the table, in order to give him a clean sweep, so that he would not have much to do after he got back from his long journey. When he is there, you will find by the statute, he is his own master.

Q. I understand that. A witness, I think, from the Department has testified that there was an interview between you and Mr. Goode the evening before you went away?—A. I don't recollect that. There were several. I will make no point on that. I saw him several times, more especially about the cases in the Supreme Court. In Mr. Goode's absence I had anticipated some of that work, and made up the briefs for him, so as to relieve him when he returned, as the court would meet on the second Monday in October. I do not know as to seeing him the day before I left. Very likely it is so. If I had seen him every day and every minute of the day I should not have mentioned this suit to him or said anything about it.

The CHAIRMAN. I will submit the depositions taken in New Orleans.

Mr. OATES. Is it necessary to put the interrogatories in the record? If not, we can save some printing.

The CHAIRMAN. The witnesses refer to the interrogatories in their answers, and I presume they had better go in. Is it desired that they shall be read?

Mr. MILLARD. By whom were the interrogatories prepared—by yourself and Mr. Ranney?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. MILLARD. I submit that they should be put in.

Mr. RANNEY. We agreed that instead of putting the Government to the expense of bringing these parties here we would forward the questions to them.

Mr. OATES. I regard the testimony just as though the parties had been here and given it on the stand. The question I raised is as to its materiality—whether it proves anything important.

Mr. RANNEY. That is legitimate.

Mr. OATES. I could raise that question if they were here testifying.

Mr. RANNEY. The ground on which they were examined bears on the general question we have been discussing. I say the parties went on and acted upon the assumption, or just as they would have acted if they had ascertained in advance that a Government suit would be brought, that they even prepared the bill before the application came, and got it all ready.

The CHAIRMAN. The deposition explains that very fully and satisfactorily.

Mr. MILLARD. Do you think there is any objection to the evidence?

The CHAIRMAN. None whatever.

Mr. MILLARD. Then let us spend no more time on it. The chairman thinks it is competent.

The CHAIRMAN. I think it is not only competent, but material and important. Is it desired to have it read?

Mr. HALL. I do not want it read.

Mr. OATES. I have read it already.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be given to the stenographer and inserted.

The depositions on questions are as follows:

Of the minority of the committee.

Depositions of L. S. Graham and J. R. Beckwith, witnesses residing in the city of New Orleans, La., to interrogatories hereto annexed by direction of the Special Committee acting under resolution of the House of Representatives, dated February 26, 1886, investigating telephone affairs, taken before J. C. Eustis, notary public, at his office, No. 26 Carondelet st., in New Orleans, La., on the 13th day of May, 1886.

L. S. GRAHAM, being first duly sworn, deposes and says:

To 1st interrogatory: My name is L. S. Graham; I am a member of the firm of L. Graham & Son, book and job printers; so engaged since 1865; the witness's connection began 1874.

To 2nd interrogatory: We did print a bill in equity in the name of the United States v. The American Bell Telephone Co. in September, 1885. I cannot state from my own knowledge that it was to be filed in Memphis, Tennessee; my recollection of the work is not clear enough to give any detailed description of it. I cannot now find a copy of the work among our samples.

To 3d interrogatory: The copy of the bill came from Mr. J. R. Beckwith, an attorney of this city.

To 4th interrogatory: The work was delivered on the 4th of September, 1885, to Mr. Beckwith, or at his office, in this city.

To 5th interrogatory: I do not know at whose expense it was printed; it was charged to Mr. Beckwith. I believe he approved the bill as being correct, to be paid for by Fazende & Seixas. I received a check from Messrs. Fazende & Seixas for the amount of our bill.

To 6th interrogatory: Yes; entries are made on our order book of all orders or jobs received, likewise a memorandum is made opposite each entry of the date of delivery. Our order book shows that this order was the first one entered under date of September 1, 1885, and the memorandum entry of delivery is September 4, 1885, under which date it is charged on our ledger.

To 7th interrogatory: We have not now the MSS. copy of the bill; accumulations of MSS. are thrown away a short time after delivery of work. My recollection is that the copy was in "type-writer," with interlineations by Mr. Beckwith.

To 8th interrogatory: My recollection is that the copy was in "type-writer," with interlineations by Mr. Beckwith.

L. S. GRAHAM.

Sworn to and subscribed before me on this 13th day of May, A. D. 1886.

J. C. EUSTIS,
Notary Public.

On this 15th day of May, 1886, J. R. BECKWITH, being first duly sworn, deposes and says:

To 1st interrogatory: I was in Memphis twice during the month of August, 1885. I do not recollect the date of my first arrival, but believe it was on the 15th of August. On that occasion I remained in Memphis until the afternoon of the 21st, arrived back in New Orleans on the 22nd; and on the second visit I left New Orleans in the afternoon of the 25th, and arrived in Memphis on the morning of the 26th of August, remaining there until the evening of the 27th, reaching New Orleans on the morning of the 28th of August.

To 2nd interrogatory: I can answer this interrogatory only by giving a history of the drafting of the bill and attending circumstances. My first visit to Memphis, as stated in my answer to the 1st interrogatory, was made in response to a request of the acting president of the National Improved Telephone Company that I should hold a conference and consultation as its counsel with Mr. Gantt, an attorney residing at Memphis, relative to steps to be taken to resist the demand of the owners of the Bell patents, claiming monopoly of the transmission of articulate speech by or with electricity. I met Mr. Gantt at his office in Memphis, and for several days we considered the questions whether the General Government had authority to institute judicial proceedings looking to the recall of letters patent for inventions or discovery for frauds in procuring the grant, and whether the Federal court at Memphis would have jurisdiction of such an action. After consulting authorities we both agreed in the conclusion that the Government had the right to take such proceedings, and that in the case of the Bell patents it was the duty of the General Government to take proceedings to that end, and that the Federal court at Memphis had jurisdiction to entertain the action.

It was then determined to take steps to secure such action by the Federal Government.

The question of the appropriate manner of proceeding was considered and it was determined that a memorial should be addressed to the United States attorney of the District and the matter put in official channel in that form.

Mr. Gantt and myself settled the form and detail of the memorial with accompanying documents and proofs to be submitted to the United States attorney. I am sure that the suggestion came from me, that it was due to the United States attorney and to the Department of Justice that such an application calling for the institution of a suit should be definite and certain in character, and should not go forward in the shape of a general petition asking action generally; that doubtless the United States attorney when asked to consider the institution of a suit in equity would desire to know exactly what character of suit or bill was to be brought; that the question was a question of law, and that we were dealing with lawyers and in my opinion the memorial should be accompanied with a draft of a bill setting forth in suitable form the supposed vices of the Bell patents, and frauds practiced in procuring the grants upon which the recall or repeal was asked. That a draft of a bill was the best form in which the question of effect of the matters alleged against the patents could be dealt with in considering the question whether the patents ought to be allowed to stand as grants if the matters charged were found to be true after trial.

Mr. Gantt concurred with me in this view and it was assigned to me to prepare the draft of a bill to be submitted to the United States attorney with the memorial. Mr. Gantt assumed the task of preparing the memorial and proofs. I commenced the draft of the bill in Memphis, I think, on the 19th of August, but desiring to consult some books not to be found in Memphis, I returned to New Orleans, arriving there on the 22d of August, 1885.

On the 24th of August, without using any portion of the partial draft made in Memphis, I dictated the bill to a stenographer. During the afternoon of the 25th the stenographer delivered me the bill in type-writer form. I think within an hour I left for Memphis, reaching there early on the next day. I had no opportunity to read over the bill as it came from the stenographer. Without any revision, the bill was on my arrival submitted to Mr. Gantt and given to a copyist to be copied. On the 26th the memorial was completed and I signed it with the others. On the 27th the bill came back to me from the Memphis copyist, and I left for New Orleans, taking the bill with me. On the way to New Orleans I, for the first time read the bill as given me by the stenographer and found it replete with clerical errors, so serious as to require rewriting for full correction. As the expense of printing was but little greater than the expense of new copy in writing, I sent the bill to I. Graham & Son, printers in New Orleans, with directions to print. The bill was printed, making the corrections in the proof. I am quite certain that the bill went to the printers on the 28th of August. Some time during the morning of the 4th of September I learned that suit had been authorized. I was able to procure a few copies of the bill and exhibits from the printer late in the afternoon of the 4th and left for Memphis in the evening, reaching Memphis early on the morning of the 5th. The copy of the bill made in Memphis was made to accompany the memorial to the United States attorney, and

I am informed and believe it was submitted to him and considered with the memorial and other papers. I did not present the papers to the United States attorney and had not heard whether the bill was satisfactory to him. I procured the printed copies of the bill and schedules and took them to Memphis to consult with Mr. Gantt and the United States attorney, whether the bill as printed should be adopted and filed. On my arrival in Memphis Mr. Gantt was not in the city, had left the city for some place where he usually spends the summer months, as I was informed. He did not return to Memphis, I think, until about the 7th of September.

On his return we had a consultation on the bill as printed, and there was some talk of changing the bill in some particulars, but it was finally agreed that Mr. Gantt and myself should go to Jackson, Tenn., where the United States attorney resided and settle the bill in consultation with him. It is my recollection that we left Memphis on the night of the 8th of September, and arrived at Jackson early in the morning of the 9th. In consultation it was settled to file the bill as printed. The United States Attorney, Mr. Gantt and myself signed the bill. Mr. Gantt and myself left Jackson the same day and reached Memphis in the night.

On the morning of the next day we went together to the office of the clerk of the United States circuit court, in Memphis, and filed the bill.

When the bill was drawn and printed it was not deemed certain by either Mr. Gantt or myself that the bill as drafted would be adopted as the bill if a suit should be ordered, but was framed and prepared, as the best form in which the grave and serious charges against, and the supposed vices and nullities of the Bell patents, could be submitted to lawyers charged with determining whether there should be judicial inquiry concerning the validity of the grants. I thought the course proper then. I am of the same opinion now.

To third interrogatory: I have given in answer to the second interrogatory full detail concerning the drafting of the bill. When and where it was done, under what circumstances and for what purpose. It is possible that Casey Young may have given me pencil memorandum of matters he thought should be set forth in the bill, but I have no recollection of any. Certainly nothing of the kind was used by me in preparing the draft of the bill.

To 4th interrogatory. I think the bill was sent to L. Graham & Son on the 28th of August, 1885. I have examined their books, by which it appears that the bill reached them on the 1st of September. I am confident they had the bill on the 28th August. The bill and schedules were printed by L. Graham & Son, of New Orleans; at least sent to them to be printed. A few copies were delivered to me on the 4th of September, 1885, the balance sent to my office during my absence in Memphis.

Ans. to 5th interrogatory. I have fully answered this interrogatory in my answer to prior interrogations.

To 6th interrogatory. I have fully answered all matters in this interrogatory in my answer to preceding questions.

Answer to 7th interrogatory. I have fully answered all matters contained in this question in my answers to preceding questions.

JAMES R. BECKWITH.

Sworn to and subscribed before me on this 1st day of May, A. D. 1886.

J. G. EUSTIS,
Notary Public.

I, John G. Eustis, a notary public, duly commissioned and qualified in and for the parish of Orleans, State of Louisiana, do certify that I caused L. S. Graham and J. R. Beckwith, witnesses hereinbefore named and examined, to appear before me at the time and place above mentioned, and after publicly and solemnly swearing them to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, in answer to the annexed direct interrogatories, I then and there proceeded to examine them by propounding to them the said direct interrogatories, and reducing in my presence and that of the witness their answers thereto in writing, and I then caused each witness to sign his deposition in my presence, as already stated.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal of office on this 15th day of May, 1886.

J. G. EUSTIS,
Notary Public.

The CHAIRMAN. I submitted certain interrogatories to Mr. Hubbard, following the suggestion made when he was on the stand that he would give information as to matters I had been asking him about, and instead of replying to the interrogatories he has sent me quite a long statement giving a history of the Bell Company. I will hand it to members of the committee, so that they may read it, and then the question as to admitting it can be raised.

Mr. RANNEY. Is it a statement he was asked to make when he was on the stand?

The CHAIRMAN. No, sir. He stated that he was willing to give any information in regard to any matter that he might be asked about, and I sent him a number of questions as to some of the matters referred to when he was on the stand. Have we any further business?

Mr. RANNEY. There are more letters to be put in.

The CHAIRMAN. I observe in the printed record that Dr. Rogers' letter of the 29th of September to the Tribune has been put in twice. Once will do.

Mr. RANNEY. I wish to put in a letter from Casey Young, for one. Instead of selecting out those from the World, it was suggested that they should all go in together, if not already in. There are some letters from Casey Young that have not been put in yet.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other witnesses present? I see Dr. Rogers is here. Is it desired to examine him further?

Mr. RANNEY. There are some questions for him.

Dr. J. W. ROGERS recalled and further examined.

The WITNESS. I want to say to the chairman of the committee that I did not get the notice to come yesterday until late in the afternoon.

The CHAIRMAN. So I understood. I have no questions to ask the doctor.

Mr. RANNEY. I want to call your attention to one or two matters.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Question. Something was said when you were on the stand about a combination mentioned in a pamphlet, that was made with the American Postal Telegraph Company. What combination was that?—Answer. Well, that was made simply by intermingling the stocks.

Q. Intermingling with whom?—A. The stocks of the Pan-Electric company and the Rogers Telegraph and Telephone Company.

Q. I see you sent American Postal Telegraph stock to some of the members, Mr. Beach being one of them?—A. Yes, sir; American Postal. What I mean by intermingling is that a great deal of it belonged to the Rogers Telegraph and Telephone Company; so that was the combination. It was a combination of the stocks of the companies.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. The Rogers company was the Pennsylvania company, was it?—A. Yes, sir; that was the Pennsylvania company. It owned a large amount of American Postal stock.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Did the Pan-Electric Telephone Company own any of it?—A. No; but still there was a combination just the same. The Pennsylvania company, as General Boyle calls it, was the owner of a good deal of Pan-Electric stock, I don't remember the exact change, but about a million or two.

Q. I see Casey Young in his letter speaks of your combining and joining forces with the American Postal Telegraph Company.—A. Oh, yes; that was a proposition that was never carried out. We called a meeting at the Metropolitan Hotel to have it done, and they considered it. I presented a proposition to the meeting of the board, but told them I was largely interested in the American Postal, and would withdraw for them to discuss it. My son told me—

Mr. EDEN. You need not state what your son told you.

Q. They did not perfect the organization?—A. No.

Q. But you did have an arrangement with your Pennsylvania company, they holding some of the Pan-Electric stock?—A. Well, I donated the stock to them. There was no particular arrangement. It was put into the company.

Q. Put into what company?—A. Into the Pennsylvania company. That is, the American Postal stock and the Pan-Electric stock were donated to the Pennsylvania company, which made a combination of the stock of all three companies.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You personally gave the Rogers company millions?—A. Oh, yes. There was no combination in the sense of the company's meeting and combining.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. I see in the circular you represent the combination.—A. The combination I have just described.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. Have those circulars been introduced in evidence?—A. I think so. I left them here at first.

Mr. HALL. If they have not been introduced in evidence, I shall object until they are produced.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Did you issue a circular representing the matter?—A. Yes, sir; I sent one of them here. It says something about a combination of stocks.

Q. There was a combination of some kind, was there?—A. There was a combination to that extent.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not care to encumber the record with the whole circular, unless it is desired.

Mr. HALL. I object to any quotations from it, because I do not know whether they will be correct or not.

Mr. RANNEY. I allude to it as the inducement and basis of my inquiry to find out what the fact was about the combination.

The WITNESS. The fact was that there was a combination of the stocks, but no action of the respective boards to make a partnership. I do not know as such a thing could be done.

Q. I do not think of anything else that I want to call to your attention. Is there anything that you wish to reply to that has been put in here? I do not recall any part of your testimony that has been contradicted.—A. I think there are some minor mistakes of the stenographer. I wrote a letter to Judge Boyle about it and he sent me word verbally, I think, that it would be looked to, but there are none of any great consequence.

Q. If you can recall them it will be well enough to indicate them.—A. If I had one of the books here I could recall some of them.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Are they material?—A. Well, I don't think for the matter of the evidence they would be. They are not exactly truthful, and I always want to be truthful. I don't know that they are material to the case.

Mr. RANNEY. I would like to have them pointed out.

The STENOGRAPHER. If you sent them in, they have all been corrected.

The WITNESS. Possibly; I do not know. I have not been here for a month.

The STENOGRAPHER. All he turned in or sent in have been corrected.

Mr. EDEN. I suppose you do not want to correct anybody else's testimony but your own?

The WITNESS. No. There are some little minor matters I would like to have the privilege to explain, since the committee has called me here.

Mr. RANNEY. It is your privilege.

The WITNESS. One thing in connection with the question you have just been asking, about that American Postal business and giving the stock to Beach and others.

Mr. EDEN. I do not see that the American Postal business is important in this investigation.

The CHAIRMAN. Were you not examined upon those matters before the committee on a previous occasion?

Mr. RANNEY. He was as to the Beach matter.

The CHAIRMAN. As to all these matters. I do not want to interpose an objection to your making any statement you think material.

The WITNESS. There are some matters of fact that were not then testified—

The CHAIRMAN. We do not care to go over the same matter.

The WITNESS. There were some matters of fact that were not testified to that would probably throw a little more light upon the subject. One of these was, for example, that every person who took any part in any of the organizations, the Pan-Electric company, the original Pan-Electric enterprise, the Rogers Telegraph and Telephone, and the American Postal, had their names published at once. It is a fact that the committee probably did not know. It is a material fact, because I have been accused of having had a Credit Mobilier thing on a small scale. The very moment anybody became identified with it his name was given to the world, without any objection upon the part of anybody, and he co-operated with us. In that old matter of the Credit Mobilier it was difficult to ascertain who were the men. Nobody knew who they were. I think this is a material fact. I say here that everything was published; every name. Another thing. There were a good many persons, and some of them were omitted. I have counted up very carefully since, and I have found that all the persons to whom any stock was ever offered, out of the four hundred men in the House and in the Senate, were fifteen. It has been suggested that the purpose was to buy votes. If it was to buy votes, it is material to know there were only fifteen that were ever approached upon the subject, and there were only about six or seven of them that ever received any stock.

Then I want to say further that the people who did receive that stock were men who were not such as a man who wanted to get up a conspiracy would seek, but they were men pre-eminent for their integrity, such men as Cox, and Hewitt, and Carlisle, and Randall. I think it very significant that while everything was published no men were ever approached but those who were most distinguished for integrity. A fellow that wanted to get confederates and rascals would not publish their names, but would try and find a black sheep in Congress, if there were any. In that case he would not go to the most honorable men in the body if he wanted to run a villainous concern and buy votes. I do not mean any disrespect to Congress when I say there are black sheep in every flock. I think our Congress will compare favorably with the British Parliament, or the Reichstag in Germany, or anything else. I mean no disrespect to Congress; I want that understood; but I would approach bad men, if there any in it that were bad men, if I had any improper purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. We will take that for granted—if you could find any in Congress.

The WITNESS. I certainly would not pick out the fellows that were the very top chips in the pile.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything else.

The WITNESS. There is another little matter rather personal. Senator Harris was permitted to go on and tell rather a long yarn about my drinking what Homer calls "the milk of old men," and I think it is my privilege to refer to the facts he stated and give to the committee just what did occur. I say I think it is due to me. I will make it very brief. I was on that occasion, as you have seen me to-day —

The CHAIRMAN. The committee does not consider that necessary.

The WITNESS. But the committee might consider, in justice to me, when I am —

The CHAIRMAN. If you think it is necessary you may state it.

The WITNESS. I think it is, and I will tell you why.

Mr. EDEN. The doctor wants to defend himself.

The WITNESS. It is not a defense. I want to state the facts and the whole truth of the case; that is all. I did go down to the National Hotel, and met there Gen. Upshaw, this Indian Bureau man. His uncle, an old friend of mine, Gen. Williamson, of Holly Springs, who was appointed about that time to something in the Interior Department and was going off West, was there, and also Rolf Sanders, a good-hearted newspaper fellow. I told them I had found some Catawba wine that was the best I ever drank in my life, and they all consented to go in and partake of my hospitality except Upshaw. He said he would go with us, but that he had never been a success at drinking, and that he could not drink. I went in with them, and Rolf Sanders, the newspaper man, said that he preferred old Bourbon; he was no mugwump, and wanted a glass of Bourbon. So I gave him whisky. Then we went out, and I read them some passages in manuscript of what was known afterwards as The Mugwump. Then I walked on and separated from them, except Upshaw.

We went up to the Metropolitan Hotel, where Senator Harris lays the scene for his comedy of errors. I sat there on a settee next to the door that leads on the west side of the bar-room, with Upshaw at my right hand. He was my right-hand man. He asked me to read some more of The Mugwump to them. I began to read it, and several gentlemen collected around. I had a pretty good audience, and felt about as I do now, only a little more jubilant, for I had taken a little more wine than I have taken to-day. I haven't taken to-day, I say upon oath, more than two glasses, and small ones at that; but I had taken a little more then, and I felt comfortable and pleasant, you know. I went in with them, and the good wine was drunken, and it is the only thing, I say on oath, that was drunken in that crowd. Harris was very careful not to state in his testimony that he had ever seen me intoxicated, although he and Col. Young said they had known me for thirty years. I say upon my oath here that he never did see me intoxicated. If he is put upon his oath he will say that in thirty years he never saw me intoxicated. He has had every opportunity, for since he referred to me in that uncalled-for way here recently, I will say to the committee that he has drank gallons of my whisky and brandy and wine.

Mr. HALL. Who are you talking about?

The WITNESS. I am talking about Senator Harris. He has had every opportunity of seeing me intoxicated, and might have told the committee if he had ever seen me intoxicated.

Mr. MILLARD. I think if you have drank as much as that together—

The WITNESS. Understand me, I mean no disrespect to Senator Harris.

Mr. MILLARD. Or he to you.

The WITNESS. I would rather go backward and throw my mantle over him. I only refer to his nudity because he referred to me as being a little jolly on that occasion.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that all?

The WITNESS. There is another little matter, if I am not boring the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. If it is like the last, it is not important.

The WITNESS. It is not. It relates to the evidence of Col. Young. I think he certainly has been misinterpreted in the papers, and possibly by the committee. I have seen it frequently stated, or heard it insinuated, that when he told me and my son Harry that Genl. Garland had referred this matter to Goode, and had made the promise that Col. Young was guilty of a falsehood. I do not believe any such thing. I state positively—

The CHAIRMAN. Will you allow me to say that the committee is indifferent as to what you believe. Just state all the facts you can.

Mr. RANNEY. We are indifferent, as a matter of evidence.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. MILLARD. He has been all over that.

The WITNESS. I don't think he was perjured at all when he told me and Harry—

The CHAIRMAN. Never mind about that.

Mr. RANNEY. If there is any fact connected with it to show he is mistaken—

The WITNESS. The only fact is what I have heard of von Briesen, corroborating it.

The CHAIRMAN. Just answer the questions. If Mr. Ranney wants any fact from you he can ask you.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You say there was a combination of some kind between the American Postal Company and the Rogers Telegraph and Telephone Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The Rogers Telegraph and Telephone Company held some of the stock of the American Postal?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was by gift from you, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Two millions of stock?—A. I forget the exact change, as I said just now, but it was something like that.

Q. Did the American Postal hold any of the Rogers stock?—A. No. Some members of it did. I gave it to some of the officers.

Q. Did the Pan-Electric company hold any of the American Postal stock?—A. No.

Q. Did the American Postal company hold any of the Pan-Electric stock?—A. Yes, sir; about a million.

Q. You gave that?—A. I gave that to them.

Q. Did the Rogers company hold some of the Pan-Electric stock?—A. Yes, sir; a million.

Q. You gave that also?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There was no combination of any kind then between the companies?—A. Oh, no.

Q. The combinations were all brought about through you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. By donations of a million or two?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of the stock of one company to the other?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. You held a large amount of stock in these companies, which you donated?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You gave the stock to the Pan-Electric company in order to increase its strength, I suppose?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLARD. It was a pooling of issues.

J. HARRIS ROGERS resumed the stand.

The WITNESS. I want to answer a question that was not fully finished yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

The WITNESS. I was asked how it was possible for me to make an appointment to meet my father at Col. Young's room when I did not know where Col. Young's room was. It was in this way: I left my father in the morning and found Col. Young at his room, and left Col. Young's room and went with Col. Young to Mr. Marble's office. There I parted with Col. Young, leaving him to go to the Ebbitt House. I went to get my father, and I took my father in the buggy to Col. Young's room. When we got there Col. Young was out, and my father said, "Now, Harry, I will be away for ten or fifteen minutes, and upon my return I want to find you here." I told him I would be there or at the Ebbitt House. It was in that way I made that appointment.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. Then instead of your appointment having been made with your father, as you gave the committee to understand yesterday, before you had been up to Col. Young's room, it was made after you had been there?—A. Yes, sir; after I had been there.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I understood you yesterday that your appointment was to meet your father at the Ebbitt House.—A. At Col. Young's.

Q. Your first appointment?—A. Oh, no, sir. When I left my father I had no appointment with him whatever, except to meet him again—

Q. You spoke of Col. Young going to the Ebbitt House to see your father.—A. Yes, sir; my father went out of Col. Young's room, because Col. Young was not there, and said he would be back in a few minutes, and Col. Young came and wanted me to go away, and I asked him to remain until I came back, lest my father should come, and then go the Ebbitt House.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. I had not concluded my examination when the committee adjourned yesterday. There were a few questions I wanted to ask. I understood you to say that at the period of the year when these conferences were held Senator Harris stated to you that he had signed an agreement of joint action between these companies for this Government suit?—A. I did not say a Government suit. He did not mention a Government suit; but that, I supposed, was what he referred to.

Q. Tell the committee what he said about that.—A. I called at Colonel Young's room on a certain day, and they told me that he had gone; that he had left the day before. I then went to Gardner's room, and asked him for the contents of that contract. Gardner wouldn't give me any information. Then I went to Senator Harris's room, and Senator Harris told me that he had taken the responsibility of signing for our company, and Mr. Van Benthuyzen had taken the responsibility of signing for his company.

Q. That occurred at his room?—A. At Senator Harris's room.

Q. Whereabouts?—A. On East Capitol street.

Q. That was the room he has been occupying for a good while?—A. Yes.

Q. Was anybody present when that conversation took place?—A. Yes, sir; there were several gentlemen present.

Q. Do you know who was present?—A. No, sir.

Q. You do not remember a single person?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did any of those persons present hear this conversation?—A. They could have heard it.

Q. It was a public conversation, was it?—A. No, sir.

Q. In the presence of other gentlemen?—A. I stated yesterday that Senator Harris was very brief, and I was careful not to trespass, on account of the parties being present.

Q. I understand you to say that it was a conversation that the persons present would not be likely to hear?—A. They could hear it. Every party in the room could have heard everything that was said.

Q. Then it was a conversation without any reserve?—A. There was considerable reserve.

Q. When did you next see Senator Harris that same year?—A. I never saw Senator Harris after that until this hearing was going on before the Interior Department. I met him then.

Q. Was that the fall of the same year?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever have any other conversation with him about the existence of that contract?—A. Not any except the conversation then.

Q. Did you ever make any allusion or reference in your conversations subsequent to that, to the fact of his having signed that agreement?—A. No, sir.

Q. So that this one interview was the only one in which that contract was ever the subject of conversation between you?—A. That is all.

Q. Are you sure it occurred after Casey Young had left the city of Washington?—A. I don't know when Colonel Young left. It was the day after I was informed by his landlady he had gone.

Q. It was after all these things had transpired that you have already testified to; when you say you went up and saw the parties?—A. It was the day after I met Colonel Young there. Colonel Young told me he was going away that evening.

Q. Do you know which left the city first, Senator Harris or Colonel Young?—A. I do not.

Mr. HALL. Is there anything more before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. I understand Mr. Ranney has some letters he wants to introduce.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. I desire to submit some corrections of my testimony.

Mr. MOFFATT. Did you bring up your stock-book?

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. Yes; I brought the one I think you want; I did not bring them both.

Mr. RANNEY. These letters I have here are those embraced in the list reported by the subcommittee. I regret that they could not have all been put in together. They are most of them letters of Casey Young's. I have them here as clipped from the New York Tribune. Major Clark said that he had compared them with the originals.

The CHAIRMAN. I see Major Clark here; he can possibly state.

S. N. CLARK was then recalled and further examined.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Question. Will you just state whether these letters which you have marked here in this scrap-book have been compared by you with the originals?—Answer. They were sent from the originals to the paper. I never have made the comparison with the originals, but these were sent from the originals.

Q. Sent by whom?—A. Sent from the telegraph office. They were sent from the originals by the operator. I have never made any comparison since they were printed.

Q. Did you telegraph them correctly from the originals?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. Where are the originals?—A. I suppose I gave them all back to Dr. Rogers at the time that I sent them.

Q. Did you receive them from the Rogerses?—A. I received them from them.

Q. At what date?—A. This is dated February 22. I sent some on two occasions, February 22 and February 23.

Q. Under what circumstances did you receive them from Dr. Rogers?—A. I went out to the house and got them.

Q. Did you pay anything for them?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Did you pay anything of any kind in any way?—A. No, sir; not anything in any way.

Mr. RANNEY. The originals are here in the book. I have been over the most of them. They are on this printed list of dates.

Q. Was that before or after the World published the letters?—A. I think some of the World letters had been published then, perhaps all of them.

Q. The World letters were published on two consecutive days, were they not?—A. No, I think not. My recollection is that several days intervened, but I am not quite certain. I think the World published three batches of letters; I do not recollect now.

Q. Were those letters in large packages, large bundles—in what the doctor calls his album?—A. Part of them were there, and part of them were letters that had been collected after the first publication in the World.

Q. They were letters, then, which had been rejected by the World?—A. Some of them the World correspondent had not seen. Dr. Rogers had not found them at the time he gave them this book. All the letters that were published in the World were contained in a book.

Q. Were not these letters obtained by you all embraced in large packages, one of the two large packages, or in large packages of the Doctor's?—A. They had been taken out and some of them were loose. I do not remember about any large packages of letters at all. Dr. Rogers had obtained his book then from the World, and that was there, together with a number of letters that he had collected subsequently.

Q. Had not the letters that you published been pasted in some book or pasted on something?—A. Perhaps they had; I do not know about that. Some of them were handed in loose. I went over them pretty carefully to see if there was anything that I regarded as material which had not been published.

Q. I understood Mr. Crawford, of the World, to testify that all the letters had been submitted to him.—A. All the letters that had been found up to that time.

Q. And the two large books had been submitted?—A. I do not remember whether there was one book or two.

By Mr. HALL :

Q. You remember the other day the Tribune had a comment upon the testimony of Mr. Garland, about the reporter, and its being revised and certain portions omitted?—A. I do.

Q. Did you send that information to the Tribune?—A. I sent a dispatch about it; yes, sir.

Q. How were you enabled to make a comparison between the testimony that was given by the Attorney-General and the supposed report of it for the committee?—A. I had this document, this printed report of the record, and I obtained also, from the stenographer who sits over there [indicating], a copy of it.

Q. That is, you were furnished with a copy by the Bell Telephone Company's agent here?—A. I purchased it from a stenographer here. I do not know whether he is the Bell company stenographer or not. I purchased that part of the testimony.

Q. You say you do not know whether he is the agent of the Bell Telephone Company?—A. I do not know whether he is. I presume that he is employed by them.

Q. Don't you know that he is understood and generally recognized here as such?—A. I have heard you say so and others.

Q. You have reason to believe that he is?—A. I have reason to believe it, but I do not know personally.

Q. And you were permitted access to his report and made that the foundation for charging in your paper that the report of the committee was inaccurate and garbled in order to make a favorable report for the Attorney-General, did you not?—A. I had access to that report the same as anybody else has access to it, if they are willing to pay for it.

Q. Do you mean that that thing is in the market?—A. I mean that the stenographer will sell that report to any one who will pay him for it.

Q. As a newspaper correspondent you found that out, did you?—A. Yes, sir; I find out everything.

The CHAIRMAN. Now we will proceed with the letters.

Mr. EDEN. It is not worth while to read them.

The CHAIRMAN. No; just indicate them by dates.

Mr. RANNEY. There is a letter of Casey Young's, dated August 1, 1883, relating to the company entirely.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom addressed?

Mr. RANNEY. To Dr. Rogers, I suppose. Then on August 30, there is a letter to Dr. Rogers from Colonel Young, from Hot Springs, Ark. The next letter is one dated March 25, from Colonel Young. The next one is dated July 1, 1883, from Colonel Young to Dr. Rogers. The next one is dated August 5, 1883, from Colonel Young to Dr. Rogers. The next one is from Casey Young, and reads as follows:

“DEAR DOCTOR: The resolution has just been sent to our committee. We do not meet again until Tuesday, and in the meantime we have a good deal of work to do. Come to my room at 7 o'clock to-night. I want to see you about it.

“Yours, truly,

“CASEY YOUNG.”

The CHAIRMAN. They need not be read.

Mr. RANNEY. That was a short one, and does not seem to be dated. The next one is dated July 29, and is from Casey Young to Dr. Rogers, and another one, dated Memphis, August 5, 1883, from Casey Young to Harry Rogers.

Mr. OATES. Are you not getting in some that are already in the record.

Mr. RANNEY. Those are the ones I believe I omitted to put in. I think some of them were referred to in the testimony, but I do not think they have gone in. The next one is dated Hot Springs, September 9, and is from Colonel Young to Dr. Rogers. I believe those are all that are not in. [To the stenographer.] If you find any of those in you need not copy them.

The following are the letters introduced by Mr. Ranney, except the one dated March 25, 1883, which is already printed on page 1073 of the record:

Casey Young to Dr. Rogers.

AUGUST 1ST, 1883.

I agree with you perfectly in the conclusion that we should “be up and doing.” The present disturbed condition of the telegraphic world presents a peculiarly favorable opportunity for us to put our system before the public. But we should be careful to do it in such a way as would start it on a solid basis so far as commending it to public confidence is concerned. It seems to me that we might make some favorable terms with the “Am. Postal Telegraph Co.” for these reasons: If Harry's repeating system is what we think it is, and can be put into practical operation, the A. P. T. Co. could, by cheapening the cost of telegraphy so much as that would enable them to do, compete upon more equal terms with W. U. Then if the Govt., as it certainly will, should establish a postal-telegraph system of its own, it would be in a better condition to sell to the Govt. its plant, improvements, &c., than any other company; or if it should not sell to the Govt., but conclude to keep its lines operating, no other company could successfully compete with it. I think I see what Gould proposes to do. He sees that the days of the W. U. are numbered, that it must go. Hence his indifference to the strike which at one time reached such formidable proportions. He is therefore switching off on the telephone, and is every day engaged actively through his agents in buying out all the different exchanges in the country and putting them under one management. One of his agents bought all in this State a few days ago; and, by the way, they have gotten hold of some invention by which they can talk over long lines, and are now putting Little Rock in communication with nearly every town and village in the State. I talked from here to Little Rock yesterday. What is this? Perhaps they are infringing Harry's patent.

But to resume on Gould. He sees plainly enough that the next Congress will establish a postal telegraph, and he is arranging to sell the plant of the Western Union to the Government for that purpose, and to accomplish this object he will put in the field the largest lobby army he has ever had in Washington, and the company we may be associated with will be the only one that will have the ghost of a chance to compete with him. So it seems to me that if these views were presented to the American Postal Company they would at once see the importance of joining forces with us. I impressed all this on Colonel Looney, and supposed he would have laid it before the company at once. I hope Looney will be able to raise the necessary amount of money as easily as he expects he can, but I am afraid he will find it a more difficult undertaking than he at present imagines. While he is possessed of great energy, fine business capacity, and most engaging manners, yet you know he is a most sanguine man, and is so happily constituted that everything to him has the tint and perfume of the rose. Every cloud has a silver lining, hence he sometimes gets in the clouds. I, on the contrary, see things as through a glass darkly (vide Saint Paul, I believe), and walk more in the shadow than in the sunshine. I take a more conservative and realistic view of things. In respect to the interest in the matter which he should have, that is a matter which, so far as I am concerned, you are at perfect liberty to determine as you see proper. I am indebted to your generosity for what interest I have in it and am willing that you should manage the entire matter just as you please, and my personal feelings would lead me to extreme liberality with Colonel Looney. But I present the question in a practical, business point of view—not the amount suggested in my letter to General Johnston—a most liberal donation as a retainer. If Colonel Looney should succeed as well as he anticipates, it could be increased to an amount commensurate with the service that he may render to the association. But suppose he should fail. Would we not need all our available resources to interest the services and influence of some one else? Would it not be safer as well as juster for his interest to be contingent?

These suggestions present themselves as reasonable precautions, such as ordinarily business prudence would dictate. What is Colonel L's programme? How does he expect to raise the money? I think your suggestions practical, to stock some of our contemplated enterprises and sell enough of the stock to put the others afloat. The telephone is the greatest and easiest method of doing it. If Harry can by any possibility invent any kind of a telephone system that will not be a practical infringement of any existing patent, we can start it on a small scale and dictate terms to Gould; for such a purpose I could in this town before sundown to-day get subscribed half a million of dollars. Everybody is looking to the telephone as the coming means of rapid communication. I am of opinion that we had better incorporate as soon as possible, and if you deem it necessary for that purpose, will come to Washington City by the 1st of September. We will have to go to New Jersey, Connecticut, or New York. I know of no other State where the laws on that subject are broad enough to cover all we want. Has Colonel Looney seen Ewing? I think it important for him to do so. Tell Harry to put his telephone instruments to work. That is the broadest thoroughfare to fortune.

Your friend,

CASEY YOUNG.

Casey Young to Dr. Rogers.

- AUGUST 30, 1883.

DEAR DOCTOR: I received your letter this morning. I think our alliance is as should be with the American Postal people, but if they will not give fair terms we can go to some other. There is a gentleman here from New York who has become enthused over our scheme, and is anxious to become interested with us. He is, I am informed, a man of large means and he seems to have intimate relations with many moneyed men of New York, such as Cyrus Field, Russel Sage, Rufus Hatch, and others. He says if what I tell him is true it is the biggest thing of the age, and that he can raise all the money needed to give it a start and that he will undertake to do it for an interest of $100,000, one hundred thousand dollars upon the basis of a capital stock to the amount of five millions, in case he succeeds; if he fails, to have nothing. I think this a fair proposition, but I do not know what Colonel Looney is doing nor what his plans are, so do not know what to say to this gentleman, as I would not in any way interfere with Colonel L.

Casey Young to Dr. Rogers.

JULY 1ST, 1883.

I received your letter a day or two ago, but was in the midst of an important lawsuit at the time and could not answer until now.

Agreeing with you as to the importance of an early incorporation, I had an interview with Senator Harris, and finding him of the same opinion, I agreed, at his suggestion, to prepare the necessary papers for incorporating under the laws of Tennessee, but when I came to make a close examination of the acts of our legislature on the subject I reached the conclusion that they were wholly inadequate to meet the requirements of our case. In other words, I do not think that we can secure under it as enlarged corporate powers as we desire and as will be needful. I have, therefore, promised Senator H. that I would go to Little Rock in a few days and confer fully with Senator Garland in respect to organizing under the laws of the State of Arkansas, or of some other State whose laws may be more favorable to us. In this connection I would make this suggestion: It is only four or five months now until the members of Congress will begin to assemble in Washington. All of our company will be there then, as well as people from everywhere, and we could thus understand perhaps more advisedly, and possibly to more advantage. We could start off better, and we could not likely do much before then no way, as this is the season of suspension of active operations in every kind of business. I will, however, in a short time prepare articles of incorporation under the laws of some State and send them on to you.

I am very strongly of the opinion that we can do well with the "transmitter," which we are getting ready for more extended operations. I believe I could sell one of them to every man who has a telephone in Memphis, and the same, I think, could be done elsewhere, and we could derive a very considerable profit from it. I want to go to San Francisco and other Pacific slope cities this summer, and if I can get samples of them before I start, I think I could introduce them there. Senator Harris left for Washington last night. Will confer with you fully.

Casey Young to Dr. Rogers.

AUGUST 5, 1883.

DEAR DOCTOR: Our old friend, Colonel R. F. Looney, is about going to New York and other points East by way of Washington City, and Senator Harris and myself, after a full conference with him on the subject, are of opinion that he can be of great service to us in carrying out its objects, and that we had better interest him in the Pan-Electric Company. You know his energy and business capacity in things of this kind, and his recent connection with large capitalists in operations of considerable magnitude gives him facilities in the line of our undertaking that may be turned to our mutual advantage. I think now is the time for us to move in the general direction indicated in my recent letters to you and Harry, and I do not know any one better fitted to open negotiations than Colonel Looney.

Senator Harris and I both think it would be to our interest and advantage to give him such amount of stock in the company under the provisions and upon the basis of the third paragraph of our articles of agreement as will enlist his active efforts in behalf of the association—say fifty thousand dollars, with a prospective increase to one hundred thousand dollars in case he should succeed in making an arrangement by which the properties of the company are made valuable. These are, of course, mere suggestions of ours, and we expect you to advise just such action as you think it proper to take, and will be content. If it is not true, as I suspect, that Ewing has sold out to the Bell Telephone people, I think we could make an arrangement with them to unite our interests, and I am of opinion that Colonel Looney had better see him on the subject, and see what can be done, provided it meets your views. You can explain the whole matter to him. The telephone field is the most inviting one I know of. I gave Colonel Looney a letter to General Ewing, which you can read, and if you approve he can deliver. I have also written by mail to General Johnston and Harry, authorizing them to use my name in any arrangement you and they may deem it proper to make with him.

Casey Young to Dr. Rogers.

JULY 29, 1883.

It occurs to me that the recent strike of the telegraph operators presents a most favorable opportunity for us to strike at some of the several companies to the Western Union. Let them have our rapid system so they can compete with this big corporation. Public feeling throughout the country is strongly against it now, and if some other company had appliances by which the cost of transmitting messages and conducting operations generally, it could compete with the W. Union. Everybody now wants to see it destroyed. I think it is a good time to open negotiations with some of its rivals. I have just written very fully to Senator Harris on the subject, who, I understand, is in Washington, and he will, of course, show it to you. If I thought I could do any good I would come to Washington, but I do not see that I can.

Your friend,

CASEY YOUNG.

Casey Young to J. Harris Rogers.

MEMPHIS, August 5, 1883.

DEAR HARRY: Senator Harris and myself both wrote to your father to-day in respect to Colonel Looney becoming interested with us in the "Pan-Electric," giving some of the reasons which induced us to think we had better take him in. Colonel L. leaves for Washington to-night and will carry these letters with him, which will, no doubt, be shown to you, when you will understand the whole matter, hence I do not write you more at length. I enclose you a letter to General Johnston, which will answer for you both. You can read it, and if you approve it forward to him wherever he may be. Senator H. tells me he is not in W.

Your friend,

CASEY YOUNG.

Casey Young to Dr. Rogers.

SEPTEMBER 9, 1883.

DEAR DOCTOR: I have received both your letters and think you are pursuing the proper course in respect to the telephone transmitter. Get the indorsement, if possible, of the Smithsonian Institution, and that, of course, gives it a send-off it could not otherwise get. I am very sorry Colonel Looney did not go to New York and see Ewing, as he promised me he would. I have a letter inquiring why he did not, as I had written that he would. I suppose it is time we were incorporating, and I would suggest that you see Senator Garland, who is now in Washington, and get him to prepare the charter. It is my judgment that he will not lose anything by doing nothing for the little time longer that will intervene between now and the meeting of Congress, and I am quite sure that it is not our interest to dispose of any stock before that time for reasons which I will explain when we meet.

The CHAIRMAN. Colonel Young indicated a desire to be heard in regard to some corrections in his testimony.

Hon. CASEY YOUNG was then recalled.

The WITNESS. I just desire to correct some errors in my former testimony. I have gone over it and have noted them on some sheets of paper here, and I had probably better refer to the page and the line of the record where it appears, so that the committee will understand it. I want to say in reference to the letters just called out, that I have not read all those letters and do not know what is in them, but I do not want to be going on the witness stand every day. I want to say this in reference to them, that I never had any corrupt or improper purpose in any letter I ever wrote to Dr. Rogers, whatever letter it may be. I have not seen them and have had no time to read them, but I will state that I made no improper proposition and was actuated by no corrupt or improper motive.

On page 123, line 29, I want to insert after the word "since" the words "from the newspapers." It seems that a question was asked me about the Bell Telephone Company, and I said I had learned something about it, but I want to add that it was what I learned from the newspapers. After the word "since" in line 19, page 123, the line reads thus: "I provided in this article that we might incorporate with a capital stock of $5,000,000, thinking we had a right to do that, though I have found out since that we had not." I just want to add to that so that it will read, "I have found out since from the newspapers that we had not."

On line 4, from the bottom of page 138, I am made to say that Washington is my home. I spoke of a suit being brought, and I say here that I want it brought at Washington. I think I said I wanted it brought at Washington or at Memphis, where I lived. It would be inferred from that that I said I lived in Washington. I want to add "or in Memphis;" that is where I live.

On line 3, page 154, I see I am made to say that I was in Pittsburg on the 12th or 14th of July. If I said that it was incorrect, because I got there on the night of the 8th, and it appears that I left on the 11th or 12th. I was not there, I am sure, on the 14th.

Mr. RANNEY. How do you leave it?

The WITNESS. I leave it that I got there on the night of the 8th and left on the 11th; my memorandum book shows that. And I am made to say in the record there that I was there on the 12th or 14th. That is not correct. I was not there as late as the 14th, I know.

On the same page I say I think, Mr. Van Benthuyssen, Mr. Briersen, and Mr. Huntington came to Washington after I arrived on the 30th of August. I find that was incorrect, and that they were here when I came.

Mr. RANNEY. You do not mean August there; you want to change "August" to "July," do you not?

The WITNESS. Yes, that is correct; I want to change that. I was under the impression at the time I was, and testified the other day that they came after I did. But I find upon examining the register at the Ebbitt House that they came before, and that I was mistaken.

After the word "as" in line 9, page 155, I want to insert "J. W. Rogers" instead of "Harry Rogers." I was talking there about Dr. Rogers and not Harry Rogers. It is a mistake in the name, that is all.

On page 164, at the end of the fourth paragraph, I am made to say that Mr. Taylor used to be in my office. That is a mistake. I meant that he was in my office as a friend. He was not there as a clerk or partner or anything of that sort. He was a friend of mine; a lawyer of some distinction. It might be inferred from the testimony that he was in my office as a clerk or something of that sort.

In the 10th paragraph on page 169, I want to insert after the word "gentlemen" $100 each instead of $300 each. That is when I spoke of the assessment made by Dr. Rogers and General Johnston.

The CHAIRMAN. How does the paragraph begin?

The WITNESS. It is not important to the committee, but it is important to me. The paragraph commences in this way:

"Q. Did that transaction occur before you became the secretary and treasurer?—A. No, sir; I was secretary and treasurer then."

Mr. RANNEY. What change do you make in that?

The WITNESS. I want the alteration made to $100 instead of $300. I was speaking of the amount of money that Harry Rogers, and General Johnston had assessed on us when I was in Memphis. I intended to say $100. I find by looking at the book that the amount was $102; that is the exact amount.

In line 6, page 175, I want to insert the word "not" after the word "proper," so that it will read "and if the Attorney-General should see proper not to bring suit under this bill," etc. If you will read the sentence you will see that it makes no sense without the not being in it.

At the bottom of paragraph 5, on page 179, I want to insert "thirty-nine millions," instead of "one million."

The CHAIRMAN. What are the first words of the paragraph?

Mr. RANNEY. It is the last sentence there in the paragraph which reads, "The newspapers said we got from those local companies—but it is something short of that—about a million, but that is not much difference."

The WITNESS. I intended to say about thirty-nine millions short. I meant to say that they had made a mistake of thirty-nine millions. It was published that we had received forty millions of stock, and we had received only one million, and I intended to say that they had made a mistake of thirty-nine millions.

Mr. OATES. Do you mean to say a million short or a million in all?

The WITNESS. I mean that the newspapers were mistaken in saying that.

Mr. OATES. The newspapers you speak of have not been put in evidence, and we do not know anything about them.

The CHAIRMAN. My question there calls attention to that. You want to say that there was one million instead of forty millions, and therefore the newspapers have made a mistake of thirty-nine millions.

The WITNESS. Yes, that is it. On page 181, at the top of the page, I am made to say that I had received a telegram from Mr. Van Benthuyzen's clerk. I do not think I used the word clerk; I said from Mr. Van Benthuyzen himself. I never received any telegram from his clerk.

Mr. RANNEY. Didn't you mean Mr. Seixas?

The WITNESS. No, sir; I meant Mr. Van Benthuyzen. I received a telegram from him about that time. In line 40, on page 183, I want to insert $146 instead of $446. You will find that I spoke of paying Harry Rogers some money, and it was $146 instead of $446 that I paid him.

Mr. RANNEY. Is this the place, "April 26, expenses $446"?

The WITNESS. Yes; that should be $146. In line 22, from the bottom of the page 185, I am made to say, in speaking of Senator Harris, Mr. Atkins, General Johnston, and Senator Garland, that all of them agreed to issue stock. That is incorrect. I said all of them were opposed to it. I am made to say that they favored the issuance of stock. I should have said that they were opposed to it.

Mr. OATES. How does the paragraph begin?

The WITNESS. It reads in this way: "Q. You, Senator Harris, Mr. Atkins, General Johnston, and Senator Garland were opposed to the issue of stock?—A. Whenever it was discussed at the meetings of the board, every one of them agreed to it." I meant to say every one of them opposed it.

Mr. OATES. You want to strike out the word "agreed" and put in the word "opposed"?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir. In line 15, on page 91, I am made to say that Mr. Van Benthuyzen signed a letter which I had written to the President. It should be that he was to sign it, as the committee will remember.

Mr. RANNEY. What part of the page is that?

The WITNESS. About the middle of the page. Mr. Millard is making the examination. It says: "Q. At Mr. Van Benthuyzen's request at Memphis?—A. Yes, sir; his name is attached to it, not mine." That should be "was to be attached to it."

Mr. MOFFATT. That is the way it reads; it says: "Q. Who penned this letter to the President?—A. I wrote it myself.

"Q. From Memphis?—A. Yes, sir; I wrote it, and Mr. Van Benthuyzen was to sign it."

The WITNESS. But in the next sentence I am made to say that he did sign it.

Mr. RANNEY. The name was to be attached to it?

The WITNESS. Yes, that is what I said. In the third line from the bottom, on page 191, I am made to say that Mr. Van Benthuyzen was in Washington at that time and went with me to the Department of Justice. He was not in the city at the time. If you look at the answer you will see that the question was put.

Mr. RANNEY. This is the question: "Didn't you and Mr. Van Benthuyzen go up and see Mr. Goode and ask him if he had received the papers?—A. Yes, sir."

The WITNESS. Yes, but he was not in the city at all, and I did not intend to say that he went with me.

Mr. MOFFATT. Probably you were referring to Mr. Huntington?

The WITNESS. Yes, probably it was Mr. Huntington.

Mr. HALL. How do you change that?

Mr. RANNEY. This has been stereotyped, so that it will have to go in as a correction. That was the 2d of September when Mr. Van Benthuyzen was not here.

The WITNESS. Then Senator Harris went with me.

Mr. OATES. You can just say "no" to that.

The WITNESS. Yes, but Senator Harris went with me at the time.

Mr. RANNEY. The next question says that Senator Harris was with you.

The WITNESS. Well, that is what I thought. It was a mistake if I said Mr. Van Benthuyzen went.

Mr. OATES. Strike out "yes" and say "no."

Mr. RANNEY. No, I would not do that. You get it as he says.

The WITNESS. In the second paragraph from the bottom of page 192, I stated that no application to bring suit in the name of the Government had ever been referred to the Interior Department. I stated that only two or three had ever been so referred, and I arrived at this conclusion from an examination of the register of the Department of Justice, but I did not look at the original applications upon which it seems by the testimony of General Clay that many such applications were so referred. I want to put in that correction in justice to myself, because I had stated in my argument before the Secretary of the Interior, and I stated to the committee, that it was not the custom of the Department of Justice to send these things to the Interior Department. But after General Clay testified here, I examined and found upon the original applications that it had been done upon some sort of applications, but on the register in the Department there is no reference to it at all. I had not examined them.

Mr. RANNEY. Mr. Clay swears that he found only one instance where it was not referred.

The WITNESS. I had not examined the original applications, but simply the register, and that is the way I was led into that mistake.

Mr. HALL. You were governed by the register, and not by the applications?

The WITNESS. Yes, and I was led into that mistake.

Mr. RANNEY. You want to say simply that you were mistaken about that?

The WITNESS. Yes, and to state the way I happened to be led into it. In line 16, on page 193, I am made to say that Senator Harris was present when certain instruments were being made—these telephone instruments at Dr. Rogers's house. I said they were being operated, not being made there. That is when they were testing them.

Mr. HALL. You probably used the word "experiments" instead of "instruments."

The WITNESS. Yes, sir. In line 24, on page 213, I am made to say that I found my reputation, etc. It should be "felt" my reputation. It comes in this sentence: "Q. Didn't you have curiosity enough to inquire what it related to?" My answer is, "Not the slightest."

Mr. HALL. It is about one-third of the way down the page.

The WITNESS. I was asked if I didn't have curiosity enough to inquire what it related to—that is curiosity about certain letters, and I said, "not the slightest. I felt my reputation was above anything of that sort." It is in the print here, "found my reputation." I want to strike out that word and insert the word "felt."

Mr. RANNEY. You want to substitute "felt" for "found?"

The WITNESS. Yes, sir. In paragraph 7, on page 226, I am made to say that we were conferring every day from the 30th of July to the 7th of August. I did not mean to say that the conference lasted up to the 7th of August, but during the time the gentlemen with whom I conferred remained in Washington. But I find now from the register of the hotel, that Colonel Gantt left on the 1st of August, and Mr. Van Benthuyzen and Mr. Huntington on the 4th of August. Colonel Gantt left the hotel the same day that I did.

Mr. RANNEY. And Mr. Von Briesen left on the 31st.

The WITNESS. I do not know; he did not stay at that hotel.

Mr. RANNEY. He says he left on the evening of the 31st.

The WITNESS. I think he did. On page 227 it would be inferred from my answer that I sent two telegrams to Mr. Van Benthuyzen at New Orleans, but I did not send but one. It is on page 227, near the top of the page.

The CHAIRMAN. You say here you sent only one.

The WITNESS. It would appear from the question that I had sent one previous to that. That is the way the question reads.

The CHAIRMAN. You say "only one; I have not sent any since."

The WITNESS. That would infer that I had sent one before. I never did send but one. The inference would be that I had sent one previous to that time.

Mr. OATES. You want to strike out, then, "I have not sent any since"?

The WITNESS. Yes; or you might say, "I sent but one." On page 231 it appears that I said in respect to Mr. Van Benthuyzen's letter to the Attorney-General of the 12th July that I never heard of its being withdrawn until long afterwards. That is true, but I advised the abandonment of the suit as there asked for, but did not particularly advise the withdrawal, as a matter of fact, of the letter, as I remember.

Mr. RANNEY. What part of page 231 are you referring to now?

The WITNESS. It is about the middle of the page. It is in answer to a question which says, "You did not know of it from the time you came there until you left?—A. I never heard of it until long afterwards." I never heard of the actual withdrawing of the letter, but I advised the abandonment of that character of suit.

Mr. RANNEY. Do you mean to say that you do not know now that the letter was withdrawn?

The WITNESS. I did not know actually of the withdrawal of the letter until long afterwards.

Mr. RANNEY. Right there—perhaps the question may be admissible. It was said by Mr. Von Briesen that he asked for the withdrawal of it on the 31st in that interview.

The WITNESS. I do not remember hearing anything about it. He may have done so.

Mr. RANNEY. Mr. Van Benthuyzen and Mr. Von Briesen both said so.

The WITNESS. It seems they were there the day before I was there; I do not know what occurred then; I heard nothing about it at the time I was there.

Mr. RANNEY. Mr. Von Briesen was not there the day before.

The WITNESS. Well, I do not know anything about it. I was only there once. On page 234 I am made to say that General Luke Wright and Colonel Gantt, in their conferences with Mr. Van Benthuyzen and Mr. Beckwith, in Memphis, were acting for our company.

Mr. RANNEY. It says: "You and Gantt and Wright were the attorneys of your company?—A. Yes, sir."

The WITNESS. I only meant to be understood that they were our attorneys at that time, but not specially authorized to act in that matter. At page 238, in speaking of bringing models from Pittsburg, I am made to say that they were brought by Mr. Beckwith. That is incorrect. They were brought by Mr. Van Benthuyzen. On page 239 I am made to say that I did not think the Government had the power to bring suit without a special statute. I did think the Government had power to bring it without a special statute.

Mr. HALL. You want to strike out the words "did not"?

Mr. OATES. Yes; the word "not."

Mr. RANNEY. His correction of the fact will fix it. We cannot strike out; it has to go in as a correction. He now says that that is a mistake.

The WITNESS. Now, here is a very unimportant matter to the committee. I am made to say on page 291 that I am "heeled." I do not think I ever made use of any such slang as that. If I did I ask the committee to strike it out.

Mr. RANNEY. It says, "On the law of this case I am 'heeled.'"

The WITNESS. I would like the committee to strike it out. It is a vulgarism that I am not in the habit of using. On page 300 I am made to say that I had no idea the President would order a suit to be brought. It should be that I had no idea about it at all.

Mr. RANNEY. It says here: "Q. What reason had you to suppose that the President of the United States, without any precedent in that regard, would order the Attorney-General to commence that suit?—A. I did not suppose he would do it." Right there, if I recollect right, in the interview of the 31st of July one of the witnesses said that you remarked that the Attorney-General was right.

The WITNESS. That is a mistake; that was Colonel Gantt. I do not think I said a word at all; I do not remember saying anything. I think that remark was made by Colonel Gantt. I am made to say that I had no idea that he would do it. I meant to say that I had no idea on that subject.

The CHAIRMAN. It says here "I did not suppose he would do it."

The WITNESS. That is incorrect. I had formed no conclusion about it at all. I had supposed that if an officer of the Government declined to execute a law or perform any official duty, that it would be within the power of the President to instruct or direct him to do it in some way. That is the general idea I had about it; I had formed no conclusion about it. On page 316 I am made to say that I was introduced to Professor Gray by Mr. Von Briesen. That should have been Mr. Van Benthuyzen. Mr. Von Briesen was not here at the time.

Mr. RANNEY. What part of the page is that?

The WITNESS. It is the second line from the top of page 316. It will be found that I say there that I was introduced to Professor Gray by Mr. Von Briesen; it was Mr. Van Benthuyzen; that was the mistake of the stenographer, I think; the names sound something alike. On page 327, I am made to say that I had shown the agreement between myself and Mr. Van Benthuyzen to all the members of our company; I do not think I said I had shown it; I meant to say I had told them all about it.

Mr. RANNEY. What page is that?

The WITNESS. On page 327.

Mr. OATES. Read the beginning of the paragraph.

The WITNESS. I am asked, "Don't you think you did do it?—A. Yes, to those I saw; but we had no meetings of the board of directors; I know I communicated it to Senator Harris, to Dr. Rogers, to General Johnston, and to everybody I saw." Wherever the word "shown" occurs, I desire to change it to the word "told."

Mr. OATES. How does the paragraph begin; who is questioning?

The WITNESS. I am asked, "Q. Now, what I want to know is"—

Mr. OATES. Who were you asked by?

The WITNESS. I think by Mr. Ranney. I do not see the name for some pages back. I will commence on the bottom of the page at page 326, and you will probably get the sense of it. Here is a question propounded to me: "Q. Now, what I want to know is whether, having done that, having made such an arrangement as that, verbal or in writing, yourself, without previous authority from the directors, and without their present concurrence, would you not consider it your duty to communicate what you did do to your codirectors for their sanction or rejection?—A. Undoubtedly. Q. Don't you think you did do it?—A. Yes; to those I saw. But we had no meetings of the board of directors. I know I communicated it to Senator Harris, to Dr. Rogers, to General Johnston, and to everybody I saw." Somewhere I am made to say that I showed it to everybody. I do not remember that I showed it to anybody. I want to say I told them.

Mr. OATES. This says "communicated."

The WITNESS. Well, in one place I say it was shown. I meant to say that it was told.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not find any such thing, where you say that you showed it. But you make the correction that you did not show it.

The WITNESS. Yes; I did not; I only told them.

Mr. RANNEY. Do you mean by that that you told them it embraced the Government suit?

The WITNESS. No, sir; I do not think I ever did, for that had passed entirely out of my mind. I had no recollection that it embraced anything about it until Mr. Van Benthuyzen showed it to me, and I was greatly surprised to find it in there; I had forgotten all about it. On the same page, page 327, in reference to this agreement before, it would appear that I was speaking of the supplementary contract. But I was not; I was alluding to the agreement of August 4, and you will find on the succeeding page that that was stated in the further examination, somebody asking me which I was referring to, and I said the one of August 4, and not the one of August 27. I had no conversation with anybody about the agreement of August 27 until I came before the committee, that I remember, for I had forgotten all about it until I found it in my trunk. It was the first agreement that I was speaking of, the one of August 4 and not of August 27.

The CHAIRMAN. What page is that?

The WITNESS. I do not find it on the page now, but I desire to make that correction. When I was speaking of showing the agreement to any of my associates, I was referring to the agreement of August 4 and not to the one of August 27. If you will look at the top of page 330 you will see that explained in answer to a question of Mr. Ranney's. I will just read those questions there and that will explain what I am trying to arrive at: "Q. Was an agreement made in Washington?—A. Oh, yes, sir; that agreement was. This was not; this was made in Memphis. Q. This is the one I mean.—A. I never mentioned it to a human being until I found it the other night. I had forgotten all about it, as I have explained.” That is speaking of the one of the 27th of August. Previous to that time the answers and questions would lead to the conclusion that I was speaking of the latter instrument when I was speaking of the former one. On page 186 it appears that I said I had talked to a number of members of Congress about buying and selling stock, etc. That is incorrect to this extent: I do not remember that I ever said anything to any member of Congress about his buying stock or my selling stock. I had general conversations with them, but it was not in reference to buying and selling stock, except the conversation with Mr. Dunn that he referred to the other day. I talked with them, but never offered to sell them stock.

Mr. RANNEY. You remember what Mr. Payne, of New York, said?

The WITNESS. Oh, yes, I remember his conversation. I never offered to sell him any. I met him in private, confidential intercourse, and had conversation with him, but my memory is not so accurate as to recall what it was.

The CHAIRMAN. My recollection is that he did not state that you offered to sell him stock.

Mr. RANNEY. I think he said you offered to let him in “on the ground floor.”

The WITNESS. Well, some such conversation may have occurred; I do not remember it. On page 277 I am made to say, when the question was asked me, if I told the Attorney-General of an agreement between myself and Mr. Van Benthuyzen, that I did.

Mr. RANNEY. On what part of page 277?

The WITNESS. It must be a mistake in my reference. I do not see it on page 277 at all. But wherever it does occur, I am made to say that I told him about the agreement. It should be that I did not tell him about it.

Mr. RANNEY. Tell who about it?

The WITNESS. The Attorney-General. You asked me if I had told the Attorney-General about this agreement between myself and Mr. Van Benthuyzen, and the testimony makes it appear that I said I did. But I said I did not.

The CHAIRMAN. What page is that?

The WITNESS. I have it marked page 277, but I have no doubt that is wrong. But that is the correction I desire to make wherever it does appear.

Mr. RANNEY. ON page 276 I find this question: “Q. Why did you report it to every other director and not to Mr. Garland?—A. I never spoke to Mr. Garland about it since he has been Attorney-General. Q. Why?—A. I will tell you the reason, if you will allow me to do so. I did not desire to talk to him at all about this matter after he was Attorney-General, and never did.”

The WITNESS. You will find somewhere there that I said I did, but it should be that I did not.

Mr. RANNEY. I think you are in error about that.

The WITNESS. Well, if I said I told him, it was a mistake.

Mr. OATES. Let me call your attention to language on page 323. You had been questioned by Mr. Ranney about the board of directors of the Pan-Electric Company, to whom you communicated a knowledge of that agreement entered into with Mr. Van Benthuyzen, and in answer to a question by Mr. Hall you say, speaking of seeing Mr. Garland, “If I had seen him, it is possible I might have mentioned it to him.” Do you mean to say there that you might have or would have mentioned it to him?

The WITNESS. I meant that possibly if I had met him anywhere I might have mentioned it to him.

Mr. OATES. You do not mean to say that you probably did?

The WITNESS. No, sir.

Mr. OATES. You mean to say that you would probably have mentioned it to him?

The WITNESS. No, I do not mean that I would, but that I might have done so.

Mr. OATES. The way it reads now, that part of it reads that you might possibly or did possibly.

Mr. RANNEY. It says here “there were seven directors, and four would be a majority. If I had seen him, it is possible I might have mentioned it to him, but I never saw him during this time at all.”

Mr. HALL. That means if you had met him you would have spoken to him about it?

The WITNESS. I do not think I should.

Mr. HALL. But did you?

The WITNESS. No, sir; I did not. I did not see him at all. In fact I never thought about mentioning it to him. I had no conclusion about it in any way.

Mr. RANNEY. You say down below there, in answer to my question: “If you had a reason for withholding it from Mr. Garland you will tell what it is?—A. No, sir; I did not have any reason for withholding it, and I did not withhold it any more than I withheld it from you.”

The WITNESS. I meant by that that I did not see him, and had no conversation with him.

Mr. RANNEY. The next question is this: "If you had any reason for not giving him the information, state what it was.—A. With the greatest pleasure in the world; I did not see him."

The WITNESS. That was one of the reasons. On page 331 I speak of the Bell Telephone Company as controlling the courts. I do not want to be understood by the committee or the country—

Mr. RANNEY. Where on the page?

The WITNESS. It commences with the long paragraph. The question was asked by Mr. Hanback. It is within that paragraph.

Mr. OATES. What is it?

Mr. HALL. The answer is: "I had not become satisfied that it had become such a monopoly that it controlled the newspapers of the country and the courts."

The WITNESS. I do not wish to be understood by the committee or by the country as intimating—

The CHAIRMAN. It seems that question had been asked before, and Mr. Hanback called your attention to it. It was read as an answer to a previous question.

The WITNESS. I suppose I may put in the correction here as well as anywhere else. I just want to say that I did not mean to intimate that any court had been controlled by corrupt means used upon the court. What I meant was, that the courts had been imposed upon, in my judgment, by collusive records. I did not mean that any court had been bought or that any judge had been corrupted.

Mr. OATES. It is explained here: "I was asked that the other day, and I stated, I believe, that I had no facts in my possession that I could prove; but there is such a belief."

The WITNESS. That is about the newspapers, I believe.

Mr. OATES. It goes on: "I think I have facts now that do authorize me in making the statement, and when the proper time comes I propose to submit those facts to the committee."

The WITNESS. That is about the newspapers.

The CHAIRMAN. That relates to the courts too; the newspapers and the courts.

The WITNESS. If any inference could arise from that statement that I meant to include the courts or the judges of courts in any corrupt or collusive combination or conspiracy, I will say that I did not mean anything of that sort. I believe the judiciary is honest. I think judges may be imposed upon and misled and deceived, but I do not believe the Bell Company or any other company have bought any judges.

Mr. OATES. What next?

The WITNESS. Those are all the corrections, I believe, that I see in my testimony. I do not think of any more. I have some testimony I would like to put in in addition to what I have testified to myself. There are some parts of this record that I think ought to go in and that have not been put in.

Mr. RANNEY. What record?

Mr. YOUNG. The record before the Interior Department. There are other things in the record that I think as pertinent to the inquiry, and perhaps more so than those extracts which have already been included, and I think it is but fair that the others should also be embraced. I call the attention of the committee to it, and I ask that these extracts from the record shall also go in. Here are certain facts—

Mr. RANNEY. Do not recite the facts.

Mr. YOUNG. I am going to state what I am going to put in. I will ask the stenographer not to put it down, and I will state what it is.

Mr. RANNEY. Identify it by the page of the record.

Mr. YOUNG. There are three or four things on the page. It is not a fact I am going to state. There are certain things—

The CHAIRMAN. If you want to make any offer to the committee let it go down.

Mr. YOUNG. I want to offer facts admitted during the hearing before the Interior Department that appear in this record on page 391. If you will permit me, I will read it.

Mr. OATES. It is the best way, so that we may know what it is.

Mr. RANNEY. If you want to put in a part, the whole should go in.

The CHAIRMAN. We have a part already.

Mr. YOUNG. I want to put this in.

Facts admitted during the hearing.

That in the cause of the American Bell Telephone Co. et al. vs. The Pan-Electric Telephone Co. and the Rogers Telephone and Telegraph Co. of Pennsylvania, in the U. S. district court for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, at Philadelphia, the bill was dismissed, upon proof and argument, as to the Pan-Electric Telephone Co., for want of jurisdiction of the court over said company.

That in the cause of the American Bell Telephone Co. et al. vs. the Pan-Electric and Washington Telephone et al. in the U. S. district court for the eastern district of Maryland, at Baltimore, there had been no service upon any officer or agent of the Pan-Electric Telephone Co., and that no proceeding had been taken and no order made as to said company.

That during the hearing of this matter before the Secretary the American Bell Telephone Co. has instituted suit in the district court of the U. S. for the eastern district of Louisiana, at New Orleans, vs. The National Improved Co.

And that the American Bell Telephone Co. has also brought suit during the hearing against the Globe Telephone Co., in the U. S. district court for the eastern district of New York; but it was explained by the counsel of the American Bell Telephone Co. that these suits had been directed before the commencement of the proceedings now pending before the Hon. Secretary of the Interior.

That is all of that. I want to put in also the pleas offered in the suit of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company against the American Bell Company in the United States circuit court for the western district of Tennessee.

Mr. EDEN. Is that in the record before the Interior Department?

Mr. YOUNG. Yes; the pleas put in by the American Bell Telephone Company. They are as follows:

[United States circuit court, western district of Tennessee. The Pan-Electric Telephone Company vs. The American Bell Telephone Company et al.]

I, C. W. H. Heiskell, hereby move to strike out and set aside so much of the marshal's return as purports to relate to the American Bell Telephone Company, and to dismiss the bill as against them for want of jurisdiction and for want of service; and in support thereof, I refer to the annexed affidavits of Henry N. Cook and William H. Forbes, and I appear specially for that purpose only.

[Endorsed. No. 397.]

Circuit court of the United States, western district of Tennessee. Pan-Electric Telephone Company vs. American Bell Telephone Company et al. Motion of defendants. Filed Sept. 7, 1885.

BELL W. ETHERIDGE, Clk.
W. B. WEISINGER, D. C.

Affidavit of Henry N. Cook.

Henry N. Cook, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

I am the Henry N. Cook named in said bill, and in the marshal's return of service, as appears by his return, a copy whereof is annexed; no service was attempted to be made on the American Bell Telephone Company, except by leaving a copy of the subpoena with me, and it is not alleged in said return that said the American Bell Telephone Company was an inhabitant or resident of or found in this district by the marshal.

Said the American Bell Telephone Company is, as I am informed, a corporation chartered and formed by virtue of the laws of Massachusetts.

I am not the manager nor agent of said the American Telephone Company, nor an officer of that company, and I never have been; I am not employed by it and never have been.

When the subpoena in this case was left with me the marshal asked me if I was manager of the American Bell Telephone Company, and I said that I was not.

H. N. COOK.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this Sept. 7, 1885.

W. B. WEISINGER, D. C.

The CHAIRMAN. Why do you offer that?

Mr. YOUNG. Perhaps the committee may decide it to be irrelevant, but I will state the object I have in view and the reason why I think it is exceedingly pertinent. It has been maintained throughout this whole inquiry that the American Bell Telephone Company was ready to litigate all these questions in a private suit and we could have settled them in that way. They have been running away from private suit ever since we filed the bill, by dilatory pleas. We have not been able to get a hearing yet. I want to put it in for that purpose, and I think it is competent; if the committee do not, very well.

Mr. RANNEY. The party pleaded to the jurisdiction, in pursuance of their rights.

Mr. YOUNG. Exactly; like we did in Pennsylvania and Baltimore.

Mr. RANNEY. That was a suit not to test their patents, but a suit to restrain them from slander of title.

Mr. YOUNG. And also to annul their patents. It was not alone for slander of title.

Mr. RANNEY. In your testimony you said your own opinion was that the suit could not be maintained.

Mr. YOUNG. I do not know. I am not the judge. Here is what the court said.

Mr. RANNEY. Were you going to try to vacate a patent by bringing a bill to restrain them from slander of title?

Mr. YOUNG. That is another feature of the bill. The statute under which it was filed authorized the annulling of the patent. The other was an incidental feature.

Mr. RANNEY. You say the statute authorized the annulment of a patent in a bill like that?

Mr. YOUNG. Yes. I believe it is the 16th section. I don't remember. It is the law that authorizes a judge to annul patents upon sufficient evidence that they have been improperly or fraudulently issued. That has been actually done in a number of cases.

Mr. RANNEY. Is there a statute of that kind?

Mr. YOUNG. Oh, yes. Judge Treat in St. Louis——

Mr. RANNEY. I would like to see that statute. My judgment is that if the law so provides, that is the exclusive mode.

Mr. YOUNG. If you have my brief there, you will see that that question was discussed before the Department of the Interior. It was insisted by Mr. Storow that that was the exclusive remedy, but after a full discussion of the question and an examination of the authorities the Secretary of the Interior thought differently.

Mr. RANNEY. I should like to have you refer me to that statute.

Mr. YOUNG. If anybody will go up to the Library——

Mr. RANNEY. It must be in the Revised Statutes.

Mr. YOUNG. I will hand it to you to-morrow. I have a little pamphlet containing it.

Mr. RANNEY. It is a law the Judiciary Committee did not have under consideration, and it has not been called to my attention.

Mr. YOUNG. It is unquestionably the law.

Mr. RANNEY. That is the law to annul patents?

Mr. YOUNG. In that way. The law expressly provides. It only takes effect as between the parties to the suit—the immediate parties. It does not affect anybody else but the immediate parties to the suit. That is the express provision of the statute.

Mr. RANNEY. It does not annul the patent?

Mr. YOUNG. Oh, yes; there is no doubt about that.

The CHAIRMAN. It does not annul the patent as to all the world?

Mr. YOUNG. Oh, no; not as to all the world. I mean as to the parties. It provides for annulling the patent as between the parties to the suit.

Mr. OATES. I would like to see it.

Mr. YOUNG. I will bring it here. Now, I want to offer the marshal's return.

Mr. OATES. What is the use in putting that in?

Mr. YOUNG. I do not know as that is necessary. Here is the affidavit of W. H. Forbes, on page 398:

Affidavit of W. H. Forbes.

[United States circuit court, western district of Tennessee. The Pan-Electric Telephone Company vs. The American Bell Telephone Company, et al.]

William H. Forbes, of Milton, Commonwealth of Massachusetts, being duly sworn deposes and says:

I am the president of the American Bell Telephone Company named in said bill and in the marshal's return of service. Said the American Bell Telephone Company is a corporation chartered and formed by virtue of the laws of said Commonwealth of Massachusetts, as appears by said return; service was attempted to be made on said company by leaving a copy of the subpoena with one Henry N. Cook. The said Henry N. Notary Public, Suffolk County.

Mr. RANNEY. Have you got through with that matter?

Mr. YOUNG. That is all.

Mr. RANNEY. Did you ever try that question of jurisdiction?

Mr. YOUNG. At Memphis?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG. No, sir. It has never come up for a hearing. I have been away most of the time.

Mr. RANNEY. They put in a plea which you never tried.

Mr. YOUNG. The court has never heard it. The death of Judge Baxter has delayed business down there recently, and before his death Mr. Storow was——

Mr. RANNEY. Is that suit on the docket now?

Mr. YOUNG. Yes, sir. Mr. Storow and Mr. Dickerson have been down at New Orleans arguing a suit there for two or three months, and I presume those things combined have kept the case being heard. I have not been at home myself. On page 400 I desire to offer a letter from the chief clerk of the Interior Department to myself in reference to the issuance of the Bell patent. It is a part of the record considered in the Interior Department, a letter directed to me, giving a history of the successive steps taken in the issuance of Bell's patent. It is in answer to a letter which I addressed to the Commissioner of Patents, asking for that information.

Mr. HALL. Let us have it.

Mr. EDEN. Whose letter is it?

Mr. YOUNG. A letter from the chief clerk of the Patent Office.

Mr. RANNEY. Is it understood that the committee is admitting this evidence?

The CHAIRMAN. No question has been raised on it.

Mr. MOFFATT. I do not see its relevancy.

Mr. OATES. It is like a great many other things that have come in.

Mr. EDEN. The letter can be read.

Mr. RANNEY. I only ask whether we are admitting it or not.

Mr. EDEN. Let it be read.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you make any objection?

Mr. OATES. It will be subject to any motion to rule it out afterwards.

Mr. YOUNG. I can state before I read it why I think it is pertinent, and if the committee differ with me they can rule it out without the trouble of hearing it.

Mr. OATES. You had better go ahead and read it, and let us judge.

Mr. YOUNG. The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., November 24, 1885.

SIR: The Commissioner instructs me to say in reply to your letter of yesterday's date that an examination of the records in the matter of letters patent No. 174465, granted to Alexander Graham Bell, shows that the application was filed in this office on February 14, 1876, and reached Examiner Wilber on that day, and it is presumed that it was entered upon his register immediately after its receipt by him, although the records do not disclose this fact. The application appears to have been considered by him February 19, 1876, and was submitted to Commissioner Spear February 24, 1876, and was considered by the Commissioner and returned to the examiner February 25, 1876. It was passed by the examiner to issue March 3, 1876, and was countersigned, by authority of the Commissioner, on the same day. The circular of allowance was issued March 3, 1876, the final fee was paid March 4, 1876, and the patent was issued March 7, 1876. As to what date the proof was examined in this office, the records do not disclose. No model of the apparatus covered by the patent named appears to have been filed in this office.

Very respectfully,

SCHUYLER DURYEE,
Chief Clerk.

Hon. CASEY YOUNG,
Ebbitt House, Washington, D. C.

Mr. YOUNG. I also desire to insert from the record before the Interior Department, commencing on page 403 and extending to page 406, a list of the cases taken from the records of the Department of Justice, in which suits have been ordered by the Government.

Mr. EDEN. We have that, I believe.

Mr. OATES. We have that information already.

Mr. YOUNG. You haven't this.

The CHAIRMAN. It has not yet gone in. We have a list partly prepared. The Department of Justice is to furnish us further information.

Mr. EDEN. Where was it prepared?

Mr. YOUNG. It was prepared at the Department of Justice and sent to the Department of the Interior and considered by them in connection with the question of the propriety of bringing the suit.

Mr. RANNEY. Our examination here shows that the list is erroneous.

The CHAIRMAN. The purpose is to put in a fuller statement of those cases than that.

Mr. YOUNG. If it is a fuller and more correct statement it would be proper, of course. The inquiry was directed to the reason for instituting the suit.

Mr. RANNEY. I have no objection to putting it in to show what an incorrect statement they made.

Mr. YOUNG. I do not deem it important enough to insist upon it. I submit it to the committee.

Mr. OATES. We have enough trash in now.

The CHAIRMAN. We will put it in in better shape than that.

Mr. RANNEY. It might go in to show the incorrect statement made by the Department of Justice at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. We are not concerned about that.

Mr. YOUNG. I want to put in, commencing at page 406 of that record, the statement of Gen. Duncan Walker, in reference to the torpedo and barbed wire cases.

Mr. RANNEY. Those we have got in now.

Mr. YOUNG. No; you haven't them in the shape that they are in here. You haven't a history of them, the action of the Department and summary of those two cases, as to the suits that have been brought and the questions that have been considered in connection with those two patents. Suit was instituted by order of the Government in those cases. I deem the evidence exceedingly important in this inquiry, and I desire it to go into the record. It commences on page 406 and terminates on page 431. I deem the accompanying exhibits quite as important as the statement. Those were two parallel cases to this one.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the purpose?

Mr. YOUNG. The purpose is to show to the country and to Congress the authority for bringing this suit, and the strongest precedents that can be found in the judicial history of the country. It is a parallel case with this case precisely in all its steps excepting the investigation by Congress. They did not get that far, but they did everything else in those two cases that has been done in this case, except to have an investigation by Congress. The same effort was made to defeat the suits.

Mr. RANNEY. That was the one where Gen. Butler settled it after he got the use of the Government name.

Mr. YOUNG. One of them.

Mr. RANNEY. Just as you wanted to do.

Mr. YOUNG. If I could have done it on the same terms Gen. Butler did, I would have done the same thing. I think he did perfectly right. I would like to have this statement and the accompanying exhibits go into the record. I deem them important. They are pretty long, and if the committee does not desire to hear them read, the stenographer can take them without reading.

The CHAIRMAN. Has this statement been verified in any way?

Mr. YOUNG. Gen. Walker's statement?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; what makes it testimony?

Mr. YOUNG. My impression is that he has sworn to it, but that is a matter of little concern. There have been a hundred things put in here unsworn to—letters, telegrams, and newspaper articles and everything else.

The CHAIRMAN. They were put in as the writings of parties to be affected.

Mr. HALL. This information appears in the record as having been before the Secretary of the Interior, to affect his action.

Mr. YOUNG. Yes; it was used in the same way, and furnishes the very strongest reason why he should have come to the conclusion he did, when we come to read it.

Mr. HALL. The materiality and propriety of the Secretary's action may be shown by the paper.

The CHAIRMAN. It is given in evidence as one of the papers before the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. YOUNG. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. On which he advised the bringing of this suit?

Mr. YOUNG. Yes, and the accompanying documents.

Mr. MOFFATT. The whole record is admissible on that ground as evidence on which the Secretary acted.

Mr. YOUNG. If I may be permitted to express an opinion on the subject, I think none of this record should have gone into your record.

Mr. RANNEY. I suggest, in regard to the Walker matter, that we had all the papers here in that case, and the facts were gathered from those papers and put in.

Mr. YOUNG. Only the Attorney-General's letter was put in.

Mr. RANNEY. We put in Walker's letter also, I think.

Mr. YOUNG. I did not see it.

Mr. RANNEY. We put in all that was deemed material at that time as showing what sort of case it was, and why it was the only case that was not referred to the Interior Department.

Mr. EDEN. I think no attention was called to this particular document that Mr. Young refers to.

Mr. YOUNG. It is material in this view, I think, if the gentleman will allow me to make a little statement without having it taken down: We have been arraigned before the country as resorting to an unusual and extraordinary method, and it is claimed that there is no precedent in the whole history of the Government to warrant such a proceeding. Here are two cases where precisely the same steps were taken; where a suit was ordered upon a mere application or letter of an attorney. After it was ordered the parties to be affected by it, the patentees, came forward and protested against that suit being prosecuted, just as has been done in this case. They asked to be heard, and they were accorded a hearing, just as they were before the Interior Department. They employed three of the ablest patent lawyers in this country—Mr. Crowley, Mr. Conkling, and Mr. Harding. The matter was argued for two or three weeks elaborately, and after that argument occurred the same course of proceeding was had as in this case. Suits were directed to be proceeded with. The evidence is exceedingly important in justification of our conduct, if it is to be criticised.

Mr. HALL. What is the date of the proceeding?

Mr. YOUNG. It is a very recent one.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, I do not think we should admit any evidence merely because somebody has been arraigned before the country.

Mr. YOUNG. What is this inquiry for?

Mr. OATES. I am speaking to the chairman now. I think as we are to inquire concerning the suit or suits that have been brought and the expenditures of the Department, that anything that will throw any light on the matter should be admitted in that view. We have had some of it admitted already, and I move that this go along in as a part of the history of the case.

Mr. EDEN. I understand it is a document which was before the Interior Department. I have not examined it at all. If so, I think, if it has any bearing on the case, it should go in.

The CHAIRMAN. I hesitate to hold that the papers—

Mr. HALL. Before you speak, I want to say that this investigation involves the order of the Secretary of the Interior. It involves the question whether it was brought about by improper influences. A good deal of evidence has been introduced tending to show that there was some secret or hidden motive behind his action. Here is a proceeding that was had just immediately preceding the one involved in this suit, and it appears by the record that the matter was brought directly and immediately before the Secretary of the Interior as a precedent and as a justification for the action proposed. It is a fact that must have gone into his consideration in making the order. It tends to show whether it was a proper order or an improper order, and consequently it must of necessity be competent evidence.

Mr. OATES. Parts of it have been admitted from the original papers.

The CHAIRMAN. As a case which has been passed upon by the Department of Justice and the Interior Department, this would stand upon an equality with the other eight or nine or ten cases, and would be admissible upon the same ground. But I want to say that I would hesitate to hold that it is admissible simply because it was submitted to the Interior Department at the time of this hearing. If that is sufficient reason, then these two volumes could be put in bodily, because they are made up of papers which were before the Department at that time. I would not hold that they were admissible because they were produced before the Interior Department; but it has occurred to me that the mere statement of Gen. Walker, although inspected by the Interior Department, is not evidence, and would not be the correct way of proving what had been determined by those two Departments or either of them. That ought to be proved, if the question is raised, as the proceedings in the other cases were proved. I do not think it would be well to hold here, at this stage of the investigation, at all events, that a paper is to be admitted simply because it was before the Secretary of the Interior. I hold that the facts in the torpedo case may be given in evidence as showing what had been the practice before the bringing of the Government suit that we are now inquiring about. If there is no objection as to the manner of that proof, these papers can go in.

Mr. EDEN. I have not examined the papers, so that I am not prepared to speak on the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. I will not hold that these two volumes could be given in evidence.

Mr. RANNEY. We have put in a part already.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection made to the method of proving it the paper can go in.

Mr. RANNEY. If you do not admit it on that ground I shall make objection, because we have already put in what was deemed important in that book.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon what ground?

Mr. RANNEY. As being a part of the proceedings before the Secretary of the Interior.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman ought either to make an objection that he thinks is a good one, and that he is ready to stand upon, or he ought to let it go in. I do not want to make a conditional ruling.

Mr. RANNEY. On the ground you admit it I shall object to it as incompetent proof, and I do it because a part is already in.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not understand there is any objection to the method of making this proof, and therefore I hold the papers are admissible, and are in evidence.

Mr. RANNEY. I object on that ground.

The CHAIRMAN. If the objection is made that the facts in regard to the case are not properly proved, I shall sustain the objection.

Mr. RANNEY. I make the objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The objection is sustained.

Mr. HALL. I appeal from the decision of the chair. I want that record that has been offered introduced in evidence, and I want to make this statement—

The CHAIRMAN. I will first state the question. From the ruling of the chair the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. Hall) appeals, and the question is, Shall the decision of the chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. HALL. The point I make is that examination has been made again and again to show what was before the various Government officers in making their decision. When Mr. Goode was on the stand his attention was called with great detail to the cases he had before him and he considered, and to cases he did not have before him; and he was asked if he did not know about this case and about that case. The whole direction of the examination was with reference to whether the order of the officer was in the ordinary course of business and supported by proper precedents. Here is the order of the Secretary of the Interior, which is one of the orders that we are investigating. There has been a great deal of evidence as to what procedure was had and the matter involved. I hold with reference to that feature of his order that it is proper to show what precedents he had before him, and whether it was in accordance with a very recent precedent, which had received more or less consideration.

Mr. EDEN. Mr. Chairman, without having examined the paper itself I would not feel disposed to vote to overrule the decision of the chair. The others may have read it. I have not.

The CHAIRMAN. I have not examined the paper. I only speak of the manner in which it is authenticated.

Mr. HALL. It is not introduced necessarily for the purpose of establishing facts. It is like any other authority. I may take a decision of the Supreme Court and introduce it here for the purpose of establishing the law or precedents as founded upon a given state of facts. It would not be introduced for the purpose of proving the facts stated as the foundation of the opinion, but what the precedents might have been.

Mr. OATES. I think it ought to be admitted for this reason: We have all along treated the papers appearing on that record as being authentic. Mr. Ranney, the gentleman who raises the objection now, has offered several of them, which have been admitted on his motion. Now he takes advantage of an intimation of the chair that unless they are properly authenticated the chair will not admit them. I shall vote to reverse the ruling of the chair on that matter, because it is not standing alone. If he will take the question, and let it stand alone, I think the ruling of the chair right. Wherever gentlemen heretofore have wanted anything in we have admitted it, if we adjudged it to be pertinent and relevant, from that volume, as being authentic. For that reason I shall vote to admit this.

Mr. EDEN. Following the precedent with reference to the admission of other matters in that record, I will vote to admit it.

Mr. RANNEY. If we are to test the correctness of Secretary Lamar's ruling, I agree that the whole of it is competent.

Mr. OATES. Do you admit it to be correct?

Mr. RANNEY. That decision?

Mr. OATES. Yes.

Mr. RANNEY. That is asking me in advance to express my opinion, which I decline to do at this stage of the case. I suppose that is a proper subject for consideration.

Mr. OATES. This is pertinent, is it not?

Mr. RANNEY. It is admissible in that view.

Mr. EDEN. I think every document offered by Judge Ranney from that record has been admitted.

Mr. RANNEY. Only as a matter of convenience. If the province of our inquiry is to scrutinize the opinion of Secretary Lamar—

Mr. EDEN. Then, why do you object to this paper?

Mr. RANNEY. Because it was admitted in a restricted way. I said if it was admitted in the other view, I would not object to it.

The CHAIRMAN. That would have been in a restricted way also.

Mr. EDEN. I think in order to do justice all around, the other documents having been put in—

The CHAIRMAN. The trouble with the gentleman is that it is not admitted on a ground that suits him. The question before the committee is whether it shall be admitted at all, for any reason; not for the reasons given by the chair.

Mr. RANNEY. I make my objection on the ground the chair puts.

The CHAIRMAN. Shall the ruling of the chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. MOFFATT. As the gentleman wants that record in, I am perfectly in favor of its going in. I dislike to say, by voting to overrule the chair, that the reasons of the chair were not good. I think the reasons of the chair were perfectly good.

Mr. RANNEY. I agree with the gentlemen on the other side in their claim that it is admissible. I agree it is admissible on that ground. If it is put on that ground, I have no objection.

Mr. EDEN. If it is admissible on any ground, it should go in.

Mr. RANNEY. I want you to live up to the rule you adopt, that is all.

Mr. EDEN. I would not take the responsibility of voting against the admissibility of a paper I was satisfied was proper and ought to be admitted because I was afraid some other member of the committee would not vote to admit some other paper I wanted admitted. I would decide each question as it arises.

Mr. RANNEY. On the ground on which it is offered I make the objection. It is not competent for that purpose.

Mr. OATES. I do not know what it is worth.

Mr. RANNEY. It is not competent on the ground on which it is offered, as the chair rules.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlemen knows if it is competent upon any ground, either that on which it is offered or that on which the chair puts it, that it should be admitted; otherwise it should not.

Mr. RANNEY. I have made my objection and the chair has ruled, and I shall vote to sustain the chair in his ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlemen of the committee will understand that the chair in ruling on this question is simply discharging an official duty. He is not regarding what has been done heretofore by the committee when no objection was made. The chair is merely passing upon this objection raised by Judge Ranney. If the committee think that the paper ought to go in, in view of what has heretofore happened in the course of our investigation, they will vote to admit it.

Mr. RANNEY. I wish to be perfectly fair about it, and wish to be understood. It is not captiousness on my part. The gentlemen on the other side have argued that the conduct of the Secretary of the Interior in granting this second suit is a matter that is open to our supervision and revision. That would lead to this idea, and I have had it in mind before: That either side may put in what it likes; Mr. Young may put in what he likes, and the committee have a right to put in everything on which that judgment was based. If you go into it on the ground of revising the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, you have got to have everything in on which that opinion was based. Now, if the committee desire to go into that, then what I say is this: If it goes in on that ground of course it opens up the whole record. Mr. Young cannot be permitted to select a portion of it and put that in, but everything that bears on that issue and on the correctness of the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior should go in, and we must revise it. I am willing to go into it. I think it is open to us. I think it is within the scope of our inquiry, and further, I think the whole record is competent evidence if the committee are going to determine on the correctness of that decision or the reasons for it. That is why I make this objection. I do not mean that only a part of the record should go in.

Mr. EDEN. We have a part of it in already.

Mr. RANNEY. It has been offered. I have not heard the committee rule on it.

Mr. HALL. You have been offering fragments of the record ever since the investigation first commenced, and now after you have got in what you want you ought not to object to other parts being put in.

Mr. RANNEY. I claim that the whole record is competent.

Mr. HALL. That question has never been raised before.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not mean that you shall select a portion.

Mr. HALL. I do not mean that you shall.

Mr. EDEN. I do not understand that an appeal is to be taken from the Secretary of the Interior to a committee of Congress who is to revise his judgment. This committee is directed to inquire into the reason and authority on the part of the Government for the institution of the suit. I suppose under that provision he would have a right to see upon what ground it was ordered.

Mr. OATES. The language of the resolution in that regard is as follows:

"What contracts have been made, what moneys paid or to be paid to any person or persons as assistant counsel to the Attorney-General or Solicitor-General of the United States, the reason and authority for constituting the United States as a party to said suit or suits, and all matters connected therewith."

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen, the question has already been stated. Those who favor sustaining the decision of the chair will vote aye; those opposed will vote no.

The clerk called the roll, and the vote was as follows: Ayes, Messrs. Ranney and Moffatt. Noes, Messrs. Oates, Eden, and Hall.

So the decision of the chair was overruled, and the papers were admitted.

They are as follows:

Statement of Gen'l Duncan Walker in reference to the "Roberts torpedo" and "barbed wire" cases.

On the 31st day of May, 1882, General B. F. Butler addressed the Attorney-General of the United States a letter on behalf of the citizens of the oil regions of the United States, requesting him to file a bill in equity, in the name of the United States, against Walter B. Roberts, of Pennsylvania, and others, to test the validity of the Roberts torpedo patent (reissue No. 6258), alleging the invalidity of the patent as reissued, the universal use of the Roberts method by oil producers, the multiplicity of suits brought by the patentees, "quite five thousand pending;" the "ruinous costs" charged the defendants in these cases, the "refusal of the patentees to fix any royalty for the use of their patent," and their requirement that any person who "may desire to explode torpedoes at the bottom of an oil well should use their men and their means, and pay therefor extravagant prices and exorbitant charges." General Butler tendered proof of these charges if required, but stated he did not deem this an essential element to obtain the relief sought. (Exhibit Butler 1.)

Subsequently General Butler filed, in the Department of Justice, a list of 2,113 suits brought in the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Pennsylvania by the patentees, against alleged infringers, together with a memorandum of Reuben Carroll, business director of the Oil Producers' Association, to the effect that probably half as many more suits had been commenced. (Exhibit Butler No. 2.)

At the same time he filed a printed pamphlet, signed by said Carroll, alleging the invalidity of the Roberts patent, because a patent could not be legally issued covering a claim so broad and general; because the first reissue included more than the original patent; because the second reissue included more than the original patent. As to the decision in the circuit court for the western district of Pennsylvania, sustaining the validity of the patent, and the second reissue thereof the pamphlet stated that "some of the material evidence before that court can now be shown to have been false." (Exhibit Butler No. 3.)

These papers were referred by the Attorney-General to Mr. A. R. Dutton, law clerk, who reported their contents. (U. S., No. 1.)

The Attorney-General then had under consideration the request in another case (known as the "barbed wire" case), which Mr. Dutton had reported that the remedy to set aside a patent "is by a proceeding in chancery instituted by the Attorney-General," and had recommended the bringing of a suit by the United States for that purpose. (See paper in "barbed wire" case, marked memorandum, and endorsed in the handwriting of Attorney-General Brewster, "Barbed wire fence.") Several authorities were cited by Mr. Dutton to sustain the position that a bill in equity would lie at the instance of the United States to set aside "patents granted by the Government through fraud, mistake, or inadvertence." (U. S., No. 114.) Also paper marked "memorandum" in "barbed wire case."

The Attorney-General referred these papers to the United States attorney for the District of Columbia, on the 25th day of June, 1882. (U. S., No. 2.)

On the 29th of June, 1882, the United States attorney for the District of Columbia recommended that the matters complained of be examined carefully by a member of the bar, to report whether suit should be brought, and suggested General Duncan S. Walker as a competent person to make the examination. In this recommendation the Attorney-General concurred. (U. S., No. 3.)

No investigation, however, was made under said recommendation, General Butler, for his clients, declining to pay any expenses attending the same, which expenses the U. S. attorney for the District of Columbia had recommended should be borne by the parties complaining. General Butler contended that the United States ought to pay the expenses of sifting the law and facts of the case. (Similar action was taken in the "barbed wire case.")

July 3, 1883, General Butler, in behalf of the oil producers, again addressed the Attorney-General, called attention to his previous letter, reiterated statements therein contained, urged immediate bringing of suit by the United States to test the validity of the patent, and enjoin all litigation against alleged infringers, pending the suit. With this, he enclosed a letter of Reuben Carroll, business director of the Oil Producers' Association, alleging that Roberts (patentee) was pressing his infringement suits, etc. (Butler, No. 4.)

August 3 Mr. Reuben Carroll addressed the Attorney-General in writing to the effect that Roberts, patentee, was guilty of various extortions; that there were thousands of suits pending, and the number daily increasing; that Roberts' original patent was procured by fraud, and that the reissue was invalid, because claim broader than the original claim. He enclosed, also, copy of pamphlet already referred to as Butler, No. 3. (Butler, No. 5.)

On the 7th of October, 1882, General B. F. Butler filed in the case of Schreiber vs. Roberts et al., in the Supreme Court of the United States (it being an appeal of Schreiber from the decision of the circuit court of the United States in an infringement suit brought by Roberts against Schreiber) the petition of said Schreiber to have the appeal advanced in the docket, and General Butler withdrew from the files of the Department the papers in the case, proposing to use them in said motion. Being unsuccessful in his effort to advance the Schreiber case, he returned the same to the Department of Justice with a letter to the Attorney-General (Butler, No. 9), enclosing a copy of Schreiber's petition (Butler, 10; Butler, 11), together with an affidavit of Hon. Hamilton Ward, ex-attorney-general of the State of New York, that 160 cases had been brought by Roberts in the northern district of New York; that suits were threatened in a large number of other alleged infringements; that the litigation would be interminable until the final decision of the Supreme Court, &c. (Butler, 11, pp. 5 and 6; Butler, 15.) Also filed statement of clerk of United States circuit court of the northern district of New York, as to the number and condition of Roberts' infringement suits (Butler, 11, p. 28; Butler, 12); tabulated statement of said cases (Butler, 11, pp. 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23; and Butler, 13); list of said suits, &c., Butler, 11; Butler, 14); and affidavit of Reuben Carroll, explaining the expansions of Roberts' claim, the institution of five thousand suits against individuals, firms, and companies, aggregating in number of defendants "fifteen thousand people," most of which were pending, and but one of which had been tried; that the cost and expenses of these suits are enormous, the sums at stake vast, and the business of oil-producing crippled and impeded thereby; that only one case had been tried, namely, that of Schreiber, and that he was delayed in that case by dilatory proceedings on the part of Roberts. (Butler, 11.)

December 6, 1882, General Butler again wrote the Attorney-General, urging immediate action.

All these papers were referred to Mr. A. R. Dutton, law clerk of the Department of Justice, who, on the 9th of December, 1882, reported to the Attorney-General at length, giving authorities, showing the right of the Attorney-General to file a bill in equity to set aside the patent, and recommending the same. (U. S. No. 4.) Also a memorandum in "barbed wire" case ordered by the Attorney-General.

Thereupon the Attorney-General wrote Mr. Reuben Carroll, informing him that suit would be brought in the District of Columbia to vacate the Roberts patent by some special counsel, to be paid by the oil producers, the litigation to be at the expense of the oil procedure. (U. S. No. 5.) (Similar action was taken by the Att'y Gen. in the "barbed wire" case.)

Up to this time I had made no examination of the case, and the conclusion of the Attorney-General to bring suit to vacate the patent had been based entirely upon the papers filed in the case, together with the two reports of the law clerk of the Department of Justice, Mr. Dutton, and the recommendation of the U. S. attorney for the District of Columbia.

January 11, 1883, I was directed by the Attorney-General to commence proceedings, to exercise my discretion, having due regard to the averments on file in the case, and to such as might be made by the parties through their counsel, General Butler. (U. S. No. 6.)

After consultation with General Butler, at my suggestion, it was arranged that the suit should be instituted in the District of Columbia, provided service could be had upon Mr. Roberts here, otherwise in the western district of Pennsylvania, where the parties resided. This arrangement was assented to by the Attorney-General in an interview with him at his office, General Butler and myself being present.

A bill was prepared by me, and filed in the western district of Pennsylvania to vacate the patent, March 6, 1883, and sworn to by W. A. Walley. The bill was brought in the name of the United States, by its Attorney-General, on the relation of W. A. Walley, and signed by myself as special assistant, and subsequently, at my suggestion, by the U. S. attorney for the western district of Pennsylvania, who also appeared in the case as the representative of the United States.

On the 8th of March, 1883, by direction of the Attorney-General, I advised Mr. Richard Crowley, of New York, who was then in the city of Washington, acting as counsel for Roberts, that his bill had been filed, and asked him to communicate any facts or reasons why the proceedings should be abated. (U. S. No. 7.) The same day I had an interview with Mr. Crowley, at which the subject-matter was discussed, and on the 16th of March, received a letter from the Attorney-General, placing in my hands the reply of Mr. Crowley, of that date, with accompanying documents, and instructing me to make report thereon. (U. S. No. 8.)

To this I replied, asking further instructions from the Attorney-General as to the character of my proposed report (U. S. No. 9), and received a reply of March 17, directing me to report on the case as it stood. (U. S. No. 10.) To this I replied on the 17th, advising that the litigation should go on. Mr. Crowley, in behalf of the patentees, claimed that the proceeding should be withdrawn, because the Roberts patent would expire in a few months, viz, on the 20th of May, 1883. To this I replied that, under the language of Mr. Justice Miller, in Maury v. Whitney, Wall., 434, that even after the expiration of the patent in a case where the patent was used to sustain suits in infringement during its vitality, the suit might be brought to vacate it. I cited, also, Curtiss' Law of Patents, section 504, to the same effect, and called the attention of the Attorney-General to the fact that the language used in the bill filed by me in behalf of the United States was identical on this point with the language of Mr. Justice Miller's decision. I then said: "If it is proper for the United States to bring a suit to vacate a patent after its expiration, in order to declare it void ab initio, under the circumstances mentioned by Mr. Justice Miller, when in the nature of things such suit could only prevent the patentee, or his assigns, from collecting judgments or prosecuting suits for infringement, which infringement had occurred during the life of the patent, so much more appropriate in the remedy in the case of an expired patent, for the same purposes, and for the additional purposes of restraining pending or proposed litigation."

Mr. Crowley alleged that the suit should be dismissed because the validity of the patents had been passed upon in the circuit court of the United States for western district of Pennsylvania frequently, and had always been sustained. And filed in support of this, a number of exhibits, showing the course of the litigation, and that the validity of the Roberts patent had been uniformly upheld by the United States courts from the year 1870 up to date (1883).

I replied, first, that the cases stated had never been decided as yet by the Supreme Court of the United States, and that the presumption was (as recent decisions of the United States Supreme Court on the question of reissued letters patent showed), that the decisions referred to would be reversed by the Supreme Court, and that "even if the court decided correctly in that case, upon the evidence before it, and the law as it then believed it to be, that decision does not affect a suit for a different purpose, upon different allegations, alleging fraud, false swearing, and deceit in the proceedings before the Commissioner of Patents, looking behind the mere face of the patents, as only the United States can do, looking behind the decision of the Commissioner of Patents, to see upon what facts he based his decision, as only the United States can do."

2. The circuit court, upon the evidence in that case, material parts of which are now alleged to have been false, and looking only at the face of the two patents, the original and reissue, declared the reissue valid, and decided that Roberts was the original inventor. The Attorney-General upon the allegations of fraud in procuring the original patent, fraud in procuring the reissues, and upon new allegations of want of priority of invention, and in view of the thousands of suits pending and threatened, decided to enable the thousands of complainants to attack this patent in one suit once for all."

Mr. Crowley further insisted that the proceeding should be dismissed because the suit brought by the United States could only determine the same facts as would be determined by the Supreme Court of the United States in the Schreiber case, then on the calendar of the Supreme Court. To this I replied that it was quite possible that the Schreiber case might never be tried, since by collusion between Schreiber and the patentee, it might be dismissed at any time, and beyond this, I said that the two cases could not be identical in their very nature. "First, because the results to be accomplished in each case are different. The Schreiber case will only decide the matters in issue between Roberts and Schreiber, and leave each of the thousands of other litigants to contest his particular case. The case of the United States, if successful, will vacate the patent ab initio, and settle the question once for all. The court, in the infringement suit, cannot vacate or declare void an existing patent, but in the latter case 'no such judgment or adjudication shall affect the right of any person except to the suit, and those deriving title under them, subject to the rendition of such judgment.'" (Rev. Stat. U. S., Sec. 4918.)

Second. "That as to the question of novelty, the bill of the United States attacks the patent on the additional ground not named in the Schreiber case, for example, the United States alleges that the same process as that patented by the said Roberts was put in practice by one John F. Harvey, of Cow Run, Ohio," and it turned out during the course of this litigation, that Roberts actually paid said Harvey, after the proceeding had been brought by the United States against him to set aside his (Roberts) patent, the sum of five thousand dollars ($5,000) for the assignment to him, (Roberts), by the said Harvey of his (said Harvey's) patent, and upon the further condition that said Harvey would not testify in the United States cases then pending in the United States court.

I also stated to the Attorney-General as follows: "The bill of the United States also alleges as to want of novelty, that Roberts obtained a previous patent number, 47458, for a device for use by the same processes and methods and for the same purpose and effecting the same results, said invention subsequently secured by letters patent, 59936 (letter reissue 5434 and 6258), and therefore said letters patent reissue are void. (Odiorne vs. Amsbury, Nail Factory Company, 2 Mass., 28; Treadwell vs. Bladen, 4 Wash., C. Cl. 703; James vs. Campbell, 104, U. S., 536.) And this is true even where the second patent was granted upon a claim previously filed, the present case. (Suffolk Co vs. Hayden, Wall., 315.)

Third. The proceedings are unlike again in this, that Schreiber, the respondent in the infringement suit, cannot look behind the patents, and the question raised by him as to the validity of issues must be determined by an inspection of the face of the patents.

I then quoted to sustain these points the following authorities: Seymour vs. Osborne, 11 Wall., 488, where the Supreme Court expressly decides, "Where the Commissioner accepts the surrender of the original patent and grants a new patent, his decision in the premises in a suit for an infringement is final and conclusive and it is not re-examinable in such a suit in the circuit court unless it is apparent upon the face of the patent that he has exceeded his authority; and there is such a repugnancy between the old and the new patent that it must be held as a matter of legal construction that the patent is not for the same invention as that embraced and described in the original patent." * * *

"On the contrary, the United States under its bill proposes to show by testimony outside of the patents, partly on file in the Patent Office, partly that of persons acquainted with the various stages of the progress in the art of producing oil, that the re-issues are for different patents from the original, and were fraudulently procured." I also replied further, that "Schreiber could not allege fraud in procuring the original patent or its reissue. It has been frequently decided by the Supreme Court that fraud in procuring a patent cannot be examined into by the court in an infringement suit. In the case of the Rubber Company vs. Goodyear, 9, Wall., 788, the court decided that in the extension case the decision of the Commissioner of Patents 'must be held conclusive until the patent is impeached in a proceeding had directly for that purpose.' And the court declined 'to enter upon the examination of the evidences of fraud' in obtaining it. And to the same effect is the Eureka Co. vs. Railway Co., 19 Wall., 448, and Chancellor Kent says, in Johnson vs. Lawton, 10 Johnson, 23, that unless letters patent are absolutely void on the face of them, or the issuing of them was without authority, or was prohibited by statute, that only could be void in the regular course of pleading in which the fraud, irregularity, or mistake is regularly put in issue. The principle has been frequently admitted that the fraud must appear on the face of the patent to render it void in a court of law, and that when the fraud or other defect arises on circumstances dehors the grant, the grant is voidable only by suit. The regular tribunal is chancery, founded on a proceeding by scire facias, or by bill or information. Or, as the Supreme Court say in Mowry vs. Whitney, 14 Wall., 434 (which arose on demurrer to a bill charging that the extension of a patent was procured by fraud), a bill in chancery, brought by the Attorney-General, either directly or by authorizing the use of the name of the United States, is the only remedy. Because the fraud, if any, has been practiced upon the Government; and, second, because a suit by an individual could only be conclusive in result as between the patentee and the party suing, and it would remain a valid instrument as to all others. As further difference between the two suits, I beg to add a few facts set forth in the bill of the United States, which could either not be examined at all by the courts in an infringement suit, or could only be examined upon the face of the patents, and upon them decided as a matter purely of legal construction. The bill alleges that on the 18th of November, 1864, Roberts filed his original application, specification, and claim in the Patent Office, and that the same having been rejected, he withdrew the claim, and substituted an amended claim, much narrower than the claim by him withdrawn. Upon this latter claim the patent was finally granted. It appears in the records of the Patent Office that a substantial part of the original claim, to wit, the use of fluid as a tamping for torpedoes to be supplied in oil wells, was inserted in his reissued letters patent, number 6258. In the case of Legget vs. Avery, U. S., 101, 259, the Supreme Court cast very grave doubts upon the legality of such a proceeding. It says: "If any case where an applicant for letters patent, in order to obtain the issue therefor, disclaims a particular invention, or acquiesces in the rejection of a claim thereto, which we greatly doubt

* * * * *

"The allowance of claims when formally abandoned by the applicant in order to get his letters through, is the occasion of numerous frauds against the public. It not unfrequently happens that after an application has been carefully examined and compared with other inventions, and after the claims which such an examination renders admissible have been settled with the acquiescence of the applicant, he, or his assignees, when the investigation is forgotten, and perhaps new officers been appointed, comes back to the Patent Office, and under pretense of inadvertence or mistake in the first specification, gets inserted in the reissued letters all that has been previously rejected. In this manner, without an appeal, he gets the first decision of the office reversed, steals a march on the public, and on those who before opposed his pretenses (if, indeed, the latter have not been silenced by purchase), and procures a valuable monopoly to which he has not the slightest title. We have more than once expressed our disapprobation of this practice. As before remarked, we consider it extremely doubtful, whether reissued letters patent can be sustained in any case where they contain claims that have been formerly disclaimed by the patentee, or rejected with his acquiescence, and he has consented to such rejection in order to obtain his letters patent."

I further reported to the Attorney-General material allegations in the bill which the United States alone could make, some of which allegations, as then reported to the Attorney-General, are as follows:

"The bill after reciting the first application and claim for the original patent, also asserts that the second claim was filed by his attorneys, Mason, Fenwick & Lawrence.

"These allegations are made to show the care with which the application, specification, &c., were prepared by Mr. Roberts, and most competent patent attorneys, skilled in the practice of drawing up applications, specifications, and claims, and to negative the presumption of the truth of the oath which Roberts took nine years later, in 1873, to secure an expansion of his patent by reason of an insufficient description, specification, &c., which error has arisen from inadvertence or mistake. Now, there is no proof of this error, inadvertence, or mistake. On the contrary, it is shown in the record that Roberts was careful to employ the most competent attorneys; filed first one claim, and then, afterwards, by his attorneys, amended it with another, leaving out what was claimed in his first claim, and which, subsequently, he secured in his last reissue. On this question the Supreme Court say, in the case of Burr vs. Dwyre, 1 Wall., pp. 575, 577: 'Since the date of this act (the act of 1836, which authorizes the reissue of an invalid patent on the ground of an insufficient or a defective specification, arising from inadvertence, accident, or mistake) not only the Patent Office but the bar, can furnish gentlemen fully competent to the task of drawing up proper specifications, but little liable to commit blunders from inadvertency. Specifications now seldom issue from the Patent Office, to which such an implication could be made. * * * Formerly, when, in course of investigation in a court of justice, it was discovered that a patent was invalid, for any of the reasons mentioned in the act, it was resorted to for protection. Now, after a patent has been declared to be valid, the specification without defect, and the claim for nothing more than an invention, after it has undergone examination for many years, and courts and juries have decided that the patent is not invalid through inadvertency, accident, or mistake, assignees come forward and make oath that the inventor's original patent is unavailable for some purpose unnecessary to be divulged. In the present case the purpose is transparent. * * * The surrender of valid patents and the granting of reissued patents thereon, with expended or equivocal claims, where the original was clearly neither inoperative or invalid, and whose specification neither defective or insufficient, is a great abuse of the privilege granted by the statute, and productive of great injury to the public. This privilege was not given to the patentee or his assignee in order that the patent may be rendered more elastic or expensive, and, therefore, more valuable for the suppression of all other inventions.'"

I also then reported to the Attorney-General as follows: "The bill then alleges that having thus secured his original patent, Roberts, on the 24th day of May, 1873, seven years after the first issue, and nine years after the date of his first application, filed in the Patent Office an application for the reissue through his attorneys, Messrs. Bakewell, Christy, and Kerr, of Pittsburgh, and Messrs. Fisher and Duncan, with amended and enlarged specifications and claims, and not content with the enlarged claims, then filed again, to wit, on the 28th day of May, 1873, other claims amending those filed on the 23d of May, together with the oath that the said patent was not valid on the ground of an insufficient or defective specification, which error, he swears, arose from inadvertence, accident, or mistake; and this oath the bill alleges to be false.

The record then presents the original specification and claim, filed by competent attorneys on the 14th day of February, 1865, and a claim for reissue filed by five competent attorneys on the 24th day of May, 1875, and upon the amendment the reissue granted.

It is plain from this record that there was no inadvertence, accident, or mistake, and the record shows that the greatest care and deliberation was taken in each stage of the case to perfect the specifications and correct the claims with the aid of competent counsel. And it has been decided by the Supreme Court that the error of "judgment" could not be relieved by the reissue. Now, whilst the respondent in the infringement suit could not attack this proceeding, but could only look at the face of the patents, the United States, as an original bill to vacate the patent, can do so.

"2. The pretense that the original patent was invalid by reason of an insufficient description or specification is negatived by the very assertions of the complainant in this case, that it was valid, and decisions sustaining it were rendered in the circuit court of the western district of Pennsylvania, and by the further fact that the specification and description in his last reissue are almost identical as to the claim with those in his first patent.

The bill then alleges that, having obtained reissue letters patent No. 5434, Roberts, on the 21st day of January, 1875, by his attorneys, Bakewell and Kerr, filed his application for a reissue on the ground that reissued letters patent 5434 were invalid by reason of an insufficient or defective specification, and that the error had arisen from inadvertence or mistake, to which he made oath. And this oath the United States alleges to be false, and that therefore the letters patent reissue 6354 should be vacated. The examination of the two reissues shows that the second is far less comprehensive in its claims and descriptions than the first reissue. It shows clearly that the patentee was satisfied that the first reissue was void upon its face, by reason of its plain violation of the act under which it purported to have been granted. This view is also sustained by the fact that we find no recoveries under this first reissue. It was abandoned, and the original patent being lifeless by reason of its surrender (Peck vs. Collins, 103 U. S. p. 660), the patentee, in defraud of the public and of the laws, under pretense of defective specification, swore out what he had previously sworn in, on both occasions on the same pretense."

As sustaining this position, the following were quoted:

Burr vs. Duryea, 1 Wall., 531; Seymour vs. Osborne, 11 Wall., 516; Russel vs. Dodge, 93 U. S., 460; Powder Co. vs. Powder Works, 98 U. S., 120; Leggett vs. Avery, 101 U. S., 256; Ball vs. Langles, 102 U. S., 128; Garneau vs. Dozier, 102 U. S., 230; Manufacturing Co. vs. Ladd, 102 U. S., 408; Manufacturing Co. vs. Corbin, 103 U. S., 787; James vs. Campbell, 104 U. S., 356; Miller vs. Brass Co., 104 U. S., 358; Heald vs. Rice, 104 U. S., 737.

This report was delivered to the Attorney-General March 24, 1883, and a strenuous effort was made on the part of the patentee to convince the Attorney-General that the suit brought by the United States to vacate the patent should be dismissed. The patentee, in his litigation in Pennsylvania and New York, had employed most eminent counsel, including the Hon. Roscoe Conkling and Mr. George Harding, and in the proceedings before the Department of Justice to have the suit dismissed, had employed, as I have before stated, the Hon. Richard Crowley. The patentee was a Pennsylvanian of large wealth, and with numerous influential acquaintances, and no effort was spared by him to induce the Government to stop proceedings to vacate the patent.

Immediately upon receipt of the report, the Attorney-General referred the same, with the accompanying papers, to the Hon. William A. Maury, Assistant Attorney-General of the United States, who, after an elaborate investigation, reported to the Attorney-General in favor of continuing the proceedings to vacate the patent, a copy of which is hereto appended, marked "W. A. M." In this judgment of Assistant Attorney-General Maury the Attorney-General of the United States concurred, and I was directed to continue the proceedings, always at the expense of the parties complaining, without expense to the United States, and did so until the parties complaining, without my knowledge or assent, compromised their grievances with the patentee, since when I have taken no action in the matter, the patent having long since expired, and no request having been made by any one to do so. It will be observed that proceedings to vacate the Roberts torpedo patent were not commenced hastily, or without serious and proper consideration. In the first place, the Attorney-General had before him the several allegations before referred to as to the invalidity of the patent, fraud in procuring the alleged patent, fraud in procuring several reissues, the new evidence in relation to want of priority of invention, the fact that many thousand suits had been brought by the patentee, and the vast interests involved. These papers he referred first, twice to the law clerk of the Department of Justice, who reported in favor of bringing a suit to vacate the patent; second, to the United States attorney for the District of Columbia, who recommended an investigation upon which to base a suit. Third, a second time to the law clerk of the Department of Justice, and finally, upon the papers in the case and the reports of his subordinates, concluded to bring the suit, as requested. It will also be seen that after the suit had been commenced and an application filed by the patentee for the dismissal of the suit, the Attorney-General again took up the question, required elaborate reports to be made thereon, referred the same to the Assistant Attorney-General for report, and finally reaffirmed his first decision as to the power of the United States to vacate the patent.

Considering the vast interest involved, it was thought that the only course to pursue was to test the validity of the patent once for all, by a suit brought by the United States, the result of which, if successful, would have been a final settlement of the question for all parties.

Besides the invalidity of the patent on account of fraudulent reissue, the United States attacked it upon allegations that an individual or company could not make use of. The United States averred in its bill that the first reissue and the second reissue were granted upon affidavits which were false, and that the Commissioner of Patents was thereby deceived. The United States also attacked the patent on the ground of want of priority of invention, a fact of which any complainant might have availed himself, but with this difference, that in an infringement suit, the result would only have affected the parties to the suit, whereas, in a direct proceeding by the United States to set aside the patent, the decision vacating the patent on the ground of want of priority of invention would have been conclusive on all the world.

In relation to the cases known as the "barbed wire" cases, the proceedings were the same up to the point of bringing suit, the parties in the "barbed wire" case declining to submit to the rule of the Attorney-General requiring them to indemnify the Government, etc.

The Attorney-General pursued the same course in the "barbed wire" case that he did in the torpedo case, namely, he referred the papers in the case to Mr. A. R. Dutton, who reported, first, that the United States, through the Attorney-General, had a right to file a bill to vacate a patent on the ground that the same had been granted through fraud, mistake, or inadvertence, and, in support of his opinion, quoted Curtiss on Patents, 662 U. S. vs. Stone, 2 Wall., 525; Maury vs. Whitney, 14 Wall., 434. Subsequently he reported not only as to the power of the United States to bring such a suit, but also recommended that suit be brought in the "barbed wire" case. (See paper marked "Memorandum," and indorsed "barbed wire fence," in the handwriting of Attorney-General Brewster.)

These papers the Attorney-General referred to the United States attorney for the District of Columbia, who recommended that a member of the bar of the District be designated to examine the facts alleged, and report whether suit should be brought, expenses to be paid by the parties complaining. The parties complaining, however, demurred to the payment of any expenses, and when the Attorney-General had determined to bring suit, declined to indemnify the Government, and have the suit brought by counsel responsible to the Department of Justice.

All the papers are on file in the Department of Justice, and I refer to them for any more detailed information.

Letter from Philip P. Moen, president of the company, covering the barbed wire patents, to Attorney-General Brewster, asking that the suit ordered by him in the name of the Government to vacate the said patents be dismissed.

WORCESTER, MASS., March 18, 1885.

HON. BENJAMIN H. BREWSTER,

Attorney-General of the United States, Washington, D. C.:

SIR: In view of the representations made before the legislature of Iowa, and through the public press, to the effect that the Attorney-General of the United States had assumed an antagonistical position as respects one of the great interests and industries of the country, and whereas such representations, although they may have proceeded from an error or misapprehension on the part of the distinguished counsellor who was instrumental in putting them into circulation, are calculated to injuriously affect the vested rights and interests of those parties whose capital has been invested and employed in developing and prosecuting the business referred to, we feel justified in submitting a few facts for your consideration, in the preliminary examination of the subject which has been brought to your notice, as appears from the proceedings of the Iowa State legislature, reported in the Iowa State Register paper, of March 11, 1882, a copy of which we herewith inclose, and also by this published letter of General Butler of the 12th instant, read before the Iowa senate on the 15th instant. See copy of said letter in the Boston Herald paper, of the 16th instant, also herewith inclosed.

First. Washburn & Moen Manufacturing Company and Isaac L. Ellwood have not withdrawn suits and tried to hinder judicial action, but, upon the contrary, have in all cases prosecuted their suits with diligence and energy, and that, too, to final hearing before the Federal courts. This is a matter of record. See decision of Judges Drummond and Blodgett, rendered in the northern district of Illinois, December 15, 1880, reported in the United States Patent Office Official Gazette, volume 19, page 173, and also in the Federal Reporter, volume 4, page 900. A copy of said decision is herewith inclosed for convenience of examination. The litigants in those suits (named in the pamphlet herewith inclosed, and marked "Exhibit A") prosecuted and defended the same at great expense, said to have exceeded fifty thousand dollars, on the part of all the defendants.

Second. The suits against James H. Coon, of Iowa, named in the pamphlets hereto attached, and marked "Exhibit B," were not withdrawn, but settled by the defendant, and consent decrees taken, the defendant settling for and taking a full discharge for all who had purchased his wire.

Third. Infringement was not commenced again by any of the parties interested in any way in the former Coon wire, until about the 24th of January, 1882, when one machine was started, and by shortly after formal notice was given of the alleged infringement, and the parties persisting in their course, two suits were instituted on the 25th day of February, 1882; four more on the 27th of the same month; two on the 2d of March, and six more on the 11th of March; the object being to have all of these patents, which the defendants infringed, adjudicated together, and as speedily as possible, and thus save expense to all parties concerned. The records of the clerk's office in the central division of the district of Iowa shows the above, and on the 11th day of the present March the Iowa Register paper gave an abstract taken from the court files, which paper is herewith inclosed.

Fourth. It is thus seen that the owners of said patents have acted promptly, and are doing all they can to have all of their patents adjudicated upon final hearing, as expeditiously and with as little expense as possible.

Fifth. It is believed that the Attorney-General will not consider that we acted otherwise than within the scope of business propriety in thus calling his attention to the unjust inference conveyed by General Butler's letters, one read by Senator Nichols, March 10, and the other read March 15, in regard to the alleged position which the Attorney-General had them taken in reference to the character and rights of the owners of said patents, to the effect that the Attorney-General had proceeded to express an adverse opinion upon grants made by the Government, and that, too, upon an ex parte hearing, and without any notice to the grantees or their assignees, and had further characterized the business of the owners of said patents, and that of their forty or more licensees, as "an unjust monopoly," and which unauthorized alleged conclusions and statements of the Attorney-General were used to inflame the minds and influence the action of the members of the legislature of the State of Iowa in securing the passage of the joint resolution referred to in General Butler's letter 12th inst. We feel assured that before any official action shall be taken by the Attorney-General or any adverse expression of opinion by him upon the validity of the numerous patents owned by the parties assailed is announced, a full and careful hearing will be accorded to Washburn & Moen Manufacturing Company, and Isaac L. Ellwood and their numerous licensees, whose large investments and expenditures have reduced the price of barbed wire, in less than seven years, from over 20 cents per pound to less than ten cents, and increased the production by procuring to be invested and made improved machines, and otherwise, during the same time, from a few hundred tons per annum to upwards of fifty thousand tons per year.

In conclusion, it is confidently believed, that a slight examination of the subject will be quite sufficient to show to the Attorney-General that no cause exists for even ordering a hearing before him, much less for the interposition of the Department of Justice in reference to the numerous grants of letters-patents before referred to, especially as they are now in the process of being adjudicated by the proper and legitimate tribunals provided by law for such purposes.

Respectfully submitted,

WASHBURN & MOEN, MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

By PHILIP L. MOEN,
President.

Letter of Hon. Richard Crowley, Counsel in the Barbed Wire Case, giving certain reasons why the suit in the name of the Government to annul the Barbed Wire Patent should be dismissed.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 16, 1885.

To The Honorable BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER, Attorney-General of the United States:

SIR: I am informed by Mr. Walker and by my client, W. B. Roberts, that last week a bill in equity was filed in the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Pennsylvania, in the name of and in behalf of the United States against Mr. Roberts and others, to set aside a patent issued in November, 1866, to E. A. L. Roberts and antedated May, 1866, numbered 59,936, for "improvements in method of increasing the capacity of oil wells," which patent runs for a term of 17 years. This suit, in my judgment, ought not to have been instituted in the name of the United States, nor should the United States have authority for its commencement, for the following reasons :

The above patent issued to Mr. Roberts, antedated May, 1866, was for a period of seventeen years only, and by limitation will expire May 20th, next, a period of only about two months. More than that, the validity of the patent has been passed upon in the circuit courts of the United States in several cases and always sustained, namely :

In the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Pennsylvania, wherein E. A. L. Roberts was plaintiff and James Dickey and others defendants, at the May term of said court in the year 1870. The opinion and decree of the court was delivered by ex-Justice Strong, then a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, holding said circuit court, wherein said patent was held to be good and valid, and the said Mr. Roberts "the first and original inventor of the improvements described in said letters patent;" and afterwards in the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Pennsylvania, in a suit wherein said E. A. L. Roberts was plaintiff and F. A. Roter was defendant, at the November term of said court held in 1871, wherein the judgment of the court, Justice McKennan, presiding, was that the said patent was good and valid, and that the said Roberts was the first and original inventor of the improvements described therein; and, further, in the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Pennsylvania, at the November term of the year 1875, in an action wherein said Edward A. L. Roberts and others were plaintiffs and Peter Schreiber was defendant, letters patent having been reissued upon said patent for the balance of said term of seventeen years, as authorized by the acts of Congress. It was again held that the said letters patent and the reissue thereof were good and valid, and that the said Roberts was the first and original inventor of the improvements described in said letters patent and reissue thereof, wherein Justice Strong, holding said court, reaffirms all that he had said and decreed in the aforesaid Dickey case, and applied the same to said reissue of said letters patent. The said last-mentioned case of Roberts and others against Schreiber is now upon the calendar of the Supreme Court of the United States for argument. Under these circumstances the circuit court of the United States, at three respective terms thereof, to wit, in 1870, in 1871, and in 1875, having affirmed the validity of said patent and the reissue thereof, and said patent expiring May 20, 1883, it is in my judgment improper that leave should be given to private litigants, in the name of the United States, to now commence an action anew to set aside said letters patent, for the reasons assigned in the bill of complainant recently filed in the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Pennsylvania; that in said suit now pending in the Supreme Court, the answer sets up among other things, that the said Roberts was not the original inventor of said improvements described in the said letters patent, and that he had obtained the same by deception and fraud; that the same statements are set forth in the bill recently filed at Pittsburgh, as I am informed, as are contained in the said suit of Roberts and others against Schreiber, now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States, and it is therefore improper to harass and annoy the said Roberts by a new suit, which can only determine the same facts as the suits now upon the calendar of the Supreme Court of the United States.

I inclose you herewith certified copies of the bills, answers, and decrees in the three before mentioned causes, for your information.

Under these circumstances, I respectfully ask that the suit brought last week in Pittsburgh in the name of the United States, at the request of certain parties deeming themselves aggrieved by the existence of said letters patent, and the reissue thereof be withdrawn and discontinued; and that said parties and all other parties be left to abide the issue of the cause in the suit pending upon the calendar of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Yours respectfully,

RICHARD CROWLEY,
Of counsel for Roberts.

Affidavit of Lewis L. Coburn, counsel for the Barbed-Wire Company as to collusive suits.

STATE OF ILLINOIS,

County of Cook, ss:

Lewis L. Coburn, of lawful age, being duly sworn, deposes and says, that he resides in Chicago, in the county of Cook, aforesaid, and is and has been in the practice of law in the city of Chicago for upwards of twenty years last past, and is of the law firm of Coburn & Thacher in said city; that he has had the active management of all or nearly all of the litigation in the United States courts, in the northern district of Illinois, for the Washburn & Moen Manufacturing Company, and Washburn & Moen Manufacturing Company and Isaac L. Ellwood relating to their letters patent of the United States, known as the barbed-wire patents, and their patents on machinery for the manufacture of barbed wire. That the said Washburn & Moen Manufacturing Company, and Washburn & Moen Manufacturing Company and Isaac L. Ellwood commenced a large number of suits against different manufacturers of barbed wire for the infringement of said patents, and prosecuted said suits vigorously in the United States courts; and that in some instances the defendants after contesting the suits settled and discontinued the manufacture of barbed wire; that others continued to contest their suits, and that there was an organization formed by a large number of the various defendants known as "The Barbed-Wire Union"; that the testimony that was taken in those cases which the Barbed-Wire Union was defending amounted to some two or three thousand printed pages; that testimony was taken in various parts of the country to prove old use of barbed wire; that the complainants took rebutting testimony, and that besides the testimony taken to prove old use, a large number of old patents were set up in the various answers, as anticipating in some way some of the elements shown in the complainants' patents; that finally after several years of vigorous prosecution there were fourteen cases set for hearing before Judges Drummond and Blodgett in the United States court for the northern district of Illinois; that quite a number of counsel were employed on both sides in these cases, and they were fully argued by several different counsel before Judges Drummond and Blodgett in June, 1880, the argument for final hearing occupying about a week, and elaborate briefs were filed on both sides by the counsel; that the court took the cases under advisement, and on the 15th of December, 1880, rendered a decision, which decision is reported in the Official Gazette of January 18, 1881; that the decision of Judges Drummond and Blodgett in these fourteen cases was a decision upon the merits of the patents that were involved in said litigation; that there was no settlement by any of the defendants in these cases prior to the decision rendered by Judges Drummond and Blodgett, above referred to; that there was no agreement between the parties in those cases in reference to any settlement; that said cases were contested extensively and fully and at great expense by all the defendants combined, who employed able counsel who fought the cases in every way conceivable to try the cases upon their merits; and the cases were fully argued and submitted, and decided as above stated, there being no agreement or understanding between the complainants and the defendants in reference to any settlement prior to the decision rendered by Judges Drummond and Blodgett as aforesaid; that there was no agreement or understanding between the counsel of the various parties in reference to any settlement between the parties prior to the decision rendered, above referred to; that this affiant states that in his long experience as attorney in patent cases (he having for twenty years made patent law a specialty) he has never known any patent litigation that was more vigorously prosecuted and more fully and hotly contested than the cases decided by Judges Drummond and Blodgett, as above stated; that in said cases there was no collusion between the parties in any way to affect a decision other than a decision upon the merits of the case; that after the decision was rendered by Judges Drummond and Blodgett in those cases the defendants in various cases desired to settle and take licenses, to which the complainants assented, and negotiations were then opened between the parties and the defendants settled, paying damages which were agreed upon between the parties; that the Chicago Galvanized Wire Fence Company paid and agreed to pay upwards of $10,000 for past damages; that the other defendants all paid sums that were agreed upon between the parties for past damages, and took licenses, agreeing to pay a royalty of 75 cents a hundred pounds on what they manufactured after the date of their licenses, and that instead of taking a reference to the master to prove the amount of damage, that each defendant should pay the amount as agreed upon between the parties, and the decrees that were entered in the various cases set forth the fact that the parties had settled. The settlement was made after the decision of the court, and prior to the entering of the decrees. In the two suits pending against Jacob Haish, the suits in which the court entitled its decision, Jacob Haish afterwards filed a petition for a rehearing, which the court overruled. After the court overruled the petition it then entered an interlocutory decree in the Haish cases, which was not in any sense of the terms a consent decree. The matter proceeded to an accounting before the master, and while the accounting was progressing, Jacob Haish settled, and the final decree that was entered in the Haish case was drawn in accordance with the facts, setting forth his settlement, &c.; that all of the fourteen cases that were decided by Judges Drummond and Blodgett were decided upon their merits and without any collusion between the parties or their counsel, and the counsel for the complainants stipulated that any and all testimony that had been taken in any barbed-wire suits on behalf of the defendants could be used at the hearing of those cases, the same as if regularly taken in the cases being argued, an order that any defense that had been brought out in any of the cases should be disposed of by the court, to the end that the litigation might be as exhaustive as possible and the question of the validity of the patents might be as thoroughly and fully tested as could possibly be done by any circuit court, and at the request of the complainant's counsel the cases were heard before two judges in order that the litigation might be decisive and final; that so far as the circuit court litigation is concerned none could be more extensive, none could be more ably contested, and no judges of greater ability or any greater experience could be obtained in the country than were had in the cases tried in the circuit court of the northern district of Illinois.

This deponent further says that among other cases that were commenced against manufacturers were two cases in Iowa, filed against one James H. Coon; that Coon employed an attorney who filed demurrers, and the cases were allowed to remain in that condition until after the barbed-wire union cases were decided upon their merits in the northern district of Illinois, as aforesaid; that after the decision in those cases, above referred to, the complainant in the Coon cases moved to have the demurrers disposed of, and gave notice for a motion for an injunction on the ground that the patents had been adjudicated; that the defendant then proceeded to file affidavits in reference to prior use of barbed wire; that all of the affidavits which the defendant procured in reference to prior use of barbed wire were concerning testimony which had been taken in the cases which had been decided by Judges Drummond and Blodgett, excepting one single instance, which was called the Freeman fence. The affidavits in the Coon case relating to the Freeman fence had not been rebutted in the Chicago cases, but the complainant obtained a large number of affidavits entitled in the Coon cases rebutting the defendant's affidavits relating to that fence; that finally the United States court in Iowa set the complainant's motion for an injunction, for a hearing; that a short time prior to the hearing the defendant Coon offered to sell his machinery, to transfer his patent which he had obtained for his machinery to the complainants, and discontinue the manufacture of barbed wire; that this affiant advised the complainants that inasmuch as they had already had their patents adjudicated it would be cheaper for them to settle with Mr. Coon in this way in accordance with his offer than to continue the litigation in the Coon cases, and they accordingly did settle with him, obtaining a decree and injunction, and an assignment of his patent, which was of value to the complainants, as this affiant believes, which they could not have obtained at the end of the litigation except by purchasing it at probably a considerably larger cost to them.

LEWIS L. COBURN.

Affidavit of N. C. Gridley, counsel for the Barbed Wire Company, as to collusion suits.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Northern district of Illinois, ss:

Nelson C. Gridley, of lawful age, being duly sworn, deposes and says: That he is an attorney at law, and carries on business in the city of Chicago, in said district; that he has been engaged in the practice of law for over thirty years past, and for the last twelve years has made patents and patent law a specialty; that in or about the month of December, 1876, this deponent was employed by one Jacob Haish to defend two suits brought against him by the Washburn & Moen Manufacturing Company, and the Washburn & Moen Manufacturing Company and Isaac L. Ellwood, for infringement of certain letters patent now commonly known as the barbed wire patents; that this deponent appeared as solicitor and counsel for Jacob Haish in said causes, and the first answer filed in said barbed wire litigation was drawn and filed by this deponent; that subsequently this deponent appeared for the defendants as solicitor and counsel in twelve other cases brought by the same complainants and upon the same patents, and other patents in some of the said causes; that during the progress of that litigation an union of the defendants, or barbed wire manufacturers, was had, known as the "Barbed Wire Union," and that Jacob Haish became a member of that Barbed Wire Union; that from the time of the commencement of those suits against Jacob Haish, and the other twelve suits against the other defendants, this deponent acted as solicitor and counsel in all of said causes, and was personally engaged in taking most of the testimony on the part of the defendants; that the printed record of testimony in said causes on the part of the defendants, going to show a number of instances of prior knowledge and use of barbed wire fencing, consisted of about two thousand pages; that from the time this deponent was first employed by Jacob Haish and subsequently by the Barbed Wire Union, this deponent was instructed to use every effort, and to spare neither time nor money in making all the defense that was necessary and possible for the purpose of defeating the barbed patents; that this deponent acted upon such instructions up to and including the final hearing of said causes in December, 1780; that this deponent never knew, nor ever heard of any desire on the part of the defendants to make any settlement of said causes until after the decision rendered by Judges Drummond and Blodgett in December, 1880, but, on the contrary, during the latter part of said litigation, this deponent was instructed by his clients, the Barbed Wire Union, to force said causes to a final hearing at as early a day as possible, that so far as this this deponent has any knowledge, there never was any overtures made by the complainants to the defendants, or defendants to the complainants, looking to any collusion between the parties for the purpose of sustaining said letters patent, but that this deponent was led to believe, and did believe, that it was to be a hotly contested litigation from the beginning, and every step of the litigation fully justified that conclusion; and this deponent fully believes that no patent litigation in the courts of the United States was ever more fully and thoroughly contested by the respective parties.

And this deponent further says that after the decision rendered by Judges Drummond and Blodgett in said causes, this deponent advised the defendants in said causes, excepting the defendant Jacob Haish (who had withdrawn from the Barbed Wire Union and employed other counsel), to make the best settlement and terms possible with the complainants; that it would be more advantageous to them to accept of a license upon reasonable terms and pay a royalty than it would be to continue the litigation in the face of the decision of the court against them.

CHARLES CARPENTER,
Notary Public.

The CHAIRMAN. Col. Young, have you anything further?

Mr. YOUNG. Yes, sir. Mr. Van Benthuyzen the other day proposed to introduce some documentary proofs. He expects his attorney here. I presume it is natural to all lawyers to feel as I feel in regard to appearing in a case where I have been called as a witness; and if the committee will wait until his attorney arrives, I prefer that he should present the proof. If not, as I feel it is a proper matter to be presented, I will do it myself, if the committee will permit me.

The CHAIRMAN. Is his attorney here?

Mr. YOUNG. No sir; he will be here in the morning. The train was thrown off the track. [After a pause.] I am just told that he cannot stop when he gets here, as he is on his way to Boston, and will have to be there Monday.

Mr. OATES. I do not think it is necessary for any attorney to appear. Whatever proofs there are can be submitted.

Mr. EDEN. I think this is the last meeting of the committee I will be able to attend.

The CHAIRMAN. We will proceed now.

Mr. RANNEY. Permit me to make an inquiry whether these other documents Mr. Young has offered from that record will be put in. I would like to have the committee rule whether they shall go in or not.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you refer to the pleas, the return, &c.?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes; and the letter from the Patent Office to him.

The CHAIRMAN. The letter from the Patent Office I think went in without objection, if I recollect aright. The other matters were objected to, but they are now in.

Mr. RANNEY. The other matters offered are considered as in.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. OATES. They are in, unless objected to.

Mr. EDEN. If there is no objection, I suppose they are in. They are not in if anybody has any objection to them.

Mr. RANNEY. That raises the same question, whether we can put in the record everything that was before Secretary Lamar.

Mr. EDEN. I am not going into a discussion of that matter.

Mr. RANNEY. That raises the broad question. The question before us is whether that decision of Lamar is right; whether it was justified by that record.

Mr. EDEN. I do not find that in the resolution. The resolution directs us to inquire into the reason and authority; not to see whether the Secretary of the Interior did right or wrong.

Mr. RANNEY. Then the evidence is not competent.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen, let us proceed in order. What is the matter now before the committee?

Mr. RANNEY. The matter before the committee is this offer of testimony, and whether it shall go into the case or not.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, this offer with reference to the orders and pleas in the suits between the Bell Telephone Company and other telephone companies, does not seem to me at all relevant except to meet one stage of this case. Mr. Ranney offered evidence showing that in the New Orleans suit, and also, I believe, in Baltimore, as soon as the Government suit was ordered, motions were made by Johnson's company in Baltimore and Van Benthuyzen's company in New Orleans for a stay of proceedings to await the determination of that suit. It seems to me that only in that view can this evidence which Col. Young wants to put in be admissible, as it tends to show that the Bell company were putting in dilatory pleas and thereby postponing the trial of the issue. I objected to Mr. Ranney putting in evidence on that line, but as that is in, I think this is just as relevant as that. I do not think either ought to have gone in in the first place. If the other was not in, I should object to this, but as that is in, I think this is as relevant as that.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not raise any objection. I want to know if it is understood to be in evidence.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection.

Mr. EDEN. I would concur with Colonel Oates. I would vote to admit it for the reason that the other has been admitted.

The CHAIRMAN. It is already in.

Mr. MOFFATT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask Colonel Young whether the offer which he makes is included in the offer Mr. Van Benthuyzen has already made the committee and the committee has passed upon.

Mr. YOUNG. No, I think not. I do not understand it is. I understand a part of his request was acted upon and that he is not to be permitted to introduce testimony to impeach the credibility of witnesses who have testified to certain facts, because it is not considered that those facts are material. This has no relation to that at all. I want to introduce some rebutting testimony. The committee will remember that when the investigation first started I insisted that it should be conducted as I thought the rules of evidence required, and that if there were charges preferred against me and against the other gentlemen who are implicated with me, then those charges should have been proven, and we should have been allowed an opportunity to contradict them, if we could do so. I do not want to have it said that there are no charges, because there are charges of the very gravest character. I feel that my reputation and my integrity as a public officer, as well as my reputation and integrity as a private citizen, are involved in this matter, and I feel that it is due to me and due to those gentlemen who are associated with me that we should have an opportunity to put in whatever proper and legal evidence we may be able to put in against what has been developed in support of these charges.

If there were no charges Congress would have had no authority to make this investigation, and I think under the terms of this investigation I might very properly have refused to present any books or papers or to have answered a single question before this committee. If there are no charges preferred against any public officer, Congress has no authority to empower any committee to inquire into my private affairs. I might with perfect propriety, I think, and without incurring any penalty that Congress has a right to inflict, decline to recognize the authority of this committee at all to require me to bring books and papers and go into an investigation of my private affairs. I only recognize their right to do that upon the ground that by implication charges are preferred against public officers, and the public judgment of the country would have been crystallized against me; and I owed it to myself and to them to come in and lay these facts before the committee.

Having proceeded thus, and this committee having devoted more than two months to the examination of one side of the question, it is a matter of sheer justice to us that we should be permitted to come in and show the other side, if there is another side to it. We have been held up by the newspaper press, and in the course of investigation in this committee as adventurers perpetrating a fraud upon the public; as public officers prostituting their official functions to the advancement of their personal ends. I feel that we have a right to present both sides of the question, and refute that presumption, if any such presumption has arisen from the testimony that has been taken in this case. I propose to show under a clause of that resolution the reasons why the Government should have undertaken the prosecution of this suit; that it was not in furtherance of any private interest; that it was not to advance the interest of any company or any individual, but that it went beyond that; that there was a great question of public right involved, the integrity of a Department of this Government. If I can show now by any testimony, whether it has been introduced in this record or not, that this suit was a proper one, and ought to have been ordered in the interests of the public, regardless of the feelings or interest of any private individual, or any corporation, I think it is competent for me to do so.

I propose, if the committee will allow me, to introduce proof which I think will abundantly justify the action of the Government, abundantly authorize the institution of this suit under the provisions of the law. If the committee will allow me I will present now a document that will open up that investigation. I will introduce the witness if desired, but if not I will hand to the committee a sworn statement that will disclose the facts and the grounds upon which I propose to introduce the additional testimony.

Mr. HALL. By whom is it sworn to?

Mr. YOUNG. By the man who makes it.

Mr. HALL. Is it some one else besides yourself?

Mr. YOUNG. O, yes; I have done with my testimony. I have been a witness longer than I ever was before.

Mr. MOFFATT. Were these matters submitted to the Department?

Mr. YOUNG. Part of them were submitted to the Department.

Mr. MOFFATT. Those which were submitted to the Department, are they already in evidence in this case?

Mr. YOUNG. Part of them are in evidence, and evidence has been introduced outside of the record in reference to these very matters. Witnesses have been examined and have testified in respect to it and in respect to the very statement of the witness that I propose to introduce. The record abounds with it. Now I am perfectly aware that under the strict application of the rules of evidence the paper I propose to offer would not be competent. But strict rules of evidence have not been adhered to in the inquiry so far as it has gone. Testimony has been admitted here, and papers called testimony, publications from newspapers, letters written from parties at a distance, and telegrams sent, unsworn to papers, have been introduced, signed by nobody—

Mr. OATES. I do not quite agree with Colonel Young that this investigation has been wholly one-sided.

Mr. YOUNG. I do not mean any reflection on the committee.

Mr. GATES. I should like to hear, if it is to be presented, what it is. We cannot determine on mere outside talk what it is.

Mr. RANNEY. One word about that. Evidence that was introduced before the Interior Department upon which the action which we are investigating was had, may be and probably is competent. But evidence that was not introduced there, evidence that they have gotten up since, is incompetent in our judging of that matter. We are not here to inquire into the validity of patents or try the validity of those patents.

Mr. OATES. Let us hear the paper read—I do not know what it is—and let us consider the question.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not know what is in it. I think it should be submitted to the committee.

Mr. OATES. It need not be taken down. It is in writing, and it could be read.

Mr. RANNEY. A paper should not be publicly read, to go into the newspapers, unless you are going to try that whole issue. If it is a matter that relates to the validity of the patent, it is a question we are not trying.

Mr. EDEN. There is nothing so far developed to show that that is the matter. I do not know what it is that he proposes to introduce.

Mr. RANNEY. I gather so from what he indicates. Anything before the Secretary of the Interior or before the Attorney-General which led to the bringing of this suit is competent, in my judgment. But anything that was not there is not, in my judgment, or which raises a question as to the validity of patents.

Mr. OATES. I move, without making it evidence, or having it taken down, that it be read.

Mr. RANNEY. Suppose that he goes into a matter that involves the question of the validity of those patents and involves that whole evidence and raises the question of fraud.

Mr. EDEN. We cannot know whether it is improper or not until we hear it.

Mr. RANNEY. It should be shown to us in the first place; we have a right to inspect it.

Mr. EDEN. We have not taken that course heretofore, I believe, have we, in reference to the introduction of testimony?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes; we have. Mr. Van Benthuyzen's paper was submitted to us.

Mr. EDEN. It was read before the committee and went into the record.

Mr. RANNEY. Before the competency of a paper can be passed upon we must see it. He says himself that it is not competent evidence. Why should we hear a thing read that is not competent evidence?

Mr. EDEN. How can we tell until we hear it?

Mr. RANNEY. You have been putting it before the jury before you read it.

Mr. OATES. We have been doing that thing all the time.

Mr. RANNEY. You want to hear evidence and spread it broadcast before you know what it is—is that it?

Mr. EDEN. No, sir; I do not.

Mr. HALL. I understand this is an offer on the part of Colonel Young to have some important evidence that is claimed to be pertinent brought in.

Mr. RANNEY. I understand it is entirely outside of the record which was introduced by the Government officers who acted on it. We should not spread on record some ex-parte statement of somebody, I do not know who, about something, I do not know what.

Mr. HALL. I do not understand that this paper is offered as evidence.

Mr. YOUNG. I will produce the witnesses.

Mr. RANNEY. We should know what issue is to be tried.

Mr. MOFFATT. It seems to me that Colonel Young could inform this committee what he wants to do.

Mr. RANNEY. What he wants to try.

Mr. OATES. My motion is that we hear the paper read—the stenographer need not take it down—for the purpose of seeing what we will do about it.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not necessary to make a motion. I would hold here, as I know it to be held in courts where the matter is submitted to the court only, that it may be read in the first instance to the court. If it is to go to the jury, it ought to be submitted to the court first for examination. We have no jury here; we are all members of the court to some extent, so that there would be no harm in reading the paper to the committee if it does not go in evidence.

Mr. RANNEY. I object to the reading of any paper that is outside of this issue here, which we have not a right to investigate.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no issue here.

Mr. RANNEY. Then I object to hearing any paper read outside of the issue, unless it is shown to be on the issue raised here.

The CHAIRMAN. The chair is of the opinion that there is no issue, and, as has been so frequently said through the proceedings, we are inquiring about, searching for, and hunting up any matter that may affect these people.

Mr. RANNEY. I object to the reading of the paper, and call for the ayes and noes.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no question before the committee that I know of.

Mr. RANNEY. I object to the reading of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The chair holds that the paper may be read as an offer.

Mr. RANNEY. Then I appeal from the decision of the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Ranney] appeals from the decision of the chair holding that the paper may be offered in evidence and may be read as an offer. The question is, Shall the ruling of the chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. RANNEY. In the next place, I want to say that the man who offers it says himself that it is not competent, to start with.

Mr. YOUNG. I did not say that. I say if the rules of evidence were strictly applied here, it would not be competent.

Mr. RANNEY. What is it that you propose to read?

Mr. YOUNG. I propose to read the statement of a witness that I will introduce after it is read, if he is called for.

Mr. RANNEY. Whose evidence.

Mr. YOUNG. I will disclose that after the paper is read.

Mr. RANNEY. You say it is the evidence of a witness; who is the witness?

Mr. YOUNG. I offer to read a statement of facts.

Mr. RANNEY. Who is it signed by?

Mr. YOUNG. I will state that fact when the committee passes upon the question whether I shall read it. I do not care to disclose any part unless I am allowed to present it all.

Mr. RANNEY. The counsel states that it is an affidavit, but he declines to state whose affidavit it is.

Mr. YOUNG. No, sir; I do not decline to do that. I decline to state any part unless it is all submitted.

Mr. EDEN (to Mr. Ranney). It seems to me that for a man who is searching for truth you are getting a little technical.

Mr. RANNEY. He only offers to read the affidavit of a man, and therefore it is not a document within the rule we established that only documentary evidence shall be received. That is the rule we have established and which is to govern our future action—the resolution of Mr. Oates. Now Colonel Young comes and proposes to read the affidavit of a man. You could not call the witness if he was here; you could not read his affidavit; it would not be competent. Offering to read the affidavit of a witness who is not here is not documentary evidence within our rule.

The CHAIRMAN. If it were going in evidence, that would be a good objection, but, as the chair has tried to maintain throughout, it is an offer, and when the time comes for proving what Colonel Young offers now to prove, then the question can be raised as to how it shall be proved.

Mr. HALL. It may be totally immaterial. That we do not know at all.

The CHAIRMAN. This is a simple offer to prove and enter upon a certain line of investigation. As he intimates, what that is he can state in his offer, or he can read a paper showing what it is, and leave the other question to be decided hereafter.

Mr. RANNEY. Pardon me; I want to be understood. He does not put in an offer of proof, but he offers to prove by certain witnesses a certain thing, and he says he has an affidavit of that evidence which he wants to read to the committee in that way. Is it necessary that the committee should hear read a thing which is admitted to be incompetent evidence to start with?

The CHAIRMAN. If the offer was to read it as evidence it would not be, but he can state his offer or read the paper showing his offer as he thinks proper. He may make his offer in any way that he likes. There can be no restriction on his offer.

Mr. RANNEY. Suppose a court was sitting and a man said I offer the affidavit of a certain man. The court would say the affidavit is incompetent, and it would not be accepted.

The CHAIRMAN. I think the gentleman comprehends the distinction made by the chair.

Mr. RANNEY. But I say when he starts on the assumption that it is the affidavit of a private individual and is outside of the rule which we have established, that it would not be competent. It does not depend upon reading it whether it makes it competent or not. You do not need to read it to see whether it is competent or not.

The CHAIRMAN. I state again that Colonel Young makes an offer. He proposes to make known to the committee what his offer is, or to make his offer in writing. I do not care whether it is an affidavit or what it is. I say that he has a right to make the offer as he likes. He may read an affidavit, but he does not read it as an affidavit, as proving anything. The affidavit in this stage of the proceeding proves nothing more than any other written offer would. But he submits it to the committee as showing his offer. Then, if the committee should say that the offer may be admitted, it would become a question as to the manner of proving it. If the witness is present and this is a mere affidavit, it would not be competent. But if the committee should say, after hearing this statement of facts, whether oral or written, that it was not competent, that is the end of it. That is my view of it. I do not admit the affidavit, and do not say that the affidavit can be read as proving any single fact, but I say it can be read as stating facts which it is proposed to prove by competent evidence.

Mr. YOUNG. Shall I read it?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts has appealed from the ruling of the Chair saying that the offer may be made.

Mr. OATES. The question is whether we will hear it read, not whether it goes in as evidence.

Mr. HALL. Colonel Young stands here as an individual who proposes to put this committee in possession of some facts which can be established by competent testimony, and to set forth his good faith he has an affidavit prepared to show that his proposition is one that is coming in proper form. The affidavit is not offered as evidence, or as establishing any fact before the committee.

Mr. MOFFATT. If I understand the question, it is as to the mode in which he shall make the offer. It seems to me that the proper mode is for him to state to this committee what he expects to prove, and it is unnecessary to read any affidavit to recite it. Colonel Young is a man possessed of clear power of statement, and he could tell the committee in five minutes what he wanted to prove.

Mr. OATES. I had rather hear it read than his oral statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The view of the Chair is that he may make it as he likes.

Mr. MOFFATT. It is like examining a witness first to determine his competency.

Mr. HANBACK. I asked to have a witness subpoenaed in one case and I was required to state what I expected to prove by him to the chairman. Of course I could not state what I could prove by him, because I had never seen him.

Mr. HALE. Is not this substantially the same proposition that was here the other day when Mr. Van Benthuyzen presented his statement?

Mr. OATES. Oh no.

Mr. HALE. Is it to go into the record?

Mr. EDEN. Not the reading of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the allowing of the offer to be read.

Mr. HALE. There was an objection made to the statement of Mr. Van Benthuyzen.

Mr. YOUNG. That has no reference to this.

Mr. HALE. I say the same question seems to be involved, as to whether a proposition of that sort can be admitted in that shape.

Mr. OATES. The question is whether Colonel Young can read his paper and state what he wants to prove—not that it goes in at all, but whether we will let him state it.

Mr. HALE. If it does not go into the record I have no objection.

Mr. EDEN. It does not, unless we allow it.

Mr. HALE. I suppose the reporters can take it all down.

Mr. EDEN. I suppose the official reporter will do as we direct him to do.

Mr. RANNEY. I understand the statement to be that as Mr. Van Benthuyzen's counsel is not here Colonel Young will state it. It has already been stated that it does not relate to anything put in before the Commissioner of Patents, the Attorney-General or the Secretary of the Interior, but to something outside of that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the decision of the committee?

Mr. RANNEY. I call for the ayes and noes.

The vote was taken—Yeas: Messrs. Oates, Eden, and Hall; nays: Messrs. Hale, Ranney, Hanback, and Moffatt.

The CHAIRMAN. The noes have it, and the decision of the Chair is overruled.

Mr. MOFFATT. I have no objection to Colonel Young's stating what he wants to prove.

The CHAIRMAN. There is nothing before the committee.

Mr. MOFFATT. I move that Colonel Young be allowed to state to the committee what issue he wants to make.

Mr. YOUNG. If the committee would hear me a moment—

The CHAIRMAN. On what subject?

Mr. YOUNG. On the subject before the committee.

Mr. EDEN. I want to see what it is that Colonel Young proposes to prove.

Mr. MOFFATT. I am willing that he should state it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was put and agreed to.

Mr. YOUNG. In order to state it, I will read from a paper I hold in my hand.

Mr. MOFFATT. I shall object to that. State what you want to prove.

Mr. YOUNG. I cannot state in one word.

Mr. MOFFATT. I do not know of any gentleman who has better power of communication than you have. You can state what the object of your offer is.

Mr. RANNEY. You cannot dodge the ruling of the committee in that way.

Mr. YOUNG. I am not trying to dodge any ruling of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The view of the Chair is that Colonel Young may state it in any way he thinks proper.

Mr. EDEN. I think so, or not state it at all.

Mr. MOFFATT. In that case, what has the other vote amounted to?

The CHAIRMAN. This is a new question raised upon your motion.

Mr. YOUNG. I will try to state it without reading the whole paper. I have to look over it to get the exact facts.

Mr. MOFFATT. I object.

Mr. RANNEY. That is not treating the committee fairly.

Mr. MOFFATT. I object, and ask the ruling of the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. What do you object to?

Mr. MOFFATT. I object to his reading the statement. It was understood pretty thoroughly that Colonel Young was invited here to state what he wished to present to the committee, and not to read any document.

Mr. OATES. The decision of the committee is that he may state orally anything he pleases, but not to read it from the paper he has.

Mr. MOFFATT. That is my idea.

Mr. RANNEY. He is to state the issue that he wants to present.

Mr. MOFFATT. Yes, without reading it.

The CHAIRMAN. The chair is clear in the view already expressed, and therefore overrules the objection of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MOFFATT. I appeal from the decision of the chair.

Mr. HALE. What is it you propose to do, Colonel Young?

Mr. YOUNG. I propose to investigate the other side of this question.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not the immediate question. The question is as to the manner in which you propose to do it.

Mr. YOUNG. I did propose to read the paper which I have in my hand, which sets out the facts I propose to prove before this committee. If the committee declines to hear the paper read, I will try to state it the best I can without reading it. I can make myself much more clearly and distinctly understood, and get through quicker and earlier by reading than I could by stating it orally.

The CHAIRMAN. The immediate question is this: On motion of the gentleman from Michigan it has been determined that you may make your offer. You propose to make it in a certain way, by reading it. The gentleman from Michigan objects to that, and the chair has overruled the objection. The gentleman from Michigan appeals from the decision of the chair, and the question now before the committee is whether the decision of the chair shall stand as the judgment of the committee.

Mr. RANNEY. On that I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that the committee having ruled that he cannot read the paper, but is simply allowed orally to state what he proposes to prove, he should not be permitted to take advantage of that and do indirectly what he has not been permitted to do directly. As lawyers, we all know that a man can state what issues he proposes to prove, what subject-matter he proposes to offer. Because cunning should not be allowed to be taken advantage of by a witness.

Mr. HALL. I submit that that is an unjust statement, but it is like hundreds made during this investigation, all in one direction. In the first place, the statement made about the ruling of the committee is an incorrect one. The committee has not decided that he should not read a paper, but simply that he should not read that affidavit. The committee has no information that this paper is the same thing at all. It was never said that he should not read a paper, but simply said that he might make a statement. The chairman has properly ruled that under a decision of that kind he may make his statement in his own way, and I fail to see any attempt on his part to dodge or evade any order of the committee, and I think comments of that kind are scarcely just to the witness.

Mr. RANNEY. I simply have said that he should not be allowed to do it.

Mr. HALE. He proposes now, I understand, to make an oral statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the appeal of the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was put, and Messrs. Oates, Eden, and Hall voted in the affirmative, and Messrs. Ranney, Hanback, and Moffatt in the negative.

The CHAIRMAN. The majority not voting to sustain the chair, the decision of the chair is overruled.

Mr. YOUNG. I just want to say this to the committee: I do not see any help for me. Of course I am a culprit here, and I have to submit to the ruling of the committee. I would be very glad to have been allowed to read the statement, which I think is my right as an American citizen when put on trial for any offense. I would like to make my defense, but if the committee refuses to allow me to do it I have to go to the country on that record.

Mr. RANNEY. I call the gentleman to order. We are not here to be lectured. I object to the committee being lectured.

Mr. YOUNG. I am not lecturing the committee at all.

The CHAIRMAN. You may proceed with your offer in the way the committee has directed.

Mr. YOUNG. I do not know in what way they decided to allow it.

The CHAIRMAN. The decision is that you shall not read anything.

Mr. YOUNG. Then all I can do is to submit to the ruling of the committee. I would be very glad to introduce proof to justify myself and the gentlemen involved with me against these charges, but if I am cut off, I cannot help myself. I will state, if the committee will have the patience to hear me, that in examining this record, I think I could find—

The CHAIRMAN. We do not propose to hear any argument. We will hear your offer. What do you want to submit to the committee?

Mr. YOUNG. I stated to the committee that I wanted to submit this paper.

The CHAIRMAN. State the facts in that paper.

Mr. YOUNG. I will state them as near as I can. I propose to show by competent proof—

Mr. RANNEY. Pardon me; are you making Mr. Van Benthuyzen's offer or your own?

Mr. YOUNG. I am making my own. I take the responsibility of leaving Mr. Van Benthuyzen out of it. He is involved in it as much as I am. But I offer to prove to this committee that under a clause of that resolution to ascertain the reasons of the prosecution and the bringing of the Government suit, I propose to show that the patent that is being attacked by the Government was obtained by fraud from the Patent Office. I propose to show that the officer who gave it was derelict in his duty. I propose to prove that he issued that patent from corrupt influences; that he was paid by the patentee to issue this patent that is being attacked now in this suit being instituted by the Government. That is the main fact I propose to prove. If the committee will allow me to do it, I will prove it by this paper here, or I will summon the witnesses to prove it.

Mr. HALE. Is that the substance of your statement?

Mr. YOUNG. Yes, it is what I propose to prove. I state it in this paper. Papers have been introduced here not signed or sworn to by anybody; your record is full of them. Now I simply offer to present a paper that is signed and sworn to, setting out facts that I propose to prove by other witnesses. I submit it is not a fair ruling to exclude me from that right.

Mr. MOFFATT. I knew the colonel could state it in good shape.

Mr. YOUNG. I have not stated half of it.

Mr. HALL. Your offer is to prove, as a matter of fact, what you claim to be a fraud connected with the original issue of the Bell Telephone Company patent?

Mr. YOUNG. I do propose to prove that fact.

Mr. RANNEY. In other words, you propose to try the issue whether that patent was obtained by fraud or not?

Mr. YOUNG. I propose to try the issue that is involved here. I do not think any of this inquiry should have been entered on, but that is not for me to say. Congress differed with me.

Mr. HALL. That makes a further inquiry of the witness necessary. Would the proof which you propose to present furnish any further or additional facts than those that appear to have been before the Secretary of the Interior when he made his investigation?

Mr. YOUNG. They are in continuation of the same facts, but additional ones.

Mr. HALL. Would there be any additional evidence to show fraud or corruption than what was then in the record before the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. YOUNG. Yes; to show that it was actually paid for.

Mr. HANBACK. Under what clause of the resolution do you offer this?

Mr. YOUNG. Under the clause which directs the committee to inquire into the reasons and authority for instituting this suit, and especially the former part of the resolution, which directs the inquiry to be made by this committee into the question of priority of patents as between the Pan-Electric Company and the American Bell Telephone Company, which would be the priority of patents between Harry Rogers and Professor Bell, whether Bell had a patent or not, I propose to show that he did not have any.

Mr. MOFFATT. I have no objection, if the committee want it, to investigating the whole question and employing patent lawyers to conduct the case.

Mr. HALE. I do not think it is any part of our duty to try that case. It would mean a year's work if we should undertake it. We decided a week ago to close the testimony, and only allow witnesses to explain what was necessary to be corrected.

Mr. HANBACK. I have seen in the public press—I do not know anything about it myself—a statement as to the cost of this proceeding that is now going on, and judging by the statements of the costs in the Drawbaugh case, I believe it was, and a number of cases where it cost the Bell company five hundred thousand dollars to conduct it and accumulate the testimony, I suppose if we are to go into this investigation as to the validity of the original proceeding, of course we will have to have a trial where both sides are represented, and it would take a year to try it, and cost a large sum of money. I do not think we can transfer the trial of the case from Columbus to this committee. I am opposed to it, and I know it was not contemplated by the resolution.

Mr. OATES. I move that the committee now adjourn until 12 o'clock to-morrow, to meet at that time in secret session for the purpose of determining the question now before the committee, and any other matters they may think proper to consider.

Mr. HALL. Before that motion is put, I would like to inquire of Colonel Young as to whether he has any objection to submitting his papers to the chairman of the committee?

Mr. YOUNG. No, sir; I have no objection.

The motion was then agreed to, and the committee adjourned until Saturday, May 22, 1886, at 12 m.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Saturday, May 22, 1886.

The committee met at 12.15 p. m., in secret session, for the purpose of considering the offer of testimony made by Mr. Casey Young, and other pending matters. After some time spent in deliberation the following resolution was adopted:

"Resolved, That the committee adhere to the resolution heretofore adopted, and refuse the motion to go into any investigation as to the alleged fraudulent issue of the Bell patent, further than the evidence in the record used before the Secretary of the Interior discloses."

Also the following:

"Resolved, That the evidence now be finally closed and the committee proceed to make a report to the House of the evidence adduced and their conclusions thereon."

The committee then adjourned until Monday, May 24, 1886, at 12 o'clock m.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Monday, May 24, 1886.

The committee met at 12.35 p. m.

The CHAIRMAN. I have here Mr. Von Briesen's letter, as published in the New York Times of October 19, 1885, which he desires to have go in evidence.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Von Briesen has testified to nearly all the facts covered by that letter, has he not?

The CHAIRMAN. I was not present when Mr. Von Briesen was examined, and have not read his testimony.

Mr. HALL. I do not know that he can be allowed to use a letter for the purpose of corroborating his testimony.

Mr. MILLARD. Is it desired to have it read?

The CHAIRMAN. If it is desired to have it in evidence it can be handed to the reporter.

Mr. OATES. Can it not be read first?

The CHAIRMAN. I may as well read it; it need not be taken down.

The chairman then read the article in question.

Mr. OATES. The reason that caused me to ask that the letter might be read was, because of the conflict between Mr. Von Briesen's recollection and Mr. Garland's recollection as to what passed between them.

The CHAIRMAN. He refers to the fact that he had said in this letter that the Attorney-General had said that in case another application were made it would be sent to the Solicitor-General.

Mr. RANNEY. It seems to me that the first part of it, down to the second section, is material, if competent, as affecting Mr. Von Briesen's testimony given here. That is the only view in which it can be competent as sworn testimony. But if there is anything in that letter which conflicts with his testimony given here I perceive that it is important. As a substantive piece of proof it is not.

Mr. OATES. I am willing it should go in for what it is worth. I do not know that it is worth much.

Mr. RANNEY. That is the ordinary rule of evidence, if it relates to the same subject. But it is not true that all of the communication is rendered competent; a part may be and a part may not be.

Mr. OATES. It may as well all go in.

Mr. RANNEY. It should all go in if it relates to the same subject-matter.

Mr. OATES. It should all go in, for everybody knows that that part of it is not evidence.

Mr. RANNEY. It is encumbering the record with an argument on the law.

Mr. OATES. We have been encumbering it so much that that will not matter.

Mr. MILLARD. I do not see on what theory it is offered except that he offers it himself to support his own evidence.

Mr. HALL. I do not think it is right to put one part in evidence and dispute the balance.

Mr. RANNEY. He sends it here to support his evidence.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the whole of it should be introduced.

Mr. MILLARD. I think the whole of the letter should be excluded if we decide the matter on legal grounds.

Mr. RANNEY. I think the whole of it should be excluded.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Ranney insisted the other day that it ought to go in.

Mr. RANNEY. No, I suggested that the letter that he wrote should come in.

Mr. OATES. Well, that is it.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Von Briesen wrote a letter to the committee also.

Mr. RANNEY. I suggested to the chairman that if anything should come in, it should be the letter to which he refers.

The CHAIRMAN. I think the private letter should not come in, because it was a mere argument.

Mr. MILLARD. I think both should be excluded.

Mr. RANNEY. If either is in, I think both should go in.

The CHAIRMAN. I see no reason why his letter should go in, because that is nothing but a letter calling attention to the fact that he had testified before in regard to the matter. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama that this letter should be admitted.

Mr. RANNEY. I make an objection to it. The rule of the committee is that when an objection is raised, it is the duty of the chairman to decide as to its competency.

The CHAIRMAN. Do I understand that the letter is accepted as authentic, as proven, as we have proceeded in other cases?

Mr. RANNEY. I should not raise that question.

The CHAIRMAN. That being true, the chair holds the letter admissible.

Mr. RANNEY. Then the letter that he sent with it should be admissible, too.

The CHAIRMAN. One thing at a time. Does the committee accept this letter?

Mr. OATES. I think so. I think that is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the letter can go in evidence.

Mr. RANNEY. I claim that the letter Mr. Von Briesen wrote to the chairman requesting it to be put in should also go in evidence. [To the stenographer.] When this letter is put in, let it be put in as addressed to the New York Times.

Mr. MILLARD. It was addressed to the Times, was it not?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. I cannot find Mr. Von Briesen's letter to the committee. I think it is at my room.

Mr. RANNEY. They should go in together.

Mr. MILLARD. It simply calls attention to this letter.

Mr. RANNEY. More than that; it explains his purpose in writing it—that it was to exculpate the Attorney-General.

Mr. HALE. Is that the purport of the letter, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. Shall we proceed with this without having the other letter before us?

Mr. RANNEY. His letter shows, too, that this letter is put in at his request, and shows the purpose he had in writing the letter. He declares it in his letter.

Mr. HALE. Have you that letter, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. It is at my room; I did not bring it with me this morning.

Mr. HALL. It seems to me that the purpose of the witness is to be ascertained from the communication itself. The fact that he may have had some silent purpose not connected with the public is immaterial.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it desired that we shall proceed without the letter of Mr. Von Briesen addressed to the committee?

Mr. RANNEY. I desire the ruling of the chair as to whether that letter is to go in.

The CHAIRMAN. The chair is ready to rule upon the letter. I do not think it is competent for the reason that it is a mere argument upon the part of Mr. Von Briesen, according to my recollection.

Mr. RANNEY. I want the letter to go into the record, and I ask for a yea and nay vote on it. I appeal from the decision of the chair.

Mr. HALE. As I understand, that is the letter from Mr. Von Briesen to the New York Times.

The CHAIRMAN. No, that is not the one.

Mr. OATES. This is a letter Mr. Von Briesen wrote the other day to the chairman about the points in controversy between him and Mr. Garland, in which he refers to this published one.

Mr. HALL. He writes a letter to the chairman in which he says that he had seen the Attorney-General's testimony, and that he is mistaken in one point in his testimony given before, and on that point he refers to this letter of October 19 written by him.

Mr. RANNEY. The fact is this: Mr. Von Briesen has been before the committee and given his version of the interview with the Attorney-General. The Attorney-General then testified in regard to the matter, and Mr. Von Briesen saw the Attorney-General's testimony, reported in the papers, I suppose, and writes a letter to the chairman calling his attention, and the attention of the committee, to his letter of October 19, and making a remark in it that affects Mr. Von Briesen as a witness. We have now put in the letter of October 19, to which he refers. Now, I say his letter, written to the committee, referring to the letter put in, and stating his purpose, the purpose for which he wrote the letter, is competent evidence here as a part of the letter which we have put in and to which he refers, as affecting his testimony.

Mr. HALL. To establish what fact is it competent?

Mr. RANNEY. As affecting the witness's conduct and purpose. It is a statement in his own handwriting relating to the matter. It is upon the same principle, precisely, that the committee acted in allowing the letter of Mr. Forbes to go into the record, together with a copy of the letter that he sent to the committee in connection with Mr. Jones's testimony. Why should not this letter go upon record in the same way?

Mr. OATES. There was no objection made to that at the time.

Mr. RANNEY. Why should not the same rule apply? Mr. Von Briesen has been a witness and has testified in the case, and this letter affects his testimony.

Mr. HALL. Affects it how?

Mr. RANNEY. It affects it very clearly. Supposing there is a conflict between the statement in the letter and his testimony?

Mr. HALL. Well, we have got the letter.

Mr. RANNEY. He writes here, in his own letter, and asks that this published letter be put in, and says that he wrote the letter for the purpose of exculpating the Attorney-General.

The CHAIRMAN. You would not allow him to state his purpose in writing the letter, would you? The statements speak for themselves.

Mr. RANNEY. Yes, I would. Suppose he comes on the stand and says I swear now that that interview was so and so. "But, Mr. Von Briesen, you wrote that letter stating that you said so and so, admitting the facts." "Well," he says, "when I wrote that I wrote it in the interest of the Attorney-General, to help him." Would that not be perfectly competent as an explanation?

Mr. HALL. Would that change the truth of his statement?

Mr. RANNEY. If the two conflict and the question is which is true, and he says "the reason I wrote that was that I wanted to help the Attorney-General, and therefore that is my explanation."

Mr. HALL. Therefore one is true and the other is not?

Mr. RANNEY. My sworn testimony is true, and that was written for a purpose.

Mr. HALL. Any man can always corroborate himself by telling what was inside his breast.

Mr. RANNEY. A man comes on to the stand and swears to certain facts. Another man comes on and says, "You told me so and so." He replies, "Yes, I did, but it is because you wanted it for a particular purpose, and I said it for a particular purpose." It is an explanation, and it goes to the credit of one or the other. It is a matter of common occurrence. A man says, "When I gave you that one I was drunk," and this is another explanation.

The CHAIRMAN. That is as to a statement of fact, but not a statement of a purpose or intention.

Mr. RANNEY. A man has a purpose in the shape of an argument and he makes it.

The CHAIRMAN. You will certainly agree, Mr. Ranney, that a witness cannot swear to what his purposes and intentions were. My view is that what a witness has said may be shown against him to affect his testimony, but he cannot corroborate himself except under peculiar circumstances. As an illustration of the rule of evidence by which a witness may corroborate himself, here is a witness who has testified to certain facts. He is contradicted—impeached. That witness is permitted to show that he had previously made a statement of those facts even not under oath. He is permitted to show that he had made a statement of the same facts long anterior to his testimony, before any question had arisen as to who was telling the truth, himself or the other witness. That comes strictly within the rules of evidence.

Mr. MILLARD. Is there any rule of law which will justify the admission of any such evidence?

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, yes; and I believe I gave the gentleman from Massachusetts the authorities on that subject.

Mr. RANNEY. You do not seem to understand my position. A man has sworn to a state of facts under oath, and it is shown that he wrote a letter at the time stating the facts differently. Now, suppose he was on the stand, and I say to him, "Mr. Witness, why did you swear that it was so and so? You have stated in your letter differently." And he says, "Oh, I stated that for a particular purpose," and he makes an explanation as to why he stated it. It is a familiar principle of law, as well known as any I ever practiced under.

Mr. HALL. But that is where the opposing party has introduced a contradictory statement.

Mr. RANNEY (to the chairman). Will you produce the letter, so that we can examine it?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, when I find it.

Mr. RANNEY. I shall insist on its going into the record.

Mr. OATES. It can be introduced for the purpose of contradicting or weakening the evidence, or by a third party for the purpose of corroborating it and strengthening it. But when the issue is made and the party has testified, then you cannot make an outside declaration, not a sworn one, to affect the issue at all.

Mr. RANNEY. You do not understand. It is for this purpose: A man makes a statement under oath before the committee—

Mr. OATES. But here is an antecedent fact.

Mr. RANNEY. He has written an article to a newspaper which preceded it, but was not under oath. He is asked, "Why did you make a statement in a letter which conflicts with this?" He is called upon to explain it, and he does explain it by stating that he was writing a newspaper article for the purpose of exculpating Mr. Garland.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not this case.

Mr. RANNEY. Yes, it is.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly not. The letter given in evidence this morning is not contradictory. It is given in evidence to corroborate the witness.

Mr. MILLARD. That is the reason I say it is not proper.

The CHAIRMAN. It can be sustained by authority. A witness is contradicted, and his evidence impeached. He calls attention to a letter written by him before he had testified, in which he had told the same story, subsequently sworn to. He had the right to do this to prove that he had not recently manufactured the story.

Mr. RANNEY. That is not the principle. If that letter is offered to us to corroborate the witness, no authority will show that it is competent. The only authority is where a man has to give such a statement under oath for the sake of corroboration of what he has stated to another person. That question arose in the Keifer committee, and it was ruled incompetent. I was under the impression that it was. I went home and had a case pending in court where the very question arose, and I argued it, and the supreme court held it was not competent and could not sustain the evidence. It has not been held competent except in a case where a man is charged with manufacturing a story since for a purpose. He says "I did not manufacture it since for a purpose, because on the next day after it occurred I told of it."

Mr. HALL. I would like to see the authority for that. I was under the impression that a witness's declaration could only be introduced where new testimony was put in.

Mr. RANNEY. I had not concluded my statement. Here there is no pretense that Mr. Von Briesen manufactured it since. It is not a case where he says "I manufactured it since," because here is a statement he put into the New York Times—not directly after this occurred, because that occurred the last part of July, and this publication was on the 19th of October following. It is not corroborating, and no man can corroborate himself under such circumstances. It is only where he is charged with making up a story since. I say it is competent as affecting his testimony, because he gives a version of that interview in his newspaper article.

The CHAIRMAN. My recollection of the rule is distinct—I may be wrong—but it is to this effect: That where the witness describes an occurrence, and afterwards upon the trial his reputation is attacked, or his version is contradicted, as to that he may then introduce declarations made by him or acts done by him.

Mr. MILLARD. Prior declarations?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; and it makes no difference how long before. It must of course be prior. He may introduce evidence to prove that after the occurrence and before the adverse testimony was given, he had related the story in the same way, to prove not the fact, but to prove that he did not make up the story when he testified.

Mr. OATES. Wherever a witness testifies, before there is any conflict, he cannot refer to former declarations for the purpose of corroborating or strengthening his evidence; but where there is a conflict and contradiction, then his conduct and declarations before, sustained or unsustained, may be shown to contradict or sustain him.

Mr. RANNEY. The law does not permit hearsay evidence, and it never permits it in a case like that.

Mr. OATES. It is not hearsay at all, but it is on that principle. It is acts.

Mr. MILLARD. Take the case where a man is on trial for arson or assault and battery. He gives a statement of the transaction. He says: "This statement is true, your honor and gentlemen of the jury, because I made the statement the next day, which was so and so, or I can produce a man to whom I stated it just as I do now." That is not proper.

Mr. OATES. Before he is contradicted he cannot corroborate it.

Mr. MILLARD. But the prosecution, to go further, can show that the very next day he made a statement which is inconsistent.

Mr. HALL. Here is a witness on the stand, and the question is to contradict him because he made a statement somewhere else. He can admit it or say that he does not remember it. If he admits it then he can be recalled and give an explanation of the circumstances under which it was made. But he cannot go behind that. He cannot say, "I am telling the truth to-day, notwithstanding what I said on Saturday because on Monday before that I did say so and so." But anything explanatory of the particular time and place he can explain.

Mr. RANNEY. No man can bolster up his testimony by coming in and saying that he told people something and put that in. It is only in a peculiar case where a man is charged with manufacturing a story afterwards and to meet that view. In this case I understand the chairman to rule that this is competent, because it is to sustain the witness. I say it is in conflict and that it is competent to put in his letter under his own hand just as if he was here now, and he should testify and explain why he wrote in a newspaper article a different statement from that which he has sworn to here.

Mr. HALL. I cannot admit it on that ground.

Mr. HALE. I think we had better exclude or admit both of them.

The CHAIRMAN. They are as unlike as different pieces of evidence can be. There is no reason for excluding both.

Mr. HALE. I do not think the other letter was admissible, except for the purpose of contradicting the witness. I think that is the only rule under which it could be admitted. Now it is claimed that this letter to the chairman explains that communication in some shape, or makes a reference to it, which is contradictory in its character.

Mr. HALL. One is a public letter published in the newspapers.

Mr. HALE. It makes no difference whether it is addressed to the public or to the chairman.

Mr. OATES. I think we had better postpone this whole matter until we get the letter.

Mr. MILLARD. We had better postpone the consideration of both letters.

Mr. HALE. I do not know what is in the letter; that is the trouble; I am in the dark. I say if there is anything in that communication contradicting or explaining it in any way it ought to be admitted.

Mr. HALL. I do not understand that it is anything of that kind at all.

Mr. RANNEY. It read something like this——

Mr. MILLARD. It referred to this letter, to certain passages in it.

Mr. HALE. I do not think it was admissible for the purpose of sustaining the testimony.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not hold that this letter is admissible to prove that the version of the interview as given by Mr. Von Briesen is true, and that the version given by the Attorney-General is not true. It is not competent for that purpose. But it is competent as showing that Mr. Von Briesen did not manufacture the story that he told here for the occasion. That is the view I take of it.

Mr. HALE. I differ with you in that view.

Mr. RANNEY. Nobody claims that he manufactured it.

Mr. MILLARD. In regard to this view of corroboration, I agree with Mr. Hale.

Mr. HALE. I am willing to vote to have them both put in or kept out. I have not seen the letter.

Mr. RANNEY. I move that they both be excluded or admitted, and I will put my motion in this form, that they both be admitted.

Mr. HALE. I move to admit this last letter in question. The other is already in. I do not know what is in it, but it is plain there is something in it contradictory.

Mr. MOFFATT. I second the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is overruled.

Mr. RANNEY. Then I appeal from the decision of the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. I will state the question.

Mr. HALL. I think Mr. Hale had better be informed of the contents of the letter first.

Mr. OATES. Perhaps it would be as well to postpone the matter, as he does not know what the letter contains.

Mr. HALE. I am very clear in the opinion that the other letter is not before the committee unless used for the purpose of contradicting the witness, but as it is already there I think the other should go in.

Mr. HALL. This letter is addressed to the committee.

Mr. HALE. It was addressed to the chairman, but I suppose properly belongs to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. As stating the rule, I have here a decision made by the supreme court of Pennsylvania in the case of Henderson against Jones, a civil case, which I will read from. The court say:

"There is only one point in this cause. Where a witness is contradicted and evidence is given to impeach his character, can evidence be given of what he swore on a former trial to show his consistency and to corroborate him? It consists with my own experience that such evidence has been constantly received, and it appears from the cases cited by the counsel for plaintiff in error that whenever the matter has come before our courts it has been conceded by counsel and allowed by the court that evidence may be given of declarations, without oath of the witness, to corroborate his evidence whenever its truth has been called in question. The recent dicta that for the purpose of impugning the testimony of a witness his declaration at another time may be inquired into, but not for the purpose of confirming his evidence, are in direct opposition to all adjudged cases, and, as it appears to me, the distinction is without any foundation in reason."

This is the rule I state, as near as can be.

Mr. RANNEY. In the case I referred to Mr. Keifer swore one way and General Boynton the other way. It was before a committee at the last session of Congress, and authorities were cited, and it was ruled it was not competent, and in that case the party went right out of the room and told the facts to another person.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman responsible for that seems to have been totally unaware of this rule of evidence.

Mr. OATES. I move that this whole matter go over until our next meeting.

Mr. HALE. On what theory do you claim that that letter to the Times was admissible?

Mr. HALL. On the ground that Mr. Von Briesen was here and took an active part in all these transactions, and his letter has been published, and in connection with all the other newspaper articles put in evidence.

Mr. HALE. You do not put it on the ground that it sustains his testimony?

Mr. HALL. No, I do not by any means.

Mr. RANNEY. Then it should not go in.

Mr. HALE. It is only permissible as contradictory.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not think you can find any authority in opposition to the one I have quoted.

Mr. MOFFATT. I do not believe that is the law in our State.

The CHAIRMAN. Do not forget the distinction; it ought not to be forgotten. The evidence is not admitted for the purpose of proving the fact, but for the purpose of showing that the witness did not make up this story when he swore to it before the committee.

Mr. RANNEY. I ask for a vote on the appeal from the decision of the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. There is another case, Hester v. The Commonwealth, decided in 1877 by the supreme court of Pennsylvania, and a half a dozen more to the same effect, that where an attempt is made to discredit the statement of a witness evidence is admissible to show that he had previously made the statement to other parties—not to show that the statement is true, but that it is not a fabrication of recent date.

Mr. MOFFATT. I am in favor of admitting it, whether it is strict law or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama to postpone the consideration of the matter until our next meeting.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to postponing it.

Mr. RANNEY. I couple with that the statement that we postpone the consideration of the other one also.

The CHAIRMAN. The newspaper article is already in.

Mr. RANNEY. I amend the motion so that the letter to the newspaper shall not be inserted in the record until the other one to the chairman is produced.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion to postpone is not amendable.

Mr. MILLARD. I think we should dispose of both letters at the same time. I move that the letter which has been received and put in evidence be stricken from the record unless the other letter goes in also.

Mr. RANNEY. The object is to get this letter into the record without the other.

Mr. OATES. There is no such object at all. I am ready to vote to admit or exclude them. My purpose is to get on and stop this wrangle.

Mr. HALL. If Mr. Oates will withdraw his motion, I will move to reconsider the action of the committee by which the letter was introduced.

The motion of Mr. Oates was withdrawn, and the motion of Mr. Hall was agreed to.

Mr. OATES. Now I move to postpone the further consideration of the question.

Mr. MILLARD. I move that both letters be admitted. I do not think either of them is proper, but one refers to the other.

Mr. HALE. I move to amend by excluding both letters. I do not think either one is proper in evidence.

Mr. MILLARD. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. HALE. I move that both be excluded unless somebody will offer them for the purpose of contradiction. I want that distinctly understood.

The CHAIRMAN. The Times letter has already been offered in evidence and admitted. The action of the committee by which it was admitted was rescinded. That leaves the Times article standing alone. The chair holds that article admissible.

Mr. RANNEY. I appeal from the decision of the chair.

Mr. OATES. Then the question is whether the chair shall be sustained in admitting that article.

Mr. HALE. If anybody offers that for the purpose of contradicting the witness I shall vote to admit it.

Mr. MOFFATT. I offer it on general principles, as everything else has been admitted.

Mr. RANNEY. Why do you want to go over the ground again if you do not want to offer them both?

Mr. MOFFATT. I move to admit them both.

The CHAIRMAN. The chair holds one admissible and the other not. I hold it is admissible, not as proving the fact, but to show that this witness did not manufacture the story when testifying before this committee.

Mr. MOFFATT. I make the offer as a whole.

The CHAIRMAN. If compelled to rule on them as a whole, I will have to hold they are not admissible if they both go together. I cannot conceive how a court would rule on a question of that kind where one was admissible and the other not.

Mr. MOFFATT. I supposed that the chair would rule that if one was considered not admissible and the other admissible, and the offer was made as a whole, he would refuse the application.

The CHAIRMAN. If it is understood that the two papers are offered together and cannot be separated, and that the chair must decide whether they are or are not admissible, I would hold that they were not admissible, for I am quite clear that the last letter of Mr. Von Briesen's is not admissible.

Mr. RANNEY. Then you hold that is not admissible?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, if offered together, if they are to be taken together. But I repeat what I have said before, that I never have known two papers to be offered in that way where you must exclude a competent one because it is offered with an incompetent one.

Mr. HALE. I think where one paper is connected with another in that way it is a common thing to offer them together.

Mr. RANNEY. That is a common practice.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not the rule at all. That would compel the passing upon a proposition like this as a whole.

Mr. RANNEY. This is a simple practical question for the committee to determine. Either both of these letters should go in or both go out.

The CHAIRMAN. The chair will take the responsibility of deciding that the New York Times letter is admissible and the other letter is not admissible.

Mr. MOFFATT. I appeal from the decision of the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, shall the ruling of the chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was put, and the ruling of the chair was not sustained, Messrs. Oates, Hall, and Moffatt voting in the affirmative, and Messrs. Hale, Ranney, and Millard in the negative.

Mr. RANNEY. I move that both letters be admitted.

Mr. HALL. I object on the ground that the proper way of introducing evidence is to introduce each particular piece by itself.

Mr. RANNEY. Let us dispose of the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on Mr. Ranney's motion that both letters be admitted.

The question was put, and it was decided in the affirmative.

Mr. RANNEY. Then they are both admitted?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; I will furnish the other letter to the reporter so that it can go into the record.

The letters in question are as follows:

[Briesen & Steele, counsellors at law, 229 Broadway.]

NEW YORK, May 21, 1886.

Chairman Telephone Investigating Committee:

DEAR SIR: I see that Attorney-General Garland doubts the correctness of my testimony, given before your hon. committee. In order to throw some light on this matter, I beg to call your attention to a letter written by me and published in the N. Y. Times on October 19, 1885. This was written, as you will see, with the object of showing that the Attorney-General's hands were clean, and yet in the said letter I said that during the July interview the Attorney-General stated that should any papers be laid before his Department in the telephone matter "he would refer them to the Solicitor-General."

I request you, Mr. Chairman, to hand this communication to the other members of your committee.

Very respectfully,

A. VON BRIESEN.

[From the New York Times of Monday, October 19, 1885.]

THE VALIDITY OF THE BELL PATENT.

To the Editor of the New York Times:

The unfortunate circumstance that the Attorney-General of the United States is interested in the welfare of a Southern telephone company has resulted in preventing an investigation of the validity of the Bell patents. Your valuable paper, and, in fact, nearly the entire press of the country, has contributed to this result. If the fact should be that the patents of Bell were fraudulently issued, and that, therefore, an opportunity to overthrow a monopoly based upon fraud has been lost, the result of the newspaper attacks upon the Attorney-General would be deplorable rather than gratifying. I write this communication with the object, first, of satisfying your readers that the Attorney-General's hands in the suit now discontinued were absolutely clean, and, secondly, to show that an investigation of the Bell patents in form of a suit brought by the United States appears necessary.

(1) As to Mr. Garland. On the 31st of July I called upon Mr. Garland in the presence of Messrs. Van Benthuyzen, Charles P. Huntington, Young, and Gantt, to consult him about the propriety of bringing a suit against the Bell patents in the name of the United States. I appeared before him as the attorney of Mr. Van Benthuyzen and Mr. Huntington, neither of whom had any connection whatever, so far as I believe, with the Pan-Electric Company of Tennessee, or with any of its branches. The conversation was opened by my stating to the Attorney-General that we appeared before him with the object of consulting him respecting a suit to be brought in the name of the United States against the Bell patents, and that we were anxious to lay before him such proofs and papers as in our estimation rendered a suit of this character necessary. I was immediately interrupted by the Attorney-General, who said that he did not wish to hear a word about any steps to be taken against the Bell patents, because, being himself connected with an opposition telephone company, he did not deem it proper, now that he was Attorney-General, to even listen to any matter involving these interests. He also stated that should any papers be laid before his Department officially he would not consider them but would refer them to the Solicitor-General. Before withdrawing I said that the proper papers would be laid before one of the district attorneys for investigation and for a report to the Department of Justice, the particular district in which proceedings were to be started not having at that time been determined upon.

You will thus find that the Attorney-General during the interview in question (and that is the only interview of which I have any knowledge) declined to listen to any matter concerning the telephone. The attack against him amounted practically to a fault-finding that, having telephone stock, he accepted the office of Attorney-General. Hereafter, perhaps, no one will be appointed Attorney-General unless he will first show that he is not concerned in any interest against the Bell telephone patents. At least it looks as though we are drifting in that direction.

(2) The Bell patents have frequently been before the courts of the United States for consideration, and were invariably sustained. It might be supposed that such careful consideration was given to the patents in these suits that no further investigation would be of advantage, and that even if the circuit courts, in which the matter thus far has been considered, were in fault the Supreme Court of the United States will soon have an opportunity of setting all the questions at rest, one or more of the old suits having been appealed to that court.

But unfortunately the facts do not bear out this supposition. Bell's patents are only valid if Bell was the first inventor of the art itself of transmitting speech by electricity. The records of the Patent Office, however, show that long before Bell Prof. Elisha Gray had recorded a declaration on his behalf that he could transmit messages by sound telegraphically. There is also proof that as early as 1864 one Reis, in Germany, invented what he called a "telephon," or talking machine, which he described as operating telegraphically. Hence, the question whether Bell invented the art should no longer be open, but only whether Mr. Bell himself really invented any, and if so, which method of transmitting speech telegraphically.

The first suit brought under the Bell patents was in the district of Massachusetts by the Bell Company against Spencer. The opinion in that case was written by Judge Lowell (8 Fed. Rep., 509), who said that in that suit it was admitted that Bell is the "original and first inventor of any mode of transmitting speech." Why Spencer made that admission we do not know, but making it he was, of course, guilty of infringement of Bell's rights if he had any telephone. In other words that admission bound Spencer. It resulted in a decision for Bell. Does it bind the public? Supposing Spencer had not admitted that Bell was the first inventor of any mode of transmitting speech; supposing he had proffered proof that Elisha Gray and Edison had covered that field before Bell? Why did Spencer make the admission, and why did he not prove Gray's and Edison's prior developments?

The next suit is that of the Bell Company against Dolbear. The opinions in that case were written by Justice Gray (15 Fed. Rep., 1, 448, and 17 Fed. Rep., 604) and contain the following: "It is not denied by the present defendant that Bell is the first inventor of a speaking telephone," and "it is admitted in the present case that the Reis instrument, if used as he intended to use it, can never serve as a speaking telephone." These admissions necessarily controlled the opinion in that case.

When, during the summer of 1885, counsel for the Western Pennsylvania Telephone Company sought to satisfy the United States court in Pittsburgh by actual demonstration that the Reis instruments, which were then in court ready to be tested, actually transmitted speech, and were ready to show that Gray and Edison anticipated the Bell invention, the court refused to listen to or examine into these proofs, and refused to examine the Reis instruments on the ground that the prior decisions fully established the validity of the Bell patents, and that no court of the United States would further question that validity on a motion for injunction. An injunction was granted in that suit as a matter of course without the counsel for defendant being heard upon the merits.

A third suit was brought, known as the Drawbaugh suit. This was decided by Judge Wallace in New York, and in the opinion (22 Fed. Rep., 309) we find it stated: "Concededly Bell was an original inventor of the telephone, the principle of which, with the essential means for its application, are described in his first patent."

We therefore have three "test" suits, in which the Bell patents were sustained, and in each of which admissions were made, which, it may be presumed, carried great weight, for the admissions which I have quoted went to the heart of the litigation in each of the suits. These admissions would not be so dangerous if the courts of the United States would be willing to disregard them in subsequent suits, and to hear any one defendant who presents facts tending to show that Bell was not the first inventor, and that Reis or Gray, Edison or Pickering, Cross or certain others, as to whose prior investigations proofs were taken, anteceded him, or that his patent was obtained by fraud, or that what Bell invented is not now, nor ever could be, used, because impracticable.

But, as we have already shown in the Pennsylvania case, the court refused to consider any of these defenses. Will the Supreme Court, to which the Dolbear case has been appealed, see that the rights of the public are preserved? The Supreme Court is to decide only whether the court below was right in its judgment under the facts and admissions before it. The same facts, therefore, which were before the circuit court and the same admissions will have to go before the Supreme Court. Therefore, as it was admitted in the Dolbear case that Bell is the first inventor of a speaking telephone, and that the Reis instrument could never serve as a speaking telephone, the like admission before the Supreme Court will likely induce it to hold that the court below was perfectly right in finding for the complainant.

You will see, therefore, that if the Bell patents are invalid, either because the invention was made by others before Mr. Bell or for other causes, the public at large that pays the telephone charges has no opportunity of testing its rights in the premises, unless the Government itself, upon proper showing, will undertake to begin a suit against these patents in order to have them set aside.

I will not take up your space in discussing the question of the power of the Government to begin such an action. That power seems to be conceded. My object is to satisfy you that the rights of the public appear to require this service of its Government. In such a suit the Bell Company will not be likely to secure admissions which will jeopardize the public interest. The representatives of the Bell patents need not fear an investigation of this kind if their claim rests upon a righteous foundation. If it does not, their claim ought to be set aside as promptly and unceremoniously as possible.

ARTHUR V. BRIESEN.

THURSDAY, October 15, 1885.

Mr. RANNEY. In regard to Mr. Wilbur's affidavit, I think as one is in the record, the other should go in. I think there should be put in the second affidavit of Mr. Wilbur given to the Globe Co. That was in the first volume.

Mr. OATES. I thought it was understood that all the evidence in this record of the Department of the Interior was put in?

Mr. MILLARD. Suppose we leave it to Judge Ranney and the chairman to determine what portion shall be put in our record?

Mr. OATES. It was decided the other day that we need not put in the whole of that record and have it printed in our record, but as it was already printed by itself, we could refer to it for the purpose of evidence.

Mr. HALE. That was decided the other day.

Mr. RANNEY. The House would not then have it before them.

Mr. OATES. Yes, the House would have it in the same way that we would have it.

Mr. RANNEY. There should be some specific affidavits put in. There is the affidavit, in the first volume, of Mr. Wilbur, and another in the second volume. The one given to Mr. Van Benthuyzen has been already introduced, but there is another one which has not yet been offered.

Mr. OATES. Had we not better consider the subject of the making up of our report?

Mr. RANNEY. Let us get all our evidence in before we go to work at that.

Mr. HALE. I thought all the evidence was in.

Mr. RANNEY. There are certain affidavits which I think ought to go in. I have already stated that there are three affidavits of Mr. Wilbur, the first one given to Mr. Van Benthuyzen, which is in already; the second one, given to the Globe Company; and the third one, which is in the second volume.

Mr. OATES. I move that the committee go into executive session to consider the subject of making up its report.

The motion was agreed to, and after an executive session the committee adjourned until Tuesday, May 25, 1886, at 12 m.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Tuesday, May 25, 1886.

The committee was called to order at 12.30 p. m.

The CHAIRMAN. What shall be the order of business?

Mr. RANNEY. I desire to put in evidence some other documents. The first affidavit of Mr. Wilbur is already in evidence. Then in the first volume of the Interior Department record is the second affidavit of Mr. Wilbur given to the Globe Telephone Company, which I want to go in. It is put into this record by the Globe Telephone Company.

Mr. OATES. In regard to the papers from the Department of Justice that we are to get, and which it is understood are to go in when obtained, I move that the chairman and Mr. Ranney look over and make selections from them as to what ought to go into this record, and that the committee now adjourn until Thursday week, to meet then for the purpose of considering its report.

Mr. RANNEY. The trouble would be, in that case, that we want these documents printed, for in making the report or statement we shall need to refer to the particular places in the record where these documents appear.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of Mr. Oates contemplates that.

Mr. RANNEY. These papers would not be printed in that case.

Mr. OATES. My motion was that Mr. Boyle and yourself select such as ought to be printed. The rest of the members of the committee have not those documents, and you are familiar with them. That is included in my motion. Then the committee can adjourn until Thursday week, and come together at that time for the purpose of making their report.

Mr. RANNEY. I can put these documents in at once.

Mr. OATES. The chairman has some he wants to put in also.

Mr. HALL. A question might possibly arise between Mr. Ranney and the chairman as to what should go in.

Mr. RANNEY. No; the whole of it is in here in this record before the Interior Department in the "proofs for complainants in reply." I desire to introduce, as printed on page 595, the affidavit of Zenas F. Wilber; also the second affidavit of Alexander Graham Bell, printed on page 579; the affidavit of Marcellus Bailey, on page 583; the affidavit of Anthony Pollok, on page 587; the affidavit of Alexander Graham Bell, including the correspondence, on page 591; the affidavit of William D. Baldwin, on page 823; and another affidavit of William D. Baldwin, on page 827.

Mr. HALL. Those are papers used by the Bell Telephone Company as printed in vol. 2 of the record before the Interior Department?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes. I also desire to introduce the affidavit of William C. Tompkins, on page 797; the affidavit of Watson—I have not got the page of that; also "Nelson's case"—February, 1885, as printed on page 853; the second affidavit of Edward C. Davidson, on page 621, and the affidavit of John F. Guy, printed on page 793.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, I call up my motion. I do not care to sit here unnecessarily.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman from Alabama is that the chairman and Judge Ranney select the papers to go into the record, and that the committee stand adjourned until Thursday week.

Mr. HALE. I would like to inquire the necessity of that. I prefer to proceed now with the question before us and get it off my hands.

The CHAIRMAN. The evidence Mr. Ranney has put in all goes to the question of fraud practiced in obtaining the Bell patent.

Mr. HALL. I agree to the suggestion made by Mr. Oates that the particular portions and parts of the record to be submitted as evidence should be left to the determination of the chairman and Mr. Ranney. That, I understand, was his motion. I have only to suggest that wherever a disagreement arises between them as to what should go in it should be referred to the committee. I think that is the proper course. I do not like to sit here and have a lot of documents I have not read go in. I do not know what is in them.

Mr. RANNEY. It has been settled by the committee that this record, which was before the Secretary of the Interior, should go in.

Mr. OATES. I never understood that the whole of that record was to be reprinted in our record. I understood that it was to be referred to, as indicating what the action of the Interior Department was based on. If it should all be reprinted it would make another volume.

Mr. HALE. I understood that the committee decided we might use such parts of that record as we chose to, without having it reprinted.

Mr. RANNEY. What I have put in occupies a very small space, compared with the whole volume. The papers I have put in relate to this question of irregularity or alleged irregularity, in the Patent Office, and the records are before the Interior Department.

Mr. OATES. My understanding was that nothing should be put in here and republished in this record of ours, but that the whole record of the Interior Department was to be considered a part of the case to be referred to, whether to justify or not justify the action there taken. The only question is whether you can select out parts of it and print it in this record we are printing or leave it in the form it is and refer to it there.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not see that that can be done.

Mr. HALL. I had a copy of that first volume of the record, but after a couple of days it disappeared. I agree with Judge Ranney in his suggestion not to put in all those letters. I think the proper plan is to have Judge Ranney and the chairman look over them and agree upon what shall and shall not go in.

The CHAIRMAN. If Mr. Ranney's view of the resolution adopted be correct, then he would have a right to put in anything in that record. If it is not correct, then nothing should go in our record, and the committee can then use these books as already printed.

Mr. OATES. At the time the matter was presented there was a good deal of discussion among us as to what should be done, and the chairman raised an objection. He said if we put all the evidence that was before the Secretary of the Interior in evidence formally here, and it is printed, it will be an immense job and make a great volume, and it was suggested, as now, that we might refer to it and treat it as the evidence upon which we will say what we have to say about the action of the Interior Department and the Department of Justice thereon. It passed off in that way. I offered the resolution and it went in. Some portions of the record have been selected and put into our record. The question now is whether we will select out of that particular parts of the evidence and have that reprinted, or let it stand and refer to it as it is printed now.

Mr. HALL. My judgment is that Mr. Boyle and Mr. Ranney can agree upon the portions that should go in, and that therefore that record should not all be printed. I do not see what special use it would be to the public to have these things referred to in that volume.

Mr. OATES. If it is to be printed in this record, then any member can offer any of the evidence in it, because it was understood that the case was to be made, so far as the ordering of this last suit is concerned, on what was before the Interior Department.

Mr. HALL. I do not think I make myself understood. The question is, whether we shall print portions of that record or all of it. I am not willing to allow Judge Ranney to go through these volumes and select what portions he wants to introduce unless some other member of the committee acts in conjunction with him in making the selection. I am willing that everything in that record should go in, but if it is not all to go in I want proper examination made of what is to go in.

The CHAIRMAN. I repeat, that if the resolution is as stated by Mr. Ranney, then he has the right to put anything in; if he omits anything that any other gentleman thinks ought to go in he can put it in.

Mr. RANNEY. It must be remembered that Casey Young selected certain portions of the record of the Interior Department, and they were allowed to go into our record.

The CHAIRMAN. To what do you refer; to the Walker paper?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes, to the Walker paper and to a letter from the Commissioner of Patents addressed to him, which has been printed in our record. He made his selection, and he is the first man who made a selection, and against my objection it was admitted.

The CHAIRMAN. You remember the remarks made on that occasion by the chair, that the Walker paper was not admitted because it was in the record, but because it related to a suit that had been ordered by the Interior Department, and it was accepted as proof of the circumstances under which that suit was ordered.

Mr. RANNEY. And because it was in the record.

The CHAIRMAN. No; I expressly stated to the contrary.

Mr. RANNEY. You ruled that way, but the committee finally voted you down; the committee voted the other way, that is my recollection, with all due respect, and it went in by a vote of the committee overruling the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. I held that it should go in if proof of the paper was waived.

Mr. RANNEY. I will proceed to indicate the other papers I desire to submit. Mr. Wilber's first affidavit that I spoke of is on page 342.

Mr. HALE. I thought it was the understanding the other day that the whole of that record should be considered as in evidence for the purpose of making our report.

Mr. MOFFATT. Of course the evidence accompanying our report would have a great deal more publicity than the Interior Department record has. Copies of that record were not given into the hands of people to any great extent, and they are very important matters, and, in justice to the Department, as well as to all the parties concerned, they should be spread over the United States, and the people given an opportunity to read them.

Mr. RANNEY. There are a few things more that I desire to introduce. On page 392 is an extract from A. G. Bell's testimony in the Dowd case, which I desire to have go in.

Mr. HALL. Is there a motion pending before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. There is not.

Mr. HALE. I move, then, that the whole of the record be considered in evidence, and be used in making up our report, but not printed.

Mr. OATES. That has already been adopted, and the question now is as to what parts of it shall be printed in this record.

Mr. HALE. I move that we do not print any part of it in our record which has not been heretofore put in.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you include in that what Mr. Ranney has put in to-day?

Mr. HALE. My idea is that that record can be used by either side, but that we should not reprint it. I should be opposed to putting selected portions of that record into our record.

Mr. OATES. If it all goes in or all stays out I do not think it will change the character of the report.

The CHAIRMAN. Do I understand that the motion of the gentleman from Missouri contemplated the printing in the record of the matter given in evidence by Judge Ranney to-day?

Mr. HALE. No, it does not include anything of the sort. The motion is simply that the whole of that record shall be regarded as in evidence for the purpose of making up our report.

Mr. HALL. That has already been passed on.

Mr. RANNEY. The difficulty with Mr. Hale's motion is that part of that record has already been put in. For instance, one affidavit of Mr. Wilbur has been published in our record. Then there is a letter from the Commissioner of Patents to Colonel Young about these patents, and then there is a record of the Walker case, which was put in by Colonel Young also. Now, it seems to me that inasmuch as we are called upon to determine the propriety of the order of the Secretary of the Interior in relation to the bringing of the suit, that that involves the evidence on which he acted, and that has been settled as a proper matter of consideration and as embraced in the resolution. Of course it would be unfair to have a part of that go in without the rest.

Mr. HALE. It would be just as fair as to pick out a part of that record and not put in the balance.

Mr. RANNEY. In view of the suggestion of the chairman, that I would designate those I deemed important, I have indicated those I think should go in, and if there are others which he deems important, they can also go in. You will find that those I have indicated do not amount to the tenth or twentieth part of the whole record.

Mr. HALE. If you put them in in that shape it would not fairly present the action of the Department or present the reasons why they acted as they have.

Mr. RANNEY. They will fully present it.

Mr. HALE. If that is so, they have made up a record a great deal of which is unnecessary.

Mr. OATES. There is always a great deal of useless material in such records.

Mr. RANNEY. I will tell you wherein I regard the selection as a fair one. The evidence that would bear on the suit, in that view of the law, would seem to me proper to be here, whereas all the evidence that related to the validity of patents, the origin of inventions and diagrams, and the Reis and other patents are here of no account.

Mr. HALE. There is no doubt a great deal of unnecessary and immaterial evidence there, but it will be a formidable task to take out what is immaterial.

Mr. RANNEY. If I make a report, unless you let it go into the record, I should copy every one of them that I deem material into my report, and I do not want to do that; I prefer it should be in the record.

The CHAIRMAN. Why should not the evidence as to priority of patents go in as well as the evidence about fraud and other matters introduced?

Mr. RANNEY. I shall not object to its going in.

Mr. HALL. I will make a motion. I move that, including the portions of the contents of these two volumes, which he has offered this morning, Judge Ranney furnish the chairman with a list of such portions as he desires to be introduced, and the chairman furnish Judge Ranney with a list of such portions as he wishes to be introduced, and that they be printed in this record. That is my proposition. I do not know whether there is any objection to it at all.

Mr. OATES. The motion I made soon after we met this morning was, that the chairman and Judge Ranney should select from that record the parts that were to be printed, and that this committee should stand adjourned until Thursday week.

Mr. HALL. I consent to that, but I understood it was not satisfactory to Judge Ranney.

Mr. RANNEY. And this is the reason: I have already designated everything that now occurs to me that I desire to introduce except three things. It is already done.

Mr. OATES. Then I suggest that Mr. Ranney designate the remaining articles, and subsequently, in connection with the chairman, he can look over the record, and they can state what ought to come in as additional.

Mr. RANNEY. Those I have already introduced were introduced under the suggestion of the chairman that I should indicate what I desired to have go in, and then he should put in what he desired.

Mr. HALL. I anticipate that after you know what the chairman puts in, you will want to introduce other things.

Mr. RANNEY. That is an offer in reply, is it not?

Mr. HALE. I have no objection if it is to go in, that the chairman and Mr. Ranney should make the selection, but it is in violation of the resolution we adopted the other day, and it will result in putting in all that record as our record.

Mr. HALL. I make the motion that Judge Ranney and the chairman of this committee determine what portions of that record they desire to have printed as a part of the record of this committee.

The CHAIRMAN. That reaches the same conclusion as Judge Ranney's suggestion. He says he has introduced all except three papers. In that case I shall feel at liberty to designate what I desire to go in, without submitting it to anybody.

Mr. RANNEY. You need not submit it to me; I will accept anything you say.

The CHAIRMAN. I think under the order made any member has a right to submit any portion he desires.

Mr. HALL. I move that Judge Ranney and Mr. Boyle be allowed to put in and print any portion of that record which they deem proper.

The CHAIRMAN. We will then go on in that way.

Mr. RANNEY. I desire then to put in from the proofs in reply a paper found on page 849 of that record, entitled "Railroading." Tompkins's long affidavit I have already submitted, and the Watson affidavit, showing the issues that are pending in the existing suit. Now I come to one more matter. There is what is called the Adams compilation, a book identified by the younger Rogers. It is a book of 388 pages. I only desire to put in evidence the fly-leaf or title page of the book, and then a short extract on page 252, a sentence which I have marked here and which reads as follows: "It is very important to bear this point also in mind, since the decision of the court was based solely upon this latter proposition; that is, that the Spencer instruments were not such as to infringe the Bell patent." Then it says: "It is quite different with us, since we admit that, if the Bell patents are held valid, we most certainly do infringe."

The CHAIRMAN. That is on the question of infringement, and not on the question of fraud. We certainly do not want to go into the question of infringement.

Mr. RANNEY. Then there is a review in this same book—a statement of the cases, the alleged adjudications in regard to the Bell patents, and a history of them, particularly describing the Dowd case, the Spencer case, the Ghegan case, the Dolbear case, the People's Telephone case, and the Overland case.

Mr. OATES. You do not want to put them in, do you?

Mr. RANNEY. No; but I want that fact to appear that this information was presented to Mr. Goode.

The CHAIRMAN. What was decided in the several cases?

Mr. RANNEY. It is also a part of the record in the case before the Secretary of the Interior, but the bearing of it, in my mind, is in relation to Mr. Goode's testimony; that he had before him when the case was submitted a book, and this book discloses this issue in behalf of the Pan-Electric Company. It discloses the fact that if the Bell patents are held valid that they certainly do infringe. It discloses the further fact that the Bell patents have been the subject of litigation in various suits which are detailed in this book, and this has a bearing upon his conduct and his testimony. It likewise is a competent book, because it was before the Secretary of the Interior when the argument was heard there.

Mr. HALE. What is the use of discussing that, if you have a right to put in any paper you choose?

The CHAIRMAN. He does not have the right to put in any paper he chooses.

Mr. RANNEY. I want it because it was before the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HALL. Wouldn't it be just as proper to put in the law books in the library there? They were before the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HALE. I do not object to its going in at all, but if the chairman and Mr. Boyle have a right to say what shall go in, what is the use of discussing the question?

Mr. RANNEY. It was at the request of the chairman that I would state what part was material, that I made my statement.

Mr. HALE. Do you propose to select portions out of one document and put a part in without putting in the balance?

Mr. RANNEY. If it is deemed necessary to save printing. I leave that to the chairman.

Mr. HALE. It is a very unusual practice to select a portion and print that only.

Mr. RANNEY. I am willing to have the whole printed if the chairman wants it.

Mr. HALE. What book is it you have there?

Mr. RANNEY. It is Dr. Wellington Adams's book. I have tried to get it from various sources, but could not. I tried to get it from Colonel Young, but did not succeed, and it was not in the library, as it ought to be, and never was there. It is a part of the record before the Interior Department, and is one of the books that Mr. Goode had to act on, and therefore has a bearing on his testimony, and as being a book before the Secretary of the Interior on which his action was based. Therefore I said to Mr. Boyle that there were three things in it alone that seemed to me to be necessary to introduce, and that it was unnecessary to print the whole book, but that if he, on looking at it, thought any more should go in, I was satisfied to have it done. If anything fairer than that could be done, I should like to know it. Under the direction of the committee I was doing what had been agreed upon. It is a book I had to send to Boston myself to get, because nobody else would produce it.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not see why any matter should be put in on the question of infringement.

Mr. HALE. I understood Mr. Hall's motion to be acquiesced in, to select out the portions that were desired by the chairman and yourself together.

Mr. HALL. That does not relate to this book at all. I do not see why it is not sufficient to refer to it.

Mr. RANNEY. Mr. Goode, I think, testified that he had that book before him, and of course the question as to whether he examined it as carefully as he should is the reason for putting the book in evidence.

The CHAIRMAN. Was this book submitted to Mr. Goode in connection with the application from Tennessee?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes, as appears from the record, the Adams compilation was submitted to him, and in the record of the Interior Department is an affidavit of Wellington Adams saying that that is his book.

Mr. HALL. I am willing to submit that matter to the chairman and Judge Ranney.

The CHAIRMAN. That has been done.

Mr. RANNEY. The only other thing I think of now which I desire to submit is the affidavit of Professor Nipher, as printed on page 31 of the Interior Department record, the first volume.

The papers referred to by Mr. Ranney were then submitted in evidence, and are as follows:

Second affidavit of Alexander Graham Bell.

I, Alexander Graham Bell, being duly sworn, on oath depose and say:

My name is Alexander Graham Bell; I am thirty-eight years old; I reside in Washington, District of Columbia, and have for several years past. I am the inventor named in United States patent No. 174,465, issued to me, and dated March 7, 1876. I have already made one affidavit in this case.

Before March, 1876, I had made several applications for patents relating to electricity, and was in conflict with Mr. Elisha Gray respecting some of them.

The specification forming my application for said patent of March 7, 1876, including all the claims, was originally written by myself alone, and was afterwards exhibited to Messrs. Pollok & Bailey, my solicitors. They made no alterations in it except a few formal changes in the language; they then sent a fair copy to me at Boston. I there signed and swore to it on Jan. 20, 1876.

I was not in Washington during the month of February, 1876, until I reached there on the morning of Saturday, Feb. 26, 1876. The files of the office show that on Saturday, Feb. 19, a notice had been sent to my solicitors, Messrs. Pollok & Bailey, suspending my application, and on Feb. 25 that notice had been withdrawn by order of the Commissioner. That matter was therefore terminated before I had any personal knowledge of it, and while I was in Massachusetts, where I then resided.

I remained in Washington until March 5, 1876. While there I had occasion to see my solicitors and to see the examiner about some of my pending applications, and did see him. The examiner (Mr. Wilbur) did not show me Mr. Gray's caveat, nor any portion of it. He took up my application, pointed out a paragraph in my application and said that the caveat had interfered with that. The passage which he so pointed out was the following:

"Electrical undulations may also be caused by alternately increasing and diminishing the resistance of the circuit or by alternately increasing and diminishing the power of the battery. The internal resistance of a battery is diminished by bringing the voltaic elements nearer together, and increased by placing them further apart. The reciprocal vibration of the elements of a battery occasions an undulatory action in the voltaic current. The external resistance may also be varied; for instance, let mercury or some other liquid form part of a voltaic circuit; then the more deeply the conducting wire is immersed in the mercury or other liquid, the less resistance does the liquid offer to the passage of the current; hence, the vibration of a conducting wire in mercury or other liquid included in the circuit, occasions undulations in the current. The vertical vibration of the elements of a battery in the liquid in which they are immersed produces an undulatory action in the current by alternately increasing and diminishing the power of the battery."

The examiner indicated the clause just quoted as the passage where the interference lay. I do not remember whether he pointed to any particular sentence in this clause or not. My impression is that I asked the examiner whether the point was the "vibration of the conducting wire in mercury or other liquid." At all events, I carried away the impression that this had been the point at issue.

All of my specification which describes or claims the speaking telephone stands in my patent as it stood in my original application.

All these facts have been fully inquired into and laid before the court in nearly every case which has arisen under my patent. I testified to them, and was cross-examined about them in the Dowd suit in the summer of 1879.

The specification of the patent, as issued, is identical with the specification as originally filed, with the exception of the few changes made by the amendment, dated Feb. 29, 1876, as follows:

In response to an objection made by the examiner orally, I called his attention to the precise nature of the current shown by my application of a year previously (Feb. 25, 1875), and that shown by my application of Feb. 14, 1876, and explained to him the difference between them. This explanation of what I had already described in my application I wrote out, and my solicitors put it in the form of an amendment. It was done with my knowledge and approval, and, I think, in the language written by me. It did not add anything to the application, and I think it unnecessary. Three words used in this explanation were also inserted in two other parts of the specification.

When I filed my application I knew of the Reis apparatus. I believed then, and believe now, that my specification taught how to obtain a result Reis had not obtained, by a method he did not know of; that I had made (more especially) the invention referred to in my fifth claim; that it was new, was useful, and was well supported by the body of the specification. I then believed, and now believe, that I was the first inventor of the electric speaking telephone, and that I described it and the principles upon which it operated, and duly claimed that invention in my said specification.

I had described a liquid transmitter in my said original application, but had not constructed it before filing the application. I did construct one, and transmitted speech with it on March 10, 1876. I afterwards constructed and exhibited it at the Centennial, but did not use it there. The one I and the judges used was a magneto transmitter. I did not, from Mr. Gray's caveat, derive any information, directly or indirectly, with regard to or aiding me in the construction of any liquid transmitter. On the contrary, those I constructed were upon the plan described in my specification, and not upon the plan described in Mr. Gray's caveat, a copy of which I did not see until it was published in Mr. Prescott's book in 1878. In my liquid transmitters the result depends upon the greater or less depth to which the vibrating rod is immersed in the liquid without regard to the distance between that rod and any other solid electrode. The apparatus of Mr. Gray's caveat depends for its results upon variations in the distance apart of two solid electrodes, both immersed in a liquid of high resistance, without regard to the depth of immersion.

I assert that in obtaining said patent no fraud or overreaching was practised or attempted in any manner whatever. I make this assertion of my own knowledge, so far as my own acts or knowledge are concerned, and to the best of my knowledge and belief as to the acts of others.

ALEXANDER GRAHAM BELL.

Affidavit of Marcellus Bailey.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, ss:

MARCELLUS BAILEY, a resident of the District of Columbia, and of lawful age, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

I am an attorney at law, and my practice has brought me into daily contact with the United States Patent Office during the last twenty years. At the time of the filing of the application of Alexander Graham Bell, on which letters patent of the United States numbered 174,465, dated March 7, 1876, were subsequently issued, I was of the firm of Pollok & Bailey, who were solicitors and attorneys for Mr. Bell in the prosecution of said application, and I personally conducted the proceedings in the Patent Office which resulted in the grant of the patent. I recollect the circumstances connected with the filing and prosecution of the application. I filed the application in the Patent Office and had it transmitted to the then examiner of the class of electricity, Mr. Z. F. Wilbur; some days afterwards we received an official written communication, notifying us, as customary in such cases, that the application had been suspended on account of an interfering caveat. I went immediately to the Patent Office to ascertain from the examiner when the caveat was filed; that is to say, to ascertain whether it was filed before or after the date of filing of Mr. Bell's application. It has been my practice for many years to make this inquiry, and for this reason: On at least one occasion, some years prior to the filing of Mr. Bell's application, I received notice that another application of which I had charge of at that time had been suspended on account of an interfering caveat, and it turned out that this caveat had been filed long after the application had been filed; the suspension was therefore entirely improper and unwarranted and had been ordered either through the inadvertence or through the ignorance of the examiner.

After that time it was my practice, as it is now, to assure myself that the caveat was filed before the application; and such information never has been refused me in any case. It was in this way that I ascertained that Mr. Bell's application and the interfering caveat were filed on the same day. I knew that Mr. Bell's application had been filed early in the day, and this fact led me to cause the inquiry to be instituted, which resulted in establishing the fact that the caveat had been filed on the afternoon of that day. I had no knowledge of the contents of the caveat at any time during the pendency of Mr. Bell's application other than that afforded by the official letter of suspension. I did not see the caveat, and I have never seen it, and the only knowledge that I now have of its contents is through rumor. I do not remember to have heard Mr. Gray's name connected with the caveat until long after the issue of Mr. Bell's patent. After the order of suspension was vacated, the amendment which appears in the file of Mr. Bell's application was prepared, and was filed by me. That amendment is in my handwriting. Its object was to distinguish more clearly the invention from other inventions of his, and more particularly from one which was the subject of an application filed in the fore part of the year 1875; the amendment was for this purpose alone, and had no reference in any way, shape, or manner to the caveat. To my knowledge, throughout all the proceedings in the Patent Office, which resulted in the grant of Mr. Bell's patent, there was no fraud practised by the examiner, by Mr. Bell himself, or by any other person connected with the case. There was no breach of confidence by the examiner, and no violation of any rule or regulation of the Patent Office, to my knowledge and in my belief. I am not now and never have been connected in any way with the Bell Telephone Company, nor with the owners of the Bell patent, nor have I had any business relations with Mr. Bell since the dissolution of the firm of Pollok & Bailey, which took place, I think, not later than May, 1877.

Affidavit of Anthony Pollok.

COUNTY OF WASHINGTON,
District of Columbia, ss:

ANTHONY POLLOK, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

I am a counsellor at law, living at Washington, D. C., and have lived there more than thirty years, during all of which time I have practiced in the circuit courts of the United States, and have also been continuously engaged in the business of soliciting patents.

In the years 1875 and 1876 my business of soliciting patents was conducted under the firm name of Pollok and Bailey, my partner being Mr. Marcellus Bailey. Our firm of Pollok and Bailey took out patent No. 174,465, issued to Alexander Graham Bell, March 7, 1876.

The specification forming part of the application for this patent was drawn by Mr. Bell himself, and was brought to my office by Mr. Gardiner G. Hubbard in January, 1876, for examination. I found upon examination that the inventions contained therein, which I well understood embraced the speaking telephone, were very clearly and exactly described. I therefore saw no occasion for any alterations, and made none therein, except a few changes of a verbal or formal nature. The specification thus changed was copied at my office, ready for execution by Mr. Bell as a part of his application.

The application and specification were mailed from my office to Mr. Bell on the nineteenth of January, 1876. The papers were no doubt received by Mr. Bell in the usual course of mail, for the same, now on file in the Patent Office as his application, show that they were executed in Boston, Jan. 20, 1876. The files of the Patent Office also show when the application was filed, and the official actions upon it. In the course of the application the following official notice was received, the original whereof is now in my possession.

U. S. PATENT OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., Feb. 19, 1876.

A. G. BELL,
(Care Pollok & Bailey),
Washington, D. C.:

Please find below a communication from the examiner Telegraphy.
Filed Feb. 14, 1876.

Respectfully, etc.

R. H. DUELL,
Commissioner.

Room No. 118.

In this case it is found that the first, fourth, and fifth clauses of claim relates to matters described in a pending caveat.

The caveator has been notified to complete, and this app'n is suspended for 90 days, as required by law.

This notice was in perfect accordance with the law and the well-established practice of the Patent Office, as I know from thirty years' experience.

Subsequently I received the following official notice, of which the original is also in my possession.

U. S. PATENT OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., Feb. 25, 1876.

A. G. BELL,
(Care Pollok & Bailey),
Wash'n, D. C.:

Please find below a communication from the examiner Telegraphy.
Feb. 14, 1876.

Respectfully, etc.,

R. H. DUELL,
Commissioner.

Room 118.

The suspension of this app'n having been declared under a misapprehension of appt's rights is withdrawn.

Personally I never saw the caveat mentioned in the above notices, or anything purporting to be a copy of it, until it was printed and published by Mr. Gray himself.

I never personally received any information as to the contents of the caveat, and to the best of my knowledge and belief no one concerned with Mr. Bell and his application received such information, except by the examiner's indicating passages in Mr. Bell's specification, copied at my office in January, 1876, and filed Feb 14, 1876, as the matter with which, in his opinion, the alleged caveat interfered.

The amendment to the specification made Feb. 29, 1876, was filed to meet an objection of the examiner based, not on the supposed interfering caveat, but on a pending application. I remember that it was drafted by Mr. Bell himself, after consultation with me, and copied and filed by Mr. Bailey. It was not intended to, and does not, enlarge the scope of the patent or add anything to what was already there.

It is charged in the bill filed at Memphis by the United States against Mr. Bell that this amendment, not being signed and sworn to by Mr. Bell, was improper. During the whole of my experience it has been the practice of the Patent Office for attorneys on behalf of the inventors, to make, sign, and file amendments of such character. No new oath was necessary as no substantive new matter was introduced thereby. Moreover, the form of power of attorney to solicitors prescribed by the office contains an express authority to amend, and my firm had such a power from Mr. Bell.

The proceedings in the application were conducted exclusively by Mr. Bell's attorneys until after the withdrawal, on Feb. 25, of the order of suspension.

Mr. Bell was not in Washington during the pendency of the application until the morning of Saturday, Feb. 26, 1876. Mr. Bell remained in Washington until, including, Sunday, March 5, 1876. I take these dates from entries made in my diary at the time.

In the prosecution of the application for that patent no fraud or overreaching of any kind was practiced or attempted by any one connected therewith; nor do I believe the examiner was in any way derelict in his duty or departed from the strictest course of official propriety.

Mr. Z. F. Wilber, the examiner in charge, was for many years in the Patent Office, and I knew him during all that time. For several years, part of the time as assistant examiner and part as principal examiner, he was in the room to which electrical inventions were assigned for examination. He always evinced an intelligent appreciation of the inventions submitted to him, and showed himself to be well informed in regard to the state of the art to which they related, and was so considered by the authorities in the Patent Office.

Affidavit of Alexander Graham Bell.

I, Alexander Graham Bell, being duly sworn, on oath depose and say: I am the Alexander Graham Bell referred to in the bill in this cause. I know Z. F. Wilbur, the examiner of the United States Patent Office, who examined the application for my patent 174465, of March 7, 1876. On Oct. 8, 1885, I received the following letter, which I believe to be in his handwriting:

HARRIS HOUSE, 1327 PENNA. AVENUE,
Washington, D. C., Oct. 7, 1885.

Prof. ALEX. GRAHAM BELL,
Washington, D. C.:

DEAR SIR: There has lately been a great deal of wild, idle, and lying talk going around, floating through the papers, in relation to my grant of the '76 Bell patent. None of it is legitimately based on an affidavit which I have made, the which only recited harmless facts.

I have about come to the conclusion to publish a letter in some good paper, exhaustively treating of and refuting these publications. Before doing so I would like to have a few minutes' interview with you, if you see fit, in order to learn if my recollection of all the circumstances agrees with yours.

If you think it proper (I see no impropriety, but rather propriety) would you be kind enough to advise me when I can see you?

My address is "Harris House," Washington, D. C.

Very truly yours, etc.,

Z. F. WILBUR.

I made the following reply in writing:

SCOTT CIRCLE,
Washington, October, 1885.

Mr. Z. F. WILBUR:

DEAR SIR: I am much obliged for your note of the 7th Oct. inst., but deem it best, under the circumstances, that we should hold no communication upon the subject of your letter.

I am, sir, yours, truly,

ALEXANDER GRAHAM BELL.

I have not spoken to Mr. Wilbur nor had any communication with him for several years, except these letters. To the best of my knowledge and belief, no one connected with me or with the American Bell Telephone Co. had communicated with him on the subject referred to in this correspondence. I have marked his original letter with my initials, and it will be produced when required.

Affidavit of Zenas F. Wilber.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, ss:

Z. F. Wilber, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

I am of lawful age, and by profession a solicitor of patents, and expert in patent matters and causes; that I am the Z. F. Wilber formerly an examiner in the Patent Office; that I was engaged in said office from 1870 to 1880, originally as a clerk, and then as an assistant examiner, until my promotion to principal examiner, about the early fall of 1872. All my promotions, from clerk on the temporary roll, through each grade to the grade of principal examiner, were on competitive examination.

A very short time after my entry into the Patent Office I was assigned to Prof. Hedrick, principal examiner, for duty, and immediately commenced assisting in the examination of electrical cases, all of such cases being given me for examination within a few months thereafter. Upon my promotion to be first assistant examiner, I was transferred to the division of Prof. William B. Taylor (philosophical), the class of electricity being transferred with me, and I continued in the work of examining such applications.

After my promotion to principal examiner, I was put in charge of a division embracing "clay, glass, mills, and threshing," but speedily thereafter, several subdivisions of the electrical class were again sent to me. About the fall of 1873, I was transferred to the philosophical division, vice Prof. Taylor, and again had charge of all applications relating to electricity, and so continued until my promotion to examiner of interferences in 1877, this being also the result of a competitive examination.

I was in charge of electrical applications when an application was filed by Professor Alexander Graham Bell on Feb. 14, 1876, which application became letters patent No. 174,465, dated March 7, 1876, and I made personal examination of said application, and personally made all the office actions made in said case, and personally "passed to issue" or granted said application, that is, certified that a patent should issue thereon, which patent was issued as noted above.

In the conduct of such application there was no fraud of any kind whatever, nor anything, any transaction, any communication, oral or written, which would support any such allegation in the least manner whatsoever, either on the part of Prof. Bell, his attorney, myself, or any other person whatsoever.

As elsewhere testified by me, I reached the said application for examination on the 19th of February, 1876, and found on that day that a caveat had been filed by one Elisha Gray on the 14th of February, 1876, for a new art of transmitting sounds telegraphically, which caveat, in my opinion, interfered with the first, fourth, and fifth claims of Bell's said application.

On said 19th of February, 1876, I notified Messrs. Pollok & Bailey, Bell's attorneys, that the first, fourth, and fifth clauses of claim in said application related to matters described in a pending caveat. This notification was an official communication in writing, and, as prepared by me for the official record, was as follows:

U. S. PATENT OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., Feb'y 19, 1876.

A. G. BELL,
(Care Pollok & Bailey, present):

Telegraphy.

FEB'Y 14, 1876.

In this case it is found that the 1st, 4th, and 5th clauses of claim relate to matters described in a pending caveat.

The caveator has been notified to complete, and this application is suspended as required by law.

Z. F. WILBER, Ex'r.

This was copied on the proper official blank and transmitted to the attorneys for Prof. Bell. It contained all and every bit of information that I at any time gave to Prof. Bell or his attorneys. I never exhibited the said caveat of Gray's to Mr. Bell, his attorneys, or any person whatever, nor gave any information of its nature and contents, except as disclosed in the said letter, as herein above copied.

As elsewhere testified to by me, it was customary in the Patent Office to give such information to applicants. Even the date of filing the caveat was sometimes given to applicants in such official notifications concerning suspension of an application to permit the interfering caveator to complete his invention. This may be ascertained by an examination of the files of the Patent Office. I have before me what purport to be the official notifications which were sent from my room in the Patent Office, Feb. 5, 1876, to the same Elisha Gray, who was the caveator in the Bell matter, but the applicant in the matters to which the said letters of Feb. 5, 1876, referred.

One of these official notifications reads as follows:

"This app'n will have to be suspended for three months in order to allow an interfering caveator to complete his app'n for a patent, if he elects to do so.

"Such interfering caveat was filed Dec. 2, 1875, and interferes in the claim therein with app't's 1st and 2d claims."

Another of these notices is as follows:

"On account of a caveat filed Jan. 6, 1876, a portion of which interferes with this app'n, action upon this app'n is suspended for three months, in order to give caveator time to complete."

As I have elsewhere testified, I afterward, on the twenty-fifth day of February, 1876, withdrew the suspension of Bell's application, in accordance with the instructions of the Commissioner of Patents. In the course of the proceedings leading to this action, I made the following indorsement in the case, as appears from a photographic copy of the indorsement in my handwriting, which I have before me.

EXR'S ROOM 118,
Feb. 25th, 1876.

The cash blotter in the chief clerk's room shows conclusively that the application was filed some time earlier on the 14th than the caveat.

The app'n was received also in 118 by noon of the 14th, the caveat not until the 15th.

Z. F. WILBER,
Ex'r.

I have elsewhere testified in substance that the knowledge noted in this indorsement was all the proof I had upon which to base my conclusion that the application was filed prior to the caveat on the day of February 14th, 1876.

For many years, between seven and eight certainly, I have not seen the caveat of Gray's referred to, nor anything that purported to be a copy thereof. Yesterday, Oct. 20, 1885, and to-day for the first time, for the period mentioned, I have seen what purports to be a printed copy of a certified copy of such caveat, its file wrapper and contents, from the records of the Patent Office. I refer to "Defendant's Exhibit, Gray's Caveat 2," as printed in the second volume of the record of a suit entitled "Bell Telephone Co. et al. v. Peter A. Dowd," beginning at page 682. At page 687 of that volume is given what purports to be a copy of what I would recognize as a blank form used in the Patent Office and called there a "fee slip." If I saw that fee slip at the time of my actions in the matter, as I probably did, it would have given me further information. I quote the first part of said fee slip as it appears in said fee slip.

As I have elsewhere testified, and as appears by the record in the case, on the 29th of February, 1876, an amendment was filed by the attorneys for Mr. Bell, which amendment was incorporated into the case. Such amendment was made to more clearly set out the difference existing between the invention in this case and an invention of Mr. Bell's set out in a prior pending application filed by [him] early in 1875. The amendment did this; it was made for such purpose and extended to such object only. It was not based upon the Gray caveat, had no relation thereto, and in no way interfered with or limited any rights of the caveator over and above the application as originally filed.

As I have elsewhere testified, this amendment was not sworn to. It was admitted thus unsworn to because, in my opinion, it contained no new matter.

I have elsewhere testified in substance that at the time of the prosecution of the Bell application I did not know it was for a speaking telephone for the transmission of speech electrically. As I have hereinbefore stated, I had not seen the Gray caveat, nor a copy thereof, for many years, and in giving such testimony, I had refreshed my recollection solely by an inspection of the file of the Bell application, now patent 174,465.

Yesterday and to-day, as I have hereinbefore stated, I have carefully examined the before-mentioned copy of the Gray caveat, and I find that in so testifying I have made too strong a statement, inasmuch as the caveat itself states:

"It is the object of my invention to transmit the tones of the human voice through a telegraphic circuit, and reproduce them at the receiving end of the line, so that actual conversation can be carried on by persons at long distances apart;" and describes means and method for doing this, and, further, inasmuch as the third point of interference noted in my notice to the caveator Gray, concerning an interfering application, states.

"3d. The method of transmitting vocal sounds telegraphically, by causing these undulatory currents, etc."

These things indicate to me that I did know that the Bell application was for a speaking telephone, for otherwise I could not have used the terms I did in notifying the caveator, and in fact could not have determined that the application and caveat interfered, or were in conflict.

In this affidavit I have several times alluded to testimony given elsewhere in regard to the same subject-matter as this affidavit relates to. I have given two affidavits upon this subject-matter; one was several months ago at the Ebbitt House (that is late in July or early in August). I did not keep a copy of such affidavit, but

I find in a copy of a newspaper, the Daily Inter-Ocean, of Chicago, the issue of Thursday morning, Sept. 10, 1885, an affidavit there printed, which I believe to be a copy of the one given at the Ebbitt House in this city as aforesaid. I cut the said copy from said paper and annex it hereto. I think the affidavit was not entitled for any particular case. It was in the handwriting of Mr. Von Briesen, and I read it over carefully before executing it. There were present in addition to Mr. Von Briesen, while the affidavit was being drawn up, Mr. Huntington and Mr. Van Benthuyssen. Mr. Casey Young was there after the affidavit had been drawn up. The affidavit was drawn up at the Ebbitt House, and I took it out of the hotel for the purpose of executing it before a notary.

A day or two afterwards I was asked to swear to three type-written copies of such affidavit. This I did after making a cursory examination only; I cannot say that they were exact copies.

The other affidavit I gave in New York City a few days since, but I have no copy thereof. I do not remember that it was entitled for any particular case, but believe it was for the benefit of the Globe Telephone Company.

In connection with the copy of the affidavit hereto annexed, and cut from the Daily Inter-Ocean, I notice the following statement:

"In an affidavit by the parties named below it is affirmed that Mr. Wilber also stated in the presence of Watson Van Benthuyssen, of New Orleans, Charles P. Huntington, of Mississippi, and the Hon. Casey Young, of Memphis, that he (Wilber) had given the contents or nature of the 'Gray caveat' to Bell or his attorneys, shortly after said caveat was filed, which was contrary to law."

Any averment that I made any such statement is absolutely and unqualifiedly false. I never made any such statement. In fact, at the time and before the giving of the affidavit at the Ebbitt House, at the meeting detailed hereinbefore, I told Mr. Von Briesen, Mr. Van Benthuyssen, and Mr. Huntington that I never gave Mr. Bell or his attorneys any information whatever other than that contained in the official letter announcing the suspension of the application.

I have never had any conversation with any one representing the Bell side of this controversy prior to yesterday, Oct. 20, 1885.

"In the year 1876 I was employed by the Government of the United States as principal examiner of the Patent Office, in charge of the class of electricity. The application of Alexander Graham Bell for a patent for improvements in telegraphy, which was filed Feb. 14, 1876, which patent was issued on the 7th day of March, 1876, and numbered 174,465, was put in my charge as examiner, and was passed to issue by me.

"I reached the said application for examination on the 19th of February, 1876, and found on that day a caveat had been filed by one Elisha Gray on the 14th of February, 1876, for a new art of transmitting vocal sounds telegraphically, which caveat in my opinion interfered with the first, fourth, and fifth claims of Bell's said application.

"On said 19th of February, 1876, I notified Messrs. Pollok & Bailey, Bell's attorneys, that the first, fourth, and fifth clauses of claims in said application related to matters described in a pending caveat. Afterward, to wit, on or about the twenty-fourth day of February, 1876, the said attorneys, Pollok & Bailey, addressed a letter to the Commissioner of Patents, wherein they stated that they had inquired the date of filing the caveat, 'inasmuch as we are entitled to the knowledge,' and protested against the delay which the notice to the caveator would subject them to. They thereupon made a special application to the Commissioner of Patents, under whose instructions I afterward, to wit, on the twenty-fifth day of February, 1876, withdrew the suspension of the application.

"I have since carefully examined the law of patents, and am satisfied that the notice to the attorneys of Bell of Feb. 19, 1876, is not warranted by law, and that their ascertainment of the date of filing Gray's caveat is also contrary to the letter and spirit of section 4902 of the Revised Statutes.

"To give such information to applicants for patents had to an extent become a custom in the Patent Office, but I now clearly perceive that the law did not contemplate the giving of such information to an applicant for a patent, as it distinctly requires the caveat to be kept secret and the caveator alone to be notified.

"On the 29th of February, 1876, an amendment was filed by said attorneys for Bell and incorporated in the application, but to said amendment Bell did not make oath, nor did he subscribe to the same as I verily believe."

The above is the newspaper cutting referred to in the foregoing affidavit, to which this is annexed.

Second affidavit of Edward C. Davidson.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, ss:

EDWARD C. DAVIDSON, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

I have already given an affidavit for this case. My attention is now called more especially to the form of notice issued by the office to the caveator, Gray, and the applicant Bell, in the matter of the caveat of Gray filed Feb. 14, 1876, and the application of Bell filed the same day.

I am familiar with the practice of the Patent Office in sending out notices to parties interested in cases of interference, both between applications and those between applications and patents, and have been for the last eleven years. In cases of interference between two applications or between an application and a patent it has until very recently been the custom to furnish to each applicant the date of filing of his adversary's application, and also to indicate the subject-matter involved in the interference.

In regard to interferences between applications and caveats I can only relate my own experiences. Such interferences are so rare that a single person's experience would not, in my opinion, be sufficient to establish a custom. It has not been unusual, and was not unusual in 1876 for the office to give to the applicant and caveator notices substantially the same as those which were given to the caveator and applicant in the matter of Gray's caveat of Feb. 14, 1876, and of Bell's application of the same date; nor was it unusual to give to an applicant the date of the interfering caveat.

I have before me a certified copy of the file wrapper, contents and drawing, in the matter of the letters patent granted Elisha Gray, assignor by mesne assignments to the Harmonic Telegraph Company, dated January 16, 1877, No. 186340, for improvement in electro-harmonic telegraphs. The application for that patent, as appears in this certified copy, was filed January 27, 1876. The application for this patent was found by the office to interfere with a caveat filed by Thos. A. Edison, December 2, 1875, and on the fifth day of February, 1876, the following notice was sent to Gray. I read from the said certified copy:

[Examiner's room 118.]

U. S. PATENT OFFICE,
Washington D. C., Feb'y 5, 1876.

E. GRAY,
Care Wm. D. Baldwin, present.

Electro Harmonic Telegraph, Jan'y 27, 1876.

(Office No. 152-71.)

This appn. will have to be suspended for three months in order to allow an interfering caveator to complete his appn. for a patent, if he elects so to do. Such interfering caveat was filed December 2, 1875, and interferes in the claim therein with app't's 1st and 2d claims.

Z. F. WILBER.

In the margin is written, "Copy sent February 5.

S. R. A."

A copy of this letter was received by Mr. Baldwin, Feb. 5, 1876, as appears by his stamp upon said copy, which I have in my hand.

I have also before me a certified copy of the file wrapper, contents and drawing, in the matter of the application of Elisha Gray, assignor by mesne assignments to the Harmonic Telegraph Company, also filed Jan. 27, 1876. No patent has ever issued upon this application, but the application was found to interfere with a pending caveat, and Mr. Baldwin received the following notice. I read from the certified copy:

[Examiner's room 118.]

U. S. PATENT OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., Feb. 5, 1876.

E. GRAY,
Care Wm. Baldwin, present.

Circuit Breakers for Eleco. Harmonic Telegraphs.

(Office No. 151-70, Jan. 27, 1876.)

On account of a caveat filed Jan. 14, 1876, a portion of which interfered with this application, action upon this application is suspended for three months in order to give caveator time to complete.

Z. F. WILBER, Ex.

In the margin is written, "Copy sent Feb. 5. J. R. A."

I have also the original letter received by Mr. Baldwin, Feb. 5, 1876, as appears by his stamp. There was only one claim in this last-named application.

I have before me Vol. II of the Speaking Telephone Interferences, in which Mr. Baldwin was counsel for Gray. In this volume are printed what purport to be certified copies of several caveats of Thomas A. Edison. These caveats were used in the speaking telephone interferences, with a view to prove facts relating to inventions involved in those interferences; but the files of two of the caveats show that the caveator in both cases received notice to complete his inventions in view of an application that had been filed in the Patent Office. I read from the printed copy of the file, in the matter of Edison's caveat No. 74, filed Jan. 14, 1876, page 565 of said Vol. II:

[NOTICE TO CAVEAT.]

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
U. S. PATENT OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 21, 1876.

SIR: You are hereby notified that application has been made to this office for letters patent for local circuit breakers for electro-harmonic telegraphs, with which the invention described in sixth and seventh probable claims of your caveat, filed on the fourteenth day of January, 1876, apparently interferes, and that said application has been deposited in the confidential archives of the office, under provisions of section 4902 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which section reads as follows:

"SEC. 4902. Any citizen of the United States who makes any new invention or discovery and desires further time to mature the same, may, on payment of the fees required by law, file in the Patent Office a caveat setting forth the design thereof, and of its distinguishing characteristic, and praying protection of his right until he shall have matured his invention. Such caveat shall be filed in the confidential archives of the office and preserved in secrecy, and shall be operative for the term of one year from the filing thereof; and if application is made within the year by any other person for a patent with which such caveat would in any manner interfere, the Commissioner shall deposit the description, specification, drawings, and model of such application in like manner in the confidential archives of the office, and give notice thereof by mail to the person by whom the caveat was filed. If such person desires to avail himself of his caveat, he shall file his description, specification, drawings, and model within three months from the time of placing the notice in the post-office in Washington, with the usual time required for transmitting it to the caveator added thereto, which time shall be endorsed on the notice. An alien shall have the privilege herein granted, if he has resided in the United States one year next preceding the filing of his caveat, and has made oath of his intention to become a citizen."

If you would avail yourself of your caveat, it will be necessary for you to file a complete application within three months from date, four days additional, however, being allowed for the transmission of this notice to your place of residence.

The especial caveat referred to is No. 74 of your series.

Very respectfully,

R. H. DUELL,
Commissioner.

T. A. EDISON,
(In care of Porter, Lowrey, Soren & Stone),
197 Broadway, New York City.

N. B. The especial matter referred to as expressed in the interfering case is the combination of an "electro-magnet, vibrating reed, sounding-box of corresponding pitch, and a local circuit-breaking apparatus, actuated by the vibrations of a column of air in said sounding-box."

I also read from the printed copy of the file in the matter of Edison's caveat No. 75, filed Jan. 14, 1876 (p. 574 of same volume):

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
U. S. PATENT OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., May 18, 1876.

SIR: You are hereby notified that application has been made to this office for letters patent for receivers for electro-harmonic telegraphs, with which the invention described in part of your caveat No. 75, filed on the fourteenth day of January, 1876, apparently interferes, and that said application has been deposited in the confidential archives of the office, under provisions of sect. 4902 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which section reads as follows:

[Here follows sect. 4902, quoted above.]

If you would avail yourself of your caveat, it will be necessary for you to file a complete application within three months from date, four days additional, however, being allowed for the transmission of this notice to your place of residence.

Very respectfully,

R. H. DUELL,
Commissioner of Patents.

THOMAS A. EDISON,
Newark, N. J.

Address notification to Thomas A. Edison, care Porter, Lowrey, Soren & Stone, 197 Broadway, New York.

"N. B.—The portion of the caveat interfering is that shown in Fig. 8, the drawings filed therewith, which arrangement of reeds and a single magnet is also used and shown in Fig. 9 of caveat No. 73.

"Expressed in the form of a claim, the interference would be upon 'the combination in an electric circuit of an electro-magnet, through which notes of a different pitch are transmitted, with two or more vibrating receiving springs, tuned correspondently with the notes transmitted, so that each analyzer or spring selects its own tone from the magnet without interfering with the other.'"

Affidavit of John F. Guy.

COUNTY OF WASHINGTON,
District of Columbia, ss :

JOHN F. GUY, being duly sworn, deposes and says: My name is John F. Guy; I am forty-one years of age; reside at Washington, and am lieutenant of the Metropolitan police force of the District of Columbia, and in charge of the fourth precinct. I know Z. F. Wilbur. On August 25, 1885, I arrested him at his house on Twenty-third street, between K and L streets, on complaint of Mrs. Owen Thomas, who charged him with threatening her life with a razor and pistol. The circumstances were as follows: A neighbor of hers came to the station-house and requested me to go to Wilbur's residence, stating that he had run the ladies out of the house. I immediately went to the house, in company with officer Kendall. When we arrived there I met two ladies, one of whom was Mrs. Thomas. They stated that Wilbur had run them out of the house with a pistol and locked all the doors, and wanted me to arrest him. My reply was that this sort of thing had been going on so long, that she had made so many complaints against Wilbur and then refused to appear, that I would not arrest him unless she would go to the station-house and make a formal complaint. This she agreed to do, and thereupon I entered the house, finding the basement door open. The inner door at the head of the basement stairs I found to be locked. I asked whose house it was. Mrs. Thomas replied that she rented it, and paid the rent. I told her I would have to kick the door open, which she told me to do; but on hearing this the door was opened by Wilbur. He walked back into his own room, on the same floor, and took a seat. He was drunk. I saw him lay a pistol on the bureau. I took it up and found there were no chambers in it. I then told him that Mrs. Thomas had made complaint, and was ready to go to the station-house and lodge a charge of threats of violence, and that I would place him under arrest and take him to the station. I told him to put on his shoes, but he made a long harangue, and refused to do so; whereupon I took him in his slippers to the station-house. Officer Kendall assisted me. Upon formal complaint being made, Wilbur was searched, and the chambers of the pistol found in his pocket. The chambers were loaded. I took him the next morning to the police court, where he pleaded guilty to the above charge, and was put under personal bonds to keep the peace.

The records of the fourth precinct station are in my charge, and from them I read the following entry, which was made at the time:

FOURTH PRECINCT, Tuesday, Aug. 25, 1885.

1.30 p. m. Z. F. Wilbur. 32. W. U. S. Clerk. Arrest. S. Yes. Threats.
Comp. Owen Thomas. Judge, MILLS. Officer, KENDALL.

The letter "W." in the entry means "white"; "U. S." means born in the United States; "S." means single; "Yes" means that he can read and write.

The records of the fourth precinct station show that the same Wilbur was locked up on two other occasions during the same month. An entry made Aug. 1, 1885, reads as follows:

9.20 a. m. Z. F. Wilbur. 32. W. U. S. Clerk. S. Arrest. Yes. Intox. and disorderly. D. F. Crump. Judge, SNELL. Officer, CRUMP.

I remember his being locked up on this occasion. He was fined $5, which was paid. I saw him a few days afterwards, early in the morning. He was drunk, and said he wanted to apologize to the officer who arrested him.

The records also show that he was brought in August 27, 1885. I did not see him when he was brought in, but he was locked up, and I saw him later in the evening. I ordered his discharge in the morning. The entry is as follows:

"8 p. m. Z. F. Wilbur. 32. W. U. S. Laborer. S. Yes. Arrest. Intoxication. Comp'l, H. P. Cattell. Dismissed. Officer, Cattell."

I have known Wilbur for about a year; have frequently seen him intoxicated on the street, and from frequent complaints from the people with whom he boards, and from my observation during that time, I believe him to be a man of dissolute habits. I don't think twenty times would cover the number of times we have been bothered with him.

Affidavit of William C. Tompkins.

I, William C. Tompkins, witness of lawful age, on oath depose and say :
 I have examined some of the Washington newspapers of August 26 and 27, 1885, and find in them the following paragraphs with regard to Z. F. Wilbur :
 The Washington Critic, Wednesday evening, August 26, 1885 :

“AN EXCITED ATTORNEY.

“Zenas F. Wilbur, a patent attorney, was in the dock at the police court to-day on a charge of threats to Mrs. Owen Thomas, a roomer in the house in which he boards. He was released on his personal bonds to keep the peace. Officer Kendall stated that a man rushed into the fourth precinct station-house yesterday about one o'clock, and stated that Wilbur was chasing people out of a house on Twenty-third street, above Pennsylvania avenue, with a pistol. When he was put under arrest the pistol was found on him and he was taken to the station without his hat or shoes. One of the ladies in the house stated that he broke into her room.”

The Washington Post, Thursday, August 27, 1885 :

“A PATENT ATTORNEY IN COURT.

“James F. Wilbur, a patent attorney, was in the police court yesterday for entering the house of Mrs. Owen Thomas while in an intoxicated condition, and chasing the lady out of her room with a razor. He pleaded guilty to the charge of making threats, and was released on his personal bonds.”

The National Republican, Thursday morning, August 27, 1885 :

“Zenas F. Wilbur, a patent attorney, was yesterday placed under bonds by Judge Mills for threatening the life of Mrs. Owen Thomas, at whose house Wilbur lives.”

The Evening Star, Wednesday, August 26, 1885 :

“CHARGED WITH THREATENING A WIDOW.

“Zenas F. Wilbur, a patent attorney, was in the police court this morning, charged with threatening Mrs. Owen Thomas, a widow, who resides on Twenty-third street, near Pennsylvania avenue, where Wilbur also resides. A plea of guilty was entered, and he was released on his personal recognizance. The policemen state that Wilbur went home yesterday afternoon, and a few minutes afterwards a gentleman went to the police station-house and complained that Wilbur, while intoxicated, had broken into a lady's room and chased her out with a razor and pistol. Lieutenant Guy and Officer Kendall went to the house and took Wilbur, bare-headed and bare-footed, to the station-house, and locked him up. A pistol was taken from him at the station-house, and a razor was found in his room.”

Affidavit of William D. Baldwin.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, ss:

WILLIAM D. BALDWIN, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

I have already, in an affidavit given September 26th, 1885, in a case pending in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Maryland, entitled The American Bell Telephone Company et al. v. The Pan-Electric Telephone Company et al., stated my relations to Mr. Elisha Gray. I became counsel for him and his partner, Dr. S. S. White, in 1875. I have never accepted any retainer or employment of any kind which could possibly be thought to conflict with Mr. Gray's interest; but in November, 1884, for the first time I took a retainer from the Bell Company under a belief that there was no longer any possible conflict between them and Mr. Gray in reality, and even then I excepted from the retainer any possible interest that Mr. Gray might have adverse to said company.

I always, to the best of my ability, whenever occasion offered, contended for all the rights which could grow out of Mr. Gray's inventions relating to the transmission of sound, including those relating to his caveat of February 14, 1876. Upon every occasion I have used my best ability to argue in support of everything that could be claimed with reference thereto, with strict regard to Gray's best interest, and without interference or instructions from any one to the contrary.

I had a large share in the preparation and taking of testimony in the Dowd case. So far as my knowledge extends the case was honestly and squarely fought to the best advantage that the facts admitted of. My labors and active association in the case ceased with the closing of the testimony. My belief is that the conclusion finally reached in the case upon the various matters there in controversy was based on the thorough conviction of the leading counsel, the late Mr. Gifford, as to what ought to be and what would be the decision of the court.

I was the sole counsel for Gray in the interferences, and always considered myself his personal counsel, and used every effort to gain his cause according to the best of my judgment. I always supposed up to the present time that Mr. Gray was fully satisfied with my work. I notified Mr. Gray of the time of the hearing, and suggested that he should attend, but he did not.

The evidence was as follows: That Mr. Bell had a patent, and that the instrument of his patent would talk; that his application was sworn to on the 20th January, 1876; that Mr. Gray's first communication to any one was his sketch made at my office February 11th, 1876, and that he never attempted to make an apparatus until after he had heard Mr. Bell's at the Centennial. I could not stand up and contend that, under these circumstances, he could prevail as the first inventor. I made the strongest argument I knew how to make in favor of everything which I thought could possibly be claimed for him on these facts. I devoted myself particularly to asserting his claim as the inventor of the receiver alone, based on an instrument which he had actually made before Mr. Bell had done anything; that was involved under issue G and some other issues. I was defeated on all the issues by the decision of the examiner of interferences. I appealed to the board on all those which related to the receiver alone, and reargued that part of the case there as well as I knew how. Defeated there, I again appealed to the Commissioner in person, and reargued before him all the questions which related to the receiver. I was defeated there also.

I have never received from Mr. Gray any intimation that he thought any rights which could have belonged to him as an inventor had not received full justice at my hands until I read his affidavit, filed with the Secretary of the Interior.

In working for Mr. Gray, I have not only been actuated by feelings of professional duty, but also by those of warm personal regard. During all these years I have worked for him as for a friend, in season and out of season, faithfully and conscientiously, and have spared no pains to bring to him every honor and recompense due to his invention.

I, William D. Mr. Gray has intimated by his affidavits that I did not urge his claims as an inventor as I should have done, and that he now for the first time has ascertained what was done in his behalf, and finds that he is not satisfied with it. The contrary fully appears from the following letters. I received from Mr. Gray a letter, the original of which I now have, dated November 1, 1876. After speaking of some matters relating to his harmonic telegraph, he refers to the speaking telephone, and the reference thereto in that letter is as follows:

Mr. Gray to Mr. Baldwin.

“NOVEMBER 1, 1876.

“As to Bell’s talking telegraph, it only creates interest in scientific circles, and, as a scientific toy, it is beautiful; but we can already do more with a wire in a given time than by talking, so that its commercial value will be limited so far at least as it relates to the telegraphic service.”

Another letter from Mr. Gray to Mr. Baldwin.

CHICAGO, January 25, 1877.

MR. BALDWIN: I want to keep that caveat I filed on talking telegraph alive. Can it not be put in form of an application? There are some points of difference between that and Bell’s system, and I have in view a better or an improved method of accomplishing the same thing. This will be important as a record if nothing more. Will it be necessary to have a model? None were required in Bell’s case. Please find out, and report. I want the Boston job complete before the 20th of February, as I want to be here from the 20th to 30th of that month.

Yours, &c.,

E. GRAY.

Letter from Mr. Baldwin to Mr. Gray.

JUNE 5, 1879.

ELISHA GRAY, Esq.,
Highland Park, Lake Co., Ill.:

MY DEAR GRAY: Enclosed find a copy of Bell’s preliminary statement in the Speaking Telephone Interference case, from which you will see he had no success until he adopted the devices shown in your caveat, after the grant of his first patent.

Pope is printing the statement, of which you will receive copies in due course.

No action on the “Closed Circuit” reissue yet.

Yours, truly,

WILLIAM D. BALDWIN.

Letter from Mr. Baldwin to Mr. Gray.

WASHINGTON, November 3d, 1879.

ELISHA GRAY, Esq.,
Highland Park, Ills.:

MY DEAR GRAY: I have yours of the 1st inst. about the proposed telephone compromise. You have personal rights in this matter, which in my opinion can only be properly settled by the adjudication of the Patent Office. I had expected to have met the other counsel in New York last week and talked over this matter, but Bell has begged for another postponement, and so the matter has again been adjourned. My motion is to speed the cause and simplify the issue by letting each party disclaim what it cannot contest successfully and confine himself to the points to which he is entitled.

Yours, truly,

W. D. BALDWIN.

The “cause” and the “issue” referred to were the interferences.

Mr. Baldwin to Mr. Gray.

OCTOBER 24, 1881.

ELISHA GRAY, Esq.,
Care Henry Cummings, Esq.,
2 Wall street, N. Y.:

* * * The general speaking telephone interference argument will probably begin next Monday and will last a week. Would you care to be here? I am devoting my argument more to a vindication of your position than to attacking the adversary, though I am stating some facts in regard to Bell and Edison very plainly. Did you leave your exhibits that were used in the Dowd suit abroad? If the originals or duplicates of them are in this country I should like to have them at the hearing.

Yours, truly,

W. D. BALDWIN.

Letter from Mr. Baldwin to Mr. Gray.

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 29, 1881.

ELISHA GRAY, Esq.,
(Care W. E. Mfg. Co.),
62 New Church st., New York:

MY DEAR GRAY: Enclosed find an advance copy of my argument on your behalf in the speaking telephone interferences. My object has been mainly to place you right before the public on the scientific side of the question. I hope I have succeeded, but am not proud of the performance, but if you care for other copies advise,

Yours, truly,

W. D. BALDWIN.

In that brief I attacked the Bell patent as strongly as I could, and stated that the apparatus therein shown had been believed by us to be incapable of transmitting speech, referring in support of that to the testimony of Mr. Renwick and Mr. Goodridge in the Dowd record. I commented on what I thought was the failure of the patent to properly describe and call attention to so important an invention. I had, however, already during the spring of 1879 argued the question of the meaning of the patent before Mr. Commissioner Paine, and he had found that on its face it did describe an apparatus for the transmission of articulate speech. In the brief, page 14, I said:

"As a matter of fact, neither Bell nor any one else ever successfully transmitted articulate speech through an apparatus like that shown in Figure 7, until after the date of his patent." (Referring to Mr. Bell's deposition in the Dowd case as authority for this.)

"Some time after that such instruments were made to work.

"The very remarkable fact remains that Bell's first successful transmission of articulate speech was with the apparatus delineated and described in Gray's caveat, filed February 14, 1876, the same day with the application of Bell's patent, and after Bell's visit to Washington, during which he had been informed of the probability of a threatened interference and its nature intimated. (See Bell's deposition, Dowd suit, Record, vol. 1, p. 507, int. 180, x 251-261, pp. 529-532.)

"This was the celebrated apparatus subsequently exhibited at the Centennial, June 25, 1876, consisting, in part, of the liquid transmitter and a membrane receiver with a piece of clock spring glued thereon, as an armature, arranged close to a magnet. (Bell, Dowd Record, vol. 1, pp. 493-'4; ints. 133-'4.)

"Gray's caveat presents a remarkable contrast to Bell's patent in its clearly setting forth the art of transmitting articulate speech, and delineating and describing the apparatus by which that art was successfully practiced.

"Bell's patent neither shows nor describes Gray's apparatus, and it is not pretended that he ever invented that special form of apparatus prior to Gray, or that Gray ever derived it from Bell.

"When, however, in the course of subsequent litigation, the fact was developed that, as between Gray and Bell the latter really was the first to conceive the invention of transmitting articulate speech, and to reduce the invention to practice, Gray voluntarily came forward, like the straightforward, fair-minded man that he is, and conceded that fact to his rival.

"We shall, therefore, retire from the contest over the issues in cases A and B, so far as relates to the question of the electric transmission of articulate speech.

"We still, however, maintain that Gray was the original and first inventor of subject-matter of broader scope; which invention not only underlies the telephone, but by which alone the telephonic transmission of articulate speech was rendered not only possible but practicable—that is to say, the art of transmitting rhythmical vibrations representing composite tones through an uninterrupted electrical circuit, and reproducing them through the intervention of a constantly charged or polarized magnet, and a disk or diaphragm of metal capable of responding through inductive action to sounds of all kinds or descriptions whatever, and of producing in the air sonorous vibrations corresponding with the electric waves; or, in the language of the fifth claim of Bell's patent of March 7th, 1876, 'causing electrical undulations similar in form to the vibrations of the air accompanying the said vocal or other sounds.'"

I then continued in that brief as follows :

"When, in 1878, the suit of the Bell Telephone Co. vs. Dowd was commenced, defendant's counsel were of opinion that Bell's patent was for telegraphy; that the fifth claim was broad enough to cover all the apparatus shown in the various figures of his drawings, as well as that shown in figure 7; that the latter figure related to another modification of his devices for transmitting the dot and dash of the Morse alphabet, by a reed shaken with the wind; and that the apparatus was incapable of transmitting articulate speech. Subsequent events have shown this last conclusion to have been erroneous, but it must be remembered that up to that date (1878) no apparatus like that shown in figure 7 had ever been known to transmit articulate speech, the work having been done with the membrane and clock-spring glued thereon, with the liquid transmitter and with a metal diaphragm, none of which devices were shown in the Bell patent of 1876.

"Acting on these views Gray's patents were put in, as anticipating Bell's claims, together with other inventions. The case was ably, fairly, and honestly contested, and men of high scientific attainments, as well as experts of great reputation, testified in behalf of each party to the cause.

"The ground was so thoroughly cultivated then that it was not seen where it could be improved by harrowing it again; and the entire record was accordingly stipulated into this case that we might have the benefit of the numerous and valuable facts developed.

"The case was ultimately settled without a trial, and a decree for plaintiff taken by consent.

"The fifth claim to this patent has since been interpreted and sustained by the courts as broadly as Bell himself could desire, in the recent case of American Bell Telephone Company vs. Spencer, reported in 20 O. G., 229, July 26, 1881.

* * * * *

"We now come to consider the issues in detail, in doing which we shall confine ourselves mainly to demonstrating the validity of Gray's claims to priority in the cases he contests, in which cases his priority will, we think, so clearly appear as to render what was done by others comparatively easy of discussion."

This was the brief which I sent to Mr. Gray in my letter of October 29, 1881, just quoted. It is plain from this what my position was—that it was based on the stress of the evidence, and that Mr. Gray was explicitly informed of it then; indeed, the determination of the Dowd case was based on that view. Having received the brief with this in it, Mr. Gray wrote me as follows :

Mr. Gray to Mr. Baldwin.

NEW YORK, November 14, 1881.

DEAR BALDWIN: I received the patents, and also a copy of your brief. The latter was a very able document, and you did yourself "proud." I would like a few copies for distribution. I have the harmonic fixed, and you will see more developments in telegraphy soon.

Yours, truly,

ELISHA GRAY.

On November 16th, 1881, in response to that letter, my firm sent Mr. Gray fifty copies of that brief.

The speaking telephone interferences were decided by the examiner of interferences in the latter part of July, 1883. I received from Mr. Gray a letter dated July 30th, 1883, as follows:

Mr. Gray to Mr. Baldwin.

HIGHLAND PARK, July 30, 1883.

DEAR BALDWIN: I have received from you a copy of the examiners' decision in the interference suits. It is interesting reading. What, on the whole, do you think of it? Will it be carried up to the board? I should like to talk the matter over with you, and to ask you many questions. I shall go East to spend some time, about the 25th of August. Where will you be then? Kind regards to the ladies at the house.

Yours,

ELISHA GRAY.

I replied to that as follows:

Mr. Baldwin to Mr. Gray.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 3, 1883.

ELISHA GRAY, Esq.,
Highland Park, Ill.:

MY DEAR GRAY: I have yours of the 30th ult., about the Sp. Tel. Intf. decision. It shows ability, careful preparation, and much correct reasoning, but from some of the conclusions I dissent. I don't see how they make you out to have abandoned the receiver, as your caveat preceded or accompanied any application showing it. The Bell people probably now realize the mischief they have done their cause in disparaging you. My motion is to appeal on the receiver cases and let the rest go. Every defeated party will probably appeal, as they have everything to gain, and nothing to lose by it. I go away next week for a month. On my return I expect to be here or in Philadelphia.

Since my summary ousting by Pope I haven't had to go to N. Y. so much as before—tho' I may have to go there again in Sep.

Truly,

W. D. BALDWIN.

The course taken was to appeal the cases on the receiver, of which the most important was issue G. I never heard from Mr. Gray any objection to that course. I argued the speaking telephone interferences on appeal before the examiners-in-chief, and wrote to Mr. Gray about it as follows:

Mr. Baldwin to Mr. Gray.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 18, 1883.

ELISHA GRAY, Esq.,
Highland Park, Ills. :

MY DEAR GRAY: I send you by this mail three copies of my argument in the speaking telephone interferences made last week on appeal to the examiners-in-chief.

It consists mainly of extracts from the record; my spoken argument was of course different. I think you ought to win on the appeal. The interference examiner's decision was universally condemned, even by those in whose favor he decided, and will scarcely be sustained.

* * * * *

Truly,

WM. D. BALDWIN.

In October, 1884, the appeal was decided by the examiners-in-chief against Mr. Gray. I wrote him as follows on the subject:

Mr. Baldwin to Mr. Gray.

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 26, 1884.

ELISHA GRAY, Esq.,
Highland Park, Ills. :

DEAR GRAY: * * * * I shall appeal from the decision of the board of examiners in case G in due course.

Yours, truly,

W. D. BALDWIN.

The Commissioner decided against Gray, affirming the decision of the board of appeals. I thereupon wrote to Mr. Gray as follows:

Mr. Baldwin to Mr. Gray.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 21, 1885.

ELISHA GRAY, Esq.,
Highland Park, Ills. :

MY DEAR GRAY: I was sorry to miss you while here lately.

I have to-day, for the first time, read the Commissioner's decision in the speaking telephone interference, and am disgusted to find you so completely ignored. In addition to my brief, I made an oral argument lasting nearly three hours, going carefully over the whole ground. It covers eighty pages of type-writing. If you care to read it I will send you a copy—the only one I have in fact. I have not written you before because I knew you had seen the decision and because I was much occupied.

Truly yours,

W. D. BALDWIN.

Mr. Gray then wrote me, expressing that he was as much dissatisfied as I was with the result; but so far from expressing any dissatisfaction with my management of his interest, he proposed to consult with me as to his future course. His letter is as follows:

Mr. Gray to Mr. Baldwin.

CHICAGO, May 8, 1885.

MY DEAR BALDWIN: I received your letter some time ago in reference to your brief. I would like a copy of it, as I am getting together everything I can bearing on the case. I want to have an interview with you on this matter soon. I am very much dissatisfied with the way my case has been disposed of, and am not disposed to let it rest so. But just what course to pursue I have not yet determined.

Yours, very truly,

ELISHA GRAY.

I replied to that as follows:

Mr. Baldwin to Mr. Gray.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 11, 1885.

[Enclosure.]

ELISHA GRAY, Esq.,

Chicago Opera House, Chicago, Ill.:

MY DEAR GRAY: Yours of the 8th instant received. I send the only copy of my argument on the Sp. Tel. Intfs. before the Com'r I have. Can't you have it copied and returned? Would it pay to have it printed as a vindication of your claims?

The McDonough people will perhaps carry the case into the courts—or we could do so if you wish. I was sorry to miss your visit.

Truly,

W. D. BALDWIN.

I had another letter from Mr. Gray, which I should have given immediately after his letter of January 25th, 1877. It is dated March 2d, and was received at my office March 6th, 1877. It is as follows:

Mr. Gray to Mr. Baldwin.

CHICAGO, March 2.

Mr. BALDWIN: I wrote Dr. White that if he thought best we would proceed immediately with the testimony. He knows the necessities of the case, and I shall wait his answer. Everything depends upon our winning, notwithstanding Bell's indifference. He will find his undulatory patents subordinate. The only really valuable features in the analysis of multiple tones. If we control that method we have the key to the whole business. We must leave no stone unturned.

Yours, &c.,

E. GRAY.

These letters not only disprove the charges Mr. Gray now makes that I was unfaithful to his interest, but show that he has always been aware of my actions and of the position I have assumed as to his case; and further, that my actions have always met his approval.

W. D. BALDWIN.

NELSON'S CASE.—FEBRUARY, 1885.

In the matter of the application to the Attorney-General of the United States to annul certain letters patent granted to Charles Nelson.

STATE OF NEW YORK,
County of New York, ss :

JOHN D. EMACK, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

He is the person described in the proposed bill of complaint hereto annexed; that all the facts alleged in said bill of complaint are true, and deponent has good and sufficient evidence to substantiate the same.

That said Charles Nelson, under cover and protection of the patent right therein alleged to have been fraudulently obtained, has sold and issued a license to a firm, the name of which is Krause & Bartholomew, who are now manufacturing and selling slates, and flooding the county with circulars, and are thereby greatly injuring deponent in his trade and business.

That he advised, by his attorney, Hon. Andrew J. Perry, of New York City, that the proper proceeding by which to protect the rights of deponent is for the Attorney-General of the United States to bring an action in equity in the proper court or courts to have said patent annulled, upon the ground that it was obtained by means of false and fraudulent affidavits and statements, and that under said patents thus fraudulently obtained, the said Charles Nelson, his agents and assigns, are manufacturing said noiseless slates, to the injury of deponent, who has exclusive right to manufacture and sell the same under the various patents in said complaint described.

Deponent therefore asks that the proper action be taken to secure his rights; that he is willing and will furnish ample security to the United States Government to indemnify and secure it against any loss, if any, it may sustain for costs or otherwise, in case, for lack of proof or other cause, said action should not be maintained.

JOHN D. EMACK.

Sworn to before me this 12th day of January, 1885.

JAMES L. BENNETT,
Notary Public, Kings Co.

Cert. filed in N. Y. Co.

U. S. PATENT OFFICE, February 4, 1885.

Hon. BENJAMIN BUTTERWORTH,
Commissioner of Patents:

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith the communication of 27th ult., from the Attorney-General of the United States, asking your suggestions upon a proposed bill of complaint, the object of which is to vacate letters patent to Charles Nelson, No. 281785, issued July 24, 1883, which patent, it is alleged, was obtained by fraud. The bill of complaint, supported by affidavit of J. D. Emack, alleges that Nelson was fully acquainted with the state of the art prior to his application for patent, and particularly as set forth in certain patents which he cites, to wit: No. 26916 to Munger, issued January 24, 1860; No. 99756 to Butler, issued February 15, 1870, and No. 189118 to Mallett, dated April 3, 1877; and that, notwithstanding this knowledge, he declared that he believed he had made an invention of his own, and filed an application for patent for it, supporting it by his oath in the usual form prescribed.

This is the ordinary proceeding in applications for patents, and involves nothing on which an allegation for fraud can be based. The examination proceeded in regular order, none of the patents cited were overlooked, the claims were found to be drawn so as to sharply define the particular features of the invention alleged to be novel, and distinguish them from anything known to the office; and, with the exception of a slight verbal change, they were allowed as presented.

If the case were to come up to-day, the action would be the same, so far as the known state of the art prior to the filing of Nelson's application is concerned.

The proposed bill of complaint further sets forth, however, that the invention described in the Nelson patent was not made by Nelson, but by the complainant, and that Nelson, under a contract with him, had been actually manufacturing and selling to the slate trade the very slate frame described more than two years prior to the date of Nelson's patent, to wit, March 29, 1883.

Of course these are statements which the office cannot verify. It had the oath of the applicant before it, which it was bound to accept unless overcome by some prior patents, or printed publication, or some other authentic evidence of the previous state of the art. Admitting these allegations to be true, it would appear that Nelson made a false oath in his application, and that his patent is void, not only in consequence thereof, but also for want of novelty. This being the case, it seems that Emack has only to go on and use the invention and defy a suit for infringement. The result of a suit, if the allegations are sustained, must be the declaration of the patent invalid for want of novelty.

As Mr. John J. Perry, counsel for Emack, in his letter to the Hon. Attorney-General, invokes as authority for the procedure suggested, Walker on Patents, pp. 223-224, it is worth while to notice that the learned author only suggests this remedy (evidently an unusual one, and, in his opinion, of doubtful authority) in cases "where frauds are ingenious enough to keep clear of all known defenses to infringement suits."

The present does not appear to be such a case as the learned author contemplates. Want of novelty, as most fully shown elsewhere in his book, is a most substantial defense to an infringement suit, and in my judgment some different authority should be invoked before adopting the proposed procedure. Such authority does not appear to be found in the cases cited by the learned counsel.

U. S. v. Stone, 2 Wallace, 535, is a land case which may afford authority for the general principle that a suit to vacate a grant by the Government should be instituted in the name of the Government, or by the Attorney-General, but beyond this it fails for the total want of parallelism between the cases. Mowry v. Whitney, 14 Wallace, 434, is a case of conflicting patents, proceedings instituted under provisions of a section of the act of 1836, for which section 4918, Revised Statutes, has been substituted. Beside this, the appellant in the case put himself on the same ground suggested by Walker, and quoted above, by declaring in his appeal that he could not avail himself of the fraud of the patentee as a matter of defense.

Attorney-General U. S. v. Rumford Chemical Works, 2 Banning and Arden, 308, was a case closely parallel to the present, and the court held that "information to repeal letters patent for an invention brought in the name of the Attorney-General was not authorized by the statute, sanctioned by any precedent, or supported by the authority of any judicial decision." United States v. Gunning et al., 26 O. G., 356, is a decision on a demurrer. No statement of the case is given, and nothing to indicate whether it falls within the conditions suggested by Walker. The general doctrine, however, is asserted as in U. S. v. Stone.

I submit, with great deference, that in the uncertainty that exists upon this question, and in view of the fact that the party complaining has by his own showing an ample and ordinary defense in a suit for infringement, which will accomplish just what is proposed by this unusual procedure, that there is no necessity for the honorable Attorney-General taking the action proposed to him.

I am, very respectfully, your ob't servant,

F. A. SEELY,
Examiner.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, February 18, 1885.

A. J. PERRY, Esq.,
39 Nassau street, New York City, N. Y.:

SIR: Yours of the 16th ultimo (and inclosures) was duly referred to the Commissioner of Patents for remarks. These remarks have just been received. Upon the whole, the result is that your client has not established a right to intervention by the Attorney-General, &c., to vacate the Nelson patent No. 281,785. So far as appears from the case made in the draught of a bill submitted by you, your client has ample and plain defense to any suit for infringement, &c., &c., and in an ordinary case of that sort, in the absence of any previous successful litigation or continued defiance by him, it is not usual for the United States to take such part as you suggest.

Very respectfully,

BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

Affidavit of F. E. Nipher.

FRANCIS E. NIPHER, having been duly sworn, deposes and says:

I am thirty-seven years of age; am professor of physics in Washington University, St. Louis, and president of the St. Louis Academy of Science. I have held my professorship since September, 1874, previous to which time I was for four years an assistant in physics and chemistry in the State University of Iowa, having been appointed to this position in 1870, immediately upon graduation in that institution.

I have given special attention to the subject of electricity and magnetism, and am familiar with the subject of acoustics, it having been my duty to give instructions in these branches. I have made myself familiar with practical experimenting upon electrical apparatus and have written various papers on scientific subjects, some of which embody the results of several years of work.

I have read and considered the statement entitled "The Telephone Case," to which Dr. Wellington Adams has made affidavit, prepared for the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, and I fully concur in all the statements made, with the following exceptions:

I. The statement that Bell's instrument, No. 7 of his patent of March, 1876, is not operative when built according to his specifications, has been found to be incorrect. This has been shown by tests made at my laboratory by Dr. Adams and myself, since the former made his affidavit.

II. The statement that Bell uses an intermittent current in the device mentioned above is perhaps open to some objection, although it is, in a certain sense, true. The fact is that there is no essential difference between undulatory, pulsatory, and intermittent currents. It is purely arbitrary classification, like that which would distinguish between short men and tall men, and is of no importance in discussions regarding the action of the telephone. Some sounds will be represented by pure undulations, while others, notably articulate speech, require what Mr. Bell calls pulsatory currents in order to reproduce them.

Reis made many forms of transmitters and receivers. I have examined and experimented with several of these Reis transmitters and receivers. These instruments were furnished to me by Dr. Wellington Adams. They had evidently been made by some one not skilled in the art, but they all operated successfully, with one exception, and in this case the mechanic had grossly blundered in the construction of the instrument; this instrument was not tested.

All of Reis' transmitters have one feature in common, viz, a loose contact in an electric circuit, which is changed or varied by vibrations of the contact pieces. These contact pieces are set into vibration by means of a membrane, against which the voice is projected, the proper degree of contact which will give the best results being secured by various adjustments.

In other forms of transmitter, Reis used a gravity contact, the weight of one of these contact pieces pressing upon the other serving to bring about the proper order of contact. The weight of the gravitating piece can here be so adjusted as to give the best results.

The construction of the various types of transmitters shows most clearly and conclusively that Reis was constantly aiming to cause pulsations in the current of electricity passing through the transmitter and receiver, which should be a copy of the sound waves projected into the transmitter, and that he aimed to reproduce the original sound vibrations in his receiving instrument.

When the instruments having the adjustments he gave them are so adjusted as to work best, they are producing these pulsating currents, and they do reproduce articulate speech.

The operation of the instruments of Reis does not differ in any way from the operation of the modern transmitter now in use. The fact that Reis made so many different types of instruments, all containing the same elements, and which modern practice has shown to be essential, is positive proof that he had the art of telephony clearly and correctly in his mind.

The transmitters of Reis contain every essential element of the modern transmitter, and there can be no doubt that he constructed his instruments, as he says, with a view of reproducing "at once the total actions of all the organs operant in human speech." (Reis memoir Jahresbericht of Phys. Society of Frankfort-on-the-Main.) This being the object in view, it is wonderful to see how completely he grasped the mechanical requirements of the problem. His failure to produce a commercial telephone was due to the fact that he used an animal membrane in place of a metal diaphragm, and that he used platinum contacts in place of carbon. When these substitutions are made, the instrument becomes more reliable, it is more easily kept in working adjustment, and it acts more efficiently. It becomes a modern telephone. These changes are therefore merely improvements in an art, the invention of which is due wholly to Philip Reis.

In the description of the action of his instrument, Reis makes the statement that the current is interrupted at the working contact for each sound-wave. He says: "In this way each sound-wave effects an opening and closing of the circuit."

It should be remembered, in considering the descriptions of Reis, that he was inventing a new art. New conceptions and ideas were to be formed, as well as new devices. In such cases it is sometimes as difficult to find the proper words in which to explain the invention or conception as it is to invent the apparatus, or conceive the art. In such cases the inventor, or those who discuss his invention, are finally driven to the use of technical expressions, having special, conventional, or arbitrary meanings. The meanings of such phrases are primarily defined either by long explanations or by reference to the particular thing or action represented by the phrase. The fair and proper way to learn what Reis means by "opening and closing the circuit for each full vibration," is to examine the apparatus which he produced for realizing his idea. Since he was discouraged by the rebuffs which he met, and wrote very little, the invention of the proper phrases to briefly express the action of the instruments has fallen upon others.

These instruments show unmistakably that the working points of the gravity form of transmitter were intended by him to be continually in contact, and the conclusion is unavoidable, that when the instruments having yielding and following spring contacts were used in speaking or singing as he says, "not too loudly," the circuit was continually in a condition which we call technically "closed," but which Reis called technically "opened and closed." He meant that the circuit was so far opened and closed as to produce the well-known galvanic tones in his receiving instrument.

In the present state of our knowledge concerning the ultimate constitution of matter, and in the present state of our ignorance of what really takes place at this so-called "contact" in the transmitter, it is not possible for me to say which of these phrases is really the more correct. If the words "open and close the circuit for each full vibration" were to be understood as a telegrapher would understand them, the explanation of Reis would mean the circuit would be opened and closed many hundreds of times per second when transmitting articulate speech. The current would be opened from one hundred and fifty to five hundred and fifty times per second for the fundamental tones, and the added harmonics which accompany the fundamental would run the number of breaks to thousands. Now, according to Mr. Bell (specification forming part of letters patent No. 174,465, March 7th, 1876), such a current "becomes, for all practical purposes, continuous." In this Mr. Bell is undoubtedly correct, but although continuous, such a current would not be of constant intensity, but would, in fact, be a pulsatory or undulatory current, not differing in any essential manner from the currents which are used in the modern forms of telephone.

Reis considered his receiver to be merely an apparatus for producing the galvanic tones, and such indeed it was. The molecular vibrations set up in the iron core, when the strength of the current is quickly varied, result in the production of a sound which can be rendered more audible by attaching the magnet core to a sounding board. The electro-magnetic receiver of Reis also acts in the same way. The vibrations which produce the sounds are molecular in their nature, as they are in the modern receiver. In describing his receiver he says, "this whole piece may naturally be replaced by any apparatus by means of which one produces the well-known galvanic tones." (Memoir loc. cit.)

Here also, then, Reis has fully invented the art of reproducing articulate speech.

His electro-magnetic receiver was an electro-magnet having an elastically mounted armature, and placed upon a sounding box. In the modern instrument the elastically mounted armature is the disc of iron in front of the magnet pole, and the iron disc also performs the function of the sounding-board.

From such an examination as I am competent to give, it is clear to me that the claims of Reis to be the inventor of the telephone, and of the art of transmitting articulate speech by means of an electric current, have never before been presented in court except by parties who were pecuniarily interested in showing that Reis had no claims to the invention of the art. It is a very simple matter for any electrician who is interested in so doing to show to the court that the various transmitters and receivers of Reis are all inoperative, if the other side of the case is also interested in having the same thing shown.

It follows, therefore, that there can have been no fair adjudication of the points raised in the present case.

I am not pecuniarily interested in any telephone company.

Affidavit of Z. F. Wilber.

STATE OF NEW YORK,
New York County, ss :

ZENAS F. WILBER, being duly sworn, deposes and says as follows :

I am 43 years of age, and by profession a solicitor of patents and expert in patent causes.

I was employed in the U. S. Patent Office for some years ; first as an acting assistant examiner and then as an assistant examiner for several years ; most of which time I was engaged in the examination of applications for patents in the branch of electricity. Afterward for some years I was principal examiner in charge of what was then known as the philosophical division, embracing the classes of electricity, horology, optics, mathematical and measuring instruments, etc.

While so engaged I was called upon to investigate many thousand applications for patents and to pass upon their utility and patentability, a large number of which related to electrical matters. I was finally promoted to be examiner of interferences, from which position I resigned to engage in the practice of my profession. As such last-named examiner, I passed upon and determined the question arising in interferences in all classes of invention.

Since resigning I have prosecuted several hundred applications for patents for various clients, nearly all involving the utilization, generation, or regulation of electricity ; have in many instances been called upon to investigate and report upon the practicability, utility, and patentability of such inventions, the legality and scope of patents issued on such subjects, and have testified as expert in a number of litigated cases relating to electrical subjects.

At the time, in December, 1871, Antonio Meucci filed a caveat for "Sound Telegraphs," I was, as assistant under Prof. B. S. Hedrick, principal examiner, and engaged under him in the examination of cases relating to electrical inventions, hence the Meucci caveat came under my charge at that time. At the time of the last renewal thereof, in Dec., 1873, I was in charge of applications involving or relating to electricity, as principal examiner myself, and the Meucci caveat was still in my charge.

During 1876 the electrical department was under my charge, as principal examiner, and I received, as such examiner, from the proper division of the office, the Bell application, which became U. S. patent No. 174465, of March 7th, 1876, and the caveat of Elisha Gray, now generally known as the "Gray caveat." The files of both were endorsed as having been received by the office on February 14th, 1876. Of my knowledge I did not know and had no facilities for knowing which was first filed in the office ; and, indeed, when I first compared them to ascertain if there was any conflict or interference, I made no enquiry, my own opinion then being that, in the relation existing between an interfering application and a caveat, the day was simply punctum temporis, and hence, that when an application interfering with a caveat was filed upon the same day as the caveat, the "application is made within the year" (R. S., 4902), and that the application should be suspended and the caveator given the statutory three months to file a completed application.

Accordingly, on February 19th, 1876, I suspended the Bell application, and notified the caveator, Gray, to complete his application within three months.

On February 24th, 1876, Bell, by his attorneys (Messrs. Pollok & Bailey), filed a protest against this suspension, averring, in substance, that there was reason to believe that the Bell application was filed first, i. e., earlier on the day of the 14th of February, 1876, than the caveat, the whole protest and argument of that date being based on a knowledge of that fact, or a belief that such was the fact.

Now, Mr. Bell or his attorneys obtained such knowledge I do not know. It was not given by me officially or unofficially. The only information given by me was in the official letter notifying Mr. Bell of the suspension of his application, because of a caveat interfering with his first, fourth, and fifth claims, neither the caveators nor the date of filing information, he was not entitled to have, being mentioned or hinted at. Such information was obtained, however, evidently, for it is the basis of a communication of February 24th, 1876, to the office in Bell's behalf, but how obtained, as before stated, I cannot say, being entirely ignorant on that point.

The point raised being an entirely new one, there being no recorded precedent in the office, I refer the matter to the honorable Commissioner of Patents in person for his instructions as to my course. The Commissioner decided that, as between an interfering application and caveat, a day was not "punctum temporis," but an exception thereto; that the time of the day was an element to be considered in determining the relation of the parties, directing me to ascertain the exact time of day of filing; that if the records showed that the application was filed earlier in the day, the caveat should be disregarded, otherwise not. In determining this, I consulted the cash blotter in the cashier's room, where I found the receipt of the fee for the Bell application entered before the receipt of the fee for the Gray caveat.

There was no regularity of entering on the fee-book. Applications came in by attorneys and mail, and were filed on the receipt clerk's table in a pile, and the clerk entered the cash received on the book as he picked up the letter or application. I was governed largely by what Mr. Bailey said, and he told me Bell's application was received before the caveat on same day.

I therefore determined, hastily, that the Bell application was filed the earlier in the day, and revoked the suspension. In doing this I had no other proofs than that mentioned, no affidavits or depositions from or in behalf of either party, nor, as it appears from the record, was Gray notified by the Commissioner to appear and defend my original ruling in his favor, as it seems might equitably have been done. This is the only case I ever knew in some eleven years' experience in the Patent Office of such a ruling. In this case had the usual course of suspension of the application been followed Bell would never have received a patent, and had Mr. Meucci's caveat been renewed in 1875, no patent could have been issued to Bell. I did not suspect any crookedness at the time.

The suspension being revoked and the Gray caveat disregarded, Bell by his attorneys was permitted to file certain amendments, which show for themselves without further or additional oath of invention, and his case was permitted to go to issue and become the patent hereinbefore noted.

At the time of the prosecution and allowance of such application it was not intended by any one in any way whatever, that I can remember, that it was for a talking telephone, a telephone for the transmission of articulate speech. The human voice was but once referred to in the whole specification, viz, in the 2d column of page 3 as printed, where it is stated "whereby motion can be imparted to the armature by the human voice, or by means of a musical instrument." I understood this to mean the same class of sounds given by the voice as are given by a musical instrument, that the voice and musical instruments were named as equivalents for the same class of sounds, musical or harmonic vibrations in contradistinction to uttered intelligible speech. I considered that the invention related to "Harmonic Multiplex Telegraphy," the object of which was to enable several operators to use one wire simultaneously, a system on which it was known that both Profs. Gray and Bell had been working and not to a talking telephone.

If I had believed that it was for a talking telephone, in view of the fact that the accounts of Reiss' experiments in that line, which were then accessible to me, were so vague and unsatisfactory, I would have required a practical demonstration of its utility and operativeness as a talking machine before granting the patent, for I believe that any instruments made, as shown and described in the patent noted, can be used to transmit and reproduce articulate speech. Changes and modifications must be made therein for that purpose amounting to independent and separate invention.

In looking back over the case, I am convinced that I should not have allowed the fifth claim, but should have objected to it as vague and indefinite. As set out it amounts simply to "causing electrical undulations similar in form to the vibrations of the air." No one has seen "electrical undulation," it is simply an abstract term; there is no way of telling whether the cause termed electricity is thrown into undulations, and, if yea, whether these invisible undulations are similar in form to some other visible undulations. There are no clear, explicit standards set up in the claim by which the infringement or non-infringement may be determined, but it is a claim so general and so abstract as to amount in effect to a claim for the result, not the means. Its parallel in a tangible thing would be a claim for making shoes by "causing a machine to stitch the parts together by stitches resembling in form hand-made stitches," so that all machine-stitched shoes, no matter how different the means, the machinery employed would infringe the claim, because the result was accomplished.

There is no doubt in my mind that a large amount of this patent is anticipated in the patent to T. A. Edison, 141,777, dated August 12th, 1873. In that patent Edison shows a contact moving in water towards and from another contact, so that the resistance between the two is increased or diminished. This is one of the many ways set out by Bell for the same purpose in his patent; see near bottom of 2d column, page 2, as printed. "Let mercury, or some other liquid, form part of a voltaic circuit, then the more deeply the conducting wire is immersed in the mercury or other liquid the less resistance does the liquid offer to the passage of the current. Hence the mercury or other liquid included in the circuit occasions undulations in the current."

His "undulations" are rise and fall of electric tension in the circuit due to "gradual increasing and diminishing the resistance of the circuit," as stated in fourth claim, or by other means recited, all being equivalents for this purpose.

Edison says, "I make use of metallic contact points within a liquid, such as glycerine or water, so that the motion of one contact point nearer to or farther from the other raises and lowers the electric tension in the telegraph line, and operates a distant magnet without forming a spark or breaking the circuit."

Both operate a distant instrument or magnet without forming a spark or breaking the circuit by rise and fall of electric tension; i. e., the so-called "undulations," both Edison's and Bell's patents, were applied for as "improvements in," the same class, "telegraphy."

I am convinced, on careful analysis of the two cases, that in so far as the application of Bell and the patent based thereon disclose his invention, the broad claims in the Bell patent should have been rejected on the Edison patent and Bell confined to any novel mechanism or means he had invented for accomplishing this result, which was common to both and prior to him in Edison.

Judging at the time, however, that the Bell application related on to harmonic multiplex telegraphy, an entirely new branch, the talking telephone of to-day, with its development being almost undreamt of, the case did not, it now seems to me, receive the careful scrutiny and pruning which it should have had.

From my experience in examining a vast number of electrical specifications, I have become familiar with the terms and nomenclature used, and have found that the terms used by Reiss and Meucci are expressed or meant by different later inventions under different names. I have noticed this in the specification of Reiss and the specifications of Meucci, Bain, Edison, Gray, Bell, the caveat of Meucci, etc. The rise and fall of tension of the Edison case is the same as the "undulations" and the "undulative current" of Bell; the "closed circuit" of Bell is the "continuous metallic conductor" of Meucci, while the drawings intended to graphically indicate sound waves in Bell's patent and the description thereof are the same as those published by Reiss. And much more.

Extract from A. G. Bell's testimony in the Dowd Case.

BOSTON, July 24, 1879.

Cross-int. 251. There is in the record, at page 150, a letter of yours to Mr. Gray, dated March 2, 1877, in which you say, "I do not know the nature of the application for a caveat to which you have referred as having been filed two hours after my application for a patent, except that it had something to do with the vibration of a wire in water," &c. How did you come to know as much as that about the nature of the paper in the confidential archives of the Patent Office?

Answer. When I found that my application was in interference with some other application filed in the Patent Office, I went to Washington to examine into the matter, for I understood that an applicant in interference had a right to see that portion of the interfering application which conflicted with his invention. I therefore went to the Patent Office and requested the examiner to explain to me the exact points of interference between my application and the other. I found that there had been two interferences declared with my application. The first was with a caveat filed the same day as my application, and had already been dissolved. The examiner declined to show me the caveat, as it was a confidential document, but he indicated to me the particular clause in my application with which it conflicted. I therefore knew it had something to do with the vibration of a wire in a liquid. I do not now remember what it was that led me to suppose that that liquid was water.

The CHAIRMAN. This matter that is to be submitted from the Department of Justice I suppose I can put in. We all know what it is.

On motion the committee then adjourned until Thursday, May 27, 1886, at 12 m.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Thursday, May 27, 1886.

The committee was called to order at 12.45 p. m.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Boyle). Before proceeding to offer any papers in evidence, I want to call attention to two or three matters put in by Mr. Ranney at the last meeting. They were given in merely by referring to the page of the record and by a general designation of the paper. The first one is the affidavit of Alexander Graham Bell, on page 591 of the Interior Department record. This affidavit is introduced, apparently, only for the purpose of bringing before the committee a letter addressed by Mr. Wilber to Mr. Bell, and Mr. Bell's reply. It seems to me that that has no place in this investigation.

Mr. HALE. What is the date of that letter?

The CHAIRMAN. It is dated October 7, 1885. It does not occur to me what other purpose that could serve.

Mr. HALE. That is one of the papers used before the Interior Department?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; that is one matter that I think should go out. I suppose it is in evidence, as it was offered by Judge Ranney. In the same connection there is the affidavit of a man named William C. Tompkins, on page 797 of the Bell record. He made an affidavit for use before the Interior Department, which seems to have been given for no other purpose, apparently, except that of getting before this committee several newspaper items in regard to some offense Mr. Wilber was guilty of or some difficulty into which he had gotten. There is also the affidavit of Mr. Guy, on page 793 of that record, which related to the same thing exactly, as I understood it—the arrest of Mr. Wilber for some petty offense here in the city, for which he was taken to the police court. I do not see what that has to do with these matters.

Mr. HALE. Has Mr. Wilber been examined as a witness in this investigation at all?

The CHAIRMAN. No. Two or three affidavits of his have been given in evidence, I believe all by Judge Ranney, but I am not sure; perhaps some of them were offered by somebody else.

Mr. HANBACK. Was there not one that was offered by Solicitor-General Goode?

The CHAIRMAN. Perhaps so.

Mr. HANBACK. He had a type-written copy of it.

The CHAIRMAN. If they are given in evidence for the purpose of affecting the character of Mr. Wilber, the committee will remember that we declined, by a vote of the committee, I believe, to go into the question of character when it was proposed by Mr. Van Benthuyzen as against Mr. Pulitzer, General Sypher, and Mr. Hill; and if the committee should think it proper to go into the question of evidence as to character, it certainly would not be competent to impeach the character of Mr. Wilber as a witness by proving his arrest for a particular offense. That would not be competent evidence on that point. So I think these matters should go out.

Mr. RANNEY. Are you through, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. RANNEY. You seem to misapprehend entirely the reason why these should go in. It had been already settled by the committee that the Interior Department record was not in for the purpose of proving the fact here, and opening these issues here, but solely to show what the Secretary of the Interior had before him on which he acted. It is like the affidavit of General Duncan S. Walker, only in regard to another matter, which was put in. It is like the certificate which Colonel Young put in. It is embraced in Colonel Oates' resolution that we have adopted, that this record was all in.

Mr. HALE. We set that aside the other day, very improperly, as I think.

Mr. RANNEY. I think that it is proper. We have discussed and determined the matter and the record has been made up on that basis. We are to judge of the opinion given by Mr. Lamar, and what he had before him when he gave it. Now, take Mr. Wilbur's affidavits. He had before him first the affidavit which Mr. Van Benthuyzen got out of him on the 30th of July that was put in evidence before the Secretary. He had in evidence before him the affidavit which Mr. Wilber gave to the Globe Company, bearing on the question of whether there was irregularity in the Department or fraud practiced upon the Department by Mr. Bell in getting that patent. Those affidavits are already in this case, which you did not object to. They are not in because we are to go into the issue here to try it as a distinct issue, but they are in because they are the proofs on which the opinion of Mr. Lamar was given. It is to show whether on that record he was justified in ordering or recommending that suit. As the case stood on the record he and his opinion must be judged. Now you put the first affidavit of Wilber in, you put in the second affidavit of Wilber as given to the Globe Company, and then it is proper to put in whatever was before the Commissioner or the Secretary of the Interior which affected that testimony judicially, whatever he had, and anything in this record which affected the testimony which he had before him in forming his opinion, and which he admitted there as evidence is competent as bearing on the position which Mr. Wilber and his testimony occupied before Mr. Lamar when he passed his opinion.

That is the reason why the committee allowed it, and it is on the record that this goes in for that purpose and is competent for that purpose. Not that we open the issue here to try, for if we did, it would have been competent for the parties to have produced Mr. Wilber, and it would have been competent to produce anything fit and proper in reply. We have not opened that, and therefore we refused Mr. Van Benthuyzen's offer and Mr. Bell's second affidavit, because we were not trying that issue. And yet we are trying the issue as to whether Mr. Lamar was justified in ordering or recommending that suit. How can you distinguish whatever is deemed competent? The whole of the record is in, but it was only for members to put in from it extracts to save the printing of the whole of it, of that which seemed to bear on this issue. I have selected and put in not one side of it, but both sides of it, as it stood before the Secretary, to wit: The affidavit given to Mr. Van Benthuyzen, the affidavit given to the Globe Company, and then the evidence that the Secretary of the Interior had before him as affecting the credibility of that testimony or the weight of it, to wit, the fact that Mr. Wilber, after he had given the Globe Company his affidavit, after he had given Mr. Van Benthuyzen his affidavit and it had been put in, proceeds then with a letter to Mr. Bell desiring to publish something, to come out with a statement to his favor, showing the character of the witness—showing that he was ready to furnish an affidavit or furnish testimony on that side of the case.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not think there is anything of that kind in the letter, as I read it.

Mr. RANNEY. I have the letter here. After he had given the Globe Company his affidavit, and after he had given Mr. Van Benthuyzen his affidavit, he writes to Mr. Bell, saying—

The CHAIRMAN. That should not go in again.

Mr. RANNEY. (After reading the letter referred to.) Now, as it stood before the Secretary, it showed that Mr. Wilber, after giving two affidavits, one to Mr. Van Benthuyzen and one to the Globe Company, then hunts out and solicits Mr. Bell, saying that there was nothing in those affidavits, and that he had not stated the truth. Mr.

Bell replies, showing his own action and that of Mr. Wilber. That was before the Secretary, and shows his action and affects his decision as showing the position of Mr. Wilber. Then it is followed (I put in both sides) by an affidavit of some twelve pages given by this same man Wilber to the Bell people, which they put in evidence, and which entirely, as is claimed, overthrows anything which he had stated prior as affecting prejudicially the matter. Then there was the other testimony in the case that affected his statement.

Now, my argument of it is this: That the only evidence which Mr. Lamar had before him tending to show any irregularity or fraud in the issue of the Bell patent is based on Mr. Wilber's statement, when he, by his own affidavits, also before him, had completely overthrown that claim and left nothing in it, showing that there was no testimony before Mr. Lamar worthy of a moment's consideration on which to base a claim of fraud. That is the argument I base on it. The conclusion is another thing and I need not state it. To say that when you are judging of the opinion of Mr. Lamar, on which he based his recommendation, by the evidence of Wilber, before him and everything that affected the credibility of Wilber, to say that you should put in a part, which he had before him, and leave out the other part, and then proceed to form a judgment on the value of his opinion—for that is what it comes to—would not be claimed by any one as proper. We do not open the issue, but we open the character of the evidence.

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, no; it is not claimed there at all.

Mr. HALL. Do you claim that we are trying to see whether the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior was correct or not?

Mr. RANNEY. We certainly are called upon to pass upon that question.

Mr. HALL. I do not think that that is before the committee.

Mr. RANNEY. I say further than that, that it is settled in this record that the Department of the Interior record is in, and it is only a question for the committee to determine how much of it we will publish. A part of it has been put in because it was in the record.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not agree to that.

Mr. RANNEY. Well, that is the resolution on file. Has that resolution of Mr. Oates been printed?

The CHAIRMAN. The resolution referred to by the gentleman from Massachusetts will not, in my judgment, make that competent which would not otherwise be competent. He bases his right to put in this evidence against the character of Mr. Wilber, upon the assumption that it was before the Secretary of the Interior and that it is found in the record which was before the Secretary. He will remember that that record was made up by the Bell Company; that they had a right to put into it anything that they saw proper. It was not made up under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, and he did not pass on the relevancy, competency, materiality, or propriety of that testimony before it was printed in the record. They printed it and presented it to him. Now, if we are to assume that the Secretary was compelled to consider everything in that book, there might be some force in the argument made by the gentleman from Massachusetts. If we conclude that he did consider everything in that book, it might, with some propriety, be said here that we ought to take it into account as to what influenced him in coming to the conclusion that he did. But as the Secretary of the Interior is a lawyer, I take it that he did not permit the police court reports to be introduced, or if introduced, he did not permit them to have any weight with him as affecting the character of a witness before him. If he did, he went altogether outside of the law and did that which he had no right to do.

I admit that they had a right to put in and print in a book what they saw proper; but that the Secretary of the Interior weighed it, considered it, or that he was compelled to consider it because it was in there I deny. I take it for granted that he did not consider it, because it was not competent evidence. I claim that it has no right to be put in here because it was put in there. We did not agree to admit anything in the book because it was in the book. My understanding of the resolution we adopted was, that we might admit everything in the book which was competent and that we might fairly presume the Secretary of the Interior considered, because it was before him, and not because it was in the book.

As to the letter. It is no more competent or just to attack the character of Mr. Wilber than it would be to attack the character of General Sypher or Mr. Hill. We properly excluded such testimony, and we ought to exclude this. We ought not to go into the question of character here as we did not go into there. I took that to be the effect of the decision of the committee at that time—that they did not want to go into the question of character. We are not trying a case or determining a conclusion which would be final, and therefore we do not consider the question of character. That is the view I take of these affidavits—that they are reversing the former action of the committee, and that there is no action of the committee which makes them competent evidence. Therefore I think they should be stricken out.

The resolution which the gentleman refers to I find reads as follows: "Resolved, That the committee adhere to the resolution heretofore adopted, and refuse the motion to go into any investigation as to the alleged fraudulent issue of the Bell patent, further than the evidence in the record used before the Secretary of the Interior discloses."

Mr. RANNEY. Commencing on page 1134 there is an affidavit or statement, a part of this record, of General Duncan S. Walker, in reference to the Roberts torpedo and barbed-wire cases. When that statement was offered I objected to it and the matter was discussed. I said if it was understood that the whole of the record was to go in, that it was proper to put that in as a thing before the Secretary of the Interior. I took that ground. You ruled it in for one purpose, and I claimed that if it went in it should go in as a part of that record. You made a ruling on it which put it in on another ground which we overruled, and the clerk called the roll and the vote was taken.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the committee overrule the ground on which it was put, or the admission of the paper?

Mr. RANNEY. Overruled the ground. The record says: "So the decision of the chair was overruled, and the papers were admitted" on the ground that they were in that report.

The CHAIRMAN. I think the gentleman is inaccurate in his statement, if my memory is right about the matter. I first raised the question as to whether that paper was competent evidence, whether it was authenticated and proved. I said if it was not authenticated I would rule against its admission. That matter was waived. Then I held that it was admissible as giving a statement (assuming it to have been properly authenticated) of one of the cases that had been passed upon, as one of the applications for the suit by the Government.

Mr. RANNEY. I will refer to the record so that there will be no mistake about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will agree that my reason for it could not be submitted to the committee, but the decision was submitted to the committee.

Mr. RANNEY. The discussion begins on page 1131 of our record, which reads as follows:

"The CHAIRMAN. I will not hold that these two volumes could be given in evidence.

"Mr. RANNEY. We have put in a part already.

"The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection made to the method of proving it, the paper can go in.

"Mr. RANNEY. If you do not admit it on that ground, I shall make objection, because we have already put in what was deemed important in that book.

"The CHAIRMAN. Upon what ground?

"Mr. RANNEY. As being a part of the proceedings before the Secretary of the Interior.

"The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman ought either to make an objection that he thinks is a good one, and that he is ready to stand upon, or he ought to let it go in. I do not want to make a conditional ruling.

"Mr. RANNEY. On the ground you admit it, I shall object to it as incompetent proof, and I do it because a part is already in.

"The CHAIRMAN. I do not understand there is any objection to the method of making this proof, and therefore I hold the papers are admissible, and are in evidence.

"Mr. RANNEY. I object on that ground.

"The CHAIRMAN. If the objection is made that the facts in regard to the case are not properly proved, I shall sustain the objection.

"Mr. RANNEY. I make the objection.

"The CHAIRMAN. The objection is sustained.

"Mr. HALL. I appeal from the decision of the chair. I want that record that has been offered, introduced in evidence, and I want to make this statement—

"The CHAIRMAN. I will first state the question. From the ruling of the chair, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hall] appeals, and the question is, shall the decision of the chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

"Mr. HALL. The point I make is that examination has been made again and again to show what was before the various Government officers in making their decision. When Mr. Goode was on the stand, his attention was called, with great detail, to the cases he had before him, and considered, and to cases he did not have before him; and he was asked if he did not know about this case and about that case. The whole direction of the examination was with reference to whether the order of the officer was in the ordinary course of business and supported by proper precedents. Here is the order of the Secretary of the Interior, which is one of the orders which we are investigating. There has been a great deal of evidence as to what procedure was had and what matter involved. I hold with reference to that feature of his order that it is proper to show what precedents he had before him, and whether it was in accordance with a very recent precedent which had received more or less consideration."

"Mr. EDEN. Mr. Chairman, without having examined the paper itself, I would not feel disposed to vote to overrule the decision of the chair. The others may have read it. I have not."

Then Mr. Oates says:

"Mr. OATES. I think it ought to be admitted for this reason: We have already treated the papers appearing on that record as being authentic. Mr. Ranney, the gentleman who raises the objection now, has offered several of them, which have been admitted on his motion."

Then the discussion proceeds, and I state on the next page, 1133, this:

"Mr. RANNEY. I wish to be perfectly fair about it, and wish to be understood. It is not captiousness on my part. The gentlemen on the other side have argued that the conduct of the Secretary of the Interior in granting this second suit is a matter that is open to our supervision and revision. That would lead to this idea, and I have had it in mind before: That either side may put in what it likes; Mr. Young may put in what he likes, and the committee have a right to put in everything on which that judgment was based. If you go into it on the ground of revising the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, you have got to have everything in on which that opinion was based. Now, if the committee desire to go into that, then what I say is this: If it goes in on that ground of course it opens up the whole record. Mr. Young cannot be permitted to select a portion of it and put that in, but everything that bears on that issue and on the correctness of the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior should go in, and we must revise it. I am willing to go into it. I think it is open to us. I think it is within the scope of our inquiry; and further, I think the whole record is competent evidence if the committee are going to determine on the correctness of that decision or the reasons for it. That is why I make this objection. I do not mean that only a part of the record should go in."

"Mr. EDEN. We have a part of it in already."

"Mr. RANNEY. It has been offered. I have not heard the committee rule on it."

"Mr. HALL. You have been offering fragments of the record ever since the investigation first commenced, and now after you have got in what you want you ought not to object to other parts being put in."

"Mr. RANNEY. I claim that the whole record is competent."

"Mr. HALL. That question has never been raised before."

"Mr. RANNEY. I do not mean that you shall select a portion."

"Mr. HALL. I do not mean that you shall."

"Mr. EDEN. I do not understand that an appeal is to be taken from the Secretary of the Interior to a committee of Congress who is to revise his judgment. This committee is directed to inquire into the reason and authority on the part of the Government for the institution of the suit. I suppose, under that provision, we would have a right to see upon what ground it was ordered."

"Mr. OATES. The language of the resolution in that regard is as follows: 'What contracts have been made, what moneys paid or to be paid, to any person or persons as assistant counsel to the Attorney-General or Solicitor-General of the United States, the reason and authority for constituting the United States as a party to said suit or suits, and all matters connected therewith.'"

"The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen, the question has already been stated. Those who favor sustaining the decision of the chair will vote ay, and those opposed will vote no."

"The clerk called the roll and the vote was as follows:

"Ayes, Messrs. Ranney and Moffatt. Noes, Messrs. Oates, Eden, and Hall."

"So the decision of the chair was overruled, and the papers were admitted."

Mr. HALL. How did you vote there?

Mr. RANNEY. I voted to sustain the decision.

Mr. HALL. You voted right the reverse of the position you are now maintaining?

Mr. RANNEY. I beg your pardon; the ruling of the chairman was this—

The CHAIRMAN. I just excluded the paper, that was all, and the committee overruled me and said it should go in.

Mr. RANNEY. The ruling of the committee was that it should go in because it was a part of the record.

The CHAIRMAN. I cannot say that, nor can you, because that does not appear.

Mr. RANNEY. I say here that the paper is admissible because it is part of the record.

The CHAIRMAN. On your objection that the paper was not proved I excluded the paper, after stating that if proof of it was waived I would hold it admissible. You objected on that ground. It was excluded, and from that decision Mr. Hall took an appeal and the decision of the chair was overruled, you voting to sustain the chair.

Mr. RANNEY. You do not state my position correctly. I say in my argument there distinctly that that paper is admissible, because it is part of the record, and Mr. Hall says so, too.

The CHAIRMAN. Then you put—

Mr. RANNEY. No, I don't. I said if you put it on the ground that it is admissible because it is part of the record, I say the ruling is right, and if you do not, I say it is wrong. And then, whatever has been voted, the committee by decision have voted that in, because it is part of the record, and that is the decision of the committee overruling the chair.

Mr. HALE. Are we making any progress?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes, we are.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a statement not warranted by the facts as the chair sees them.

Mr. HALE. I want to state this: Although I have a poor memory and want to be careful, my recollection is that some days ago it was agreed, on motion of Mr. Oates, that whilst this Interior Department record was not to go into our record, it was to be considered as evidence so far as the committee desired to use it. Day before yesterday, as I remember, that action was rather reversed and Mr. Ranney was allowed to select out and give to the chairman a list of letters and documents that he wanted to introduce into our record, and the chairman was also authorized to act in concert with him and select such other parts of that record as he thought ought to go in. I voted against that action myself. I thought then and think now that we should adhere to the other resolution which was adopted. How far we are called upon as a committee to pass on the action of the Interior Department in ordering that second suit I am not prepared to say now. There are many things in that record, however, that perhaps every member of the committee would like to consider in making up his opinion and report, and I think it is the best plan to adhere to that resolution and consider all of that record which was before the Interior Department put in evidence for us to use for any purpose; and I am opposed to selecting out of that record documents not even proven as authentic to put into this record.

Again, this man Wilber is not before us as a witness. It is true certain affidavits were introduced here signed by him, but he is not here as a witness, and if not, we have no right to impeach him in the ordinary way. If there is anything appearing on that entire record which detracts from the force and effect of his testimony, perhaps we might consider it when we reach that branch of the case. But my view is we have nothing to do with the validity of the Bell patent. I do not think the resolution under which we are acting authorizes any investigation by us into the validity of that patent.

Mr. RANNEY. We have all agreed to that.

Mr. HALE. And if we are not authorized to do that, what have we got to do with the Wilber testimony or the Wilber affidavits? They are all intended to bear on that question—the question of fraud in the issuing of the Bell patent. As I have said, we have not yet determined how far we will consider the action of the Interior Department in the ordering of that suit. I suppose the language of the resolution would at least indicate that it was our duty to ascertain the main facts in regard to the bringing of that suit. But what judgment is to be based on it, I am not prepared to say. I shall vote to exclude from our record any one single document singled out of that Interior Department record and offered here by itself. I shall adhere to the original resolution to consider that record as before this committee, as in evidence for any purpose for which you desire to use it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must see that injustice may be done if we draw the line now, after papers have been put in in that way.

Mr. HALE. The way is to introduce witnesses.

The CHAIRMAN. No; Judge Ranney introduced into evidence a large number of papers—

Mr. RANNEY. They were put in under the resolution, and the chairman was to designate what he thought proper to go in.

Mr. HALE. You have got in all that you want, then?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes. It was done by decision of the committee.

Mr. HALE. If those papers are in our record the others ought to go in also; but I did not understand that they had gone into our record. I thought you and the chairman were to agree on the documents that should go in.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; and my suggestion is that certain of them shall be stricken out of the record.

Mr. HALE. I voted against that action the other day, and I am satisfied you did wrong in admitting those single documents to go into our record.

Mr. RANNEY. You see where it would leave us. I propose to refer to those documents.

Mr. HALE. Couldn't you refer to them in the other record we have before us?

Mr. RANNEY. I should have to print them out of that record.

Mr. HALE. The resolution of the committee was that we were to regard that Interior Department record as evidence. Then why do you want it to go into our document?

Mr. RANNEY. We agreed the other day that there was a great deal of it, to wit, all that bore on the validity of the Bell patent and the priority and originality, that there was no need of printing. But what bore on certain things we agreed it was proper should go in. It was first said that Mr. Boyle and myself might select a portion of it, whatever portion we thought necessary, to save printing. I designated half a dozen things which I thought should go in, and they have been put in, and Mr. Boyle was to designate what he thought should go in.

Mr. HALE. Do you claim or admit that the whole of that record is before the committee to be used as we choose to use it?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes; that has already been settled by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Only that part that the committee determines relevant and competent. I do not agree that simply because the Bell and other companies saw fit to print certain papers in those books that therefore they were in evidence before the Secretary. I say the Secretary regarded only those which he decided were competent evidence.

Mr. HALE. Haven't we what purports to be a record of the proceedings before the Commissioner or the Secretary of the Interior?

The CHAIRMAN. No; we have not.

Mr. HALL. Let me make a suggestion. Suppose this case that we call the proceedings before the Secretary of the Interior had been tried before a court where evidence could have been introduced formally, subject to objection and exception as they went along, and a record had been made as to which of those particular papers were admitted and which were not, it would be easy to take up that record and know exactly what the court used in making up its judgment. But that was not the procedure before the Secretary of the Interior. There the parties came and piled in any sort of document, whether competent or not, and it was put before the Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN. Further than that, it was all printed beforehand.

Mr. HALL. Yes, all printed beforehand, and that makes the point that there is a great deal of evidence in there which was incompetent, and the presumption must be that the Secretary of the Interior did not consider it for that reason.

Mr. HALE. That is the reason I do not want it to go into our record, because there was so much there totally incompetent and irrelevant to this issue. Therefore it was agreed that the record should be before us, and we might use such parts as we deemed material.

Mr. RANNEY. The difference in the hearing there was that each party put in its evidence or affidavits, and those affidavits were before him; and that was the record on which the case was argued. Now, can we speculate as to what particular part of them he considered?

Mr. HALE. We cannot enter his mind and ascertain what documents he was influenced by, but we have our own judgment to make up on this transaction from the record.

Mr. HALL. Let me make a further suggestion. Judge Ranney has read the conversation between members of the committee the other day when that paper was offered in evidence. Now I insist that we do not sit here to review or revise the decision of the Secretary of the Interior, as stated by Judge Ranney.

Mr. HALE. That is a question we have not come to.

Mr. HALL. Because the officer may have made a mistake. His decision may not have been correct on the papers before him. But we are not here to consider that. We are to consider whether any improper influence was brought to bear to induce him to make that decision. That is what we are here for.

Mr. HANBACK. I would like to make a suggestion. As I understand it, the record of the proceedings before the Secretary of the Interior was to be considered as a whole, and out of that we have selected such testimony as was deemed material.

Mr. HALE. To use it so far as we deemed it material, but not to go to the expense of printing it.

Mr. HANBACK. If that is so, who is to decide as to the materiality? Each member of the committee will make up his statement from these proceedings as presented to the Secretary of the Interior.

The CHAIRMAN. It comes back to this: The Walker and other matters do not affect the question I raised, from my standpoint. Here is Mr. Wilbur introduced as a witness, although not before the committee, and certain affidavits have been read here for the purpose of showing that he has given affidavits on both sides, at one time alleging irregularity in the granting of the Bell patent, and at another time not. Here are certain other affidavits introduced setting forth that Mr. Wilbur was arrested at a certain time for committing some offense.

Mr. HALE. That was in the Interior Department record.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; but getting rid of that fact for a moment, here are certain affidavits proving that Mr. Wilbur was arrested and taken before a police magistrate and held over; I do not know what was done.

Mr. RANNEY. He plead guilty.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not material whether he plead guilty or was entirely innocent, in the view I take of it. At a certain time Mr. Wilbur writes a letter to Mr. Bell soliciting an interview, and Mr. Bell denies it. What is that introduced here for?

What is the purpose of it? The purpose is to discredit Mr. Wilber, and Mr. Wilber is, of course, to be a witness in the suit that the Government is to institute, and he is to be gotten rid of beforehand. That is to say, you are attacking the character of Mr. Wilber when we have refused to allow the character of General Sypher and others to be attacked. We have refused to go into the question of character, and yet here we are allowing, by affidavit, the character of a witness to be attacked and overthrown. By what? By evidence proving his general reputation? Not at all. But you bring in evidence of a particular offense that has no connection with the matter.

Mr. HALE. I am opposed to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course it is improper.

Mr. HALE. And yet I am in favor of considering that Department record as before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. So am I.

Mr. RANNEY. The chairman will not understand me or cannot. I do not put it in to attack Mr. Wilber or try his character before this committee, or say that it shall go in for that purpose. I put it in to show the contradictory affidavits of Mr. Wilber; to show that he was contradicted before the Secretary of the Interior.

The CHAIRMAN. Why so? Contradicted because he was arrested and carried to a police court? That is not contradiction.

Mr. RANNEY. I put it in as the evidence that the Secretary of the Interior had before him.

The CHAIRMAN. It was not before him; it had no business before him; it would not have been admitted before him. The fact is it was printed by the Bell Company, and he could not get it out of his office, but he was not bound to consider it.

Mr. RANNEY. As a lawyer I have yet to learn that it is not competent to impeach a witness by proving his conviction in a court of a felony or an offense.

The CHAIRMAN. Now we do come to it. Then it is to impeach Mr. Wilber?

Mr. RANNEY. No; I said it was competent before the Interior Department.

The CHAIRMAN. A moment ago you denied any purpose of impeaching Mr. Wilber.

Mr. RANNEY. I never saw a man so blind! I say it was competent before the Secretary of the Interior to impeach him, and that it impeached him there; what he did was the basis of judgment.

The CHAIRMAN. Then why should we impeach witnesses here?

Mr. RANNEY. We are not trying that here. We are simply showing the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior on the evidence before him.

The CHAIRMAN. No; that is not correct, any more than the other is.

Mr. RANNEY. I say it is. I have all along agreed with the committee that we could not go into that evidence here, but we can show what was there.

The CHAIRMAN. You cannot impeach the character of Mr. Wilber here, but you can show that the character of Mr. Wilber was impeached before the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes, and that is just the difference.

The CHAIRMAN. You cannot impeach the character of the witnesses coming before this committee to testify to a material fact affecting our investigation? That would be a singular condition of things.

Mr. RANNEY. We are showing what the Secretary of the Interior had before him on which to base the judgment which is under our revision. I say it was competent to impeach any witness who had come before us and been sworn.

The CHAIRMAN. Why did we not do it? When Mr. Van Benthuyzen offered to come in and impeach Mr. Pulitzer, General Sypher, and Mr. Hill, the committee refused to allow it, with your concurrence.

Mr. RANNEY. It was because Mr. Oates's resolution shut down on it.

Mr. HALL. You cannot make that a reasonable ground of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. And you do not get rid of the fact, whatever may be the intention, that Mr. Wilber will be an important witness in the Government suit, and that a committee of Congress, having some regard for the Government interest, is putting that in beforehand to destroy him.

Mr. HANBACK. I am not helping to bolster up the Pan-Electric or the Bell Company. I do not give a continental which one goes up or down.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Wilber is not a witness and therefore we cannot impeach him. I am in favor of considering in evidence the whole of that Interior Department record. What is in it I do not know, and do not care much.

The CHAIRMAN. What I did this morning was simply to call the matter to the attention of the committee. There is no question pending.

Mr. HALL. I make this statement to go on the record: That when the proposition arose regarding these two books called the Interior Department record, I made a motion that the subject of determining what portion of those books should go into this record should be referred to the chairman and Judge Ranney, and where they disagreed the matter should be referred to the committee, and I think that was the proper course and is the proper course now. I think there is a great deal in that record which is immaterial and incompetent. I want to say further, that I disagree in toto with the idea advanced to-day and heretofore, that we sit here for the purpose of determining whether the decision of the Secretary of the Interior was correct or not, or was supported by sufficient evidence. Whatever portion of that record is competent, is competent for the purpose of showing whether any improper influences were brought to bear on the Secretary of the Interior, whether any man in his Department had stock in these companies, and whether his opinion was a bought opinion, a corrupt one. It is only in that view that we have anything to do with his decision.

Mr. HALE. We may agree on that question when we get to it. I do not think it is before the committee now.

Mr. RANNEY. If there is anything in that record that Mr. Boyle or any other member of the committee wants printed, it can be indicated, and it is their right to put it in. I would put it in if I deemed it material.

Mr. HANBACK. It is admitted that that record is before us, but who is going to control my judgment in the report I may make as to what portion of it I will use. It is a question for the consideration of the committee, in making up its report, but no one can restrain me from sending in a report containing such portions of that record as I may choose to refer to. I can take from that book such evidence as I deem material to the issue. It is a question for each member of the committee. We cannot rule it out.

Mr. RANNEY. We can only judge what weight the Secretary of the Interior may have put upon it.

Mr. HALE. If we are to let each side select such parts of that record as they deem material, then the committee may have to decide upon the materiality of every document in it.

Mr. HALL. We have been doing that before.

Mr. HALE. And to obviate the trouble the first understanding was that we should admit the whole volume in evidence.

Mr. HALL. To settle the question I make the motion that these affidavits, which in my judgment are incompetent as evidence, and could not legally have been considered by the Secretary of the Interior, be stricken out.

Mr. RANNEY. How can you tell whether he considered them of weight or not? You form your opinion and say that he ought not to consider them.

Mr. HALL. I say it is evidence incompetent under the ordinary rules of law.

Mr. RANNEY. If I had been before the Secretary of the Interior and he had raised any question, I should claim that when any man was arraigned in a court of competent jurisdiction and charged with attempting the life of a woman, and he had plead guilty to it, it would be competent as affecting the man's credibility. That is one mode of impeaching a man, to show that he has been convicted of an offense.

Mr. HALE. I move to amend Mr. Hall's motion so as to provide that the whole of that record be considered as before the committee to be used by them for such purposes as they think proper.

Mr. RANNEY. That has already been decided by the committee, and it so appears in the record.

Mr. HALE. Then that is the understanding, is it?

The CHAIRMAN. That does not meet the question as to what shall be printed in our record.

Mr. HALL. The Bell Telephone Company saw proper to print certain books containing certain affidavits. The question is whether this committee is going to take up and advertise to the world what they saw proper to put in their books.

Mr. HANBACK. Isn't it so with the other side?

Mr. HALL. Yes; but we have not printed any such part of the record as that.

Mr. HANBACK. You have put in all you want of it.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not my judgment that everything that happens to be printed in that book is to go in evidence, or that that of itself makes it competent evidence. All competent evidence printed in that book may be considered as in evidence here.

Mr. HALE. If that record is before the committee, to be used by them as they think proper, each member would have the right to select his own testimony, and make a report based on that. We cannot control the action of any member of the committee on that subject.

The CHAIRMAN. We are not making a record for ourselves alone, but for the House as well, you should remember.

Mr. HALE. But Judge Ranney and Mr. Hanback or any other member would have the right to select any portion they deem material, and base their report on it.

Mr. HALL. Provided it is competent evidence.

Mr. HALE. Then we would have to pass on the relevancy and competency of everything in that book.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not think anything would be gained by attempting to suppress that.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been stated that the record of the proceedings has been printed in this book. That is not correct. It is nothing but extracts from newspapers.

Mr. HALE. With the understanding that the record is before the committee, I should vote to exclude anything in the record that is in that book.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the effect of your motion?

Mr. HALE. My motion is that that whole record be considered as before the committee, and as in evidence, but not to be printed in our record; but any portion of it may be used by the committee or any member of it.

The CHAIRMAN. Allow me to inquire what you would do with that portion already selected and put in the record?

Mr. HALE. I should recommend that you be allowed to select and put into the record any portion that you please. I believe that was the understanding.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not understand that I have a right to select any portion.

Mr. RANNEY. It was so regarded, and it was settled by a vote of the committee previously, when Colonel Young was allowed to select from it two articles which he put in; that was done on vote of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. I should say that under the agreement Judge Ranney or myself might select anything that was competent evidence and put it in.

Mr. RANNEY. The ground on which you permitted that to be done restricted it, and it was ruled out by the committee; but it was ruled in on the ground that it was part of that record, and it is so recorded.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not according to my recollection of the occurrence.

Mr. RANNEY. I have read the record just as it is.

The CHAIRMAN. And I have heard it read.

Mr. HALE. My recollection is that the other day it was agreed that Judge Ranney should select such papers as he thought should go in from that book, and that the chairman was to do the same thing.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not think that Judge Ranney or myself should select what we please, because it was stated then that if we disagreed in regard to the matter the question should be laid before the committee for decision. You will find that in the record.

Mr. RANNEY. You will find that when that suggestion was made I had already put in what I desired, and had only three more papers to submit, and I said, "Now Mr. Boyle may select whatever he sees fit."

Mr. HALL. You will remember, right there, that you were selecting papers I had never seen, and therefore I could not make any objection to them, and I thought there ought to be some regulation about that matter?

Mr. RANNEY. How can you disagree about such a matter? Here on page 1161 of the record it says:

"Mr. OATES. It was decided the other day that we need not put in the whole of that record and have it printed in our record, but as it was already printed by itself, we could refer to it for the purpose of evidence."

It also says here:

"Mr. OATES. I thought it was understood that all the evidence in this record of the Department of the Interior was put in?"

Mr. MILLARD. Suppose we leave it to Judge Ranney and the chairman to determine what portion shall be put in our record?

Mr. HALL. On page 1162 of the record is what I said on this subject:

"Mr. HALL. I agree to the suggestion made by Mr. Oates, that the particular portions and parts of the record to be submitted as evidence should be left to the determination of the chairman and Mr. Ranney. That, I understand, was his motion. I have only to suggest that wherever a disagreement arises between them as to what should go in, it should be referred to the committee. I think that is the proper course. I do not like to sit here and have a lot of documents I have not read go in. I do not know what is in them."

There was the difficulty before me.

Mr. RANNEY. Then you will find on the following pages that the matter was discussed, and I said I did not want to meet the chairman for that purpose, as I had already indicated what I wanted to put in, and that he might do the same, and that ended the matter. We discussed each one as it came along, and when we came to the Adams book, which was the last thing after all had been put in, I submitted what was necessary from that and handed it to the chairman to see if there was anything more wanted, and I thought the matter was ended.

Mr. HALE. I see that all the way through that document was regarded as in evidence before the committee. Colonel Oates claimed it, and other members claimed they could use such parts as they might desire.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa (Mr. Hall) moves to exclude the affidavits named, the affidavits of Bell, Tompkins, and Guy, from the printed record.

Mr. RANNEY. I say it is not in order to exclude them, because they have been admitted and printed in the record.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri (Mr. Hale) moves as an amendment to the motion to exclude those affidavits, that the whole book be considered as before the committee as evidence to be used as may be thought proper.

Mr. HANBACK. That has already been done.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not think the motion of the gentleman from Missouri is germane.

Mr. HALE. That seems to have been admitted all the way through, the other day, by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was put and the motion was disagreed to.

Mr. HALE. Now, I move, to settle the matter finally, that all of that record be considered as before the committee, to be used as they may think proper in making up their report or reports, and not to be printed in our record.

The CHAIRMAN. I will state the motion. The motion of the gentleman from Missouri is that the entire record, the two volumes, be considered in evidence.

Mr. HALE. I did not say anything about two volumes, but I mean whatever purports to be the record of the proceedings before the Interior Department.

Mr. RANNEY. We might have adopted that course at the outset, but inasmuch as the committee has acted on a different basis, and part of the record is already put in and printed, you will have to go back in the record and take things out. Then there would be this difficulty about it: This record is to go to the House. There are only a few volumes of this Interior Department record printed, and nobody could make a report of anything in it except by copying from it.

Mr. HALE. We can make it a part of our record.

Mr. RANNEY. Then we will have to print all of it.

Mr. HALE. I am not willing to let the documents you select in and keep out the balance.

The CHAIRMAN. They are in now.

Mr. HALE. The chairman was to select such portions as he thought ought to go in; that was the understanding. There may be some other parts of that record that members of the committee would desire to use in making up the report, and that would be embraced by my motion.

Mr. RANNEY. We have that right now.

Mr. HALE. Is it your understanding, Judge Ranney, that this whole record is before the committee, so that any portion of it may be used by any member?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes, I understood it in that way, and Mr. Oates so understood it, I believe.

Mr. OATES. That is my understanding.

Mr. HALE. That precludes the necessity for my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The entire discussion has been caused by a suggestion I made that the affidavits of two gentlemen showing that Mr. Wilber was arrested for some offense in Washington, and the letter from Mr. Wilber to Mr. Bell, requesting an interview with him, were not competent evidence for any purpose, and ought to be excluded. The committee has determined that they shall remain a part of the record.

Mr. RANNEY. Simply because they are part of the record of the Interior Department.

Mr. OATES. Yes; that is the only argument in favor it—that they were before the Interior Department.

The CHAIRMAN. Then I will indicate some of the papers I desire to put in evidence. I desire the affidavit of Mr. Wilber of the 30th of July, which is on page 24 h. of the Interior Department record, to go in, if it is not already in. (The affidavit referred to is already printed on page 313 of this record.) There are some other papers in this same record which I will indicate to the stenographer, and he can put them in the record.

Mr. RANNEY. Is there anything in the Adams book you desire to have go in?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. I notice that the extracts you made from this book are single sentences. I agree with the suggestion made by you the other day that that part of the book which relates to the cases tried should go in. There is a good deal of it. It begins on page 230 and runs to page 265.

Mr. RANNEY. As coming out of the Adams book?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. The adjudications which I have given in conclude the sentences which Judge Ranney put in.

I also desire to have put in our record the Reis prospectus, on page 275 of the Adams book and running to page 278. Also Elisha Gray's caveat, on page 369.

I will also submit here, to have go in the record, the report received from the Department of Justice, containing the records of the Department in regard to cases in which applications have been made for the institution of suits in the name of the Government for the revocation of patents for inventions, which were granted. Also a list of the cases in which such applications were refused.

I introduce also the three opinions delivered by Assistant Secretaries Jenks and Muldrow, of the Interior Department, and the opinion of Mr. Montgomery, the Commissioner of Patents.

Also a copy of the bill filed in the Columbus suit. Also the statement of Gardiner G. Hubbard in reply to interrogatories addressed to him by the committee.

I have here the correspondence between General Bradley T. Johnson and Mr. Casey Young, which was handed to me yesterday, and which may go into the record if it is desired.

Affidavit of W. J. Green.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, City of Washington, ss:

Before me, the subscriber, a notary public in and for said District, personally appeared William J. Green, who, being duly sworn, did depose and say:

My name is William J. Green. I am thirty-eight years of age, and reside in the city of Washington, D. C. My occupation is, and has been for sixteen years past, that of electrician. Since the year 1879 to the present date I have been electrician of the Smithsonian Institution and National Museum at Washington City, and for six years prior to 1879 I did most of the electrical work of the Smithsonian Institution. There is in the Smithsonian Institution, and under my care, an apparatus known as the Reis telephone, which I find, from the records of said Institution, was sent to the Institution from Paris, France, by Rudolph Koenig, a manufacturer of scientific instruments, and was received at the Institution in October, 1874. The instruments I have referred to above as the Reis telephone, consist of a telephonic transmitter and a receiver. They are still in the Smithsonian Institution, and are, to the best of my knowledge and belief, in exactly the same condition as when received at the Institute, with the following exceptions: The cavity in the top of the transmitter was covered with a circular glass plate, which served merely as a cover and performed no other function than to protect the plates; this glass was broken, but was replaced by another similar plate of glass. The skin diaphragm of the transmitter having become split by shrinkage, I replaced it by another skin diaphragm, which is attached to the instrument in the same way as was the original diaphragm. The original diaphragm is still in existence and in my custody. And the binding screw of the instrument which holds the strip of platinum resting on the diaphragm, having become loose and detached, I replaced it with another and similar binding screw. Otherwise the instrument is now in its original condition. This transmitter has the figures "29" impressed in the glass plate near the speaking tube and the receiver has the same figures on it. These figures refer to corresponding figures on the invoice received with the instruments from Paris, and in Koenig's catalogue of scientific articles (a copy of which is in the possession of the Smithsonian Institution), and refer to the Reis telephone in said catalogue.

I have myself made a copy of the transmitter belonging to the Smithsonian Institution, to which I have referred above, which copy represents accurately all the working parts of the original instrument in possession of said Institution. To this copy is attached a piece of paper on which are the words, "Reis transmitter," with my signature and the date of this affidavit.

I have operated both of the original instruments above referred to, as the Reis transmitter and the Reis receiver at the National Museum in Washington City.

On one occasion in May, 1881, I placed the Reis transmitter in circuit with a battery; the transmitter was placed in my room at the National Museum and the Reis receiver was placed in the same circuit in a room overhead. These rooms are separated by a spiral staircase leading to the third story of the building. The building is a very solid one of brick and the ceiling between the rooms is made of brick arches with concrete over the arch and under the floor of the upper room. When the doors were closed, as they were during this experiment, no sound of speech could be heard by natural means from one room to the other. On this occasion I tried and tested the transmitter with two kinds of receivers, with the original Reis receiver and also with what is known as the Bell telephone. When used with the Reis receiver I used as a battery two Grenet cells, when used with the so-called Bell receiver I used a Le Clanche battery. With the Reis transmitter and the Bell receivers conversation was distinctly heard by me through the instruments and with the Reis transmitter and the Reis receiver I heard several sentences of articulate speech. I have tested these instruments at other times since that date.

On the 18th day of December, 1884, at the request of Mr. L. A. Duncan, of the Western Pennsylvania Telegraph and Telephone Company, and Mr. J. T. McConnell, I put the Reis transmitter, the same one which I have before referred to as being in possession of the Smithsonian Institution, in circuit with a magnetic receiver, such as is known as the Bell receiver, with four cells of the Le Clanche battery, and with the following result:

The Reis transmitter was placed in my room in the National Museum, and the receiver in the room overhead; these being the same rooms in which the trial I have before referred to was made, and the trial was made under the same conditions as the trial in 1881, before-mentioned. I spoke through the Reis transmitter several sentences, among which were the following:

"Will Conkling be the next Senator from New York?"

"Who will be Cleveland's Secretary of State?"

"How far is it from here to Pittsburgh?"

"I have found a bad contract, cleaned it up and think it is all right now."

During the time when I was speaking through the transmitter, Mr. Duncan and Mr. McConnell were in the upper rooms where the receiver was; when they came down-stairs to my room, they stated that they had been listening to me at the receiver, and one of them read to me from a paper or papers what had been transmitted by me, and I remembered what was read to me corresponded with what I had spoken into the transmitter.

The following corrections were made in the foregoing affidavits before the same was signed and sworn to by the affiant. On the second page the word "circular" written over an erasure on the 5th line, the word "protect" partly written over on the 7th line. On third page an erasure was made on 9th line, and also at end of 23d and beginning of 24th line. On fourth page the word "times" written over an erasure on 2d line, and the word "Duncan" on 4th line.

Affidavit of Thomas A. Edison.

STATE OF NEW YORK, city and county of New York, ss :

Thomas A. Edison, being duly sworn, deposes and says :

I reside in New York, and am 38 years of age, and am by occupation an inventor. I am the Thomas A. Edison, the patentee mentioned in English patent of July 30, 1877, No. 2909, for telephone. The inventions described and stated in that patent were made by me in 1875, the experiments continuing from that time right along, and culminating in the carbon telephone, now universally employed. The transmitting telephones now used by the American Bell Telephone Company employ that invention. The dates of some of my patents are, as I verily believe, stamped upon their transmitters. I had no knowledge of Bell's inventions in speaking telephones when I made that invention. I had knowledge of the Reis publications at that time.

Affidavit of Ashael K. Eaton.

STATE OF NEW YORK, Richmond County, ss :

Ashael K. Eaton, of lawful age, being duly sworn, says: That he is a resident of Brooklyn, New York, and by profession is an analytical chemist and electrician. That he has received a number of patents for electrical appliances, including telephones. That he was the inventor of the instruments used by the Eaton Telephone Company of New York.

Affiant further saith, that since the first publication of Reiss, he has been familiar with the Reiss telephone, and frequently in his lectures referred to the same. That in 1875 he began to develop and improve the Reiss instrument; and that in 1875 he constructed a purely Reiss instrument, both receiver and transmitter, through which he was able to transmit and receive articulate speech, in the summer of 1875.

Affiant further saith that he has since then frequently made Reiss instruments, using the platinum points of contact in the transmitter and the Reiss receiver, with satisfactory results, receiving distinct articulation.

Affiant further saith, that the Reiss instrument, constructed precisely as Reiss directed it should be constructed, will transmit articulate speech. And that affiant has demonstrated this to many persons. That the Reiss instrument constructed as directed by Reiss, in his opinion, communicates articulate speech very much better than the instrument described in Bell's patent of 1876. That the Reiss system, including both electric receiver, in all respects is the basis of the systems attributed to Bell.

Affiant further saith that the Blake transmitter in use to-day for the Bell Company is simply an improved reproduction of the Reiss transmitter, which was known, discovered, and published as early as 1861 or 1862.

Affiant further saith, he never claimed to be inventor of the telephone, but claims to be, as he sought to be, an improver of the Reiss telephone.

Affiant further saith that it is well known to scientists and practical electricians as early as 1861 to 1864, that the art of telephony was known and published by Reiss, and what all practical electricians were working for, was an improvement therein.

It was in the summer of 1875 that I first made my talking telephone, which I devised from the Reiss publications. I had the same in my rooms in Brooklyn, New York, and Mr. S. S. Pratt, of the New York World, was rooming with me at the time, and he assisted me in my experiments, and was at one end of the line when we talked. We succeeded in getting articulate speech fairly well, so that we could understand various words and sentences. It was, I believe, in 1878, that I first met Mr. Meucci. I think it was Mr. S. S. Pratt who called my attention to him as the inventor of a telephone from some publications that he had seen in an Italian newspaper, calling attention to a telephone invented by Mr. Meucci, and referring to a description of it in a former number.

I inquired for the paper and found that the issue referred to in this item had been destroyed by fire, and it was impossible to obtain it.

Right away after that I called upon Mr. Meucci and found him at his home in Clifton, Staten Island. He explained to me his telephone and the researches that he had made in arriving at his invention. I could not understand Mr. Meucci very well, but I gathered from him that his telephone consisted of two electric magnets connected to a battery which actuated a small piece of iron connected with a diaphragm on which was a metallic button.

Mr. Meucci, at the time I called to see him, I found to be very poor, and the next day I gave my check to the Italian consul of New York for $20 or $25, for Mr. Meucci. Mr. Meucci never spoke to me about his distressed condition, and I felt a delicacy to speak to him about it, but I saw from his surroundings that they were very poor.

I was the inventor of the telephone in the Spencer case. I never saw Mr. Spencer until he called at my office in Brooklyn to purchase some telephones. I may have seen him once or twice at that time. He said that he was from Boston, and wanted them to establish a line from Boston to Providence. I sold him some instruments, and soon thereafter the Spencer case was instituted in Boston. I think I never saw Spencer after I sold him the instruments. I was not asked to give my testimony in the Spencer case.

I always considered Reiss the inventor of the telephone, and the rest of us, including Bell and Gray, as improvers only on Reiss.

I understood at the time that the reason why my testimony should not be used in the Spencer case was because it would make another than Bell the inventor of the art. And to establish another as the inventor would throw the telephone open to the world.

I have always supposed that my testimony was not required because I did not claim to be the original inventor of the telephone, but only an improver upon the telephone of Reiss.

Dolbear papers.

STATE OF MASSACHUSETTS, Suffolk County, ss:

A. E. Dolbear, of lawful age, being sworn, says that he is 47 years of age, born in the State of Connecticut, educated at and graduated from the Ohio Wesleyan University at Delaware, Ohio, and Michigan State University at Ann Arbor, Michigan, and for the past eleven years has been professor of physics at Tufts College, Massachusetts.

I began my experiments in telephony in the summer of 1876, and on the 20th day of September, 1876, I invented the apparatus which is now known as the magneto-telephone, and is now used as a receiver by the Bell Telephone Co. One of these was made for me in October, 1876, by one of my students, under my directions, at the college, and the same is now in my possession at No. 70 Washington street, Boston. As the instrument was to be used as a transmitter, as well as a receiver, another similar instrument was to be made by the same student, who for some reason failed to complete it, as he ceased going to the college. In December I met Mr. P. D. Richards, of West Medford, Mass., and described my magneto-telephone to him, and at his suggestion I concluded to apply for a patent for the same, and at once began to make models for the Patent Office. The instruments began at that time, namely, in December, 1876, are in existence, one in my possession and the other in the possession of the Gold and Stock Co. of New York. Before I could get them finished, said Richards informed me that Bell said he had patented that magneto-telephone device two or three years before, and it was not worth while to do more about it, as I believed; my work upon it was therefore stopped. It appears from testimony since attained that Richards conferred with Mr. G. G. Hubbard, who was interested in Bell's inventions, describing my magneto-telephone and recommending to him that he should purchase my claims. Mr. Hubbard wrote to Bell what Richards had said to him of my work, and Bell wrote back that he already had it patented two or three years before, which word was sent to me and prevented me from completing the application for a patent. This correspondence was during the first week in January, 1877. Bell's application for a patent for the magneto-telephone is dated January 16, 1877, and it was issued Jan. 30th, 1877. I had never seen Bell nor his devices, nor did I see him or them until after his Salem experiments, in Feb., 1877; and the first information I had of the facts as to Bell's patent of 1877 I got from the Patent Office record some time in March, when I discovered I had been deceived. The records show that as late as Nov. 12th, 1876, Bell was still at work with electro-magnets and strong battery currents, and that such a device as is presented in the 1877 patent he was not at work upon.

During the fall of 1877 I made an agreement with the Gold and Stock Company of New York by which they were to apply for a patent for my magneto-telephone, and control it; they having made a similar agreement with Edison and Gray for their telephonic inventions.

The Gold and Stock Company of New York was in alliance with the Western Union Telegraph Company. As soon as the Gold and Stock Company made arrangements with me they began to manufacture my magneto-telephones and organizing exchanges, and so continued to do until the settlement and compromise between the Bell Company and the Gold and Stock Company in the Dowd case; at which time my magneto-telephone practically became the property of the Bell Telephone Company, and is now used by them. In the telephone interference case at the Patent Office I was not represented, as my invention was then controlled by the Bell Company.

In the Dolbear case I did not admit that the Reis telephone was not a speaking telephone, but, on the contrary, I stated that Reis did invent a speaking telephone in 1861, that he used his device, or, as he called it, his telephone for the transmission of speech, and that the only difference between the Reis transmitter and the Blake transmitter consists in the substituting of a piece of carbon for the platinum used by Reis, and that the system employed by the Bell company to-day is nothing but an improvement upon Reis's telephone, an improved transmitter and a more sensitive receiver, not differing at all in principle from Reis, but simply in efficiency. I did not admit that Bell was the first inventor of the speaking telephone. I am familiar with all the different devices that have been invented for telephonic purposes, and know that it is not very difficult to make almost any kind of telegraphic apparatus to serve in some way for a telephone, and among them all there is not a poorer device for telephonic purposes than the one shown in Bell's patent for 1876.

That I do not stand alone in my opinion as to Reis's telephone, its structure and mode of operation may be seen by the subjoined letters received from some of the scientific men in the country, whose opinion I asked as to Reis's work. I had asked their opinion—

1st. As to whether Reis invented an electric speaking telephone or not.

2d. Whether its mode of operation was or was not similar in all respects to the present Bell telephone system.

3d. Whether Reis used his telephone for the transmission of speech.

4th. Whether the chief difficulty with Reis's apparatus was not in the receiver rather than in his transmitter, the receiver being not very sensitive.

I hereto attach these written statements to my affidavit marked Exhibits 1, 2, 3, &c., and make them part hereof.

Application of Alexander Graham Bell.

[United States Patent Office. Alexander Graham Bell, of Salem, Massachusetts. Improvement in telegraphy. Specification forming part of letters patent No. 174,465, dated March 7, 1876; application filed February 14, 1876.]

To all whom it may concern:

Be it known that I, Alexander Graham Bell, of Salem, Massachusetts, have invented certain new and useful improvements in telegraphy, of which the following is a specification:

In letters patent granted to me April 6, 1875, No. 161,739, I have described a method of, and apparatus for, transmitting two or more telegraphic signals simultaneously along a single wire by the employment of transmitting instruments, each of which occasions a succession of electrical impulses differing in rate from the others; and of receiving instruments, each tuned to a pitch at which it will be put in vibration to produce its fundamental note by one only of the transmitting instruments; and of vibratory circuit breakers operating to convert the vibratory movement of the receiving instrument into a permanent make or break (as the case may be) of a local circuit, in which is placed a Morse sounder, register, or other telegraphic apparatus. I have also therein described a form of autograph-telegraph based upon the action of the above-mentioned instruments.

In illustration of my method of multiple telegraphy I have shown in the patent aforesaid, as one form of transmitting instrument, an electro-magnet having a steel-spring armature, which is kept in vibration by the action of a local battery. This armature in vibrating makes and breaks the main circuit, producing an intermittent current upon the line-wire. I have found, however, that upon this plan the limit to the number of signals that can be sent simultaneously over the same wire is very speedily reached; for, when a number of transmitting instruments, having different rates of vibration, are simultaneously making and breaking the same circuit, the effect upon the main line is practically equivalent to one continuous current.

[My present invention consists in the employment of a vibratory current of electricity in place of a merely intermittent one; and of a method of, and apparatus for, producing electrical undulations upon the line-wire.]

In a pending application for letters patent, filed in the United States Patent Office February 25, 1875, I have described two ways of producing the intermittent current—the one by actual make and break of contact, the other by alternately increasing and diminishing the intensity of the current without actually breaking the circuit. The current produced by the latter method I shall term, for distinction sake, a pulsatory current.

My present invention consists in the employment of a vibratory or undulatory current of electricity in contradistinction to a merely intermittent or pulsatory current, and of a method of, and apparatus for, producing electrical undulations upon the line-wire.

The distinction between an undulatory and a pulsatory current will be understood by considering that electrical pulsations are caused by sudden or instantaneous changes of intensity, and that electrical undulations result from gradual changes of intensity exactly analogous to the changes in the density of air occasioned by simple pendulous vibrations. The electrical movement, like the aerial motion, can be represented by a sinusoidal curve or by the resultant of several sinusoidal curves.

*Intermittent or pulsatory and undulatory currents may be of two kinds, accordingly as the successive impulses have all the same polarity, or are alternately positive and negative.

The advantages I claim to derive from the use of an undulatory current in place of a merely intermittent one are, first, that a very much larger number of signals can be transmitted simultaneously on the same circuit; second, that a closed circuit and single main battery may be used; third, that communication in both directions is established without the necessity of special induction coils; fourth, that cable dispatches may be transmitted more rapidly than by means of an intermittent current or by the methods at present in use; for, as it is unnecessary to discharge the cable before a new signal can be made, the lagging of cable-signals is prevented; fifth, and that as the circuit is never broken a spark-arrester becomes unnecessary.

It has long been known that when a permanent magnet is caused to approach the pole of an electro-magnet the current of electricity is induced in the coils of the latter, and that when it is made to recede a current of opposite polarity to the first appears upon the wire. When, therefore, a permanent magnet is caused to vibrate in front of the pole of an electro-magnet an undulatory current of electricity is induced in the coils of the electro-magnet, the undulations of which correspond, in rapidity of succession, to the vibrations of the magnet, in polarity to the direction of its motion, and in intensity to the amplitude of its vibration.

That the difference between an undulatory and intermittent current may be more clearly understood, I shall describe the condition of the electrical current when the attempt is made to transmit two musical notes simultaneously, first upon the one plan and then upon the other. Let the interval between the two sounds be a major third; then their rates of vibration are in the ratio of 4 to 5. Now, when the intermittent current is used the circuit is made and broken four times by one transmitting instrument in the same time that five makes and breaks are caused by the other. A and B, Figs. 1, 2, and 3, represent the intermittent currents produced, four impulses of B being made in the same time as five impulses of A. c c c, &c., show where and for how long time the circuit is made, and d d d, &c., indicate the duration of the breaks of the circuit. The line A and B shows the total effect upon the current when the transmitting instruments for A and B are caused simultaneously to make and break the same circuit. The resultant effect depends very much upon the duration of the make relatively to the break. In Fig. 1 the ratio is as 1 to 4; in Fig. 2, as 1 to 2, and in Fig. 3 the makes and breaks are of equal duration. The combined effect, A and B, Fig. 3, is very nearly equivalent to a continuous current.

When many transmitting instruments of different rates of vibration are simultaneously making and breaking the same circuit the current upon the main line becomes for all practical purposes continuous.

Next, consider the effect when an undulatory current is employed. Electrical undulations induced by the vibration of a body capable of inductive action can be represented graphically, without error, by the same sinusoidal curve which expresses the vibration of the inducing body itself, and the effect of its vibration upon the air; for, as above stated, the rate of oscillation in the electrical current corresponds to the rate of vibration of the inducing body—that is, to the pitch of the sound produced. The intensity of the current varies with the amplitude of the vibration—that is, with the loudness of the sound; and the polarity of the current corresponds to the direction of the vibrating body—that is, to the condensations and rarefactions of air produced by the vibration. Hence the sinusoidal curve A or B, Fig. 4, represents graphically the electrical undulations induced in a circuit by the vibration of a body capable of inductive action.

* The paragraph in brackets erased, and those in italics inserted by amendment of February 29, 1876.

The horizontal line $a d e f$, &c., represents the zero of current. The elevations $b b b$, &c., indicate impulses of positive electricity. The depressions $c c c$, &c., show impulses of negative electricity. The vertical distance $b d$ or $c f$ of any portion of the curve from the zero line expresses the intensity of the positive or negative impulse at the part observed, and the horizontal distance $a a$ indicates the duration of the electrical oscillation. The vibrations represented by the sinusoidal curves B and A, Fig. 4, are in the ratio aforesaid of 4 to 5—that is, four oscillations of B are made in the same time as five oscillations of A.

The combined effect of A and B, when induced simultaneously on the same circuit, is expressed by the curve $A \times B$, Fig. 4, which is the algebraical sum of the sinusoidal curves A and B. This curve $A \times B$ also indicates the actual motion of the air when the two musical notes considered are sounded simultaneously. Thus when electrical undulations of different rates are simultaneously induced in the same circuit, an effect is produced exactly analogous to that occasioned in the air by the vibration of the inducing bodies. Hence the coexistence upon a telegraphic circuit of the electrical vibrations of different pitch is manifested not by the obliteration of the vibratory character of the current, but by peculiarities in the shapes of the electrical undulations, or, in other words, by peculiarities in the shapes of the curves which represent those undulations.

There are many ways of producing undulatory currents of electricity, dependent for effect upon the vibrations or motions of bodies capable of inductive action. A few of the methods that may be employed I shall here specify. When a wire through which a continuous current of electricity is passing is caused to vibrate in the neighborhood of another wire an undulatory current of electricity is induced in the latter. When a cylinder upon which are arranged bar magnets is made to rotate in front of the pole of an electro-magnet an undulatory current of electricity is induced in the coils of the electro-magnet.

Undulations are caused in a continuous voltaic current by the vibration or motion of bodies capable of inductive action; or by the vibration of the conducting-wire itself in the neighborhood of such bodies. Electrical undulations may also be caused by alternately increasing and diminishing the resistance of the circuit, or by alternately increasing and diminishing the power of the battery. The internal resistance of a battery is diminished by bringing the voltaic elements nearer together, and increased by placing them farther apart. The reciprocal vibration of the elements of a battery, therefore, occasions an undulatory action in the voltaic current. The external resistance may also be varied. For instance, let mercury or some other liquid form part of a voltaic circuit, then the more deeply the conducting-wire is immersed in the mercury or other liquid, the less resistance does the liquid offer to the passage of the current. Hence, the vibration of the conducting-wire in mercury or other liquid included in the circuit occasions undulations in the current. The vertical vibrations of the elements of a battery in the liquid in which they are immersed produces an undulatory action in the current by alternately increasing and diminishing the power of the battery.

In illustration of the method of creating electrical undulations, I shall show and describe one form of apparatus for producing the effect. I prefer to employ for this purpose an electro-magnet, A, Fig. 5, having a coil upon only one of its legs, b . A steel spring armature, c , is firmly clamped by one extremity to the uncovered leg d of the magnet, and its free end is allowed to project above the pole of the covered leg. The armature c can be set in vibration in a variety of ways, one of which is by wind, and, in vibrating, it produces a musical note of a certain definite pitch.

When the instrument A is placed in a voltaic circuit, $g b e f g$, the armature c becomes magnetic, and the polarity of its free end is opposed to that of the magnet underneath. So long as the armature c remains at rest, no effect is produced upon the voltaic current, but the moment it is set in vibration to produce its musical note a powerful inductive action takes place, and electrical undulations traverse the circuit $g b e f g$. The vibratory current passing through the coil of the electro-magnet f causes vibration in its armature h when the armatures $c h$ of the two instruments A and I are nominally in unison with one another; but the armature h is unaffected by the passage of the undulatory current when the pitches of the two instruments are different.

A number of instruments may be placed upon a telegraphic circuit, as in Fig. 6. When the armature of any one of the instruments is set in vibration, all the other instruments upon the circuit which are in unison with it respond, but those which have normally a different rate of vibration remain silent. Thus, if A, Fig. 6, is set in vibration, the armatures of A^1 and A^2 will vibrate also, but all the others on the circuit will remain still. So if B^1 is caused to emit its musical note the instruments $B B^2$ respond. They continue sounding so long as the mechanical vibration of B^1 is continued, but become silent with the cessation of its motion. The duration of the sound may be used to indicate the dot or dash of the Morse alphabet, and thus a telegraphic dispatch may be indicated by alternately interrupting and renewing the sound.

When two or more instruments of different pitch are simultaneously caused to vibrate, all the instruments of corresponding pitches upon the circuit are set in vibration, each responding to that one only of the transmitting instruments with which it is in unison. Thus the signals of A, Fig. 6, are repeated by A¹ and A², but by no other instrument upon the circuit; the signals of B² by B and B¹; and the signals of C¹ by C and C²—whether A, B², and C¹ are successively or simultaneously caused to vibrate. Hence by these instruments two or more telegraphic signals or messages may be sent simultaneously over the same circuit without interfering with one another.

I desire here to remark that there are many other uses to which these instruments may be put, such as the simultaneous transmission of musical notes, differing in loudness as well as in pitch, and the telegraphic transmission of noises or sounds of any kind.

When the armature c, Fig. 5, is set in vibration the armature h responds not only in pitch, but in loudness. Thus when c vibrates with little amplitude, a very soft musical note proceeds from h; and when c vibrates forcibly the amplitude of the vibration of h is considerably increased, and the resulting sound becomes louder. So, if A and B, Fig. 6, are sounded simultaneously (A loudly and B softly), the instruments A¹ and A² repeat loudly the signals of A, and B¹ and B² repeat softly those of B.

One of the ways in which the armature c, Fig. 5, may be set in vibration has been stated above to be by wind. Another mode is shown in Fig. 7, whereby motion can be imparted to the armature by the human voice or by means of a musical instrument.

The armature c, Fig. 7, is fastened loosely by one extremity to the uncovered leg d of the electro-magnet b, and its other extremity is attached to the center of a stretched membrane, a. A cone, A, is used to converge sound vibrations upon the membrane. When a sound is uttered in the cone the membrane a is set in vibration, the armature c is forced to partake of the motion, and thus electrical undulations are created upon the circuit E b e f g. These undulations are similar in form to the air vibrations caused by the sound—that is, they are represented graphically by similar curves.

The undulatory current passing through the electro-magnet f influences its armature h to copy the motion of the armature c. A similar sound to that uttered into A is then heard to proceed from L.

In this specification the three words “oscillation,” “vibration,” and “undulation,” are used synonymously, and in contradistinction to the terms “intermittent” and “pulsatory.”* By the term “body capable of inductive action,” I mean a body which, when in motion, produces dynamical electricity. I include in the category of bodies capable of inductive action—brass, copper, and other metals, as well as iron and steel.

Having described my invention, what I claim, and desire to secure by letters patent, is as follows:

1. A system of telegraphy in which the receiver is set in vibration by the employment of undulatory currents of electricity, substantially as set forth.

2. The combination, substantially as set forth, of a permanent magnet or other body capable of inductive action, with a closed circuit, so that the vibration of the one shall occasion electrical undulations in the other, or in itself, and this I claim, whether the permanent magnet be set in vibration in the neighborhood of the conducting wire forming the circuit, or whether the conducting wire be set in vibration in the neighborhood of the permanent magnet, or whether the conducting wire and the permanent magnet both simultaneously be set in vibration in each other's neighborhood.

3. The method of producing undulations in a continuous voltaic current by the vibration or motion of bodies capable of inductive action, or by the vibration or motion of the conducting wire itself, in the neighborhood of such bodies, as set forth.

4. The method of producing undulations in a continuous voltaic circuit by [alternately] gradually increasing and diminishing the resistance of the circuit, or by [alternately] gradually increasing and diminishing the power of the battery, as set forth.†

5. The method of, and apparatus for, transmitting vocal or other sounds telegraphically, as herein described, by causing electrical undulations, similar in form to the vibrations of the air accompanying the said vocal or other sounds, substantially as set forth.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto signed my name this 20th day of January, A. D. 1876.

In the matter of the application of A. Graham Bell, for imp'ts in telegraphy. Filed Febr'y 14, '76.

Hon. COMM'R OF PATENTS:

SIR: In this matter we beg to acknowledge receipt of official letter notifying us of the suspension of our application for completion of an interfering caveat.

We respectfully request, before it is concluded to suspend our application for 3 months, that you determine whether or not our application was not filed prior to the caveat in question.

We have inquired the date of filing of the caveat (inasmuch as we are entitled to the knowledge), and find it to be February 14, 1876, the same day on which our application was filed. If our application was filed earlier in the day than was the caveat, then there is no warrant for the action taken by the office.

We suggest that an examination of the books in the examiner's, Mr. Moore's, and the chief clerk's rooms, be made with a view of determining this question. We can say that our application was filed early in the day of Feb'y 14, and at our request was on the same day sent to the examiner.

We also call attention to the fact that our client's oath of invention is dated Jan'y 20, '76.

Respectfully,

POLLOCK & BAILEY, Att'ys.

[Endorsement.]

The application, in order to become liable to suspension, to await the completion of his application by a caveator, must have been filed "within the year" of the life of the caveat. Ordinarily, the day of filing is not completed, and is considered functum temporis. Yet, where justice requires it, the exact time in the day when an act was done may be shown by proof. Kent's Comm., 95 N. The examiner will be guided by this rule in the present case, and if the record shows that the application was filed earlier in the day, then the caveat should be disregarded; and otherwise, not.

Respectfully referred to the Hon. Comm'r for instructions. The regular practice in the office has been to determine dates of filing by days alone, and in accordance with such practice I suspend the application herein referred to on ac. of a caveat, the application and caveat being filed upon the same day, viz: Feb'y 14, 1876. In view of the practice above noted, I have paid no attention to the alleged differences between the times of the filings on same day.

Elisha Gray's caveat.

[United States Patent Office—Specification.]

To all whom it may concern :

Be it known that I, Elisha Gray, of Chicago, in the county of Cook and State of Illinois, have invented a new art of transmitting vocal sounds telegraphically, of which the following is a specification :

It is the object of my invention to transmit the tones of the human voice through a telegraphic circuit, and reproduce them at the delivering end of the line, so that actual conversation can be carried on by persons at long distances apart.

I have invented and patented methods of transmitting musical impressions or sounds telegraphically, and my present invention is based upon a modification of the principle of said invention, which is set forth and described in letters patent of the United States granted to me July 27, 1875, respectively numbered 166,095 and 166,096, and also in an application for letters patent of the United States filed by me February 23, 1875.

To attain the objects of my invention I devised an instrument capable of vibrating responsively to all the tones of the human voice, and by which they are rendered audible.

In the accompanying drawings I have shown an apparatus embodying my improvements in the best way now known to me ; but I contemplate various other applications, and also changes in the details of construction of the apparatus, some of which would obviously suggest themselves to a skillful electrician or a person versed in the science of acoustics on seeing this application.

Figure 1 represents a vertical central section through the transmitting instrument ; Figure 2, a similar section through the receiver, and Figure 3 a diagram representing the whole apparatus.

My present belief is that the most effective method of providing an apparatus capable of responding to the various tones of the human voice is a tympanum, drum, or diaphragm, stretched across one end of the chamber, carrying an apparatus for producing fluctuations in the potential of the electric current, and consequently varying in its power.

In the drawings the person transmitting sounds is shown as talking into a box or chamber, A, across the other end of which is stretched a diaphragm, A, of some thin substance, such as parchment or gold-beater's skin, capable of responding to all the vibrations of the human voice, whether simple or complex.

Attached to this diaphragm is light metal rod A, or other suitable conductor of electricity, which extends into a vessel, B, made of glass or other insulating material, having its lower end closed by a plug, which may be of metal, or through which passes a conductor, b, forming part of the circuit.

This vessel is filled with some liquid possessing high resistance, such, for instance, as water, so that the vibrations of the plunger or rod A', which does not quite touch the conductor b, will cause variations in resistance, and consequently in the potential of the current passing through the rod A'. Owing to this construction, the resistance varies constantly, in response to the vibrations of the diaphragm, which, although irregular not only in their amplitude, but in rapidity, are nevertheless transmitted, and can consequently be transmitted through a single rod, which could not be done with a positive make and break of the circuit employed, or when contact points are used. I contemplate, however, the use of a series of diaphragms in a common vocalizing chamber, each diaphragm carrying an independent rod, and responding to a vibration of different rapidity and intensity, in which case contact points, mounted on other diaphragms, may be employed. The vibrations thus imparted are transmitted through an electric circuit to the receiving station, in which circuit is included an electro-magnet of ordinary construction acting upon a diaphragm, to which is attached a piece of soft iron, and which diaphragm is stretched across a receiving vocalizing chamber, c, somewhat similar to the corresponding vocalizing chamber, A.

The diaphragm at the receiving end of the line is thus thrown into vibration corresponding with those at the transmitting end, and audible sounds or words are produced.

The obvious practical observation of my improvement will be to enable persons at a distance to converse with each other through a telegraphic circuit, just as they now do in each other's presence, or through a speaking tube.

I claim, as my invention, the art of transmitting vocal sounds or conversations telegraphically, through an electric circuit.

Elisha Gray, the within named petitioner, being duly sworn, doth depose and say, that he verily believes himself to be the original and first inventor of the art of transmitting vocal sounds, described in the foregoing specification; that he does not know or believe that the same was ever before known or used, and that he is a citizen of the United States.

TO THE COMMISSIONER OF PATENTS:

The petition of Elisha Gray, of Chicago, in the county of Cook, in the State of Illinois, respectfully represents that he has made certain improvements in the art of transmitting vocal sounds telegraphically, and that he is now engaged in making experiments for the purpose of perfecting the same, preparatory to applying for letters patent therefor.

He therefore prays that the subjoined description of his invention may be filed as a caveat in the confidential archives of the Patent Office.

ELISHA GRAY.

[Endorsement.]

Received Oct. 20, 1885. Copy of caveat of Elisha Gray.

Statement of Elisha Gray, inventor and discoverer, resident of the city of Chicago, Ill.

1. Having received from the Government a number of patents which were supposed among other things to relate to telephony, I made a conveyance of the same to the Harmonic Telegraph Co., in the year 1876. In consideration of that conveyance I received a stock interest in the said company.

2. This company conveyed to the American Speaking Telephone Company all its right, title, and interest in said patents, so far as they related, or might relate, to speaking telephones. The Harmonic Co. received, in consideration of said conveyance, one-third of the stock of the American Speaking Telephone Company. My interest in this stock was owned jointly and equally by myself and Dr. White, of Philadelphia.

3. The American Speaking Telephone Co., the Harmonic Telegraphic Co., the Gold and Stock Telegraph Co., and the Western Union Telegraph Co. were the real defendants in the suit of the American Bell Telephone Co., commonly known as the Dowd case. Some time after the institution of this suit a compromise was effected between the complainant and the defendants, by which the complainant company and the defendant companies jointly owned all the patent rights involved—the American Speaking Telephone Co. receiving, in said compromise, twenty per cent. of the royalty received upon all the patents owned by the said companies. It was also to be interested in future patents that might be acquired by the combination and was to contribute its proportion of the purchase expended in acquiring such new patents. From that time forward, said company was also to pay its part of any litigation that the combination might be involved in. Soon after the beginning of the Dowd suit the subject of a compromise was suggested, and before finally consummated it was generally understood that a compromise would be effected; that the parties in interest could probably make more by compromise and by owning the patent-right of the several companies as common property than could be made otherwise, and that such a settlement especially was better than the hazards of the ultimate result of the litigation. Before said combination was effected, and after it was substantially understood that the settlement would be made, it is my belief now, the litigation was not carried on energetically, or in strict good faith with the view of an arm's length litigation and a final settlement by the court. This resulted from the fact that a determination by compromise was looked to by the several parties in interest.

4. After this settlement, the property being owned by the complainant and defendants, in the proportion agreed upon, there was, of course, as I suppose now, no such thing as litigation in good faith, but from that time everything was done for the common benefit of the complainant and the defendants, and such decree was entered in the case as they desired, the whole being conducted in such manner as to subserve the common interest.

5. I had no control over this case at any time. The corporation in which I was interested as a stockholder represented such interest as I had. After the terms of settlement were agreed upon, then the interest being common, the cause was carried on to a conclusion in a way to promote the common interest.

(6) I was the inventor of an Electric Speaking Telephone. I described that invention in a caveat which I filed on the 14th of February, 1876. I afterwards learned that on the same day Professor Bell filed an application for an improvement in "Multiple telegraphy." I learned, but not until after his patent on said application was issued, that in the said application he claimed to have discovered and invented an electric speaking telephone. Not long after my caveat was filed I received notice that an application had been filed that in some way conflicted with it, and that I must prepare an application on my caveat with the view of declaring an interference on account of said conflict. Soon after this I learned that the interference had been dissolved. I did not then know that the supposed conflict was between my caveat and said application of said Bell. In March, 1876, a patent issued to said Bell upon his said application. I am informed and believe, that in a few days after the issuance of said patent said Bell made an instrument with which he transmitted articulate speech. Long afterwards I learned that the instrument with which he first transmitted articulate speech was a liquid transmitter, and substantially the same as that described in my caveat, but wholly unlike anything described in the said application and patent of said Bell. I believed, and remained under that belief for a long time, that said Bell actually invented the instrument with which he thus first transmitted articulate speech. I then believed that he and I were both aiming at the same end, and that each, without knowing what the other was doing, had discovered and invented a speaking telephone. At the Centennial, Mr. Bell exhibited a telephone which transmitted articulate speech. I witnessed the exhibition. He did not use a liquid transmitter on this occasion, but used an instrument very nearly resembling the receiver of my invention. I communicated this fact to my counsel, and requested his opinion as to how my case stood in view of said fact. He informed me that practically my claim was defeated; that Bell's application was filed on the same day as my caveat, and that Bell having made an instrument that successfully transmitted articulate speech, he occupied a better position, and would undoubtedly succeed. I then did not for a moment suspect anything wrong, but supposed that in the eye of the law Bell had, as my counsel advised me, the advantage. Every oral statement made by me on the subject, and every letter written by me, which in any way indicated that I regarded said Bell as an original inventor of the telephone, with probable priority in the eye of the law over my discovery, were made and written under the belief then entertained as to perfect fair dealing with regard to my caveat.

(7) Recently, and long since the oral statements were made and the letters referred to were written, and long since I gave my deposition in the Dowd case and in the interference cases in the Patent Office, facts came to my knowledge that convinced me I was wrong in assuming and believing that Professor Bell had fairly made his invention. But I now believe that he, on the contrary, had learned in some way of my caveat and of its contents; that he made use of that knowledge, and constructed the instrument with which he first successfully transmitted articulate speech. I suppose my discovery remained a secret in the Patent Office, as it should have done, and was not known to Mr. Bell at the time he made his first successful transmission of speech. What I now state on the subject is made in view of this information which satisfies me that Mr. Bell, having obtained my secrets, claimed my discovery as his own, and by this means got the credit of my invention. Acting, however, at the time under the belief of his fairness in the matter, and advice of counsel as to my rights, as before explained, I made such statements and gave said depositions.

(8) Being under this belief, I did not take steps to file my application upon my caveat promptly, but the matter rested without any application until November, 1877. This long delay will be understood in view of what I have already stated. Some time prior, however, to the filing of said application, it was suggested by the American Speaking Telephone Company, under the idea that it was the owner of said caveat, that an application had better be filed any way for a patent upon the caveat; that some advantage or benefit might be derived from it. I accordingly filed the application. This was my act, done, and done by counsel at the request of said company; but before any further steps were taken under said application, except to declare an interference between my application and the Bell patent, the compromise had been effected between the contestants in the Dowd case, and acting under the belief, which I then entertained, that my conveyance, the American Speaking Telephone Co. was the owner of said application, and said caveat, and the rights therein mentioned, and believing that these rights had become the common property of the complainant and defendants in the Dowd case compromise, and believing whatever interest I had was only as a stockholder in the American Speaking Telephone Co., and that under that compromise I had no longer any financial interest in pressing the interference suit, nor had the American Speaking Telephone Co., as it was immaterial how that contest was terminated, provided it was done in such a way as to subserve what was believed to be the common interest of this combination.

After the combination, and without any action on my part, the said interference suit growing out of my caveat and the application thereon was again set in motion and conducted to a result. I was examined as a witness in the interference suit,—my deposition being taken in the city of Chicago. I had no counsel employed, however, and took no interest in it, and only gave my deposition when called upon by the combination referred to. These companies, as they believed, and so did I at the time, held and owned all the patents and all the claims in said interference cases, and the other interference cases that were carried along with these, and although there appeared to be opposing counsel and a struggle and a contest, and much proof was taken, deponent verily believes there was really no struggle and no contest, and that it was intended to carry these interference cases on and bring out the final result in such way as best to subserve the interest of the combination made up of these three corporations. By looking at the record in these cases, it appears that I had counsel; that I was a litigant actually contesting this matter and asserting or attempting to assert the priority of my discovery over that of Prof. Bell's, and the other alleged discoverers and inventors that were made parties to the same controversy. Such was not the fact, however. I had no counsel. I was not a litigant. The whole apparent controversy was, as I now believe, collusive, and carried on with the appearance of an array of an opposing counsel; that these counsel all understood each other and were working for a common end agreed on beforehand by the combination. It was supposed, as I have lately been informed, that these interference suits, thus carried on and worked out, would strengthen the claims of the corporations that were engaged in carrying them on in their interests. I was not consulted except to give my deposition, which I did when called upon, and did under the honest belief that Mr. Bell had the advantage which I have already mentioned as explained to me by my counsel. The counsel named in the record as representing me in said interference suit were paid, as I understood, by the said combination, consisting of the parties complainant and parties interested in the Dowd case, in pursuance of their agreement and understanding that all litigation carried on for the joint benefit was to be paid for by the combination. Not only was this the case, but one of my counsel so-called, was at some time, the precise time I am unable to state, retained for the American Bell Telephone Company, and is now in its employment, as I learned some time since, when speaking to that counsel with a view of a proposed employment which might conflict with the interest of said company. It is not a fact that the result in the Dowd case was reached by a trial upon the merits, and a decision according to the merits, but it was reached by the agreement and understanding of the parties in interest. *Nor is it a fact as I believe that the interference suits were carried on upon their merits in a real bona fide controversy, but, on the contrary, I believe that said interference litigation, although seemingly hostile, was really friendly, and the result reached was not a decision upon the merits in a hostile controversy, but in a collusive controversy in which the only parties interested were the parties in interest in the Dowd litigation.

9. The stock which Dr. White and myself received for our interest in the sale to the American Speaking Telephone Co. for the patents embraced in that sale, all went to Dr. White, as by our contract he had a lien upon my half for debts that I owed him, and my half was absorbed in the payment of these debts. I subsequently bought stock and by speculating in it made something.

10. In some correspondence that passed between Prof. Bell and myself in the year 1877 I accorded to him credit as an actual discoverer and inventor, which was done, however, under the belief that he was entitled to priority, and that without any knowledge of my caveat he had really been enabled to appear to be a discoverer and inventor, when such was not the fact, as I now verily and truly believe. I also wrote them under the belief and advice of counsel that by reason of his claiming to have filed his application before my caveat, and of his practical demonstration with an electric speaking telephone made according to my discovery, but which I then supposed was made according to his own independent discovery, that therefore in the eye of the law his claim would take rank over mine. About the same time that said correspondence took place I delivered a lecture in the city of Chicago when I exhibited the instrument claimed by Prof. Bell as his invention. In order that the matter may be properly understood it must be borne in mind that the letter in which it is claimed that I gave Prof. Bell credit as the original inventor was written long before I knew that his first transmission of articulate speech was with a liquid transmitter like that described in my caveat, and that at the time of writing that letter and giving the lecture I only knew of the transmission of speech made at the Centennial with the instrument made like my receiver, which I had never used as a transmitter.

11. The opening and concluding arguments of the counsel who nominally represented me in the interference cases, but really representing the said combination, and in whose employment he then was in the said interference suit conceded the discovery of the broad art to Mr. Bell, claiming for me only a device or improvement on the art which Mr. Bell was conceded to have discovered. I did not know until long after that such was the case, but it plainly appears on the inspection of these arguments which I have lately made. These arguments, however, are in harmony with the main intent of the combination and to carry out its purpose in these collusive and simulated contests.

12. The combination claimed my caveat and all the rights thereunder, by virtue of my conveyance to the Harmonic Telegraph Co. I did not intend to convey it, but labored under the belief that I had been overreached, or by mistake had conveyed more than was in contemplation when the trade was made. After being informed that I had been wronged in the Patent Office touching my caveat, either by design in disclosing my secrets, or by remissness, or accident, and that it was my discovery with which Prof. Bell first transmitted speech soon after my caveat was filed, as I am informed, and believing he had learned my secrets, I concluded I would have the said conveyance examined by counsel, which I did, and was advised that my said conveyance did not cover the caveat, but only certain specific patents then granted, and which it was supposed by the purchasers related, among other things, to telephony, and which patents they believed, although not granted expressly in reference to that art, yet embraced principles that might be controlling in contests touching it. I was misled, by the assumption on the part of said company and its assignees, that my said contract covered said caveat, and I labored under this mistake until I had the contract examined, as above stated.

ELISHA GRAY.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 9th day of November, 1885.

G. A. ARMES,
Notary Public for the District.

Statement of Elisha Gray.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 16, 1885.

Hon. L. Q. C. LAMAR, Sec'y of the Interior, Washington, D. C. :

DEAR SIR: In an affidavit by Mr. M. D. Baldwin, sworn and subscribed to on the 14th day of November, 1885, he says:

"Mr. Gray has intimated by his affidavit that I did not urge his claim as an inventor as I should have done, and that he, not for the first time, has ascertained what was done in his behalf, and finds that he is not satisfied with it."

In order to prove that I knew at the time was going on, and that I was satisfied with it, he has introduced several letters of his and mine, and has quoted extensively from his argument before the examiner of interferences.

In reply to this statement and to other statements in Mr. Baldwin's affidavit, it seems proper for me to make some statements in explanation of letters which I wrote at the time and of my inaction and want of complaint of Mr. Baldwin's course.

Referring now to his letter of March 3d, 1876, to Doctor S. S. White, with whom I was then engaged in Philadelphia on electrical work, as to the beginning of the matter in controversy, it will be seen that, acting upon Mr. Baldwin's advice, given in this letter, I failed to file an application in the Patent Office forthwith, pursuant to my caveat of February 14th, 1876.

The letter is as follows:

"Dear sir: I find that Gray's 'Talking Telegraph Caveat' interferes with an application of Bell's, but as Gray's caveat was filed the same day as Bell's application, but later in the day, the Commissioner holds that he is not entitled to an interference, and Bell's application has been ordered to issue. This is confidential. The point of interference is in the gradual interruption of the current, as contradistinguished from the abrupt breakages of the previous systems. Bell's application was sworn to as early as the 20th of January last, and was prepared some time previously. We could still have an interference by Gray's coming down to-morrow and promptly filing an application for a patent. If you want this done, telegraph me in the morning, on receipt of this, and I will have the papers ready in time to stop the issue of Bell's patent; but, my judgment is against it, as Gray made the invention, as I understand it, while here, after Bell's application was sworn to. He may, however, have invented the resistance part of the application at an earlier date, and Bell's claim is for the system of graduated interruptions by a varying resistance instead of the abrupt interruptions, as I have mentioned.

"(Signed)

WM. D. BALDWIN."

Subsequently and after the issue of a patent to Prof. Bell of March 7, 1876, in communication with Mr. Baldwin in person and by letter he advised me in substance that he did not see any interference between Bell's patent and my caveat for speaking telephone filed February 14, 1876.

Still later, and after the exhibition made by Mr. Bell at Philadelphia, in answer to an inquiry as to my rights under the caveat I was informed, as stated in my former affidavit, that I had no standing in law. I here quote from that affidavit:

"At the Centennial Mr. Bell exhibited a telephone which transmitted articulate speech. I witnessed the exhibition. He did not use a liquid transmitter on this occasion, but used an instrument very nearly resembling the receiver of my invention. I communicated this fact to my counsel and requested his opinion as to how my case stood in view of said fact, and he informed me that practically my claim was defeated, that Bell's application was filed on the same day as my caveat, and that Bell having made an instrument that successfully transmitted articulate speech, he occupied a better position and would undoubtedly succeed."

Upon this advice of my counsel and my friend I acted. I had the fullest confidence in him. I believed that he was not only faithful in all respects, but that he had the necessary learning, ability, and experience to advise me rightly. In the latter it seems I was mistaken, but I did not for a long time find out the mistake, and did not know that the advice thus given was wrong and not in accordance with the law, as I am now advised.

All my subsequent correspondence, admissions, statements, and interviews must be construed with this in mind and in view of the fact that I supposed I had parted with all my pecuniary interests in this and other inventions and was therefore only interested as to my reputation as an inventor, and it seems my counsel, so called, had the same idea in view, as stated in his letters of October 24 and 29, 1881, as set forth in his last affidavit, in which he wrote as follows:

"I am devoting my argument more to a vindication of your position than to attacking your adversary, though I am stating some facts in regard to Bell and Edison very plainly." In the letter of October 29, 1881, he says: "Enclosed find an advanced copy of my argument in your behalf in the speaking telephone interference case. My object has been mainly to place you right before the public on the scientific side of the question. I hope I have succeeded, but I am not proud of the performance." I quote from his argument as follows:

THE BELL PATENTS.

"In the beginning of this controversy Bell's patent of March 7, 1876, comprised all the information Gray had as to the history and development of the invention therein claimed. As that patent was then understood it was believed not only to claim the telephone transmission of articulate speech, but the apparatus therein shown was believed to be incapable of such action."

"Even as late as January, 1879, apparatus carefully constructed in accordance with Bell's specifications failed to work successfully."

"As the alleged inventor of a new art involving a physical law little understood that time and the pending for its success, so far as then known, upon certain peculiarities of construction, Bell was particularly bound to set forth in the clearest manner all the conditions necessary to the successful operation of the apparatus. He would be a bold man who claimed that this was done by the patent. It says not one word about the wetting of the membranes, the necessary relation of the fundamental tone of the instrument itself to the tones to be transmitted, of the relative proportions of the parts, or of the theory of forced vibrations of a loaded membrane—all essential to the proper operation of the apparatus shown."

"In view of the clamor and the glamour created by the success of the speaking telephone, as subsequently developed, it is almost impossible to separate what is now known of that instrument from what was disclosed in Bell's patent, and his assignees have taken care to mix things as much as possible."

"It is hard now to realize that this magnificent invention was tucked away in a patent, under the guise of an improvement in telegraphy, and described so ambiguously as a modification of longer or shorter duration, to correspond with the dot or dash of the Morse alphabet; that it has required the conjoint interpretation of the experts and the courts to bring out the facts that the telegraphic reproduction of articulate speech was really what was meant to be covered by the immortal fifth claim and the apparatus represented in figure 7 of the drawings and attempted to be described in the patent. As a matter of fact, neither Bell nor any one else ever successfully transmitted articulate speech through an apparatus like that shown in figure 7, until after the date of his patent. Some time after that such instruments were made to work."

"The very remarkable fact remains that Bell's first successful transmission of articulate speech was with the apparatus delineated and described in Gray's caveat filed February 14, 1876, the same day with the application of Bell's patent, and after Bell's visit to Washington, during which he had been informed of the probability of threatened interference and its nature imitated."

"This was the celebrated apparatus subsequently exhibited at the Centennial June 25, 1876, consisting in part of the liquid transmitter and membrane receiver, with a piece of clock spring glued thereon as an armature, arranged close to a magnet."

"Gray's caveat presents a remarkable contrast to Bell's patent in its clearly setting forth the art of transmitting articulate speech, and delineating and describing the apparatus by which that art was successfully practiced."

"Bell's patent neither shows nor describes Gray's apparatus, and it is not pretended that he ever invented special that form of apparatus prior to Gray or that Gray ever derived it from Bell."

Surely, Mr. Baldwin "did himself proud." Up to this point the argument is good, the statement is complete, and the conclusion ought to have been irresistible, but he concludes as follows:

"When, however, in the course of subsequent litigation, the fact was developed that as between Gray and Bell, the latter really was the first to conceive the invention of transmitting articulate speech, and to reduce the invention into practice, Gray voluntarily came forward like the straightforward, fair-minded man that he is, and conceded that fact to his rival."

"We shall, therefore, retire from the contest over the issue in case A and B, so far as relates to the question of the electric transmission of articulate speech."

At the time Mr. Baldwin wrote me, inclosing the argument referred to in his letter of October 29, 1881, I had just returned from a four months' trip to Europe, where I was exhibiting my Harmonic Telegraph in the Electrical Exhibition at Paris.

From the time of the consolidation of interests between the Western Union Co. and the Bell Telephone Co. growing out of the Dowd suit, my time and attention had been absorbed in perfecting and marketing my Harmonic Telegraph inventions. Before I started for Europe I had commenced negotiating with the Postal Telegraph Co. for the sale to them of these patents and inventions. This negotiation was carried on by correspondence during my stay in Europe, and kept up actively for a long time after my return until the sale was effected. Being thus busily occupied with matters which promised financial returns, and having in mind the settlement in the Dowd case, which I then supposed carried with it all my pecuniary interests in telephone, and feeling no special interest in the subject, but remembering his assurance of his efforts to place right before the scientific world, whatever he meant by that, I naturally wrote that he "did himself proud." I meant no more, and under the circumstances followed his advice, trusting to his conclusions, and relying upon his ability and integrity, I could hardly have said less, particularly as under his advice I had no right of any kind.

In Mr. Baldwin's argument in the interference cases before the Commissioner, he uses this language:

"In the Dowd suit Mr. Gray frankly stated the facts. I take occasion to say right here that as far as I have been engaged in this contest, since 1875, I have always found Mr. Gray a fair-minded, straightforward man, indeed so much so, as you will find in the record in the Dowd suit, that when a certain question arose between himself and Mr. Bell he frankly wrote a letter stating that he did not regard the caveat as a reduction to practice, and therefore Mr. Bell was entitled to the invention. He did this without consulting counsel."

"The Commissioner: He says the transmission of speech."

"Mr. Baldwin: Yes, sir; when it was suggested to him that that was an imprudent thing for him to do under the circumstances, he said, 'It was right.' It would come out sooner or later, and I prefer have it come out in this way."

In considering the letters and statements referred to, it should not be forgotten that I was acting under his advice of the third of March, 1876, and reiterated from time to time in numerous interviews and correspondence at the time when he was my actual counsel, as I have before alleged. I never fully appreciated the position that I had been drawn into until lately, when I learned some facts which led me to suspect that the patent granted to Mr. Bell was not in all respects above suspicion as set forth in my former affidavit.

A patent in which an instrument is described, that Prof. Bell himself alleged, after its issue had not transmitted articulate speech. A patent in which it is not asserted, that it will transmit articulate speech. It describes an instrument upon which the fifth claim is based, and one that is made strictly in accordance with the description. In all respects and in the light of the art at that time, and not in the light of to-day—I say it describes an instrument that never has, and never will successfully, transmit articulate speech. I will put, if you please, in a parallel column with this, another statement. It is this: On the 14th of February, 1876, I filed in this office, and it is now a part of its records, the first clear and concise description of "a method of, and an apparatus for, transmitting articulate speech," and the records show that it was with such an apparatus that speech was first transmitted by Prof. Bell.

Coming back to Mr. Baldwin, I will say that I have carefully examined his several affidavits, and compared them with mine, and so far as I can see they confirm all I have said. I would not go out of my way one step to do Mr. Baldwin, Professor Bell, or any one connected with this case, a wrong, even if millions were involved in it, but in view of the facts that have been alleged in my affidavits, the time has come when my position in this matter ought to be defined. These facts are indisputable. The responsibility must rest where it belongs.

Affidavit of Z. F. Wilber.

STATE OF NEW YORK, New York County, ss:

Zenas F. Wilber, being duly sworn, deposes and says as follows:

I am 43 years of age, and by profession a solicitor of patents and expert in patent causes. I was employed in the U. S. Patent Office for some years; first as an acting assistant examiner, and then as an assistant examiner for several years; most of which time I was engaged in the examination of applications for patents in the branch of electricity. Afterwards, for some years, I was principal examiner in charge of what was then known as the philosophical division, embracing the classes of electricity, horology, optics, mathematical and measuring instruments, etc.

While so engaged I was called upon to investigate many thousand applications for patents and to pass upon their utility and patentability, a large number of which related to electrical matters. I was finally promoted to be examiner of interferences, from which position I resigned to engage in the practice of my profession. As such last-named examiner I passed upon and determined the question arising in interferences all classes of invention.

Since resigning I have prosecuted several hundred applications for patents for various clients, nearly all involving the utilization, generation, or regulation of electricity; have in many instances been called upon to investigate and report upon the practicability, utility, and patentability of such inventions, the legality and scope of patents issued on such subjects, and have testified as expert in a number of litigated cases relating to electrical subjects.

At the time, in December, 1871, Antonio Meucci filed a caveat for "Sound Telegraphs," I was an assistant under Prof. B. S. Hedrick, principal examiner, and engaged under him in the examination of cases relating to electrical inventions; hence the Meucci caveat came under my charge at that time. At the time of the last renewal thereof, in Dec., 1873, I was in charge of applications involving or relating to electricity as principal examiner myself, and the Meucci caveat was still in my charge.

During 1876 the electrical department was under my charge as principal examiner, and I received as such examiner, from the proper division of the office, the Bell application which became U. S. Patent No. 174465 of March 7th, 1876, and the caveat of Elisha Gray, now generally known as the "Gray Caveat." The files of both were endorsed as having been received by the office on February 14th, 1876. Of my knowledge I did not know, and had no facilities for knowing, which was first filed in the office; and, indeed, when I first compared them to ascertain if there was any conflict or interference, I made no enquiry, my own opinion then being that in the relation existing between an interfering application and a caveat, the day was simply punctum temporis, and hence that when an application interfering with a caveat was filed upon the same day as the caveat, the "application is made within the year" (R. S. 4902), and that the application should be suspended, and the caveator given the statutory three months to file a completed application.

Accordingly, on February 19th, 1876, I suspended the Bell application, and notified the caveator, Gray, to complete his application within three months.

On February 24th, 1876, Bell, by his attorneys (Messrs. Pollok & Bailey), filed a protest against this suspension, averring in substance that there was reason to believe that the Bell application was filed first, i. e., earlier on the day of the 14th of February, 1876, than the caveat, the whole protest and argument of that date being based on a knowledge of that fact, or a belief that such was the fact.

Now, Mr. Bell, or his attorneys, obtained such knowledge I do not know. It was not given by me officially or unofficially. The only information given by me was in the official letter notifying Mr. Bell of the suspension of his application, because of a caveat interfering with his first, fourth, and fifth claims, neither the caveators nor the date of filing, information he was not entitled to have, being mentioned or hinted at. Such information was obtained, however, evidently, for it is the basis of a communication of February 24th, 1876, to the office in Bell's behalf, but how obtained, as before stated, I cannot say, being entirely ignorant on that point.

The point raised being an entirely new one, there being no recorded precedent in the Office, I refer the matter to the honorable Commissioner of Patents in person for his instructions as to my course. The Commissioner decided that as between an interfering application and caveat a day was not "punctum temporis," but an exception thereto that the time of the day was an element to be considered in determining the relation of the parties, directing me to ascertain the exact time of day of filing; that if the records showed that the application was filed earlier in the day, the caveat should be disregarded; otherwise not. In determining this, I consulted the cash blotter in the cashier's room, where I found the receipt of the fee for the Bell application entered before the receipt of the fee for the Gray caveat.

There was no regularity of entering on the fee-book. Applications came in by attorneys and mail, and were filed on the receipt clerk's table in a pile, and the clerk entered the cash received on the book as he picked up the letter or application. I was governed largely by what Mr. Bailey said, and he told me Bell's application was received before the caveat on same day.

I therefore determined, hastily, that the Bell application was filed the earlier in the day and revoked the suspension. In doing this I had no other proofs than that mentioned, no affidavits or depositions from or on behalf of either party, nor, as it appears from the record, was Gray notified by the Commissioner to appear and defend my original ruling in his favor, as it seems might equitably have been done. This is the only case I ever knew in some eleven years' experience in the Patent Office of such a ruling. In this case had the usual course of suspension of the application been followed, Bell would never have received a patent, and had Mr. Meucci's caveat been renewed in 1875, no patent could have been issued to Bell. I did not suspect any crookedness at the time.

The suspension being revoked and the Gray caveat disregarded, Bell by his attorneys was permitted to file certain amendments, which show for themselves without further or additional oath of invention, and his case was permitted to go to issue and become the patent hereinbefore noted.

At the time of the prosecution and allowance of such application it was not intended by any one in any way whatever, that I can remember, that it was for a talking telephone, a telephone for the transmission of articulate speech. The human voice was but once referred to in the whole specification, viz, in the 2d column of page 3, as printed, where it is stated "whereby motion can be imparted to the armature by the human voice, or by means of a musical instrument." I understood this to mean the same class of sounds given by the voice as are given by a musical instrument, that the voice and musical instruments were named as equivalents for the same class of sounds, musical or harmonic vibrations in contradistinction to uttered intelligible speech. I considered that the invention related to "harmonic multiplex telegraphy," the object of which was to enable several operators to use one wire simultaneously, a system on which it was known that both Profs. Gray and Bell had been working, and not to a talking telephone.

If I had believed that it was for a talking telephone, in view of the fact that the accounts of Reiss' experiments in that line, which were then accessible to me, were so vague and unsatisfactory, I would have required a practical demonstration of its utility and operativeness as a talking machine before granting the patent, for I believe that any instruments made, as shown and described in the patent noted, can be used to transmit and reproduce articulate speech. Changes and modifications must be made therein for that purpose amounting to independent and separate invention.

In looking back over the case, I am convinced that I should not have allowed the fifth claim, but should have objected to it as vague and indefinite. As set out it amounts simply to "causing electrical undulations similar in form to the vibrations of the air". No one has seen "electrical undulations"; it is simply an abstract term; there is no way of telling whether the cause termed electricity is thrown into undulations, and if yea, whether these invisible undulations are similar in form to some other visible undulations. There are no clear, explicit standards set up in the claim by which infringement or non-infringement may be determined, but it is a claim so general and so abstract as to amount in effect to a claim for the result, not the means. Its parallel in a tangible thing would be a claim for making shoes by "causing a machine to stitch the parts together by stitches resembling in form hand-made stitches," so that all machine-stitched shoes, no matter how different the means, the machinery employed would infringe the claim, because the result was accomplished.

There is no doubt in my mind that a large amount of this patent is anticipated in the patent to T. A. Edison, 141,777, dated August 12, 1873. In that patent Edison shows a contact moving in water towards and from another contact, so that the resistance between the two is increased or diminished. This is one of the many ways set out by Bell for the same purpose in his patent; see near bottom of 2d column, page 2, as printed, "Let mercury or some other liquid form part of a voltaic circuit, then the more deeply the conducting wire is immersed in the mercury or other liquid, the less resistance does the liquid offer to the passage of the current. Hence the mercury or other liquid included in the circuit occasions undulations in the current."

His "undulations" are rise and fall of electric tension in the circuit due to "gradual increasing and diminishing the resistance of the circuit," as stated in fourth claim, or by other means recited, all being equivalent for this purpose.

Edison says, "I make use of metallic contact points within a liquid, such as glycerine or water, so that the motion of one contact point nearer to or farther from the other raises and lowers the electric tension in the telegraph line, and operates a distant magnet without forming a spark or breaking the circuit."

Both operate a distant instrument or magnet without forming a spark or breaking the circuit by rise and fall of electric tension; i. e., the so-called "undulations," both Edison's and Bell's patents, were applied for as "improvements in," the same class, "telegraphy."

I am convinced, on careful analysis of the two cases, that in so far as the application of Bell and the patent based thereon disclose his invention, the broad claims in the Bell patent should have been rejected on the Edison patent, and Bell confined to any novel mechanism or means he had invented for accomplishing this result, which was common to both and prior to him in Edison.

Judging at the time, however, that the Bell application related on to harmonic multiplex telegraphy, an entirely new branch, the talking telephone of to-day, with its development being almost undreamt of, the case did not, it now seems to me, receive the careful scrutiny and pruning which it should have had.

From my experience in examining a vast number of electrical specifications, I have become familiar with the terms and nomenclature used, and have found that the terms used by Reiss and Meucci are expressed or meant by different later inventions under different names. I have noticed this in the specification of Reiss and the specifications of Meucci, Bain, Edison, Gray, Bell, the caveat of Meucci, etc. The rise and fall of tension of the Edison case is the same as the "undulations" and the "undulative current" of Bell; the "closed circuit" of Bell is the "continuous metallic conductor" of Meucci, while the drawings intended to graphically indicate sound waves in Bell's patent and the description thereof are the same as those published by Reiss. And much more.

Affidavit of Z. F. Wilbur.

CITY OF WASHINGTON, District of Columbia, ss:

Zenas Fisk Wilbur, being duly sworn, hereby deposes and says as follows: I am of lawful age, and by profession a solicitor of patents. I was for some years a principal examiner in the United States Patent Office, having for years the class of electricity under my charge. Since resigning from that office I have acted as solicitor in several hundred electrical cases, have been called on frequently to report upon the scope and validity of patents for electrical inventions, and to testify as expert in litigated cases.

I have carefully examined U. S. letters patent granted to James W. McDonough, No. 245,534, dated August 9, 1881, No. 236,800, dated September 6, 1881, and No. 248,002, dated October 4, 1881, and also what purports to be a copy of the original application of said McDonough for an "Improvement in Telilogues" (the apparatus now designed telephone), filed by him April 10, 1876.

The said patents appear to be legitimate and lawful divisions of such original application, the drawings or apparatus shown being the same in all the patents and the same as shown in the original application. The description in the various patents seem to be based entirely and legitimately thereon, and the claims such as could properly be made upon the apparatus shown and the description given thereof.

This application and these patents show a practical speaking telephone—that is, one by which articulate speech can be practically transmitted, reproduced and received. In general principles it resembles the prototypes of all speaking telephones (Reis and Meucci).

The arrangement in the transmitter for connecting the electrodes by the loose spring yoke insures a variable pressure contact, and is in substance and reality of the same type as the subsequent modification of the Reis telephone, known as the Blake transmitter. The receiver shown in said patents is a true electro-magnetic receiver. There can be no doubt that the entire apparatus shown in McDonough's patent and application is much more operative and practical for the purpose of a speaking telephone than that shown in the patent of A. G. Bell, No. 174,465, March 29, 1876, if it be conceded (which does not seem to be the case) that there is any practicability or value in the alleged invention of such last-named patent for a speaking telephone, both the inventions of Bell and McDonough being modifications only of the prototypes named, viz, the telephones of Reis and Meucci.

Record of Department of Justice respecting applications made and granted for the institution of suits in the name of the Government for the revocation of letters patent.

PATENT CASE J. L. STEVENS.

On March 6, 1874, the Attorney-General wrote to the Secretary of the Interior for information as to institution of proceedings. On March 13, 1874, the Secretary replied, and on March 14, 1874, the United States attorney for the northern district of Illinois was authorized to sign the name of the Attorney-General to the application for repeal of patent.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, March 6, 1874.

Hon. C. DELANO,
Secretary of the Interior:

SIR: I have the honor to inclose a copy of a letter addressed to me by Messrs. West and Bond, with the accompanying papers, in which application is made for leave to use the name of the Attorney-General on behalf of one Abner Bryant to repeal a patent issued to one John L. Stevens and others for a new and useful improvement in egg-carriers. I respectfully ask that you will refer these papers to the Commissioner of Patents and request him to give me any information he may have in respect to the subject, and also his views as to the propriety of my acceding to the request of Messrs. West and Bond. Nothing appears to show that any proceedings have been taken by the patentees against any one for an infringement of their patent, nor does it appear that they did not act in good faith and did not honestly believe themselves to be the inventors when they obtained the patent.

I am doubtful as to whether or not any person who obtained a patent should be called upon to defend its validity against a suit brought in the name of the Attorney-General at the instance of any person who may allege its invalidity. I do not think, at any rate, that the Attorney-General ought to allow his name and authority to be used for the purpose of attacking a patent by suit, unless he is advised by the Secretary of the Interior that it is desirable and proper that such suit should be commenced; otherwise one Department of the Government would be put in the attitude of attacking the acts of another Department. I respectfully request, therefore, that you signify to me your wishes in respect to the inclosed application of Messrs. West and Bond.

Very respectfully,

GEORGE H. WILLIAMS,
Attorney-General.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, March 14, 1874.

J. O. GLOVER, Esq.,
United States Attorney, Chicago, Ill.:

SIR: I inclose affidavit and bill which were sent to me by Messrs. West and Bond, of your city, with an application to allow the name of the Attorney-General to be used to repeal the patent described in the bill.

I have concluded, after conferring with the Secretary of the Interior upon the subject, to grant their request, upon the condition that they make the necessary provision to save the United States harmless from all costs or expenses in the proceedings. You are, therefore, authorized to sign my name to the inclosed bill, and deliver the same, with the affidavit, to Messrs. West and Bond, whenever the necessary arrangements are made as to costs and expenses.

Very respectfully,

GEO. H. WILLIAMS,
Attorney-General.

PATENT CASE OF RUMFORD CHEMICAL WORKS.

On April 9, 1875, the Attorney-General wrote to the Secretary of the Interior for information as to institution of proceedings. On April 17, 1875, the Secretary replied, and on April 17, 1875, the United States attorney for the district of Rhode Island was authorized to attach the name of the Attorney-General to the application for repeal of patent.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, April 9, 1875.

Hon. COLUMBUS DELANO,
Secretary of the Interior:

SIR: I herewith respectfully submit an application of George V. Hecker for leave to file an information in the name of the United States to set aside certain letters patent held by the Rumford Chemical Works with the accompanying papers.

Before taking action upon the subject I desire an expression of your views as to the propriety of granting the application.

Very respectfully,

GEO. H. WILLIAMS,
Attorney-General.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, April 17, 1875.

JOHN A. GARDNER, Esq.,
U. S. Attorney, Providence, R. I.:

SIR: Application has been made to me by George V. Hecker to file an information in my name against the Rumford Chemical Works, and another to vacate certain letters patent held by that company, which are described in the inclosed copy of the information which Hecker proposes to file.

I have duly considered this application after obtaining a report thereon from the Commissioner of Patents, and am of the opinion that it should be granted.

You will therefore file an information substantially like the one a copy of which is here inclosed in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Rhode Island; and you are authorized to attach my name thereto; and I think it proper that yours should also be attached as district attorney for the district in which the suit is brought. You are to understand that the proceedings after the information is filed are to be conducted altogether by the attorneys of Mr. Hecker and at his expense. Before filing the information you will require him to secure in some proper way the United States against all expenses in the proceeding, and after such security is given and the information properly filed you will take no further action in the case until otherwise instructed by this Department.

I inclose a copy of the report of the Commissioner of Patents, and of a communication to me from the Acting Secretary of the Interior; but in view of the decisions of the Supreme Court, and the statements made in the report of the Commissioner, I do not agree with the opinion expressed by the Acting Secretary.

Very respectfully,

GEO. H. WILLIAMS,
Attorney-General.

WOODBURY PATENT PLANING MACHINE COMPANY.

S. attorney for the district of Connecticut was authorized to allow a scire facias or a bill in equity to be filed in the name of the U. S., &c.

CALVIN C. CHILDS, U. S. Attorney, Stamford, Conn. :

SIR: I inclose the petition of L. Gould for a scire facias proceeding against the patent granted to Joseph Page Woodbury, of Boston, Massachusetts, April 29, 1873, numbered 138,461, U. S. Patent Office, duly assigned to the Woodbury Patent Planing Machine Company, of Hartford, Connecticut; also a copy of a letter from the Commissioner of Patents to the Secretary of the Interior upon the subject of the petition, and a copy of one from the Secretary to me, inclosing a copy of the Commissioner's.

I have determined, in view of the facts as presented in the petition and letter of the Commissioner, to whom it was referred for a report, to allow a scire facias or a bill in equity to be filed in the name of the United States in the proper court to carry into effect the object of the petition. When, therefore, a bill is duly prepared by the counsel for Mr. Gould and presented to you, setting forth in substance the case as stated in the petition, you are authorized to subscribe your name thereto as district attorney, and also mine as Attorney-General of the United States, and cause the said bill so prepared to be filed in the proper court. The cause thereafter, on the part of the petitioner, will be conducted by his counsel, and you are to require of him, upon the filing of the bill, proper security to indemnify the United States against all costs in the prosecution.

Very respectfully,

GEO. H. WILLIAMS,
Attorney-General.

PATENT CASE OF THOS. H. CURREY.

On November 25, 1876, the Attorney-General wrote to the Secretary of the Interior for information as to institution of proceedings. On November 29, 1876, the Secretary replied, and on December 5, 1876, the U. S. attorney for the Southern district of Ohio was authorized to allow a scire facias or bill in equity to be filed in the name of the United States.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, November 25, 1876.

Hon. Z. CHANDLER,
Secretary of the Interior :

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a letter of the 22d inst., addressed to me by Zera Getchell, of Cincinnati, Ohio, and the inclosures therewith.

He claims that letters patent No. 99,856, granted to Thomas H. Currey, of Cincinnati, on the 15th of February, 1870, for the exclusive use of a certain improved elastic point, were procured by fraud, and he presents affidavits in support of this allegation, and asks leave to bring an action in the name of the United States to set aside the patent.

I have the honor to request that you will have the case examined by the Commissioner of Patents, and that you will transmit to me his report, with such advice thereon as you may see fit to give me.

Very respectfully, your obt. servt.,

ALPHONSO TAFT,
Attorney-General.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, December 5, 1876.

WARNER M. BATEMAN, Esq.,
U. S. Attorney, Cincinnati, Ohio.

SIR: I enclose the petition of Zera Getchell, of Cincinnati, Ohio, in which he asks leave to bring an action in the name of the United States in the United States circuit court for the southern district of Ohio, to set aside and declare null and void letters patent No. 99,856, granted to Thomas H. Currey, of Cincinnati, Ohio, on the 15th day of February, 1870, for the exclusive use of a certain improved elastic paint, also the affidavits supporting said petition; also a copy of a letter, of the 28th ultimo, from the Commissioner of Patents to the Secretary of the Interior upon the subject of the petition; also a copy of a letter of the 29th ultimo from the Secretary to me.

I have determined, in view of the facts as presented in the petition, and as recommended by the letter from the Secretary of the Interior, to allow a scire facias or bill in equity to be filed in the name of the United States in the proper courts to carry into effect the objects of the petition.

When, therefore, a bill is duly prepared by the counsel for Mr. Getchell, and presented to you, setting forth, in substance, the case as stated in the petition, you are authorized to subscribe your name thereto, as district attorney, and also mine, as Attorney-General of the United States, and cause the said bill so prepared to be filed. The cause thereafter, on the part of the petitioner, will be conducted by his counsel, and you are to require of him, upon the filing of the bill, proper security to indemnify the United States against all costs in the proceeding.

Very respectfully,

ALPHONSO TAFT,
Attorney-General.

Hon. HENRY M. TELLER,
Secretary of the Interior:

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith the petition, with affidavits, of Messrs. Cæsar Bros., of New York, by Louis C. Raegener, their attorney, asking for proceedings by the United States to annul letters patent No. 265,061, granted Sept. 26, 1862, to John Gunning, of New York.

I respectfully ask that any information upon the subject that may be in the power of the Patent Office to give may be furnished me; also your opinion whether any action of this Department, with a view to set aside the said patent, is proper or expedient.

With your reply I will thank you to return the enclosures herewith.

Very respectfully,

BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, January 13, 1883.

STEWART L. WOODFORD, Esq., U. S. Attorney, New York:

SIR: I return herewith the papers pertaining to the petition presented to this Department by Louis C. Raegener, esq., in behalf of his clients, Messrs. Cæsar Bros., asking that proceedings by bill in equity be instituted by the Government to annul letters patent issued in September, 1882, to John Gunning, of New York, for a new and useful improvement in enameled letters and figures.

Upon an examination of the affidavits, and of the reports upon the subject made to me by the Commissioner of Patents, and by Mr. Clarke of your office, I have determined that it is right and expedient, and that it will be for the public good that suit for the above purpose should be commenced.

You are therefore hereby directed to file in the proper court in my name as Attorney General of the U. S. a bill in chancery, the object of which shall be the annulment of said patent. If agreeable to you, you will invite Mr. Raegener to assist in framing the bill and in the conduct of the case, but your office will retain the control thereof.

I will suggest that your assistant, Mr. Clarke, who has already looked into the case, and is familiar to the law pertaining to patent rights, have charge of this matter.

I enclose a communication for Mr. Raegener, giving him authority as your assistant to aid in the cause, but without compensation from the U. S. If it is not agreeable to you to have Mr. Raegener thus employed, you will not deliver to him this letter of authority.

Very respectfully,

BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

PATENT CASE SAM'L FRAZIER.

S. attorney for the northern district of Illinois was authorized to sign the name of the Attorney-General to a bill in equity.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, July 21, 1884.

COMMISSIONER OF PATENTS:

SIR: Herewith I send a draft of a bill in equity, The United States vs. Samuel T. Frazier, northern district of Illinois, and three affidavits in support of the same.

These have been sent to this Department with a request that the same be allowed to be filed for the purpose of vacating the patents therein mentioned.

I have read the bill, and before coming to any conclusion upon the request transmit the same to you, asking that the same may be examined, and that any remarks which you may think proper to make upon this application, in the interests of the public, shall at your earliest convenience be returned.

Such examination and early return will confer an obligation upon me which I hereby anticipate and acknowledge.

I also add the original letters (jacketed) here received in connection with the bill, being two each from United States Attorney Tuthill, and from Messrs. West and Bond, of Chicago, Illinois.

Very respectfully,

S. F. PHILLIPS,
Acting Attorney-General.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, July 30, 1884.

R. S. TUTHILL, Esq.,
United States Attorney, Chicago, Ill.:

SIR: Herewith I return the draft of a bill in equity, the United States of America v. Samuel Frazer, of Galena, Illinois, which Messrs. West and Bond of Chicago propose to file, for the purpose of vacating patents Nos. 310,455 (Sept. 9, 1870), and 343,407 (October 10, 1880).

Upon a sufficient bond being filed to secure the United States against all costs; it being understood as well that the United States are to be at no expense on account of this proceeding, you are hereby authorized to sign the name of the Attorney-General to the inclosed bill, and file it accordingly. You will also give your attention from time to time to the progress of the suit, and whenever you think fit, advise this office thereabouts.

Very respectfully,

S. F. PHILLIPS,
Acting Attorney-General.

Washington, October 6, 1885.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR:

SIR: I transmit herewith two letters from Mr. Roberts (member of the law firm of George L. Roberts & Bros., of Boston, Mass.), with accompanying documents, relative to the institution of proceedings against Zenas C. Warren to set aside certain letters patent, and to ask that you cause the same to be considered at an early day and return them to me with such suggestions and advice as you think proper to give in the premises.

Very respectfully,

A. H. GARLAND,
Attorney-General.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, October 21, 1885.

GEORGE P. SANGER, esq.,
United States Attorney, Boston, Mass.:

SIR: At the suggestion of the Commissioner of Patents, concurred in by the Secretary of the Interior, that the evidence in the matter of letters patent, No. 318063, to Zenas C. Warren, makes at least a strong prima facie showing of abundant reason why the patent is fraudulent and void; and in accordance with the recommendation of the Commissioner and Secretary to that effect, you are instructed to institute proceedings to annul the said grant of letters patent. Mr. John L. S. Roberts, of Boston, has this day been appointed assistant United States attorney, without compensation, for the purpose of aiding in the prosecution of this suit. It is distinctly understood that the United States shall not be charged with any costs or expense whatever in connection with the case.

I return herewith the bill of complaint with my signature, together with the evidence submitted by Mr. Roberts to the Commissioner of Patents.

Respectfully,

A. H. GARLAND,
Attorney-General.

Hon. Z. CHANDLER,

Kilborn, October 12, 1858, and numbered 27,762, and having received the Commissioner's report, I have considered the question, and decline to allow the process asked for. The case appears to be one in which the ordinary remedy open to you is sufficient.

Very respectfully,

EDWARDS PIERREPONT,

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a letter of this date addressed to me by W. G. Rainey, a lawyer of good reputation, of St. Louis, Missouri.

He requests that a suit be instituted by the Attorney-General on behalf of the United States to annul patent No. 228,001, granted to John Stevens, of Neenah, Wisconsin.

I have the honor to request your advice as to whether the petition should be granted. With your reply, which is desired should be as early as possible, please return the inclosed letter.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAS. DEVENS,
Attorney-General.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, February 4, 1881.

W. G. RAINEY, Esq.,
Attorney and Counsellor, St. Louis, Missouri:

SIR: Your letter of the 25th ultimo, addressed to this Department, in which letter you ask the Attorney-General to institute a suit on behalf of the United States to cancel letters patent No. 228,001, issued to John Stevens on the 25th of May, 1880, was referred by me on the 25th of January to the Secretary of the Interior.

I transmit to you herewith a copy of his reply, bearing date the 3d instant; also, copy of a letter of the Commissioner of Patents, bearing date the 1st instant, and a copy of a report made by E. D. Boyd, examiner, dated January 31, 1881.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, February 21, 1881.

W. G. RAINEY, Esq.,
Attorney at law, St. Louis, Missouri:

SIR: Your application for permission to institute a suit in the name of the Attorney-General, on behalf of the United States, with the purpose of setting aside and declaring void the patent for an improvement in roller grinding mills, issued May 25, 1880, to John Stevens, of Neenah, Wisconsin, has had my attention, and upon full consideration I do not see it to be my duty to grant your request.

Very respectfully,

CHAS. DEVENS,
Attorney-General.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, February 21, 1881.

R. L. DOWNTON, Esq.,
Hudson, Wisconsin:

SIR: Your favor of the 16th instant, in relation to institution of a suit in the name of the Attorney-General, in behalf of the United States, for the purpose of setting aside and declaring void the patent for the improvement of roller grinding mills, issued to John Stevens, is received.

I have to-day informed Mr. W. G. Rainey, of St. Louis, who has addressed me upon this subject, that I do not see it to be my duty to grant the request.

Very respectfully,

CHAS. DEVENS,
Attorney-General.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, April 28, 1881.

W. G. RAINEY, Esq., Attorney at Law, St. Louis, Missouri:

SIR: I have received your letter of the 22d instant, renewing your request that suit be brought in the name of the United States, the object of which shall be to cancel letters of patent No. 228,001, granted to John Stevens, of Neenah, Wis., May 25, 1880. Your statements in letters of the 25th of January and 7th of February, 1881, have been re-examined.

It does not seem to me to be right that the United States should seek to set aside its patent, issued after such examination and consideration as the law requires, upon the suggestion of an attorney, however reputable, supported by no statement or affidavit of his client, who is not even named.

The application should be accompanied by the affidavits not only of the real applicant himself, but of other persons having knowledge of the facts and grounds relied on. Moreover, in such a case it is proper, I think, that the patentee should have notice of the application, and have opportunity to be heard.

As at present advised, I concur with my predecessor in thinking the case not such as requires the favorable action of this Department.

Very respectfully,

WAYNE MACVEAGH,
Attorney-General.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, May 10, 1881.

Messrs. PARKINSON & PARKINSON,
Counselors, Cincinnati, Ohio:

GENTLEMEN. Replying to your letter of the 7th instant, I beg to inform you that no application for authority to institute proceeding in the name of the United States for the repeal of the patent issued to John Stevens for roller grinding mills is pending in this Department.

If such application should be made, it may be thought proper and expedient to require the applicant to give notice to the patentee as a preliminary condition to the hearing of the case. It is a matter in the discretion of the Department.

When applications are made to the Attorney-General for leave to bring suit in the name of the United States to set aside patents for lands or for inventions, there is no rule of practice in the Department which requires him to give notice to opposing interests.

I must decline therefore to notify you directly if the case apprehended by you should arise.

Very respectfully,

WAYNE MACVEAGH,
Attorney-General.

PATENT CASE CHARLES W. BOYNTON.

On July 15, 1879, the Attorney-General wrote to the Secretary of the Interior for information as to institution of proceedings.

On July 21, 1879, the Secretary of the Interior replied that the Commissioner of Patents saw no reason to doubt the propriety of the grants.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, July 15, 1870.

Hon. CARL SCHURZ,
Secretary of the Interior :

SIR : I have the honor to transmit a copy of a letter of the 12th inst., from Messrs. Banning and Banning, attorneys at law, Chicago, in which letter they request authority to file a bill in the name of the Attorney-General to set aside a certain patent mentioned in the letter.

With your reply, I have the honor to request that you will return such information from the Patent Office as concerns the patent and such advice as you may think proper to give in the case.

Very respectfully,

CHAS. DEVENS,
Attorney-General.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, July 22, 1879.

Messrs. BANNING AND BANNING,
Attorneys at Law, Chicago, Ill. :

GENTLEMEN: Replying to your letter of the 12th inst., in which you request authority to use the name of Attorney-General in a suit to repeal patents issued to Charles W. Boynton for an improvement in grain-drying kilns, I have to state that having for information referred the matter to the Secretary of the Interior, I find that upon a re-examination of the patents there is no good reason to doubt the propriety of the grants.

The Commissioner of Patents states that no facts are known to him showing the United States to be interested in the proceedings suggested, and cites the case of the Attorney-General ex rel. Hecker v. The Rumford Chemical Works et al., Patent Office Gazette, vol. 9, p. 1062. Upon this information received from the Patent Office, I must decline to comply with your request.

Very respectfully,

S. F. PHILLIPS,
Acting Attorney-General.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, July 26, 1879.

Messrs. BANNING AND BANNING,
Attorneys at Law, 147 Randolph St., Chicago, Ill. :

GENTLEMEN: I am informed that the Attorney General, on the 22d inst., replied to your first request for authority to file a bill to annul the patent of Charles W. Boynton; and in view of the decision thus conveyed to you, there seems to be no other duty on my part but to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 23d inst.

Very respectfully,

S. F. PHILLIPS,
Acting Attorney-General.

PATENT CASE ANNIE J. BROWN.

On October 24, 1882, the Attorney-General wrote to Joshua Pusey, esq., in relation to the institution of suit.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, October 24, 1882.

JOSHUA PUSEY, Esq.,
903 Walnut St., Philadelphia, Pa. :

SIR: I am in receipt of your favor of the 30th ult., inclosing for my consideration the petition of Isaac W. Heysinger, of your city, praying that a suit may be brought in the name of the United States to annul the letters patent No. 260,565, for improvements in devices for inserting and clinching metallic staples, granted to Annie J. Brown, assignee of William J. Brown, jr. (her husband), on the 4th day of July, 1882.

Your letter has had my careful consideration. Before taking any action in the premises it will be necessary for me to select a competent person, at your expense, to carefully review the case, and after a thorough investigation of its merits to report to me whether it is proper for me to accede to your request.

I desire to add that, if I conclude to grant the petition of your client, I must select a counsel, at his expense, to represent the Government. Awaiting your reply, I am, very respectfully, yours,

BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, April 24, 1883.

JOSHUA PUSEY, Esq.,
Atty. at Law, 905 Walnut St., Phila.:

SIR: Replying to your letter of the 13th instant, I transmit herewith petition (with models and other exhibits) received at this Department in Oct., 1882, praying that a suit might be brought in the name of the U. S. to annul certain letters patent of Annie J. Brown, assignee of William J. Brown, dated July 4, 1882.

Very respectfully,

BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, April 28, 1883.

JOSHUA PUSEY, Esq.,
Atty. at Law, 905 Walnut St., Phila.:

SIR: Your letter of the 28th inst., replying to my communication of the 24th of April, has been called to my attention. I have directed that the exhibits referred to in your letter be sent to you by Adams Express.

Attorney-General.

On Oct. 21, 1883, the Attorney-General wrote to Geo. D. Seymour, esq., in relation to taking steps to repeal patent granted after invention had been in public use, &c.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, October 21, 1883.

GEO. D. SEYMOUR, Esq.,
81 Church St., New Haven, Conn.:

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 18th inst., I beg to refer you to the case of Mowry vs. Whitney, 14th Wallace's Supreme Court Reports, page 434.

I know of no decided case where a patent right has been vacated on suit instituted in the name of the U. S., or in the name of Attorney-General on behalf of the U. S.

Two or three suits are pending which have been brought in the name of the Attorney-General, leave to institute suit having first been granted by the Attorney-General. These, however, proceeded on the ground of fraud in obtaining the patent, going no farther than the instructions (?) intimation of the court in Mowry vs. Whitney.

If it is desired that judicial proceedings be instituted by the Attorney-General to set aside a patent, a petition should be addressed to him, setting forth all the facts and grounds for such proceedings.

Very respectfully,

BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

PATENT CASE CHAS. NELSON.

On January 27, 1885, the Attorney-General wrote to the Commissioner of Patents for information as to institution of proceedings.

On February 13, 1885, the Commissioner replied, and invited attention to report made by the examiner who had under consideration the application of Nelson for patent for "noiseless slates."

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, Jany. 27, 1885.

COMMISSIONER OF PATENTS:

SIR: Upon a perusal of the within papers (3), being an application, &c., by A. J. Perry, of New York, for leave to file a bill to vacate letters patent 281,785, issued to Charles Nelson, in regard to slate frames, it may be that you shall have some observation to make important to the interestsof the public. I therefore submit the same to you, and ask that at your earliest convenience you will return them with any observations that may occur as above.

Very respectfully,

BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

PATENT CASE JAS. SARGENT & MARION WARREN.

On July 23, 1885, the Attorney-General wrote to the Secretary of the Interior for information as to institution of proceedings.

On Aug. 3, 1885, the Secretary replied, and said that in his opinion there was no question raised as to the patentability of the invention.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, July 23, 1885.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR:

SIR: I am in receipt of your communication (by Asst. Secy. Muldrow) with accompanying papers, touching the application of Albert S. Bigelow for the bringing of a suit to vacate a certain patent therein named issued Sept. 30, 1884, to James Sargent and Marion Warren.

The communication does not give any wish or expression of opinion as to the request made by Mr. B. As the patent comes from your Department it is usual in such cases, before any action is taken here, for your Department to give some expression of opinion or indicate some wish in reference to the propriety of granting the application; and as I consider the cases in which suits should be brought very rare indeed, I would much prefer the Interior Department would in this case indicate its will or its opinion as to the propriety of the course insisted upon by Mr. Bigelow.

With high regard, &c.,

A. H. GARLAND,
Attorney-General.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, Aug. 5, 1885.

GEORGE R. SELDEN, Esq.,
Attorney at Law, 50 and 51 Arcade, Rochester, N. Y.:

SIR: I have to-day returned to Hon. Martin I. Townsend, U. S. attorney, a reply to the request heretofore sent up through him for the use of the name of the United States to vacate letters patent to Sargent & Warren, made on behalf of Albert S. Bigelow, and I have sent to him the papers which accompanied that application.

Very truly, yours,

A. H. GARLAND,
Attorney-General.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, Aug. 5, 1885.

Hon. MARTIN I. TOWNSEND,
U. S. Attorney, Troy, N. Y.:

SIR: The application of Albert S. Bigelow for the use of the name of the United States in a suit to vacate Letters Patent 305,956, issued to James Sargent and Marion Warren, has been for some time before the Secretary of the Interior, and to-day I have received from him the papers, with his recommendation that the name of the United States for that purpose be not granted. The Secretary of the Interior concurs in the report made upon this subject by Mr. Montgomery, the present Commissioner of Patents, a copy of which report I herewith send you. I have also mailed to you the other papers in the case.

After a careful examination of the report of Mr. Montgomery, and the accompanying papers, I am of the opinion that his conclusion is correct, and that a proper case for interference by the United States has not been furnished, and therefore I decline to grant the use of the name of the United States for that purpose.

Very respectfully,

A. H. GARLAND,
Attorney-General.

In the Reading case: An agreement for final decree and satisfaction of judgment was filed January 24th, being the date of filing the bill.

In the Eaton case: The Eaton case followed the Spencer case and was determined accordingly—the facts being the same.

In the Pearce & Jones case: The bill being filed July 7th, 1880, a consent and interlocutory decree were filed August 11th. There was no answer or contest.

In the Lazelle case: There was no appearance or answer, and the bill was taken as confessed.

In the Harbert case: There was no appearance or answer, and the bill was taken as confessed.

In the Foster Magnet case: There was no appearance or answer, and a decree by default; reference to master waived; damages assessed at six cents.

In the Craney case: There was an appearance and answer; proofs filed on the part of the complainant, but no evidence offered on the part of the defendants, and an interlocutory decree was thereupon entered with reference to a master and an injunction issued, but nothing further done.

In the Shaw case: There was no appearance or answer, and the bill was taken as confessed.

In the Albright case: An appearance and answer were filed; testimony was taken and filed on the part of the complainant, but none on the part of the defendant.

With respect to the case of Charles E. and W. H. Jones, in Cincinnati, we have no information, and the Bell Co. has made no proof. It must be assumed that they were substantially in the same situation as the foregoing.

These cases, in which there was no real contest or discussion, are of course of no importance as prior adjudications. They only serve to show that from the outset the rights under the Bell patents were challenged and disregarded in various parts of the country.

The other five cases are the only ones which can be relied upon to establish such prior adjudication as will justify an injunction, and all of these cases will be considered in some detail in the order of their dates.

THE DOWD CASE.

This case was against Peter A. Dowd, an agent of the Western Union Telegraph Company, the Gold and Stock Telegraph Company, and the American Speaking Telephone Company, which had associated themselves together, as alleged in the tenth paragraph of the bill, for the purpose of contesting the rights of the American Bell Telephone Company. It was, therefore, apparently, at its inception, a real contest, and the defendants were large corporations, amply able to conduct such a controversy to a final conclusion.

This bill was founded upon the two patents which are the foundation of all suits. It simply alleged the issuing of the patents and their assignment to the Bell Telephone Company, and the introduction of the patented invention into public use, and the infringement by the defendant.

The answer alleged the want of novelty of said invention specified in the patent of March 7, 1876. That it was known and used by Elisha Gray, Thomas A. Edison, Amos E. Dolbear, Alfred G. Holcomb, W. F. Chaming, W. F. Edmunds, and James Hamblet, jr., before any invention by Bell, and was described in and patented by certain letters granted to Edison and Harrington, William Thompson, and to Charles Wheatstone by the Government of Great Britain, and that it had long before been described in the following publications:

Electricity and Magnetism, by Jenkins, published in London and New York in 1877, p. 334.

In Schellen's Electro-Magnet Telegraph, published in Germany in 1867, pp. 468, 496.

The Electric Telegraph, by Sabine, published in London in 1867, at pages 45 and 46.

The Electric Telegraph, by Dr. Lardner, published in London in 1867, at pages 164, &c.

None of these inventions had any reference whatever to the publications of Philipp Reis.

The answer alleged with regard to the second Bell patent of January 30, 1877, that Bell was not the original and first inventor of the improvement in the patent, and that before any invention thereof the same was known to Elisha Gray, Thomas A. Edison, Amos E. Dolbear, and Alfred G. Holcomb, Philip H. Vanderweyde, and W. F. Hamilton, and that it was described in British letters patent to J. H. Johnson; Canada letters patent to Elisha Gray, July 7, 1875; United States letters patent to Elisha Gray, July 27, 1875; United States letters patent to Elisha Gray, April 11, 1876, and has been described in the same publications above stated, and also in the Zeitschrift des Oesterrichischen Telegraphen Verein, published in Berlin, 1862, volume 9, page 125.

In the Telegraphic Journal, London, 1872, volume 1, page 4.

In Electricity, by R. H. Ferguson, 1867, page 257.

In the Telegrapher, New York, 1869, volume 5, No. 39.

The Manufacturer and Builder, November, 1869, volume 1, page 129.

Of Electricity, by J. Baile, New York, 1872, page 140; and the Telegraphic Journal, London, 1879, volume iii, 286.

The answer also alleges the invalidity of the Bell patents on several grounds, and denied that the telephones showed and used by the defendant infringed any valid claim of either the patents.

The answer was amended, by consent as of November 4th, 1878, by inserting as additional anticipating patents relating to the Bell patent of March 7th, 1876, the following patents:

English patent to John Henry Johnson, July 7th, 1875.

English letters patent to said Johnson, March 6th, 1875.

United States letters patent to Elisha Gray, July 20th, 1875.

United States letters patent to said Gray, July 27th, 1875, No. 166,094.

United States letters patent to said Gray, July 27th, 1875, No. 166,095.

United States letters patent to said Gray, February 15th, 1876, No. 173,460.

United States letters patent to said Gray, dated February 15th, 1876, No. 173,618.

The amendment also inserted in the answer the same letters patent as anticipations of the second Bell patent, but did not in any way refer to any other publication.

The amendment also stated in detail Gray's application of February 14th, 1876, and alleged that in granting the patent to Bell it had been overlooked by mistake or inadvertence.

On the part of the complainant the prima facie case consisted of the deposition of Henry B. Renwick, the complainant's patents and the assignment thereof.

The evidence for the defendant consisted of the testimony of William H. Goodridge, Elisha Gray, Milo C. Kellogg, Enos M. Barton, Anson Steger, Edward S. Renwick, and Amos E. Dolbear, Frank L. Pope, and some of the patents and publications mentioned in the answer; but the "Zeitschrift," which is the Von Legat article concerning Reis, though mentioned in the answer with reference to the second Bell patent, was not offered in evidence, and none of the publications now known as the "Reis Publications" were offered in evidence.

In fact the only publication offered in evidence, referring in any way to the Reis publications or to the Reis inventions, was a paper entitled "Electricity," by Robert Ferguson, which appears on page 702, volume ii Dowd Record, which article contains a drawing of the first Reis instruments, and a very brief description of the same, without any reference to its origin or history.

The complainant, in reply, re-examined Professor Charles R. Cross, Alexander Graham Bell, and Thomas A. Watson, and several other witnesses, and before any further evidence was offered on the part of the defendants the case was ended by a settlement.

It is alleged by the bill in this case—

"That upon consideration of the proofs and the opinions of their professional advisors, the defendant and the said corporation became satisfied that Bell was the true, original, and first inventor of the speaking telephone and the inventions covered by the patents, and agreed to desist from further infringement, and have since desisted from further infringement, and placed and caused to be placed all the telephones within their power or control under license under said Bell patents, and paid or caused to be paid the usual and customary yearly royalty therefor habitually charged by the assignees of said Bell to other parties for like use, and agreed that they would not thereafter make electric speaking telephones, and would not thereafter use electric-speaking telephones, except such as should be made and furnished to them by your orator or the assigns of said Bell and under license under said Bell patents, and that for their use of the same they should pay not less than the usual and customary royalty from time to time charged to others by your orator."

It is alleged that in accordance with the advice of the counsel of the telegraph companies, a final decree was made for the complainant with the consent of the defendant, and by said decree said two Bell patents were adjudged and declared to be valid, and the defendant was perpetually enjoined.

Upon referring to the affidavit of Mr. George Gifford, given in the proofs of the complainants in reply on this motion (p. 192), it is manifest that the statement in the bill is not a fair relation of the circumstances under which the decree in the Dowd suit was made. Mr. Gifford states that the Western Union Telegraph Company, which is one of the real defendants in the suit, owned the Page patent, which covered the induction coil, the two patents of Gray for harmonic telegraphs, which it was contended would be infringed by the use of the Bell telephone, and controlled also the applications for patents by Gray for a receiver, and by Edison for carbon transmitters and microphone, which it was claimed and expected would be granted in the Patent Office over Blake, whose transmitter the Bell Telephone Company claimed to control and had in use. He says that while he believed that Bell was the inventor of the telephone described and claimed in his patent, and that his patent covered the various devices of telephones controlled by the Western Union Telegraph Company in which the carbon transmitter and microphone were elements, yet the Western Union Telegraph Company controlled patents and inventions which it was claimed might cover all known devices of telephones, and that under his advice negotiation was opened with the complainant on that basis; that he admitted that Bell's patent was valid and that the defendant infringed it, and that those questions formed no part of the discussion, but claimed that all the patents should be put together, and that the defendants should have one-half interest in the resulting combination.

That this claim was refused, but that the negotiation was taken up by the principals and resulted in the surrender by the Western Union Company to the Bell Company of certain telephone lines and exchanges, and in their giving to the Bell Telephone Company an exclusive license under all the patents which they claimed were infringed by the Bell telephone, and that in exchange for this license the Western Union Company gave a small interest, much less than he claimed for them, and the results of the combined patents and the entire business was left in the hands of the Bell Telephone Company.

Mr. Gifford, in this affidavit, was speaking of his knowledge in 1878 and 1879, at a time when not even the now well known publications concerning Reis's telephones were sufficiently familiar to have been put in evidence in the cause, and when the claims of McDonough seemed to have been entirely unknown to any of the parties, no mention of them being made throughout the case.

It is not to be wondered at, therefore, that at that time Mr. Gifford was induced to concede, in the interest of his clients, that Bell was the first inventor of the telephone.

It is manifest, from all the proceedings in that case, that the contest was between Bell and Gray, whose application had been filed January 27th, 1876, and whose caveat was filed February 14th, 1876, being the same day on which Bell's application was filed.

Much the larger part of the testimony and exhibits in the Dowd case related to the controversy between the Bell patents, owned by the Bell Telephone Company, and the Gray patents and inventions, owned by the associated corporations which defended the suit.

It was not to the interest of either party to expose or to prove any prior inventions by other parties, or any printed patents or publications, which intended to invalidate the claims of either. It was for this reason, manifestly, that all reference to Reis's publications, with relation to the Bell patent of March 7th, 1876, were carefully excluded from the answer, and for this reason also that the "Zeitschrift" publication of the Von Legat article, which fully sets forth the nature of the Reis invention, was only referred to in the answer with respect to the second patent, and was not put in evidence at all.

It is manifest, also, that the result of this case was simply a compromise between the two contending parties seeking to control for their own purposes the entire telephone business of the country, to the exclusion of all others, and that the case was carefully managed in order to avoid revealing the weakness of either in this respect, and that when the controversy had reached a proper stage for that purpose, the principals in interest took the matter out of the hands of counsel and away from court and adjusted their respective rights as they considered best in view of their own interests and the avoidance of any interference by others.

The bill disingenuously states the result as a complete surrender by the defendant and his submission to the complainant's alleged claims without any special advantages given in return.

Mr. Gifford states that he claimed one-half of all the joint interests for the defendants, but that they settled on less advantageous terms.

In order to ascertain what those terms were, so that the effect of this case might be truly understood, the Overland Telephone Co., during the trial of their case, gave notice to the Bell Company's solicitor, January 9, 1884, to produce all agreements, stipulations, or contracts made by the Bell Telephone Company with these associated companies on the settlement on the Dowd suit referred to in Mr. Gifford's affidavit. They were at first informed by the solicitor of the Bell Company that they would refuse to produce these papers as private matters with which it was alleged they had no concern. It was admitted that they had no concern with them unless the case was to be used as an alleged adjudication of the Bell Company's rights. In that case it was contended that the nature of the settlement upon which the decree was based was a matter in which the Overland Co. was concerned, and that those agreements were important and they were entitled to examine them in order to contradict the statement in the bill concerning the result of that case as contained in paragraph 10. From one of these agreements, a copy of which was furnished the Overland Co., it is clear that the Dowd case must be considered simply as the initial piece of legal machinery by which the Bell Telephone Company and its successors and the Western Union Telegraph Company and its associates contrived an arrangement by which they might control the whole telephone business to their own advantage to the exclusion of other prior inventors.

In order to maintain this assertion it is necessary to present the terms of that agreement in some detail, but before stating them a few dates should be borne in mind.

The Dowd case was begun on September 12th, 1878. The taking of evidence was begun January 25th, 1879, and the last day upon which evidence was taken was September 19th, 1879, at Boston. No evidence was taken between July 25th and September 25th, 1879, and then only the testimony of George D'Infreville, Edward E. Quinby, and Henry B. Renwick, all of whom have since been familiar witnesses for the Bell Company, was taken and occupied only four days. The taking of the evidence then ceased without any formal close. It ends abruptly with the last page of part first of the Dowd record. The second part contains a careful collection of exhibits on both sides, and both these volumes were evidently prepared with great care and continuous paging with full indexes and printed at Boston during the year 1880, as appears by the title page. It consists, in fact, of two large volumes entitled Telephone Suits.

A final decree was entered April 4th, 1881, as follows:

CIRCUIT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES, DISTRICT OF MASSACHUSETTS.

BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY ET AL.	} In equity.
against
PETER A. DOWD.

In this cause upon the Bell answer and replication, and the proof taken and filed, and settlement having been thereupon made between the parties upon considerations accepted by the parties; it is now, to wit, April 4th, eighteen hundred and eighty-one, with the consent of the counsel of the parties respectively, ordered, adjudged, and decreed that Alexander Graham Bell is the original and first inventor of the invention specified in the fifth claim of the patent No. 174465, granted to said Bell March 7th, A. D. 1876; and the third, sixth, seventh, and eighth claims of the patent No. 186737, granted to the said Bell January 30, 1877, being the claim in respect of which the proofs were taken; that the said patents are good and valid patents therefor; that the defendant has infringed the same; that he pay to the plaintiff the sum of one dollar, in full satisfaction of profits, damages, and costs, and that he be enjoined from further infringing said patents.

(By the court:)

JOHN G. STETSON,
Clerk.

(See evidence of complainants in the Ghegan case, page 49.)

Now, with these dates in mind, and the form of this decree and the injunction alleged in the bill as the result of the Dowd suit, let us examine the agreement of November 10, 1879, which has been furnished to the Overland Telephone Company as containing the terms of the submission to the claims of the complainant alleged in the tenth paragraph of the bill.

That agreement is between the Western Union Telegraph Company, for itself, and for the Gold and Stock Telegraph Company, the American Speaking Telephone Company, and the Harmonic Telegraph Company, which it represents, party of the first part, and the National Bell Telephone Company, party of the second part.

It appears by the certified copy from the records of the National Bell Telephone Company, appended to this agreement, that a special meeting of stockholders was held in Boston, October 24, 1879, at which it was "voted that the president, treasurer, and clerk be authorized to execute and deliver an agreement with the Western Union Telegraph Company, acting for itself and the Gold and Stock Telegraph Company, the American Speaking Telephone Company, and the Harmonic Telegraph Company, by subscribing and affixing the seal of the company to the contract to be prepared by counsel in accordance with the agreement signed by the special committee of said companies, and submitted to the stockholders at this meeting with such alterations as shall be approved by the board of directors."

And the clerk of the company certifies that the agreement thus submitted to the stockholders, and voted on, was the agreement dated September 27, 1879, between the same companies, a copy of which contract was placed on file.

It appears that at a meeting of the directors of the National Bell Telephone Company, in Boston, November 12, 1879, it was "voted that the agreement made between the Western Union Telegraph Company, acting for itself, and the Gold and Stock Telegraph Company, the American Speaking Telephone Company, and the Harmonic Telegraph Company, party of the one part, and the National Bell Telephone Company of the other part, of which a copy has been laid before this board and placed on file, dated the 10th day of November, 1879, and signed, sealed, and delivered by the president, treasurer, and clerk of the corporation, in pursuance of authority heretofore given them, is hereby declared to be in accordance with the agreement of September 27, 1879, by and between the same parties, and it is hereby authorized, approved, ratified, and confirmed as the act and deed of this corporation."

It thus appears that the agreement of November 10, 1879, was made in pursuance of and in accordance with the prior agreement of September 27, 1879, which was eight days after the taking of the testimony ceased.

In order to learn the true terms of the agreement, which is called in the bill the submission of the defendants to the claims of the complainant, it was necessary to refer to this contract of September 27, 1879.

The Overland Telephone Company accordingly notified counsel of Bell Company to produce that contract, to which they gave this reply, January 16th:

"The copy of the contract with the Western Union Telegraph Company and others, which we sent to you, contained only the contract existing between the National Bell Telephone and the Western Union Telegraph Companies. The contract, earlier referred to in it and by you in your letter, was an informal agreement pending the preparation and execution of the formal one, of which you have a copy, and was superseded by it, though the former had not ceased to exist when the former one, of which you have a copy, was delivered."

To this the Overland Telephone Company replied:

"Your reply to my notice, served on the 16th instant, is received. The bill in this case states in substance that the associated companies contesting the Dowd case, after all the evidence is in, admitted the rights claimed by Bell Company, and made a complete surrender, and that an injunction was afterwards issued. It appears that on September 27, 1879, an informal agreement was made pending the preparation and execution of the formal one, of which you have furnished a copy, and was superseded by it. Since the point is: What kind of a surrender was made and what were the prices and terms of the subsequent arrangement between the parties, I must again request that you produce and furnish me a copy of the first agreement, which ended the controversy."

The Overland Telephone Co. has not yet obtained any copy of the first agreement, but the former agreement now existing is very important, in view of the attempt of the complainants to put forward the Dowd case as the earliest adjudication of their right, and to use it, as has constantly been done, as a basis, for their claim in subsequent suits.

The associated companies, which had been contesting the Bell claims and concerning their own rights under Bell's patents, are the parties of the first part in this agreement, and the Bell Company is the party of the second part.

The first article provides that the Bell Company shall pay to the associated companies a royalty or bonus of twenty per cent. of all rentals or royalties on all telephones used in the United States, under any license from the Bell Company, express or implied, the rentals or royalties to be ascertained by deducting from the gross rentals and commissions the allowance provided for in the agreement.

The second article provides that the royalty or bonus to be paid on telephones made in the United States solely for export and not licensed for use in the United States, shall be twenty per cent. of the net profit actually derived by the Bell Company in their manufacture and sale above the cost of such manufacture, not including any part of the general expense of the Bell Company as part of such cost, and not including in the manufacturer's profit any enhancement of price fairly due to the fact that the Bell Telephone Company holds, or in any way controls, monopoly of the use of such telephones in any other foreign country other than Canada, if such case shall exist: Provided, however, that where the party of the second part shall be in any way interested in the purchase or use of such telephones in such foreign countries it shall be at the option of the party of the first part to require an accounting for all telephones so exported, as if sold at a fixed profit of thirty-three and one-third per cent. upon the cost of manufacture.

After various and minute provisions as to the arrangements established between the parties and the mode of carrying them into effect, article fourth provides:

"The party of the first part shall bear and pay twenty per cent. and the party of the second part eighty per cent. of all reasonable legal expenses incurred in ascertaining, investigating, and determining, and in prosecuting and defending rights which the party of the second part may have, claim, or wish to acquire pertaining to telephones, or the right to use telephones, and concerning patent rights which I or others may claim respecting the same, including expenses in suits and in proceedings in the Patent Office relating to such rights or to the collection of rental or royalties on telephones. Expenses incurred in whole or in part in respect to inventions or improvements which were or may be used otherwise than in telephones shall be apportioned, and such part thereof as may be justly chargeable to the telephone interests shall be borne by the parties hereto in the proportion above stated, and such part thereof as shall justly be chargeable to other interests shall be borne by the owners thereof."

By article five the associated companies granted to the Bell Company an exclusive license for full terms for all patents which had been or might be granted to them or those it represented, to use and license others to use the speaking telephone called Bell's, and switches and other appliances for the use of telephonic lines, reserving, however, the right to use those inventions and the switches, call-bells, and appliances other than telephones, in connection with telephones, which they are or may become entitled to use under this contract.

This article also provided that the associated companies would acquire other inventions for telephones which it had the right to acquire under certain contracts with George H. Phelps and Thomas A. Edison, to license the telephone company to use the same. The latter agreed to pay whatever the associated companies might be required to pay to Edison and Phelps for them, and that if the associated companies should acquire the ownership of other inventions adapted to the telephone, the Bell Company should have the right to use them for telephone purposes, and should be bound to pay the costs, or a true proportion of it.

And it made also the following provisions:

"(5) This contract shall operate as a release to the parties hereto, and those they represent, and their respective licensees and predecessors for all claims for infringements of patents on which suits are now pending in which said parties or any of their licensees or predecessors are parties, and all claims for infringement of other patents or inventions owned or controlled by them, or either of them, growing out of or based upon the manufacture or use of telephones now used in territory to which this contract applies at once; but as to the telephones in territory to which it does not apply at once, it is not to operate as such release (and each party stands on its right in such conflicting territory) until settlements are made and interests harmonized as hereinafter provided, or until the parties hereto agree that it shall operate as a release upon telephones in such localities, and either of such cases it shall thereupon operate as a release in respect of telephones in such locality."

Article 6 provides:

"Except as hereinafter provided, the first party and the companies it represents agree to withdraw from the manufacture, rental, and use of telephones."

Article 7 provides:

"The party of the first part agrees to give assistance and co-operation in developing and extending the use of telephones of the party of the second part, and that the party of the second part shall, during the term of this contract, and when in the judgment of the first party it shall not interfere with the enjoyment and use of the same by said first party for telegraphic purposes, have permission to build lines under any franchises, contracts, licenses, or rights of way enjoyed or controlled by the party of the first part, or to use any poles, fixtures, structures, or plant of said first party, upon reasonable terms, subject, however, to a revocation of such license to use any poles, structures, fixtures, or plant at any time, by a reasonable notice with the party of the second part."

Article 8:

"Whereas it is intended as a part of this agreement, that all telephones heretofore put out under lease or under license by and from the party of the first part and those it represents, shall, without any exception (except temporarily, where this contract does not at once apply), become the property of and come under the lease and license from the party of the second part, and when so transferred and placed under lease and license in accordance with the terms hereof, shall not be pursued or treated as infringing instruments in respect of any use thereof prior to the date of this agreement."

"And whereas it is also intended that all telephone exchanges, which have heretofore be and established by the party of the first part, or those it represents, by or under contracts with them or some of them, shall, together with their plant, be transferred to the party of the second part and become its property, and that all the interests of the party of the first part, or those it represents, whether as holders of stock or other interests in telephone exchanges, or corporations or organizations owning and maintaining exchanges, shall be transferred to the party of the second part and become its property, except in the localities named in section fifth of this article."

Article 8 then went on to provide immediately as to the terms of this combination, and provided in section 4 that the price to be paid by the Bell Company to the associated companies for instruments and all properties and interests to be transferred, including a long lease of property described in the schedule and with the value fixed for each item, amounting in the whole for instruments alone, of the various accounts turned over by the associated companies to the Bell Company, to over two hundred thousand dollars, and showing many thousand instruments in use by the associated companies prior to that time and turned over in pursuance to this agreement.

After other minute provisions for future business of this combination, and the adjustment of the relation of the parties in the management of the business of telegraphy and telephony, it was provided in article 11 as follows:

"The first party reserves all such rights as it now possesses to continue to manufacture and supply its own telephones, notwithstanding the stipulations of this contract to its own exchanges already established and in actual operation, and subscribers thereto and their licensees until the local conflicting interests between the respective licensees of the two parties hereto can be harmonized, and until any property of said first party at such places shall be turned over to said second party and paid for as hereinbefore provided; but said first party shall organize no new exchanges nor grant any new or additional licenses (except to additional subscribers to exchanges already established) creating new or additional conflicts or complications, except within the radius of thirty-three miles from the New York City Hall, and within the territory covered by the Ormes contract hereinafter referred to, and such places where such conflicting interests of licenses shall exist, until they can be so harmonized, be exempt from the operation of this contract as aforesaid. But it is distinctly understood as an essential feature of this contract that all telephone, district, or exchange systems, except those within the radius of thirty-three miles of New York City Hall, and within the territory covered by said Ormes contract, are to be transferred to and accepted by the party of the second part at the earliest possible day, and that their continuance in the hands of the party of the first part, during the mean time, is merely to give an opportunity for local interests to become harmonized and to avoid inconvenience to the public, and not as a source of revenue or advantage to the party of the first part or those that it represents."

Article 13 provides:

"(1) The right to connect telephone, district, or exchange systems for the purpose of personal conversation between persons at the instruments, and the right to use telephones on all lines not forming a part of a telephonic district or exchange system, for such personal conversation (except so far as licenses for private lines are to be granted to the party of the first part under article 14), are to remain exclusively with the party of the second part and those licensed by it for the purpose; but such connecting and other lines are not to be used for the transmission of general business messages, market quotations, or news for sale or publication, in competition with the business of the Western Union Telegraph Company, or with that of the Gold and Stock Telegraph Company; and the party of the second part, so far as it lawfully and properly can prevent it, will not permit the transmission of such general business messages, market quotations, or news for sale or publication over lines owned by it, or by corporations in which it owns a controlling interest, nor license the use of its telephone or patents for the transmission of such general business messages, market quotations, or news for sale or publication in competition with such telegraph business of the Western Union Telegraph Company or that of the Gold and Stock Company."

"(2) The terms 'general business messages' and 'telegraphic messages,' or 'messages for hire,' are defined to mean all communications in behalf of other parties than those who directly communicate by the telephone by themselves, or their servants, or agents, personally present at the instruments; and no person engaged in the business of transmitting messages for other parties shall be authorized or knowingly allowed by the party of the second part, or its servants or agents, to transmit such messages through the telephone."

There are various provisions relating to the adjustment of the interests of the parties in the use of the telephone in connection with telegraphy which it is not necessary to state in more detail.

The agreement provided (article 18) that the Bell Company shall keep in regular books accounts of the number of telephones manufactured, licensed, and put out for use in the United States, and the rentals received and commissions allowed, and that such accounts should be open for inspection by the party of the first part, and for the payment of royalties and commissions at stated periods, and article 16 provides "existing suits and interferences shall be disposed of as counsel of the parties of the first and second parts may advise to recognize and protect the rights of the several inventors to their respective inventions, subject to the orders of the courts and the decisions of the Patent Office."

This is the substance of the agreement which the bill filed in this case describes as an entire submission to the claims of the complainants, and an agreement to desist from further infringement, and to pay the usual and customary royalties virtually charged to other parties for like uses.

It was made November 10th, 1879, in pursuance of the informal agreement of September 27th, 1879, which, according to Mr. Gifford, had been the subject of negotiations for several months before, and may be presumed to have been substantially completed long before the taking of the testimony ceased.

By the terms of the agreement it was left to counsel of both parties to dispose of the existing suits and interferences in such a way as to recognize and protect the rights of the several inventors to their respective inventions.

The manner in which the eminent counsel concluded to fulfill the desire of their principals was to keep the Dowd suit alive until April 4, 1881, more than eighteen months after this agreement had been made; to print and prepare in two careful volumes all the evidence that had been taken and all the exhibits that had been put in; and then, after the Bell Company had paid to the associated companies the large amount of money provided in the agreement to be paid for their patents and properties, and had paid them the large royalties and bonus therein provided, and after the joint arrangement by which these corporations had contrived to absorb the whole field of telegraphic and telephonic operations in this country had been got into working order, and after the testimony of the complainants in the Spencer case had been closed, the counsel for the parties advised, as the best way to choose, "recognize, and protect the rights of the several inventors to their respective inventions," was to obtain a final decree with one dollar damages, and to cause a formal injunction to be issued at the suit of the second party to this agreement to restrain the first party from any infringements of these patents. Certainly, this statement of the terms of the settlement of the Dowd case fully maintains the assertion that the statement of that case as an adjudication upon which a court ought to rely in granting a preliminary injunction was wholly disingenuous, and that the case itself was but a piece of machinery contrived by these corporations to enable them to control the entire telegraphic and telephonic business, and to use the case itself in future attack upon any other party who should presume to invade the vast field of enterprise appropriated to themselves.

This Dowd case has always heretofore been set up as an instance of prior adjudication in favor of the Bell Co., and its result has been claimed and the agreement with which it ended has been asserted to be a surrender to the Bell Company, but now, when reluctantly produced, it turns out that this agreement did not contain any terms of capitulation, but was in fact a treaty of alliance, offensive and defensive, designed and carried out between these great corporations for the purpose of fighting off all intruders and dividing the whole country between themselves.

Mr. Storrow, in his brief in the Ghegan case, thus stated the origin and result of the Dowd case, which he styled one of the "litigious recognitions," page 3:

"Suit was brought against the Western Union Telegraph Company, and defended with a vigor and pertinacity which might have been expected from so powerful a corporation fighting for the possession of the most widely used electrical instrument in the world. In that suit evidence was taken and completed on both sides, and thereupon the Western Union Telegraph Company, under advice of counsel and experts, submitted to a decree and entirely retired from the field."

This is the statement of the result of the Dowd case presented to the court in 1882 by the counsel who took the last testimony in that case in September, 1879, ten days before the agreement of settlement, which had long been under negotiation, was executed.

Unless the terms of the agreement were withheld from the counsel of the Bell Company this is a very remarkable way in which to describe the elaborate alliance then entered into by these corporations. The evidence was not completed but was abruptly ended. The result was not the submission and retreat of one party, leaving the other master of the field, but the union of all the contending forces and the fortification of the entire field against all common enemies who might be bold enough in the future to "fight for the possession of the most widely used electrical instrument in the world," the prize which those powerful antagonists at first fought over, but soon found it more prudent to divide.

The disclosures made by this agreement in the Dowd case not only deprive it of all significance as an adjudication, but admonish us how little reliance is to be placed on the outward facts of the subsequent cases, the secret history of which we have not been as yet able to explore.

THE SPENCER CASE.

Next is the Spencer case. First came the Dowd case, and this was founded upon patents Nos. 174,465 and 186,787, granted to A. G. Bell, the former in 1876 and the latter in 1877, and these same patents have appeared as the sole foundation for suits in every case since. The Spencer case was filed in July, 1880, while the Dowd case was still pending. It also was founded upon the same two patents above referred to, and was substantially the same in its statements as the Dowd case. The answer was filed September 6th, 1880, in which it was alleged that before the invention of Bell the latter's improvements were known and used by various persons, including Phillip Reis, but not including or mentioning in any way James W. McDonough.

It is also alleged that the inventions were described and patented in the same publications and patents referred to in the Dowd case, and also in publications known as the "Reis Publication," and it denied the complainant's right to relief. It was stipulated in this suit that all testimony in the case should be used in the Eaton case. The complainant's testimony consisted only of the deposition of Prof. Charles R. Cross, his examination and cross-examination occupying about forty pages. Professor Cross appears in every case, it will be observed. It was also stipulated that the depositions, for the defendant, of William N. Goodridge, Elisha Gray, and Edward S. Renwick, taken in the Dowd case, should be considered as taken in the evidence in this case on the part of the defendants, the complainants to have the like liberty to put in other parts of the same record, and the defendants offered in evidence a number of printed publications. The Dowd case was treated as a mine, from which either party should draw its treasures, if they could find them, and the following publications were put in evidence by the defendants:

"The 'Jahres Bericht des Physikalischen, Vereins zu Frankfort-an-Main,' 1862, page 195 (Reis-legal article). The Die neueren Apparate der Akustik, 1865, page 96 (Reis-Pisco article)."

The defendants offered no other testimony, but the deposition of Professor Henry Morton and the deposition of William E. Geyer, setting forth the American translation of these German publications. They also offered a publication called Du Moncel's Work on "Applications of Electricity." Then, after some argument, the whole of the Dowd record was put in. The defendant's evidence occupied about five days, and the evidence of the plaintiff, in reply, was completed in one day more. On May 10th, 1881, they gave evidence, documentary in its character; no evidence in rebuttal of this documentary evidence was offered by the defendant, although it consisted of the deposition of Mr. Bell and the deposition of Mr. Watson, in the interference cases going on in the Patent Office, covering the origin and progress of Bell's alleged inventions. This seems strange when it is remembered that the statements to be found in those depositions are not in conformity with the facts in the case, when it is possible, by Bell's own statements, at other times and other circumstantial evidence to contradict the major portion of the statements there made.

No mention is made anywhere in the case of the application of McDonough, although McDonough's application was filed within a few days after the issuing of Bell's 1876 patent, which, it must be remembered, is not for a telephone, but for a system of harmonic multiple telegraphy. The testimony of McDonough and his witnesses had been taken, upon notice to Mr. Storrow, counsel for Mr. Bell, in January, 1881, nearly four months before the testimony in the Spencer case was closed. It is very important that this fact should be borne in mind. It seems strange that not even McDonough's application for a patent was put in as evidence in the case, particularly when it is remembered that the facts in this case must have been well known to the parties interested in it through the interference cases in the Patent Office and the suits in the courts which were then in process. The Spencer case, therefore, did not contain the facts that will be introduced in this case, and therefore cannot govern it. The Spencer case, therefore, appears to be based solely upon such Reis publications as were known of and introduced, and upon the allegation that the Spencer instruments were not such as to infringe the Bell patent. It is very important to bear this point also in mind, since the decision of the court was based solely upon this latter proposition; that is, that the Spencer instruments were not such as to infringe the Bell patent. It is quite different with us, since we admit that, if the Bell patents are held valid, we most certainly do infringe. The evidence in the Spencer case was closed the 10th of May, 1881, and the opinion of Judge Lowell, who heard the case, was filed on the 27th of June, 1881. That opinion contains a sentence which is of the utmost importance in considering the question whether or not it is to be regarded as an adjudication which can, in any way, govern our case. When Judge Lowell was referring to the question as to whether or not Fig. 7, of the 1876 patent, would transmit speech, which was doubtful then, and which is known to be impossible now, he said:

"The importance of that point is, that if Bell, who is admitted in this case to be the original and first inventor of any mode of transmitting speech, had not completed his method and put it into working form when he took his first patent, he may lose the benefit of his invention, because, in his second patent, he makes no broad claim to the method or process, but only to improvements upon a process assumed to have been sufficiently described in his patent."

"But Bell discovered a new art—that of transmitting speech by electricity—not the abstract art, or the abstract right of sending sounds by telegraph without any regard to the means, but with means and processes which he has both invented and claimed. The invention is nothing less than the transfer to wire of electrical vibrations like those which a sound has produced in the air."

Judge Lowell also refers to the Reis apparatus, and says that "it is relied on to limit the scope of Bell's invention."

It must be borne in mind here that our position is quite different, since we rely upon the work of Reis to completely anticipate any claim which Bell may have or set up to the invention of the speaking telephone, and to completely invalidate the fifth claim of the 1876 patent. Judge Lowell also informs us as to what his conception is of what the Reis apparatus was and what it is, according to the evidence before him in this case.

So that the whole meaning of the Spencer case is this: In some way—we will not undertake to say how, since it does not appear on the record, except so far as we might say it appears from the feeble nature of the defense and the fact that evidence of great importance was not brought into the case, although presumably known to both parties—this one cardinal fact appeared to the judge when he came to render his opinion, that it was admitted that Bell was the first and original inventor of this new mode of transmitting speech. Although that is not in the case, and does not appear upon the record, yet, in some way, best known to the counsel on both sides, such admission was brought to the knowledge of the judge. The court therefore begins by saying that it strikes away the whole foundation upon which we now seek to build our denial of that very point. We contend that Bell was not the first and original inventor of any mode of transmitting speech by electricity. Our position will be that others invented a mode of transmitting speech by electricity long before Bell set foot in America. In the Spencer case, however, the judge declares—and guards himself by declaring—that he had nothing to do with that question; that this was a thing which his mind was not called upon to consider at all, since it was admitted in that case that Bell was the first and original inventor of any mode of transmitting speech by electricity. It must not be forgotten that there is no such formal admission upon the record. If this fact, however, was admitted—and since the judge says it was, we are compelled to believe that it was—no other result than that which followed could have been expected. If, in our case, we should, even by implication, neglect to deny that Bell was the first and original inventor of any mode of transmitting speech by electricity, and did not place ourselves firmly in the position of denying such a proposition, then, of course, this Spencer case might be cited as a prior adjudication in support of a motion for preliminary injunction. If we should, even indirectly, admit this proposition, then a preliminary injunction might very properly be asked for, based upon the Spencer case, because it would be said:

“His honor Judge Gray, and his honor, Judge Lowell, have decided this question already, and they have decided that Bell was the inventor of the electric telephone, which he also undertook to perfect, and which he did perfect, in all the forms in which it can be employed by the aid of the microphone, and in all the other forms in which this mysterious process can be performed.”

When the contrary, however, is maintained, as we do now maintain and deny that Bell was the first and original inventor of the art of transmitting speech (and when we claim that we can show him not to have been the first and original inventor), then it cannot be asserted that the Spencer case was an adjudication such as could have any influence in deciding a court to grant a prayer for a preliminary injunction.

This admission, therefore, in itself deprives the Spencer case of any force as an adjudication. It will be our effort to show that Philip Reis was the first and original inventor of any method of transmitting articulate speech and all other sounds by means of electricity, and to show that this method and the apparatus employed for carrying it out were subsequently improved by Reis himself, and by Dr. Wright, Mr. Yeates, Mr. Vanderweyde, Mr. Gray, Mr. McDonough, Mr. Edison, Mr. Dolbear, and others, long prior to Bell's alleged invention of the telephone.

THE GHEGAN CASE.

This was not in any sense a decided case. There was no opinion of the court rendered on the final result of the case, nor on motion for the granting of a preliminary injunction. In that case the bill was filed on the 26th of May, 1882. A defense was attempted, but no proof whatever in regard to the McDonough inventions was introduced in the case. The same old incorrect and irrelevant Reis publications which had been brought into the Dowd case were here again introduced. The defendants put in evidence only the McDonough application, filed on April 10th, 1876. No proofs whatever concerning the facts of the McDonough case were offered. When it came to the argument it was suggested that the decision of Judge Lowell, in the Spencer case, controlled the matter as far as preliminary injunction was concerned. Counsel for the defendant, Mr. A. Q. Keasbey, was not then familiar with the subject, but endeavored to show that while, in the Spencer case, Judge Lowell stated that it was admitted, by the parties in the case, that Bell was the first and original inventor of the art of transmitting speech, that admission was not a matter of record anywhere in the case. The Bell Company, on the other hand, endeavored to show that no admission was ever made, but that Judge Lowell's view was a necessary view from the result of the controversy. That was so palpable, so clear, and so well known to all the world, that Bell was the first and original inventor of the art of transmitting articulate speech by means of electricity, that, therefore, Judge Lowell said it was beyond dispute; and counsel for defendant attempted to argue that there was no such admission appearing anywhere on the record in the Ghegan case, and that such admission was not made; but, on the contrary, that proposition was distinctly denied. When it came to the argument upon the motion for a preliminary injunction, the Spencer case was referred to only that it might be ascertained what was the distinction between the Hopkins, which was the basis of the Ghegan case, and the Spencer systems. Some considerable preparation was made for the final argument in this case, so Mr. Keasby, counsel for the defendant, subsequently admitted, in his argument for the defendant in the Overland case. But it was determined, by counsel, to admit and consent to the granting of the motion for a preliminary injunction. Accordingly, after the argument of Mr. Storrow, counsel for complainant, was concluded, counsel for defendant went into court and formally consented to the granting of a preliminary injunction. Such decree was, in consequence, immediately entered, without any further hearing of the case and without any application of the judicial mind to the subject. The order for an injunction was made, and the case proceeded to final hearing. Testimony was taken on the part of the complainant. No testimony was offered on the part of the defendant. No cross-examination was made of the complainant's witnesses; no testimony was put in on the part of the defendant whatever. The case came up for final hearing with the counsel for the defendant absent, the same being in an adjoining room, where he remained while the case was disposed of in favor of the complainant.

In the mean time the defendant, Ghegan, had been engaged by the Western Union Telegraph Company to go off and attend to telephone matters in Mexico, a very significant circumstance. The Ghegan case, therefore, was not decided by the court, and cannot be construed as a prior adjudication. Notwithstanding this fact, however, the Ghegan case was used in the Dolbear case as a prior adjudication in support of motion for preliminary injunction, and, like the Dowd case, has since been used to sustain a similar motion in another case, in which the American Bell Telephone Company is the complainant. The Ghegan case constituted another scalp hung at the girdle of the American Bell Telephone Company's strategem, and they bring these scalps into every court they enter, and there parade them in each and every case, the lines growing longer as they continue their march, and one decision after another is added, founded upon these first cases—the Dowd and Spencer cases.

THE DOLBEAR CASE.

It will be remembered that Dolbear, in early days, claimed the invention of the telephone, and that his claims were purchased by the Western Union Telegraph Company in support of its interests and the combination it was undertaking. It will also be borne in mind that this case was finally settled agreeably to both parties, and that therefore all those claims, including those of Gray, Edison, Dolbear, and others, which had been purchased and which were under the control of the Western Union Telegraph Company, were withdrawn without further contest. It has not, however, as yet been stated as part of the private history of this settlement that each of these claimants received handsome cash bonuses, in addition to a provision for future royalties to each, as a salve for their injuries; and that Prof. Dolbear, in particular, received somewhere in the neighborhood of ten thousand dollars ($10,000) as his cash bonus for his consent to this quietus, which had been placed upon his and other claims.

As time went on and new developments were made, and it became clearly demonstrated that Prof. Reis had invented all that was essential in the modern art of telephony, and the value of the telephone business had been demonstrated to be beyond any former conception, many, who had yielded up their claims to the important features which rendered the telephones virtually valuable, amongst whom was Prof. Dolbear, became very sick of the bargain they had entered into. Their contract, however, prevented them from changing their views regarding the priority of Bell and his right to the broad methods or art of telephony alleged to be described and claimed in his 1876 patent; they were forever obliged to hold their peace on this point. In view of this condition of affairs Prof. Dolbear set about to discover a method, art, or process of accomplishing this same thing—the transmission of articulate speech to distant points by means of electricity—which should not be open to the charge of infringement of the method claimed by Bell. In other words, it was Dolbear's intention to avoid infringing Bell's method by the use of a method which would, in his opinion, be generally considered as radically different from that alleged to be described and claimed in Bell's 1876 patent. In this way Dolbear was to avoid breaking faith with his former associates, and in this way only could such a charge be avoided.

Accordingly, after a long series of experiments, Dolbear succeeded in evolving what he thought was clearly a method of sending spoken words to distant points by means of electricity, clearly distinct and different from Bell's alleged method. After the work was completed Dolbear looked at it and, we may imagine, said:

"Now I have the skunk up the tree, surely it cannot be claimed that this system infringes that method which is alleged to be Bell's."

On this assumption capital was invested, and telephones were manufactured and introduced upon the market, and it was thought by many that finally Bell's ingenious scheme had been circumvented. The Bell Telephone Company, however, was too sharp to allow themselves to be so easily vanquished. The flaw was discovered, and accordingly suit was entered against Dolbear for infringement. The present case must not, therefore, be confounded with Dolbear's original case and claims. The Dolbear case, which we are now to consider, was substantially a controversy between inventors. Mr. Dolbear had discovered and invented a method of transmitting articulate speech, or rather of receiving speech, by means of a condenser receiver, which it was claimed was different from Bell's method. It was not his interest any more than it was the interest of the Bell Company to show that any man invented the telephone prior to Bell, because that would have been fatal to both. Dolbear simply wanted to have the telephone business divided between himself and Bell, and for this reason it was necessary to proceed upon the assumption that Bell was the first and original inventor of what was, up to that time, the only method of transmitting articulate speech to distant points by means of electricity; and that he had discovered another method which accomplished the same thing as efficiently, but which did not infringe Bell's method. Since methods, which could be covered by broad claims and still not infringe each other were not very common, were not flying around loose within the easy grasp of everybody, it is easy to be seen that, proceeding on this theory, Dolbear might secure a very good thing. Here, therefore, was a contest between two inventors, each seeking to maintain his own position—the one, that he possessed the only possible method; the other, not denying the fact that the former possessed the only method extant, but asserting that he had discovered another method which did not in any way infringe the existing method alleged to belong to Bell—and not seeking to destroy the foundation upon which they both stood, in order to restrict and confine the telephone business to themselves.

That was the real nature of the fight in that case, and in support of this assertion we have only to refer to a single passage printed in the Dolbear case. To begin with, however, bear in mind that Dolbear, through the Western Union Telegraph Company, had already acknowledged that Bell was the first inventor of the telephone, and was an advocate of Bell's claims to this. He, however, now appeared in a new role, claiming that he, by his skill and scientific knowledge, had now succeeded in procuring a means of transmitting speech which in no way conflicted with, and was entirely outside of, the Bell patent. Dolbear, in his affidavit filed in this case, started out by admitting Bell to be the first and original inventor of any system of transmitting speech to distant points by means of electricity, and then continued as follows:

"I have done something more; it does not attack the validity of the Bell patent, and is outside of the operations of that patent, and, therefore, I can stand on my own ground."

In his answer he made the same admission above referred to.

Our position is quite the reverse of that assumed by Dolbear since we stoutly deny all that he there admitted. Everybody engaged in that case acknowledges that such an admission was not a subject of consideration at all, but the answer contains this peculiar passage; it is in the Dolbear case, but it is not in the record; it is generally considered enough to admit a thing in an answer, but this answer went further, it not only admitted, but averred, in order to make it more forcible—

"That each and every one of the electric speaking telephones put into use by Bell for or by any of the numerous infringers against whom, from time to time, suits have been brought, as alleged in the bill of complaint, or by any one else, excepting only the telephones invented by Reis, and modifications and improvements by Reis and others (these latter, however, were stigmatized as musical telephones, which operated by making and breaking the circuit, and which were, therefore, not operative as articulating telephones), and telephones manufactured by these defendants contained each and all the elements first combined by Bell, and that Bell is the original and first inventor of his method of an apparatus for transmitting vocal and other sounds, and entitled to a patent for the same."

It will appear plain, to any observing mind, from this assertion and the position which was assumed throughout the whole of that case, that Dolbear, from his former association with the Bell strategists, had become thoroughly endowed with the ideas and schemes which had been there discussed. Mr. Dolbear with his wide scientific knowledge and the comprehensive views imbibed from his former associates—the Bell strategists—was attempting to embrace the world, Reis included. It was in view of this fact that the Dolbear case was decided in the way that it was. It set up certain publications in other cases which alluded to Dolbear's inventions. No mention was made in the proofs, on the motion for preliminary injunction, of any of the inventions of Gray or McDonough. The case was confined wholly, then, to the discussion of the Dolbear and Bell methods, with reference to each other, and turned wholly upon the question whether the Dolbear method infringed the Bell method, and to the inventions of Reis, as set forth in the publications submitted, so that when the case came to be decided, Mr. Justice Gray said:

"It was decided by this court in the American Bell Telephone Company vs. Spencer, 8 Fed. Rep., p. 509, and is not denied by the present defendant, that Bell is the first inventor of the speaking telephone. The only controversy is on the extent of his patent."

Which would seem to put an end to that case as a judicial recognition governing our case.

That was on the motion for the preliminary injunction. Mr. Justice Gray accordingly decided to grant the motion. The decision was limited to the extent of the Bell patent, and the relation of the Bell and the Dolbear patents, and on that it was decided by the judge. It was not only admitted but it was averred that Bell was the first and original inventor. Then, after that motion for a preliminary injunction was decided and the case went on, the following agreement was made:

"It is agreed that the affidavits and evidence heretofore filed in this case upon the motion for preliminary injunction, shall stand as final proofs in the cause. Neither party desires that witnesses shall be called for cross-examination."

There was a case in which there was that express agreement entered into between the parties to the suit. Both sides agreeing that all the ex parte affidavits on both sides should be admitted as proof on the motion for final hearing, and they expressly put down the stipulation that neither party desired to cross-examine witnesses.

The opinion of Judge Lowell in that case begins by saying:

"The final hearing in the case was hardly more than a form, because the two questions which are raised by the record have been decided in favor of plaintiff on motion for preliminary injunction, which were prepared and argued with unusual thoroughness. These questions are: Whether the telephone described by Reis anticipates the Bell telephone (bear in mind that it was, at the start, admitted by the defendants that it did not), and whether Dolbear's apparatus infringes Bell's patent."

That is to say, everything turned on the question as to whether Reis's telephone anticipated the Bell telephone (and this was expressly denied by the defendants), and again as to whether Dolbear's apparatus is an infringement of the Bell patent. The judge then went on to state his views on these two questions, and referred to the case of the United Telephone Company vs. Harrison, in England, reported in 21 Chancery Division, p. 720, as also to the case of Cox vs. Walker, as an adjudication. It must be observed, with regard to that English case, that with respect to the Reis case nothing was offered in evidence but the Von Legat article concerning Reis, which we shall see gives a very imperfect account of the Reis instrument. The case there in controversy is purely as to whether that publication amounted to a "prior publication" in anticipation of Bell's, and as to whether the description and exhibition of Bell's instruments by Sir William Thompson, of which we have already learned, constituted a prior publication.

None of the mass of the Reis publications which have since been resurrected were offered in evidence in that English suit. In the Dolbear case, Mr. Justice Lowell then went on to say, and it will be observed that the judges have all, thus far, in making a decision upon this case, taken care to guard themselves by making this statement:

"It is admitted in the present case that the Reis instruments, if used as the inventor intended to use them, can never serve as a speaking telephone, because the current of electricity is constantly broken, and it is essential for the transmission of speech that the current should not be broken."

It will be observed, therefore, that, in that case, it was admitted by the defendant that Bell was the first and original inventor, and that, as Judge Lowell says distinctly in his opinion the Reis instruments, if used as the inventor intended them to be used, could never serve as a speaking telephone, because the current of electricity was constantly broken, when it was essential for the transmission of speech that the current should not be broken; a position which scientists now place themselves squarely against. Now, it will hereafter appear that our position in regard to this matter is materially different from that.

Dolbear had already admitted that Bell was the inventor, and, when he made that admission, the court had nothing to do but decide in Bell's favor; the decision was based upon the significant admission of the defendant, which tended to produce the result which was arrived at.

This is the foundation upon which the American Bell Telephone Company has built up and to-day seeks to maintain its great monopoly.

THE PEOPLE'S TELEPHONE CASE.

This case embraces the Drawbaugh matters. The bill in that case was filed in 1880, and in it the complainants alleged that Daniel Drawbaugh, of Pennsylvania, claimed to have invented the telephone prior to Bell. It contained extracts from Harrisburg newspapers, which showed that he pretended to have made this great invention; that he claimed to have invented a talking machine, and when the defendant came to reply to the moving papers for a preliminary injunction, Daniel Drawbaugh and his counsel, and manifestly the People's Telephone Company, were aware of Drawbaugh's claims to the invention of the telephone, what they were, and what they meant, and how far the claims extended, and yet they said not one single word about them in their affidavits in reply. There were filed five affidavits, merely tending to show that nothing had been done as yet. And there were filed affidavits to show that telephones had not as yet been made. It was, however, manifest that it was the intention of the company to do so. They had, in fact, so published it. It was a fact as palpable as that the sun shines, and hence the court was bound to exercise its powers and to grant an injunction. The purpose of an injunction is to restrain that which is to be done, and not that which has been done. A man cannot be restrained from doing that which has already been performed. This is a self-evident proposition. In that case the defendants, instead of asserting that they did not mean to infringe, admitted their intention to do so, but asserted that they had not as yet done it. Not one word was said about Daniel Drawbaugh's inventions, which were not brought to the knowledge of the court. The reason for this course is not altogether clear.

The case went on to final hearing; several years were consumed in the prosecution of that case. When the subject came up for final hearing the alleged inventions of Daniel Drawbaugh, which were asserted to have been made prior to Bell, were set up as a defense. Nothing was said or introduced regarding Reis's invention or regarding the inventions of Wright, Yeates, Vanderweyde, Dolbear, Gray, or McDonough. The validity of the Bell patent, as a proposition of patent law, was not questioned; neither was it asserted that Bell's patent was invalid from prior knowledge, publication, or invention. It was the purpose of the defendants to endeavor to place themselves in the position occupied by the American Bell Telephone Company. A grand project had been formulated for wresting from the American Bell Telephone Company its grand monopoly and exclusive right, and vesting the ownership thereof in their own hands. In other words, the People's Telephone Company sought to make the American Bell Telephone Company pay tribute to itself by securing the same rights and privileges which were then held by the American Bell Telephone Company; which would result in compelling the American Bell Telephone Company to pay damages to the People's Telephone Company for all past infringements. This was to be accomplished by proclaiming and proving that Daniel Drawbaugh had invented and perfected the very method claimed by Bell, long prior to the granting of Bell's 1876 patent, and even prior to the recorded date of Bell's alleged first conception. It will be seen, therefore, that the intention of the People's Telephone Company was to shuffle aside the Bell Telephone Company and step themselves into the shoes left by the Bell Company. The whole case was undoubtedly a trumped-up affair, and it was so finally decided by Judge Wallace, before whom the case was tried. The only issue was, whether the telephone was invented by Bell or Drawbaugh. The true issue, which it is our purpose to raise, was in no way involved. Hence it would be absurd to consider this case as a prior adjudication which could in the least affect a motion for a preliminary injunction against us.

THE OVERLAND CASE.

The motion for a preliminary injunction in this case was heard before Judges McKennan, Nixon, and Butler, in Philadelphia, January 21st, 25th, 1884. The complainant was the American Bell Telephone Company and the defendant the Overland Telephone Company, of New York. The complaint was founded upon the same two letters patent granted to A. G. Bell, March 7th, 1876, and January 30th, 1877, respectively. The bill alleged that the defendants were operating under patents issued to Myron C. Baxter, which, although somewhat modified in form, were substantially like those described in the Bell patents, owned by the complainants. In answer the defendants set up that the principal issues relied upon as their defense were being tried before Judge Wallace, of the same State, in the People's Telephone case; that said case was still sub judice, but would soon be passed upon.

In view of that condition of affairs a preliminary injunction was refused pending the decision of Judge Wallace.

Subsequently Judge Wallace decided against the People's Telephone Company and in favor of the Bell Company, and this, of course, resulted in the granting of a temporary injunction against the Overland Company, whose principal reliance had been the possible success of the People's Telephone Company.

REIS'S PROSPECTUS.

(The following "prospectus" of instructions was drawn up by Reis to accompany the telephones which were sold under his instructions by Herr Wilhelm Albert, of Frankfort. Prof. Sylvanus Thompson is in the possession of a number of original copies of this prospectus; it is also reprinted at page 241 of Prof. Pisko's book entitled "Die neueren Apparate der Akustik," published at Vienna in 1865:)

Telephon.

Each apparatus consists, as is seen from the accompanying illustration, of two parts, the telephone proper A, and the reproduction apparatus (receiver) C. These two parts are placed at such a distance from each other that singing or the tones of a musical instrument can be heard from one station to the other in no way except through the apparatus itself. Both parts are connected with each other and with the battery D, like ordinary telegraphs. The battery must be capable of effecting the attraction of the armature of the electro-magnet placed at the side of station A (3 to 4 6-inch Bunson's elements suffice for several hundred feet distance).

The galvanic current goes, then, from B to the screw d; thence through the copper strip to the little platinum plate at the middle of the membrane; then through the foot c of the angular piece to the screw b, in whose little concavity a drop of quicksilver is put. From here the current then goes through the little telegraph apparatus e-f, then to the key of station C, and through the spiral past i back to B.

If, now, sufficiently strong tines are produced before the sound-aperture S, the membrane and the angle-shaped little hammer lying upon it are set in motion by the vibrations (of the membrane); the circuit will be once opened and again closed for each full vibration, and thereby there will be produced, in the iron wire of the spiral at station C, the same number of vibrations which there are perceived as a tone or combination of tones (chord).

By imposing the little upper case (Oberkastchen) firmly upon the axis of the spiral the tones at C are greatly strengthened.

Besides the human voice (according to my experience), there also can be reproduced the tones of good organ pipes from F-c, and those of a piano. For the latter purposes A is placed upon the sounding-board of the piano. Of thirteen triads (Dreiklänge) a skilled experimenter could, with all exactness, recognize ten.

As regards the telegraph apparatus placed at the side, it is clearly unnecessary for the reproduction of tones, but it forms a very agreeable addition for convenient experimenting. By means of the same it is possible to make one's self understood right well and certainly by the other party. This takes place somewhat in the following manner: After the apparatus has been completely arranged one convinces one's self of the completeness of the connection and the strength of the battery by opening and closing the circuit, whereby at A the stroke of the armature is heard, and at C a very distinct ticking.

By rapid alternate opening and closing at A, it is asked at C whether one is ready for experimenting, whereupon C answers in the same manner.

Simple signals can, by agreement, be given from both stations by opening and closing the circuit 1, 2, 3, or 4 times; for example:

1 beat, sing.

2 beats, speak, etc.

I telegraph the words thus—that I number the letters of the alphabet and then transmit their numbers:

1 beat, a.

2 beats, b.

3 beats, c.

4 beats, d.

5 beats, e, etc.

z would accordingly be designated by 26 beats.

This number of beats would, however, appear wasteful of time, and would be uncertain in counting; wherefore I employ for every five beats a dactyl-beat, and there results — u u for e, etc., which is more quickly and easily executed and easier to understand.

It is still better if the letters are represented by numbers which are in inverse proportion to the frequency of their occurrence.

P. S.—Since two years ago (when) I succeeded in effecting the possibility of the reproduction of tones by the galvanic current, and in setting up a convenient apparatus therefor, the circumstance has found such a recognition from the most celebrated men of science, and so many calls to action have come to me, that I have since striven to improve my originally very incomplete apparatus, so that the experiments might thereby become accessible to others.

I am now in the position to offer an apparatus which fulfills my expectations, and with which each physicist may succeed in repeating the interesting experiments concerning the reproduction of tones (sounds) at distant stations.

I believe I shall fulfill the wish of many if I undertake to bring these improved instruments into the possession of the (physical) cabinets. Since the preparation of the same requires a complete acquaintance with the leading principles and a tolerable experience in this matter, I have decided myself to prepare the most important parts of the same, and to leave the fashioning of the accessory parts, as also of the external adornments to the mechanician.

The distribution of the same I have made over to Herr Wilhelm Albert, mechanician, in Frankfort-on-the-Main, and have placed him in the position to deliver these instruments in two qualities, differing only in external adornment, at the prices (re-pectively) of 21 florins and 14 florins (12 thalers and 8 thalers current) inclusive of packing. Moreover, the instruments can also be obtained direct from me at the same prices upon a cash remittance of the amount.

Each apparatus will be tested by me before sending off, and will then be furnished with my name and order-number and with the year of manufacture.

ELISHA GRAY'S CAVEAT.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
United States Patent Office.

To all persons whom these presents shall come, greeting:

This is to certify that the annexed is a true copy from the files of this office of the caveat of Elisha Gray, filed February 14, 1876, for "Art of transmitting vocal sounds telegraphically."

In testimony whereof I, W. H. Doolittle, acting Commissioner of Patents, have caused this seal of the Patent Office to be hereunto affixed this twenty-eighth day of March, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-eight, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and second.

[SEAL.]

W. H. DOOLITTLE,
Acting Commissioner.

UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE.

Specification.

To all whom it may concern:

Be it known that I, Elisha Gray, of Chicago, in the county of Cook and State of Illinois, have invented a new art of transmitting vocal sounds telegraphically, of which the following is a specification:

It is the object of my invention to transmit the tones of the human voice through a telegraphic circuit and reproduce them at the receiving end of the line, so that actual conversations can be carried on by persons at long distances apart.

I have invented and patented methods of transmitting musical impressions or sounds telegraphically, and my present invention is based upon a modification of the principle of said invention, which is set forth and described in letters-patent of the United States granted to me July 27, 1875, respectively numbered 166,095 and 166,096, and also in an application for letters-patent of the United States filed by me February 23, 1875.

To attain the object of my invention I devised an instrument capable of vibrating responsively to all the tones of the human voice, and by which they are rendered audible.

In the accompanying drawings I have shown an apparatus embodying my improvements in the best way known to me; but I contemplate various other applications and also changes in the details of the construction of the apparatus, some of which would obviously suggest themselves to a skillful electrician or a person versed in the science of acoustics on seeing this application.

My present belief is that the most effective method of providing an apparatus capable of responding to the various tones of the human voice is a tympanum, drum, or diaphragm, stretched across one end of the chamber, carrying an apparatus for producing fluctuation in the potential of the electric current, and consequently varying its power.

In the drawings, the person transmitting sounds is shown as talking into a box or chamber, A, across the outer end of which is stretched a diaphragm, a, of some thin substance, such as parchment or gold-beater's skin, capable of responding to all the vibrations of the human voice, whether simple or complex. Attached to this diaphragm is a light metal rod, A', or other suitable conductor of electricity, which extends into a vessel, B, made of glass or other insulating material, having its lower end closed by a plug, which may be of metal, through which passes a conductor, b, forming part of the circuit.

This vessel is filled with some liquid possessing high resistance, such, for instance, as water, so that the vibrations of the plunger or rod A, which does not quite touch the conductor d, will cause variations in resistance, and consequently in the potential of the current passing through the rod A'.

Owing to this construction, the resistance varies constantly in response to the vibration of the diaphragm, which, although irregular not only in their amplitude but in rapidity, are nevertheless transmitted and can consequently be transmitted through a single rod, which could not be done with a positive make-and-break of the circuit employed, or where contact points are used.

I contemplate, however, the use of a series of diaphragms in a common vocalizing chamber, each diaphragm carrying an independent rod and responding to a vibration of different rapidity and intensity, in which case contact points mounted on other diaphragms may be employed.

The vibrations thus imparted are transmitted through an electric circuit to the receiving station, in which circuit is included an electro magnet of ordinary construction, acting upon a diaphragm to which is attached a piece of soft iron, and which diaphragm is stretched across a receiving vocalizing chamber, c, somewhat similar to the corresponding vocalizing chamber A.

The diaphragm at the receiving end of the line is thus thrown into vibration corresponding with those at the transmitting end, an audible sound or words are produced,

The obvious practical application of my improvement will be to enable persons at a distance to converse with each other through a telegraphic circuit, just as they now do in each other's presence, or through a speaking tube.

I claim as my invention the art of transmitting vocal sounds or conversations telegraphically through an electric circuit.

PETITION.

To the Commissioner of Patents:

The petition of Elisha Gray, of Chicago, in the county of Cook, in the State of Illinois, respectfully represents that he has made certain improvements in the art of transmitting vocal sounds telegraphically, and that he is now engaged in making experiments for the purpose of perfecting the same, preparatory to applying for letters patent therefor.

He therefore prays that the subjoined description of his invention may be filed as a caveat in the confidential archives of the Patent Office.

Opinion of Hon. G. A. Jenks, Assistant Secretary, Interior Department.

WASHINGTON, December 22, 1885.

To the Hon. the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR:

SIR: In compliance with your request, I have the honor to submit my views upon the matter of the application to bring suit in the name of the United States to cancel the Bell telephone patent of the 7th of March, 1876.

There are two questions to be considered:

(1) Is there power vested in the proper courts to cancel a patent for an invention at the instance of the United States?

(2) If such power exists, do the facts and circumstances presented by this application warrant the exercise of the power?

The law authorizes the granting of a patent only to the inventor or discoverer.

The power of the officers who cause the patent to be issued is limited by law. If they issue a patent to one, who, under the definition fixed by law, is not the inventor or discoverer, they act without authority, and the patent is voidable.

But, though voidable, the patent would be still existing. The grant, authenticated by the seal of the sovereign as against any one but the grantor, was conclusive, until, by statutory provision, the citizen, when attacked by the patentee, might, in his own defense, deny the validity of the grant. If successful in the defense, it only freed him from the claim of the complainant, but still left the patent, as against every other, as complete proof of a prima facie case as though the defense had never been successfully made.

Every citizen of the United States using the alleged subject of patent might be compelled, at the instance of the patentee, to make defense in a suit, in which the complainant would, without other evidence of right than his alleged patent have a clear case, which would have to be overcome by extraneous evidence on the part of the defense, which time, accident, distance, or want of means might render unattainable.

If suit cannot be brought by the United States to cancel her unauthorized patents this wrong would be without a remedy.

It is said, "A patent is a contract made by the Government, in behalf of her people, with the patentee, that if he will place on file in the proper office of the Government such a full, written or printed, description of his invention or discovery as that, in future, his art shall be perpetuated and preserved for the benefit of mankind, the Government on her part contracts that, for a limited time, he shall have the exclusive use of his invention or discovery." The consideration in this contract, on the part of the patentee, is his invention or discovery. The right granted by the Government for this consideration is a monopoly to the inventor for a limited time.

If the consideration on which a contract is founded fails, the contract is at the instance of the party wronged, voidable for want of consideration.

If, then, the patentee has not given any invention or discovery to the Government for the monopoly granted him, the grant is voidable for want of consideration, and the Government, being the party to the contract, wronged by the failure of consideration, is entitled to relief.

The statute which empowers the officers for the Government to issue the patent prescribes * * * "every such patent shall * * * in its terms grant to the applicant or applicants, his or their heirs, executors, or assigns," &c. The term "grant" implies an interest or right in the grantor to be conveyed to the grantee. In the statute the term is not used unadvisedly, for it gives to the patentee that to which, without the grant, he could have had no legal title.

The right to a hitherto unknown realm, discovered by a citizen, enures to the sovereign under whose flag he sailed. What reward he shall have for his discovery is dependent on the generosity or justice of the sovereign. The right to this island or continent discovered in the world of art is in the sovereign. Under the Constitution and the law the reward to the discoverer is fixed that the inventor shall have exclusive use of the discovery for seventeen years.

Although during the currency of that time every other citizen of the nation, each for himself, without knowledge of the prior discovery, should find the same novelty, he is forbidden to enter upon it, and the patentee, by virtue of his grant, restrains the whole inventive genius of the nation.

If, then, the right of the patentee is only an estate for years carved out of the paramount title of the sovereign, and to the exclusive use of which the patentee derives his only legal right by virtue of the grant, then, if that grant of the property of the nation—which was held for the common benefit and subject to the right of occupancy of all her people—was made without authority by her officers or through inadvertence, mistake, or fraud, it would only comport with clear principles of right that the patent so issued should be canceled.

Yet, that it cannot be canceled at the instance of any one but the Government is clearly ruled in the case of Mowry v. Whitney (14th Wallace, 439). If it cannot be canceled by the Government there is no remedy for a great wrong.

The citizens of the great Republic, for seventeen years after the granting of any fraudulent patent, may be subjected to the humiliating necessity of daily hearing their Government called to testify under the great seal of the nation to a falsehood in favor of a wrong-doer. I am convinced on principle such is not the law.

But precedents and authority are not wanting which recognize and assert the power, and define in part its limitations. The question had repeatedly been submitted to the Department of Justice, and its exercise invoked. Whenever the question was presented with a proper case the power was claimed, and in some instances actually exercised. Curtis on Patents, section 503, derives from a careful consideration of the subject the following principle:

"Undoubtedly the proper course is to institute the suit in the name of the Attorney-General or of the United States on relation of some one who is interested adversely in the patent."

In the case of the United States v. Stone (2 Wallace, 525), which was a bill filed to cancel a patent for land, Justice Grier, delivering the opinion, rules:

"A patent is the highest evidence of a title, and is conclusive as against the Government, and all claiming under junior patents or titles, until it is set aside or annulled by some judicial tribunal. In England this was originally done by scire [f]acias*, but a bill in chancery is found a more convenient remedy.

"Nor is fraud in the patentee the only ground upon which a bill will be sustained. Patents are sometimes issued unadvisedly or by mistake, where the officer has no authority in law to grant them, or where another party has a higher equity and should have received the patent. In such cases courts of law will pronounce them void."

The bill in the case quoted was filed at the instance of the United States, was sustained, and the patent canceled.

In Rubber Company v. Goodyear (9 Wallace, 797), Justice Swayne, delivering the opinion and discussing the subject of attacking a patent for an invention collaterally, says:

"This review furnishes a strong implication that it was the intention of Congress not to allow a patent to be abrogated in any collateral proceeding, except in the particular instance mentioned, but to leave the remedy, in all other cases, to be regulated by the principles of general jurisprudence."

Then, after citing with approval the case of Jackson v. Lowton (10 Johnston, 2[3*]), he further declares:

"The patent in that case was for land, but as regards the point here under consideration, there is no distinction between such a patent and one for an invention or discovery.

"If there be, the case is stronger as to the latter."

In the case of Mowry v. Whitney (14 Wallace, 439), Justice Miller, in ruling that a patent could not at the instance of any private party be declared void, uses the following language:

"For we are of opinion that no one but the Government, either in its own name or the name of its appropriate officer, or by some form of proceeding which gives official assurance of the sanction of the proper authority, can institute judicial proceedings for the purpose of vacating or rescinding a patent.

"The reasons for requiring official authority for such a proceeding are obvious:

"1st. The fraud, if any exists, has been practiced on the Government, and as the party injured, it is the appropriate party to assert the remedy or seek relief.

"2d. A suit by an individual could only be conclusive in result as between the patentee and the party suing, and it would remain a valid instrument as to all others.

"3d. The patentee would or might be subjected to innumerable vexatious suits to set aside his patent, since a decree in his favor in one suit would be no bar to a suit by another party."

The last two instances, it may be alleged, are rulings on questions not necessarily involved in the cases. For the present inquiry it is only necessary to say that dicta (if they be dicta) so distinctly to the point, and from such sources, would be sufficient to warrant acceptance in this preliminary inquiry.

But the very question in the case of United States vs. Gunning (18 Federal Reporter, 511) was distinctly decided in the affirmative by Wallace, J., and in the same case on final hearing (in 22d Federal Reporter) the same question was decided in the same way by Wheeler, J.

The power of the Government to reclaim that of which it has been wrongfully deprived, or to annul what has been done without authority, is no less than that of an individual.

By proceedings in equity an individual can have a deed obtained by fraud or mistake, or executed by an attorney in excess of his power, annulled. A patent is in substance a deed from the Government to the patentee.

The courts of the United States are possessed of chancery powers. The United States may enter these courts, and upon presentation of such a case as would warrant cancellation or annulment, invoke such action as under like circumstances should be accorded an individual. The proof necessary to annul a deed or executed contract should be "clear and satisfactory." Geddes Appeal, 80 Penna. State Reports, 461.

Hence it is concluded that upon clear and satisfactory proof the power is vested in the proper courts, at the instance of the United States, to cancel a patent for an invention obtained by fraud or issued by mistake, inadvertence, or without authority by the officers of the Government.

The remaining inquiry is, do the facts and circumstances exhibited in this case warrant the institution of an action by the Government to exert the power? In this preliminary hearing judicial precision in result or a strict application of judicial principles of evidence cannot properly be required.

The Government, as a trustee for the people, is inquiring whether there is substantial reason to believe that a fraud has been perpetrated upon its agents, or they have exceeded their power in making a grant to the detriment of the rights of the people.

Whatever degree of probability would warrant an intelligent, honest, judicious trustee, in the faithful discharge of his trust, to bring suit for an alleged injury, will justify the Government in instituting an action.

* See note of chief clerk appended hereto.

In this proceeding the Department of the Interior represents the client; the Department of Justice, the attorney.

Before embarking in litigation, an intelligent client should investigate with care the accessible facts embraced in the contemplated case. Over one thousand pages of printed evidence has been submitted and considered. About seven days were spent in hearing testimony and oral arguments, and many carefully prepared briefs by attorneys of the highest character in favor of and against the application have been scanned. Reflections upon these facts reduce[s*] the material questions to be decided to two propositions:

1st. Is there sufficient evidence of wrong to justify a well-grounded belief that the patent should and can be canceled by judicial proceedings?

2d. If there is such evidence, is the cancellation of sufficient national importance to justify action by the United States?

If a trustee were to apply to a chancellor for instructions as to whether he should bring suit to redress a wrong to the trust estate, and submit evidence of such facts as would show by a clear preponderance of evidence that the wrong was done, the order would certainly be made to bring suit, and a failure to obey would be good ground to surcharge the trustee.

Bell's first application for patent was filed on the 14th day of February, 1876, and there is no parol evidence to show at what hour in the day it was filed. He describes his invention in general terms, as "new and useful improvements in telegraphy." In it he nowhere claims as an invention that it will transmit articulate vocal sounds or words. But he does claim that the undulatory current of electricity (which is a sufficiently important element in the alleged discovery) takes the place of an intermittent one, and is the source of its advantages.

On the same day that Bell filed his application, the 14th day of February, 1876, Elisha Gray filed a caveat which certainly did interfere with Bell's application, if Bell's embraced the transmission of words. There is no oral evidence at what hour in the day the caveat was filed. As a general rule, in the Patent Office a day is regarded as a unit indivisible. Section 4902 of the Revised Statutes would have required the officers of the Patent Office to declare an interference, give notice to Gray, retain his caveat in the secret archives of the office, and suspend all action for three months to allow Gray to file his application. This provision of law was clearly violated, in that notice was given on the 19th day of February to Bell, as well as Gray, of the filing of the caveat, to which Bell was not entitled under the statute.

The letter of the 19th of February, 1876, to Bell's attorney, informed him that the caveat of Gray interfered with the 1st, 4th, and 5th claims of Bell's application. This Bell had no right to know. He (Bell) then went to the officers of the Patent Office, and from the officers, upon inquiry, extracted information of the particular clause in his application with which the caveat conflicted, which was another violation of official duty.

In accordance with the prior practice of the office, the application of Bell was, on the 24th of February, 1876, suspended. Bell's attorneys appeared before the Commissioner of Patents, and, on the 25th, Commissioner Speer ruled: "Ordinarily the day of filing is not computed, and is considered punctum temporis. Yet, when justice requires it, the exact time in the day when an act was done may be shown by proof. (Kent's Commentaries, 95, note.) The examiner will be guided by the rule in this case, and if the record shows that the application was filed earlier in the day, then the caveat should be disregarded, and otherwise not." Upon this instruction, the same day Examiner Z. F. Wilber indorsed upon the caveat: "Feb. 25th, 1876. The cash blotter in the chief clerk's room shows conclusively that the application was filed some time earlier on the 14th than the caveat. The application was received also in 118 by noon of the 14th, the caveat not until the 15th."

In this part of the proceedings the action of the Commissioner was exceptional. It was contrary to the former practice of the office.

It was in distinct contradiction of his own ruling on the same subject, made on the 3d of January, 1876, in the Essex case (Decisions of the Commissioner of Patents, 1876, page 52), in which the application and caveat both were filed on the 3d of January, and in which he uses the following language:

"In order to free the application from suspicion and possibly from interference with the application filed by the caveator, it must appear that the application was filed prior to the caveat. That does not appear. The bounds of the lifetime of both application and caveat are, in this respect, the same.

"I cannot take into consideration any representation of special hardship in this case, because it would be manifestly improper to consider any ex parte statement whatever. There would seem to be nothing in the attitude of either a caveator or applicant to entitle one more than the other to invoke any special equity in the case. I do not see why the law should not be strictly applied, and the caveator notified, and direct that it be done."

* See note of chief clerk appended hereto.

The facts in the case quoted and in the case under consideration, so far as they appear on the records of the Patent Office, including the cash blotter, are entirely identical, yet the ruling of the same Commissioner is distinctly contradictory within an interval of less than two months.

The application of Bell found its way to the examiner's room on the 14th, the same day it was filed; six others, also in the same room, filed on the 14th, did not reach the examiner's room till the 15th. The latter would seem in due course.

Examiner Wilber, by whom the question of priority between the Bell application and the Gray caveat was decided, made entry on the back of the caveat that the cash blotter in the chief clerk's room shows conclusively the priority of the application. On the 10th of October, 1885, his affidavit is made that the book he referred to, to fix time in his entry, would give no reliable information on the subject. Upon examination of the book, his oath seems to be entitled to greater credence than his written entry, as, if the book gave any reliable information, it would seem to prove that Gray's caveat was first filed. The book is a registry of applications filed, with fees paid. There are two classes of entries on the same day—those received by mail, and those received by hand. All those received by mail are first entered. This would indicate that the entries of those received by hand were not made till after the last mail that came to the office that day had been received and opened.

Immediately after the mail delivery was entered, on the 14th of February, the hand delivery was carried on in regular succession continuously. Inquiry as to the general practice seems to show that, as applications and caveats delivered by hand were thrown into the same basket as they came in, the one that came first in the morning would be found in the bottom of the basket; that which came last would be on the top. When the registry was made they were taken from the basket as they came to hand, which gave the last application its place at the head of the entries of hand delivery, and the first delivered during the day would naturally be the last entered, and so all through, the first delivered would be the last entered. As the Bell application is near the top of the registry of hand delivery, and Gray's is near the bottom, the inference from the book would be strongly in favor of the fact that Gray's caveat preceded Bell's application.

But the decision of a fact so important and vital to the rights of these two men, at the instance of one in the absence of the other, against the absentee, without notice or opportunity to be heard, savors strongly of injustice, and is suggestive of willful wrong.

The Omniscient Himself, although all was known to Him, and His judgment must be infallible justice, did not assume to judge Adam, the first transgressor, until after, in response to the summons, "Adam, where are thou?" the alleged culprit had a full hearing. Since this first authority it has been an undisputed maxim in the administration of justice, impressed upon the conscience of every man, that no final decree depriving another of a substantial right can justly be made until the party to be affected shall have had opportunity to be heard.

Bell, by his attorneys, on the 29th of February, amended his application. But still no speaking telephone was suggested. It was suspended by the caveat until the 25th of February, and seven days thereafter, on the 3d of March, was certified for patent, and patent issued on the 7th of March—an unusually short time to investigate so important and delicate a novelty, the average time by same examiner about the same date being fifteen days, whereas this was certified in seven. It will be observed that all irregular and exceptional action in the case was favorable to Mr. Bell, and tended to great haste in the result. Had these irregularities been accidental, they would reasonably have been expected to have been found almost equally distributed in their consequences between the applicant and the caveator, with the probability of a preponderance in favor of delay rather than haste. If, in passing through a forest, the woodsman should come upon the course of a tornado, and find the tops of the trees all pointing in one direction, he would be as firmly convinced of the direction the wind had blown as though he had been an eye-witness to the storm. In this one-sided contest between the Bell application and the Gray caveat, the tree tops all point one way. But other facts exist which might well make it a matter of interest to Bell, after the application was filed, to have the examination of the novelty made as hastily and perfunctorily as possible. That evidence tends to show he was not the inventor. If ordinary delay had occurred that question might have come to the knowledge of the examiner, and its consideration have lead to an adverse conclusion. Affidavits, letters, and printed publications have been submitted to establish that the invention, by prior discovery and publication, is, of right, that of another. If this be true, the patent should be canceled. If there is a substantial preponderance of evidence in favor of the probability that it is true, it should be tested by suit.

Mr. Bell, on the 22nd day of October, 1885, made affidavit that when he filed his application he knew of the Reis apparatus. Philip Reis, a German scientist, began investigations on the subject as early as 1859, which investigations he continued from time to time till his death in 1874. There is before us much contemporaneous testimony, which shows that as early as 1862 Reis's instrument is spoken of (in the Journal of the German-Austrian Telegraph Association) with great admiration, stating, while describing its transmission of choruses and melodies—

"While single words in reading, speaking, &c., were less distinctly recognizable, although even in these the inflection of the voice, as interrogation, exclamation, surprise, calling, &c., were clearly reproduced."

Another German paper, printed the same year, says—

"The consonants are for the most part reproduced pretty distinctly, but the vowels as yet not equal in degree."

Dr. Hoffman, of the consulate of Paris, states that from a lecture by Professor Reis, in Geisen, concerning an instrument he named the "Telephone"—

"There cannot be the slightest doubt that words were transmitted and successfully reproduced by the apparatus, and this aroused great enthusiasm."

Ten German professors are named who heard the lecture.

In 1863 another journal says—

"The experimenters could even reproduce words."

Another journal in 1863 states—

"It is agreed that the possibility is before us of making oneself understood verbally at any distance in the way shown by Mr. Reis."

Another, in 1865, after a brief description of the instrument with its transmitter and receiver—

"By speaking or singing in the practical experiments made thus far it was possible to transmit with astonishing faithfulness chords, airs, &c.; while reading, speaking, &c., single words were less distinctly heard."

Philip Schmidt, a paymaster in the German navy, says—

"He [Reis] succeeded finally in reproducing at a distance words and whole sentences."

In volume 2, p. 404, of Das Neue Buch der Entdeckungen, speaking of the Reis discovery, is found—

"It sounds more than fantastic if it is stated that it is possible to converse through the electric telegraph wire to hundreds of miles with a distant person * * * yet this possibility has already become an actuality."

This, with much other contemporaneous testimony, given at a time when the facts were yet fresh and perpetuated with unerring certainty, is very cogent evidence that Reis invented a speaking telephone, and also illustrates its gradual development towards perfection.

The affidavits and letters of like scientific men, many of whom are devoting their lives to the study and teaching of the science of electricity, who are entirely disinterested here, after examination and study of the description of the instrument, as shown by the publications of Professor Reis, have borne witness that in all its substantial features the Reis instrument anticipates the alleged discovery by Bell. Many others testify that instruments constructed carefully in strict accordance with the description given by Reis have in their own personal presence actually transmitted words and sentences in conversation long distances. It is scarcely credible that all this testimony from disinterested sources is untrue.

There is also evidence that as early as 1849 Antonio Meucci began experiments with electricity, with reference to the invention of a speaking telephone, he being then a resident of the island of Cuba. In 1851 he came to New York, where, from time to time, he continued his experiments. Between that and 1854 considerable progress had been made. Between 1858 and 1860, it seems, he published in an Italian paper in New York the statement that he had invented a speaking telegraph. Being an Italian, he made, in 1861, arrangements to patent it in Italy—but they miscarried. Up to 1871 his experiments were continued, during which interval, although much of the time very poor, he constructed several different instruments, with which, in his own house, he conversed with his wife and others in different parts of the house. Models of several of these instruments made during this interval were exhibited, and seem in principle to combine most, if not all, of the elements that enter into the Bell instruments. His testimony is corroborated by his wife, and by affidavits of a very large number of witnesses. He claims that in 1872 he went to Mr. Grant, vice-president of the New York District Telegraph Company, explained his invention, and tried repeatedly to have it tried on the wires of the company. This, it is claimed, was used by the telegraph company, and was the basis of the contract between the Western Union Telegraph Company and the Bell Telephone Company, dated November 10th, 1879. There is evidence that Prof. A. K. Eaton, an electrician, began prior to 1875, experiments upon the Reis telephone with reference to its improvement. He had frequently referred to the Reis invention in lectures, and claims it was well known to scientists, from different publications, since 1861 and 1862; that, from the description of the instrument in the summer of 1875, he constructed a speaking telephone, which (including the Blake transmitter now used in the Bell telephone) is substantially the same in all its essential principles as the Bell instrument; that during that year he used it successfully. He is corroborated in this statement as to the use of the instrument and its transmission of words by S. S. Pratt, of the New York World. It was Professor Eaton who sold to Spencer the telephones with which Spencer alleged he wished to establish a line between Boston and Providence.

Action was brought by the Bell Telephone Company against Mr. Spencer in Boston for the use of the instruments procured by him of Professor Eaton, and on the 27th of June, 1881, Lowell, justice, sustained the Bell patent; but in this case Professor Eaton was not called as a witness, and this is made the ground for the charge by the petitioners that Spencer was in the interest of the Bell Company and the suit collusive. There is no reason to believe that the attorneys or counsel for defendant in the Spencer case conducted the defense therein otherwise than with diligence, ability, and integrity; but all the evidence now presented before us was not then presented to that court. It is said by Professor Eaton that he began to make speaking telephones from the Reis description in the summer of 1875, and much other testimony is now before us. That testimony, if believed, would most likely have changed the result of the Spencer case. This was the first suit brought and test made upon the Bell patent. After this five other suits were brought in different courts by the Bell Company, and the defendants in the different cases were enjoined.

These suits are a principal feature in the evidence of the respondents in the applications. It is not claimed they are a bar to the action asked, but that they are a high degree of persuasive evidence that the claim of the applicants is not well founded. Their weight as persuasive evidence would largely depend upon the evidence which was offered by the defendants in each case, and the skill and integrity with which that evidence was presented.

If the evidence was identical with that before us, they might be sufficient to warrant a refusal of the application. But this is disputed. It is certain that in the Spencer case the same evidence was not before the court that has been here submitted. This last difference occurs in all of the other cases. It is alleged that after the Spencer case was decided, being the first, it was largely accepted as a precedent by the other courts to which the question was submitted, and, in result, was the substantial basis of each decision. The well-known official courtesy between the courts of the United States of equal grade lends much force to this suggestion.

Taking into consideration all the circumstances surrounding the cases, they are not sufficiently convincing to rebut the testimony on the part of the applicants.

An ocular exhibition was made on the hearing of the case on the part of the respondent to establish that the instruments described by Reis differed from those of Bell in that the Reis instrument being, as was alleged by the counsel for Bell, an instrument which acted by the actual breaking of the current at every vibration, and that in consequence of this it was incapable of transmitting undulatory waves of electricity, which they claim is the very vital principle underlying the invention of Bell and indispensable to the transmission of words. Both branches of this proposition are denied by the applicants, and substantial testimony offered to sustain the denial. If the latter part of the proposition be true, that undulating waves are indispensable to the transmission of words, the sequence is inevitable that the Reis instrument, properly constructed, did produce such waves, for it is certainly proven that the Reis instrument did transmit words.

On the argument respondents' counsel urged that out of fifteen words transmitted on one of the trials as an experiment in court, seven or eight only were intelligibly heard. The legitimate inference from this would more properly be that the instrument was imperfectly constructed than that the principle on which it was constructed was incapable of producing more perfect results, especially in view of the facts, sworn to by many creditable witnesses, that it did, in their presence, transmit fully and correctly on other occasions.

Other testimony was introduced, on the part of the respondents, of witnesses to show that on trial of the Reis instruments they did not transmit words. To reconcile this with testimony that like instruments did transmit words, it is only necessary to consider, what is quite probable, that in an instrument so delicate some part or parts in the one case were imperfect in their construction, while in the other they were not. For if one instrument did do the work, and another, apparently of the same kind, did not, it is conclusive that some defect existed in the latter instrument.

A full review of all the testimony cannot be attempted; but fairly and candidly considered, and reconciling the testimony as far as it is reasonably possible, we conclude that there is a clear preponderance of evidence in favor of the applicants.

The remaining division of this branch of the subject is, is the case presented of sufficient national import to justify action on the part of the United States?

It has already been shown that if remedy can be had, it can only be had by action in the name of the grantor, the United States.

The evidence developed the fact that already very large amounts of stock had been sold by the Bell Company, and its future sales would probably be larger. If the basis of this stock is groundless, and based upon the false testimony of the United States, in the form of a patent, for the protection of her citizens in the future, it is undoubtedly the duty of the Government to speedily recall that alleged falsehood.

It appeared in evidence, or by clear implication from it, that the Bell Company received as the fruit of its alleged right to this monopoly very large amounts of money, amounting annually to millions of dollars, from the people of the United States. If the patent is wrongful, and the right to the use of the telephone belongs equally to all the people in common, this large amount is an unjust tribute from which the people should be relieved.

The honor due to the man who, by years of thought and investigation, had discovered so important a step in human progress; who had arrested the flashing lightning, and, as a servant, had bound to it the freight of human language to be carried and rehearsed at his will, is fame of which a nation may well be proud.

If the fame belongs to another nation, it is dishonorable that it should be claimed by our country. If it rightfully belongs to Mr. Bell, it is due to him, as well as to our national character, that by a full, fair, equal, and national trial his right should be established, the voice of detraction be forever silenced, and the truth vindicated.

I am, sir, respectfully,

G. A. JENKS,
Assistant Secretary.

Opinion of Hon. H. L. Muldrow, First Assistant Secretary, Interior Department.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, December 22, 1885.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR:

SIR: In compliance with your request, I have considered the question submitted by the Acting Attorney-General of the United States in relation to the Bell Telephone patents, and now submit my views thereon:

The question of the right of the Attorney-General to institute proceedings in all proper cases for the vacation of a patent granted by the Government conveying to the grantee any property, right, or franchise has been exercised so often that it is scarcely now an open question. The right is inherent in the sovereignty possessed by the Government to remedy every wrong perpetrated by its authority. It has been recognized by the Attorneys-General of the United States in more than a dozen cases since 1874, and may now be considered a settled doctrine.

In the case of Mowry v. Whitney (14 Wall., p. 434) the question was raised directly by demurrer to the bill, whether the Government not only had the power, but was a necessary party to a suit to vacate and annul a patent, and in that case the court said:

"We are of opinion that no one but the Government, either in its own name or the name of its appropriate officer, or by some form of proceeding which gives official assurance of the sanction of the proper authority, can institute judicial proceedings for the purposes of vacating or rescinding the patent which the Government has issued to an individual except in the cases provided for in section 16 of the act of July 4, 1836."

So the question was directly raised, not only as to the power of the Government to institute proceedings to vacate and annul a patent granted, but the further question as to whether it did not possess the sole power for this purpose, and the effect of that decision was, that this power resided in the Government alone. Among other reasons assigned was that a suit by an individual could only be conclusive in its results as between the patentee and the party suing, and the patent would remain a valid instrument as to all others. The court also held, that the patentee would, or might, be subjected to numerous vexatious suits to set aside his patent, such a decree in his favor being no barrier to the suit of another party.

Any other interpretation of law would necessarily work a great hardship upon the people in any case where rights had been granted tending to establish monopolies at their expense, by the wrongful act of the Government.

The question is, when shall this right be exercised? The authorities, both of England and America, on the subject, show that where patents have been granted through fraud practiced upon the officer of the Government which induced its grant or issue, or where a patent is granted by mistake, instead of being refused as it ought to be, or where the grounds of refusal do not constitute grounds of defense to a suit for infringement, the Government will lend its aid to rectify the wrong which has thus been practiced on the people. It has been held, that except for fraud, a patent could not be successfully assailed in any proceeding between individuals to judicially determine its validity. In the case of Doughty v. West and others (6th Blatchford, p. 429), the court say:

"The point taken that it was issued unintentionally, through a blunder of a subordinate in the Patent Office, is one which cannot be availed of in a suit brought on the patent. The seal of the United States, and the signatures of the proper officers to the grant, must be respected, in the absence of fraud, so long as the United States themselves do not question the grant."

In United States v. Gunning and others (18 Federal Reporter, p. 511) it was distinctly announced that a bill in equity will lie to set aside letters patent obtained by fraud, but only between the sovereign making the grant and the grantee. No inference can therefore be drawn from these provisions that Congress deemed it requisite to place authority in the United States to maintain such suit, nor from the absence in existing law that Congress intended to withhold such authority.

After a full review of the authorities on this subject, Mr. Curtis, in his work on patents, reaches the conclusion that undoubtedly the proper course is to institute suit in the name of the Government by the Attorney-General on relation of some one who is interested adversely to the patent, and Mr. Walker, after an examination of all the English and American authorities, concluded that where those practicing fraud are ingenious enough to keep clear of all known defense to infringements of suits or wrongs which they cause, the people are without remedy, unless the United States can repeal a patent which its officers have been induced to grant or issue.

There are two considerations which enter into the determination of the question as to when a suit should be brought by the Government to vacate patent. One is that it must be in a case brought to redress a public instead of a private wrong. The other is where the patent has been granted, either by fraud practiced upon the officers of the Government, or where it has been issued unadvisedly, or by mistake. Where these two considerations concur, and the interest of the public is of such magnitude as to justify the exercise of power, it becomes the duty of the Attorney-General to order the suit brought in the name of the Government.

In applying these principles to the case in hand, the question is presented: Do the facts offered by the petitioners present such a case as would authorize the use of the name of the Government to bring a suit to vacate the patents granted to Alexander Graham Bell?

The petitioners in this case have presented evidence strongly tending to prove that Bell was not the first inventor of the speaking telephone. They claim that at least three or more inventors have preceded him in the discovery of this art. It is claimed that Antonio Meucci, as early as 1860, had perfected an instrument which could then be used as a speaking telephone, and that its description was published in the Echo d'Italia, a newspaper printed in the city of New York, about that time. That he then named it a speaking telegraph, and before that he had experimented with various instruments which he had constructed for the same purpose, but had not brought them to that degree of perfection to perform the work intended. About the year 1860 he succeeded in making the perfected instrument, and as early as 1871 Meucci had filed in the Patent Office of the United States his caveat to cover and protect his invention. In 1872 he made two telephones, and these instruments he showed to many persons and talked through them. He caused a drawing to be made by an artist, representing two persons using his speaking telephone, one in the act of speaking, the other in the act of hearing. This was about the time he filed his caveat. This was claimed by Meucci himself, and his statement is corroborated by the affidavits of a number of witnesses. One of these, Dominico Mariana, as early as 1862, talked with General Garibaldi about Meucci's speaking telegraph, and saw the wires extended from the basement outside of the house into a room on the third floor; that he read a description of Meucci's instrument in the paper referred to, and that some time after the war he went to Meucci's house, had the instrument put up, and talked through it with Mrs. Meucci.

The Italian consul for Canada, in 1860, after visiting Meucci and getting a description of his instrument, attempted to get assistance to bring it into use.

In 1864 another witness saw the wires running from the basement to the third story of Meucci's house, noticed their connection with the batteries, placed the instrument to his ear, and heard the conversation with Meucci.

Vanni, another witness, says he visited Meucci in 1869, and Meucci then showed him his device, and informed him that it was a machine invented by him to talk over a wire by electricity. Vanni testifies that in 1872 Meucci described to him his speaking telegraph, and about the same time Dr. Beneditti examined Meucci's invention, and while he did not talk through it, others did in his presence.

Another witness, Cunningham, also saw the instrument and talked through it in Meucci's house from the third story to the basement.

Conti, secretary of the Italian consul, visited Meucci in 1873 and 1875, saw his telephone, and conversed with Meucci through it.

A number of other witnesses corroborate substantially the statements of those already named. It is also in evidence that after the filing of Meucci's caveat he talked freely about his inventions and described them to persons with whom he came in contact.

The evidence presented by the petitioners also tends to show that Professor Phillip Reis, as early as 1858, constructed a speaking telephone and talked through it in the presence of witnesses. This is shown by the affidavit of G. F. Wachtershauser.

A large number of witnesses testify sustaining the claim that Reis invented a telephone, and that his invention antedated the claim of Bell many years. This testimony comes from the highest sources, some of the witnesses sustaining the priority of the Reis invention being eminent professors and scientists.

Francis E. Nipher, professor of physics in the Washington University, Saint Louis, and president of the Academy of Science, says that from such examination as he is competent to give the Reis telephone, he clearly conceives the principle of the transmission of speech by electricity.

W. J. Green, electrician at the Smithsonian Institution and National Museum at Washington, says that he has seen and experimented with the apparatus in the Smithsonian Institution known as the Reis telephone, consisting of a telephonic transmitter and receiver, and that with the Reis transmitter and receiver he heard several sentences of articulate speech. This instrument was received in the Institution as early as 1874.

James A. Lyon, professor of physics and chemistry in the Washington and Jefferson College of Pennsylvania, who has made a special study of the science of electricity, testifies that it is admitted that the Reis telephone can transmit a musical tone, and this he believes has not been denied. It follows necessarily that there is no impossibility of its transmitting other complex sounds, such as the sounds of articulate speech, and that the only difficulty in the way of complete success is a mechanical one, and not a matter of principle, and that the principles now used for the transmission of sound by electricity were discovered and applied more than twenty years ago by Philip Reis.

A. K. Eaton, of Brooklyn, N. Y., analytical chemist and electrician, testifies that since the first publication of Reis he has been familiar with the Reis telephone, and frequently in his lectures referred to it. In 1875 he constructed a purely Reis instrument, both receiver and transmitter, through which he was able to receive and transmit articulate speech. He always considered Reis the inventor of the telephone, and the rest, including himself, Bell, and Gray, as improvers only on Reis.

A. E. Dolbear, professor of physics, Tufts College, Massachusetts, testifies that Reis did invent a speaking telephone in 1861.

J. B. DeMott, professor of physics, De Pauw University, Indiana, testifies that surely no one who has seen the Reis telephone could claim thereafter to have invented the system or art of transmission of speech by electric pulsations or undulations.

W. O. Semans, professor of chemistry and physics, Tufts College, Massachusetts, testifies that he is forced to the conclusion, from all the knowledge that he can gain on the subject, that Reis did invent a speaking telephone, and that as he invented and constructed it it is capable of transmitting articulate speech, and that it did so in Reis's hands.

Charles S. Hastings, commissioner of the scientific school of Yale College, testifies that it is certainly his impression that Reis's telephone embodies all the essential features of the system now used.

Prof. C. A. Young, of Princeton College, testifies that the Reis instrument, just as it came from his hands, if manipulated carefully, and if improved by merely inserting a bit of carbon at the loose contact of the transmitter, would to-day answer satisfactorily for telephonic business. His receivers will, any of them, operate fairly well with our modern microphone transmitters, and his transmitters, fitted with carbon electrodes, are excellent, even judged by the latest standard.

Professor Wiley, of Washington, D. C., testifies that it seems to him that the only difference between the Reis telephone and that of the modern telephone is in efficiency, and not in principle.

These, and a number of others, testify to their confidence in the fact that Professor Reis was the inventor of the art of the transmission of articulate sound by electricity, and it was substantially admitted by Bell, in the McDonough suit, that the invention claimed by McDonough had been known and used by Reis, and this fact was made by Bell a part of his defense. In that suit Bell further defended upon the allegation of the priority of invention of Pickering, Cross, and Van der Weyde, whose inventions all antedated those of Bell. Bell further defended in that case upon the allegation that McDonough was not the original and first inventor of the inventions and devices described in that suit, but that the same had been described in many printed publications, and a reference to these show that at least eighteen had been made prior to 1876.

These facts or circumstances, proved or admitted by Bell, established a very strong case, showing that Bell was not the original inventor of the speaking telephone. The courts of the country have rarely sanctioned a claim so broad as that contended for in this case, and have watched with great jealousy the efforts to monopolize such forces of nature as are claimed by Bell.

Chief-Justice Taney, in the celebrated case of O'Reilly et al. v. Morse et al. (15 Howard, p. 62), denounced the policy of granting patents covering so broad a claim. In that decision he says:

"It is impossible to misunderstand the extent of this claim. He claims the exclusive right to every improvement where the motive power is the electric or galvanic current, and the result is the marking or printing intelligible characters, signs, or letters at a distance.

"If this claim can be maintained, it matters not by what process or machinery the result is accomplished, for aught that we now know some future inventor, in the onward march of science, may discover a mode of writing or printing at a distance by means of the electric or galvanic current without using any part of the process or combination set forth in the plaintiff's specification. His invention may be less complicated; less liable to get out of order; less expensive in construction and in its operation; but yet if it is covered by this patent, the inventor could not use it, nor the public have the benefit of it, without the permission of this patentee.

"Nor is this all. While he shuts the door against the inventions of other persons, the patentee would be able to avail himself of new discoveries in the properties and powers of electro-magnetism which scientific men might bring to light. * * * New discoveries in physical science may enable him to combine it with new agents and new elements, and by that means attain the object in a manner superior to the present process and altogether different from it, and if he can secure the exclusive use by his present patent, he may vary it with every new discovery and development of the science, and need place no description of the new manner, process, or machinery upon the records of the Patent Office. * * * In fine, he claims an exclusive right to use a manner and process which he has not described, and, indeed, had not invented, and therefore could not describe when he obtained his patent. The court is of opinion that the claim is too broad, and not warranted by law."

In applying this principle to the patent of Bell it is questionable whether the court can sustain the broad claim which he has made in any event.

So many witnesses having sworn that the inventions of Meucci, Reis, and others antedated those of Bell in the speaking telephone, I have not considered, except as incident to this conclusion, the question of fraud which has been raised by the petitioners, nor have I thought it necessary to discuss the simultaneous filing of Gray's caveat with Bell's application for patent in February, 1876, for, if a speaking telephone had been invented before either Bell's or Gray's application had been filed in the Patent Office of the United States, then neither of these could rightfully claim to have been the inventor. Bell admits that up to the time of the granting and issuing of his patent in 1876 he had been unable to speak articulate words through his instrument. It was not until after his patent had been granted that he did succeed in doing this. Whether he derived advantage or not from Gray's caveat in regard to a liquid transmitter or receiver I think it not important, so long as so much testimony exists showing that both Gray and Bell had been anticipated, and that the world knew it not only through the testimony from the mouths of witnesses, but also from various publications made both in Europe and in this country.

I therefore believe it to be the duty of the Government to judicially inquire whether these facts do not warrant the institution of a suit to cancel the patent of March 7, 1876, which bears the seal of the Government, and which confers upon him a monopoly of the use of one of the forces of nature at the expense of whole communities.

Very respectfully,

H. L. MULDROW,
First Assistant Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE.

I, Martin V. Montgomery, Commissioner of Patents, do hereby certify that the annexed is a true, correct, and compared transcript and copy of the report made by me to the Secretary of the Interior upon the reference referred to in such report. And I do further certify that the said report was originally made, signed, and forwarded to the Secretary of the Interior in all respects as it now is, and that since it was so made, signed, and filed, it has not been changed in any particular whatever, but that the same as it now exists, and of which the annexed is such copy, is the original report so made and signed by me without the change or alteration of a letter, syllable, or word.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal, at Washington, District of Columbia, this 26th day of May, A. D. 1886.

[SEAL.]

M. V. MONTGOMERY,
Commissioner of Patents.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE,
Washington, December 12, 1885.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR:

SIR: On the 7th of March, 1876, patent No. 174,465 was issued by this office to Alexander Graham Bell. This patent is alleged to cover an important invention relating to the transmission of vocal sounds by electricity.

It is alleged that the American Bell Telephone Company is now the owner of such patent.

Some time ago several petitions, accompanied by voluminous affidavits and other papers, were filed with the Department of Justice, praying such Department to cause suit to be brought in the name and on behalf the Government against Mr. Bell and against such telephone company for the vacation of such patent. These petitions and accompanying papers having been referred by the Department of Justice to the Department of the Interior, were in turn referred by the Secretary of the Interior to the undersigned, Commissioner of Patents, for his report and opinion.

You will remember that for reasons which seemed sufficient and upon consultation it was thought best by you to depart radically from the usual practice in cases of reference of this character. Instead, therefore, of, as is usual, requesting from the Commissioner of Patents a simple report in relation to the facts which particularly pertained to his office, and without according to the patentee or those claiming under him a hearing, it was thought best in this case to permit a thorough investigation, and to make a careful examination of the questions submitted, and that such investigation and examination should be conducted and made by the Secretary of the Interior, aided by his two Assistant Secretaries and the Commissioner of Patents.

Due notice of this determination having been given to Mr. Bell and to the American Bell Telephone Company, the investigation proceeded, and an exhaustive hearing was accorded, not only to petitioners but to the respondents. The law and the facts involved in the controversy were carefully presented and elaborately argued.

The first question to be considered relates to the power of the Government in any case, under any circumstances, to institute and maintain a suit in equity for the vacation of a patent which has been heretofore granted.

The second question for consideration will be whether or not the Department of the Interior, in the event that such power actually does exist, should recommend to the Department of Justice that such a suit be brought in the present case.

As to the first question, which relates solely to the power of the Government to maintain suits of this character, it seems to me that it is no longer an open question. It is alleged, and not disputed, as I understand, that "the Attorney-General has many times authorized suits to repeal patents for inventions."

In the case of Mowry v. Whitney (14 Wallace, 434) suit in equity was brought by Mowry, praying that certain letters patent which had theretofore been granted to Whitney might be declared to be void and of no effect. To this bill the defendant demurred, upon the ground that the United States was an interested party, but was not made a complainant, nor was the suit brought at its instance nor by its authority or consent. The question raised by this demurrer came to the Supreme Court of the United States, where it was held that the demurrer was well taken, and must be sustained for the reason "that no one but the Government, either in its own name or the name of its appropriate officer, * * * can institute judicial proceedings for the purpose of vacating or rescinding a patent which the Government has issued to an individual."

It is said by counsel for respondents that this doctrine pronounced by the Supreme Court was not necessary to the determination of the case, and was consequently, therefore, mere dictum. But the court held that a suit could not be maintained by a private individual, but that such a suit must be brought by or on behalf of the Government. This doctrine was not, therefore, simply dictum, but the base and foundation upon which the determination rested.

It must be remembered in the outset that no private individual can maintain such a suit as is contemplated here, for the purpose of securing the annulment of letters patent, and therefore if such power does not reside in the Government, it nowhere exists.

Is it possible that a patent improvidently, carelessly, or fraudulently granted cannot under any circumstances be recalled, but must run its whole term of seventeen years? Suppose, for instance, that A applies to the Patent Office for letters patent which shall grant to him the sole and exclusive right to manufacture and sell an important invention for seventeen years next following: Examination of his case is had, the grant is made, and the patent issues. In his oath accompanying the application he swears, as the law requires, that the invention has not been in public use or on sale more than two years prior to the filing of his application. The patent hardly leaves the office before it is discovered that such invention had been in active public use for at least five years before the filing of such application, and that during all of such time the patentee himself publicly and notoriously used it. Is it possible that the power does not reside somewhere to recall this weapon which permits this man, at least prima facie, to assert this monopoly? If it be true that such power do not exist, then this man may, as is sometimes done, travel about the entire country, armed with his patent, instituting suits by the hundreds—each time when a trial is had, it is true, sustaining defeat, but nevertheless going on and bringing new suits and forcing new trials; and in hundreds of cases compelling settlements because defendants prefer to pay fifty or one hundred dollars rather than incur the expense of a contest. And this curious condition of affairs would be possible. This patentee might bring simultaneously an indefinite number of suits against an indefinite number of individuals respectively. To-morrow he tries his first case and is defeated, the court declaring the patent invalid and void. The next day he could insist upon and take up the next case, and again make his prima facie showing by simply exhibiting his patent, proving infringement by the defendant and the damage; again, the patentee is defeated. And again, the next day the third suit comes on, when the same ceremony is proceeded with; and so on indefinitely. Is it possible, I repeat, that the power does not somewhere exist to recall such a grant?

Suppose, again, that A applies for patent for a certain invention. By mistake or inadvertence a patent is granted to him for a totally different invention, one for which he never applied, and for which B has an application pending, but which in nowise and in no manner resembles that of A. The whole thing is a mistake, and still the patent is granted. A can take his patent, go out in the country, bring suit in the courts for infringement as often as he pleases, make a prima facie case against each one of ten thousand defendants, respectively, in as many different suits, by simply exhibiting his patent, proving infringement and the damages. Is it possible that no power exists in the Government to recall this kind of a grant?

Again, A makes an application for an invention. The thing which he describes is patentable, but almost insignificant. By mistake and inadvertence the office includes in the patent to him an invention for which he never asked, which he never conceived, but which is of great magnitude and importance to another inventor who is in the office asking for a patent upon this very invention. Is it possible that there is no power lodged anywhere to recall, cancel, reform, or invalidate this instrument?

I have no doubt that such power does exist, and that it is not only the right but the duty of the Government in many cases to protect the people from the imposition which may be occasioned by a monopoly, or seeming monopoly, so created, or fraudulently obtained, and to institute its suit for the absolute vacation and voiding of such a patent.

As to the second question, if it were true, as suggested upon the argument, that this is simply a controversy between two or more individuals or corporations, and that in fact certain individuals or corporations are attempting to induce the Government in its name and by its authority to institute a suit for the purpose of invalidating the patent of a rival, or if it were true that petitioners, or any other individual or corporation, could maintain such a suit, and if in fact it were not true that the power to maintain such suits for the vacation, annulment, or destruction of such a patent resides nowhere else than in the Government, there could be but one answer to these petitions; they must be denied. It is not true, however, that any individual or corporation can maintain such a suit, and the right exists nowhere unless with the Government. No matter how many suits might be brought and conducted to a termination by private litigants, there is but one way to actually invalidate, annul, and destroy a patent, and that is by suit such as is proposed in these petitions. If such suit should be brought and should proceed to a conclusion, the result will not be a simple determination as to which one of several claimants shall be entitled to this monopoly, but if the result shall be reached which is claimed by petitioners to be probable, it would forever be destroyed.

Starting, then, with these assumptions, what degree of assurance should be furnished by the petitioners as to their ability to successfully maintain the facts which they present, and in what degree should they satisfy the Department of the Interior as to the existence of the facts which they aver? On the part of petitioners it is said that all they need do is to establish a prima facie case, pure and simple; that respondents are here and have been heard, not because it was the custom or practice to permit them to be so heard, but by the simple grace of the Department.

To a certain extent this is true. Respondents had no right to insist upon being heard. It was only in view of the unusual circumstances, with which every one is familiar, that surround the history of this controversy, which induced so radical a departure from the usual practice.

On the part of respondents it is urged that having been accorded a hearing it is the duty of the Interior Department to take up the case as it finds it presented, upon the law and the facts, and determine it as it would be determined by any other tribunal; and that if in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior no case has been established which can be successfully maintained, which does not, in fact, "exclude every reasonable doubt," the Department of Justice ought not to be recommended to direct or permit the institution of a suit.

For myself I do not agree with either of these positions. If no hearing had been accorded to respondents it probably would have been sufficient for petitioners to have presented a plain, strong, unimpeached, prima facie showing, which seemed to render an investigation necessary. No one will dispute that the prima facie case submitted by petitioners was a very strong one. In the absence of any defense, and in the absence of any explanation, a strong presumptive case was made out against respondents, which would make it the clear duty of the Government to institute suit to vacate the patents. On the other hand, an able, earnest, and exhaustive defense has been asserted and urged. There are radical and very substantial contradictions both upon the law and the facts. It is asserted on the part of the petitioners that Mr. Bell in this invention was anticipated by at least two inventors, Antonio Menci and Philip Reis, respectively. It seems to me that it would be hardly profitable for me to go at length into the testimony. It, perhaps, is not possible to express an opinion as to where the preponderance is found. It is sufficient, in my judgment, to say that the question is by no means free from difficulty, and by no means a clear one. A formidable array of facts is presented on each side. These facts cannot be calmly, judiciously, and judicially ascertained and determined anywhere except in the courts.

In many of the States, justices of the supreme court, judges of the courts of record, justices of the peace, mayors of cities, and other officers, can act in the capacity of examining magistrates. The grand jury is rarely or never called, and there is no investigation between the examination and the trial. A person charged with crime is brought before one of these officers for such examination. The examination proceeds; a strong and clear prima facie case is established. When the defense is reached, which may be made as exhaustive as the defendant chooses and has the power to make it, evidence is given which fairly explains away the seeming case of the prosecution. In such an instance, very clearly, the case should not be sent to a jury for investigation. On the other hand, however, suppose the arrest, arraignment, and establishment of such strong prima facie showing. The defendant offers a large amount of testimony. When all is concluded, instead of having explained the case made by the people, a confused, important, and serious question of fact remains. It requires careful investigation and careful discrimination to determine where the truth is. Very clearly, in such a case, the defendant would be committed for trial, and the cause sent to a jury, where such investigation could be had and a proper result reached.

If Mr. Bell were the original and first inventor of the improved invention, which was secured to him by such letters patent, then the institution of a suit by the Government, an exhaustive showing of the facts, and a decree in his favor, would substantially settle for all time his right to such invention.

Again, if counsel for Mr. Bell are satisfied with their position, that the power to maintain such suit does not exist, then a simple demurrer to the bill would raise the question, and forever set it at rest.

In conclusion, I submit that, in my opinion—

First. The United States Government, through its Department of Justice, has the power to institute and maintain such a suit for such a purpose as is invited by these petitions.

Second. That in the present case facts have been exhibited which should not be ignored or dismissed, but which ought to undergo a careful and thorough investigation.

I therefore report that, in my opinion, the Department of the Interior should recommend to the Department of Justice that such a suit be brought.

The petitions, affidavits, and accompanying papers, received by your reference, are herewith returned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

M. V. MONTGOMERY,
Commissioner.

[Circuit court of the United States of America, southern district of Ohio, eastern division.]

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, COMPLAINANT, vs. THE AMERICAN BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY, A CORPORATION UNDER the laws of Massachusetts; The Central Union Telephone Company, a corporation under the laws of Illinois; The Erie Telephone and Telegraph Company, incorporated under the laws of the State of Massachusetts; The Central District and Printing Telegraph Company, incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania; the Cleveland Telephone Company, The City and Suburban Telegraph Company, The Miami Telephone Company, The Buckeye Telephone Company, the latter four companies incorporated under the laws of Ohio; and Alexander Graham Bell, respondents.	}	In equity.

To the judges of the circuit court of the United States in and for the southern district of Ohio, eastern division :

Your orator, the United States of America, by Philip H. Kumler, its district attorney in and for the district aforesaid, who brings this suit by direction of John Goode, Solicitor-General of the United States, and its Acting Attorney-General in this case (the Attorney-General of the United States being under disability to prosecute this case), brings this, its bill of complaint, against the American Bell Telephone Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Massachusetts, and Alexander Graham Bell, a resident of the District of Columbia, and said other defendants. And thereupon your orator complains and says :

I. The United States, by section 8, article I, of the Constitution, and acts of Congress passed thereunder, is authorized and empowered to promote the progress of science and useful arts, by securing for limited times to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries.

The conditions of such security are that the art or thing in question shall be new and useful, and that the original and first inventor or discoverer thereof, or his assigns, shall have duly applied for and received letters patent, authorizing such patentee to make, vend, or use such art or thing, in the place and to the exclusion, as aforesaid, of all other persons within the jurisdiction of the United States.

It is the duty of the applicant for any such patented monopoly to make known, fully, fairly, and in good faith, to the proper officers of the United States, all matters within his knowledge relating to such invention or discovery, or in its connection with the history or state of the art to which such alleged invention or discovery belongs, to the end that such officers may discharge their duty of examining fairly and fully into the history of such art, and into the state and condition of such alleged invention as to novelty and utility, and be able to determine intelligently whether such applicant is indeed the original and first inventor, and thereby entitled to have a patent conferring upon him a grant of monopoly excluding all others, citizens of the United States, from the like privilege.

This obligation attaches to the applicant and to his assigns in such way, and the effect of the due and proper performance thereof upon the rights of the people of the United States is of such a nature, that the obligation for such due and honest performance attaches to such patent as a continuing condition of its validity.

The power and authority of such officers to issue a patent having effect so as aforesaid to deprive the people of the United States of their natural rights extends only to the case of inventions actually new and useful, and to the granting of patents thereon to the true, original, and first inventor thereof.

Whenever a patent is, by accident, inadvertence, mistake, or fraud, issued to any person who is not such original and first inventor, or for any invention, or part of an invention, which is not both new and useful, it is within the power and, in a proper case, within the duty of the United States, acting through the proper Executive Department thereof, to take such action or proceedings as may be convenient and necessary to cause the facts to be brought to a fair and judicial investigation and determination to the end, that, in case such patent be found valid, it may be sustained by proper judicial judgment; or, in case the same be found in whole or in part invalid, it may be canceled or annulled in whole or in any such part that the court may deem to be void; and that the whole patent be treated as a contract to be annulled, reformed, or modified as in law and equity and good conscience it ought to be.

In performance of this duty your orator charges that certain letters patent issued to Alexander Graham Bell, dated March 7, 1876, numbered 174465, were illegally and improperly procured to be issued, by reason of certain facts hereinafter more fully set forth, and brings this its bill in equity as a means of causing justice to be done to the said Alexander Graham Bell, to the said American Bell Telephone Company, his assignee, and the other said defendants, as well as to all others, citizens of the United States or persons commorant within its jurisdiction, in whose interests, and for the restoration and protection of whose rights, this suit is instituted.

II. And your orator further shows unto your honors that the application for said patent No. 174465, dated March 7, 1876, together with a full record of all writings filed and proceedings had thereon leading to the issue and delivery to the said Bell of said patent, and also the said patent, are all of record in the Patent Office of the United States, and to which, as to all matters therein found and contained, your orator further refers for certainty, and prays that a copy of the same herewith filed, marked Exhibits A and C, may be taken and considered a part of this bill of complaint, and the same in all respects as if set forth herein in extenso.

III. And your orator further shows that in order lawfully to obtain the patent aforesaid it was necessary for the said Bell, under the provisions of section 4888 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to file in the Patent Office a written description of his alleged invention, and the manner and process of using it, in such full, clear, concise, and exact terms as to enable any person skilled in the art or science to which it appertained, or with which it is most nearly connected, to make and use the same; and in respect to any machine or apparatus connected therewith, to explain the principle thereof, and the best mode of applying that principle, so as to distinguish it from other inventions, and to particularly point out and distinctly claim the part, improvements, or combination which he claimed as his invention or discovery.

And your orator charges that any intentional omission or failure so to do, and any evasion of the said requirements, calculated, by wide generalizations and ambiguous language, to discourage further invention in the same field, or to cover antecedent or future inventions, or to deceive and mislead the public, rendered such patent void.

And your orator further shows that although up to the time of issuing of the said patent the said Bell had never in fact been able to transmit articulate speech by the method or with the apparatus described in his said application, he purposely framed his said application and claim in ambiguous and general terms, in order to cover both antecedent and future inventions, and to deceive and mislead the examiners of the Patent Office and the public, and did not set forth or declare that his alleged invention had any relation to the art of transmitting articulate speech by means of electricity, but entitled it an application for an "improvement in telegraphy," and made special reference to a then recent application made by himself for a patent for a method of "multiple telegraphy," and treated his alleged new invention as another method thereof, and set forth advantages which it had over the other, but did not include or mention its capacity, or claim for it any capacity to transmit speech.

And your orator further shows and charges that by the means aforesaid the said Bell not only failed to meet the requirements of the statutes as to the form of his application, but did, in fact, mislead and deceive the examining officers of the Patent Office, by causing them to regard the said alleged invention as a mere improvement in telegraphy, and not as an invention of the telephone, and by leading them to suppose that it had no relation to the art of transmitting articulate speech by electricity, and thus caused them not to make an inquiry as to the state of that art, or the patents or the printed publications concerning it; wherefore your orator avers that the said patent No. 174465, issued upon said delusive and ambiguous application, was and is void and of no effect.

Your orator further avers and charges, upon information and belief, that at the time of filing the said application the said Bell was not the original and first inventor of all the improvements in telegraphy described and claimed in the said specification; that certain of the so-called improvements had been previously known to and used by others, as is hereinafter more fully and at large set forth; that the said Bell, on the 20th day of January, 1876, and at the time of filing the said application, did not verily believe himself to be the original and first inventor of all the so-called improvements in telegraphy described and claimed in the specification; and that on the said 20th day of January, 1876, and at the time of filing of the said application, the said Bell did know and did believe that certain of the so-called improvements in telegraphy described and claimed in the specification last aforesaid had been previously known to and used by others, as is hereinafter more fully set forth.

And your orator avers and charges that the said untrue statements made by said Bell as aforesaid constituted deception and fraud upon your orator by the said Bell, and did deceive and defraud your orator, and did cause your orator to issue and deliver said patent No. 174465 to said Bell upon your orator's faith that the statements were true, and that but for the said false and fraudulent statements of the said Bell made by him as aforesaid the said patent would not have been issued or granted by your orator, so as to create any exclusive monopoly of the method or process described in the said fifth claim thereof.

Your orator, on information and belief, alleges and charges further that it was, at the time of filing the said application for the said patent, well known that one Phillip Reis, of Germany, did, about the year 1861, devise, and did subsequently improve, an apparatus for the transmission of speech by means of the galvanic current, and did publish to the world in various scientific publications an explanation of the theory, and principle, and method, and process upon which the transmission of speech by means of electricity could be and was successfully accomplished, so that prior to the year 1874 it became known to the scientific world, and many persons devised and were seeking to devise apparatus and means by which such method and process could be successfully operated and made to transmit articulate speech and other composite sounds.

Such method, as a scientific problem, was substantially stated to be the causing, in a conductor of electricity and an apparatus for receivers, electric vibrations or undulation corresponding or similar to the air vibration accompanying the sound to be transmitted. And not only did the said Phillip Reis make and operate an apparatus upon such method or process, but divers other persons in this country did, prior to the alleged date of said Bell's invention, to wit, prior to the year 1876, well understanding the conditions on which alone speech and other composite sounds could be transmitted by electricity, experiment upon said problem and devise more or less perfect means therefor.

And your orator, on information and belief, further alleges and charges that on the 14th day of February, 1876, being the same day on which the said Alexander Graham Bell filed his application in the Patent Office as aforesaid, one Elisha Gray, of Chicago, did, prior to the filing of the said application, file at the same place a caveat, under the provisions of section 4902 of the Revised Statutes, concerning an invention, the object of which was expressly declared in said caveat to be "to transmit the tones of the human voice through a telegraphic circuit and reproduce them at the receiving end of the line, so that actual conversation can be carried on by persons at a long distance apart," in which the single claim was for "the art of transmitting vocal sounds or conversation telegraphically through an electric circuit."

That under the provisions of section 4902 aforesaid the said Gray became lawfully entitled to have his said caveat preserved in secrecy in the confidential archives of the office, and to file his description, specification, drawings, and model within three months after notice of any other application, filed within one year, with which such caveat would in any manner interfere.

That said Gray also became entitled to have the said application of the said Bell, with its description, specification, drawings, and model, also deposited in said confidential archives until three months had expired, in case the same was construed by the Patent Office to interfere in any manner with his own, in which case it would become the duty of the Patent Office to give such notice to Gray; that the examining officers did so construe the said application, and accordingly, in the discharge of such statutory duty, the examining officer did give such notice to said Gray, by a letter dated February 19, 1876, in which the said application was not described as for a telephone, or as relating to the art of transmitting articulate speech, but as for a "telephonic telegraph," which signifies, and did then signify, a far-sounding method of transmitting audible telegraphic signals, but not a far-speaking instrument for the transmission of human speech, claimed by said Gray in his caveat.

That in the true intent and meaning of said section 4902 it was the duty of the Patent Office to give the notice thereby required even if the said application of Bell had been filed before the filing of said caveat, provided it had not been considered and acted upon by granting a patent thereon, to the end that said caveator might have an opportunity to file his application and exhibit the date and precise nature of his invention, and to enjoy the advantage of the interference proceedings provided for by law; and that, having received the said notice dated as aforesaid, and obtained such advantage by the regular action of the office, the status of said Gray with reference to said application of Bell became fixed, and the subsequent proceedings by which he was deprived thereof, as hereinafter stated, were irregular and void.

That notwithstanding the requirements of the said statute to preserve said caveat in secrecy, the examining officer of the Patent Office communicated to the said Bell, very soon after the filing of the said caveat, the fact of the filing thereof, as well as the general nature of the claim contained therein, and some information as to the particular method employed; that the said Bell, by his attorneys, followed up this knowledge unlawfully obtained, and induced some of the officers of the Patent Office to violate still further the requirement of secrecy concerning said caveat, by setting on foot an inquiry, for the benefit of the said Bell, as to the precise time of the day when the same was filed; and thereupon, without any certain proof, and contrary to law and the custom of the office, it was determined, contrary to the fact, that said caveat was filed after said application, although on the same day, and the said caveator was not entitled to the notice which had already been given, or to any of the benefits of the said section, with respect to the application of the said Bell.

That thereupon the examiner of the Patent Office who had the matter in special charge, without communicating to the said Gray the question that had been so raised as to the time of the filing of the respective papers, nor the determination thereof, or giving him any opportunity to establish by proof the actual time of filing his own, announced to him, by letter dated February 25, 1876, that the said notice had been given under a misapprehension of the rights of the parties, and was withdrawn.

That the said Bell, having unlawfully obtained important information as to essential features of the invention of Gray as disclosed by his caveat, proceeded without delay to make substantial amendments of his specification and claims, which amendments were made on the 29th day of February, only four days after said withdrawal of notice was communicated to said Gray; that such amendments related to those parts of said Bell's alleged invention which he and his assigns have since claimed as the cardinal element or feature of his patent, to wit, the transmission of sounds by gradual or undulatory changes in the electrical current, as distinguished from alternate or pulsatory changes; that in the notice of the 19th of February, 1876, the said examiner had distinctly advised the said Gray that the application of Bell seemed to conflict with his caveat in respect to "the method of producing the undulations by varying the resistance of the circuit, and the method of transmitting vocal sounds telegraphically by causing these undulatory currents"; that this same examiner, without the knowledge of the said Gray, communicated to Bell the fact that Gray's invention varied the resistance and produced undulations by means of a liquid transmitter; that upon and in consequence of this surreptitious information, and of the unlawful communications respecting the said caveats made to the said Bell, as herein above alleged, the said Bell made the said amendments, more clearly defining the distinction between pulsatory and undulatory currents, and substituting the word "gradually" for "alternately" wherever it occurred in one of his claims; and your orator charges that these amendments were substantial, as well in themselves, as in their bearing upon the rights then secured by Gray under the statute, and were not verified by oath, and that the said patent was issued thereon, and during the pendency of said caveat, and with undue and unusual haste, and without proper consideration of the rights secured by said Gray, or of the interest of the citizens of the United States with respect to the art of telephony sought to be monopolized by said Bell.

And your orator further shows that the said Bell ingratiated himself into the favor and confidence of the attorney of said Gray, and in order to induce the said Gray to abandon his caveat did, as early as March 3, 1876, and before his said patent was issued, falsely and fraudulently cause said attorney to believe that he, Bell, had invented a speaking telephone prior to the said January 20, 1876, and also that such invention was really described therein, and induced said attorney so to represent to said Gray; and that accordingly the said attorney, by letter of March 3, 1876, caused the said Gray to be informed that the said Bell had the older and better claim, and gave it as his "judgment" that it would not be advisable for the said Gray to press his claim for the invention.

Your orator shows, on information and belief, that said Gray believed these false suggestions, and was thereby induced to take, and did take, no action in pressing his said caveat for a patent for many months, and until long after said Bell had secured his said patent upon his said application, and that by these wrongs and frauds aforesaid, and others to be presently stated, said Bell succeeded in securing the aforesaid patent for an invention of great value which he did not discover, and to which, as between him and said Gray, the said Gray was entitled to priority.

Your orator is informed and believes that the examiner did not understand the application of the said Bell to be for an articulating speech telephone, but for an improvement in multiple telegraphy.

That the examiner was of the opinion that the said application and caveat were in interference on principles employed on harmonic or multiple telegraphy, but not in the art of transmitting speech, and did not understand the application to lay claim to the art of transmitting speech; nor did the language of the specification, or drawing attached thereto, give due, fair, and intelligible notice that notwithstanding the entitling of the invention as an improvement in the art of telegraphy, one portion thereof might be construed to have reference to telephony, which had been, since that art had been invented by Reis, the term adopted by lexicographers, and had come into general use as a recognized term of art, denoting a peculiar operation for transmitting speech by means of electricity.

Your orator further shows that on March 10, 1876, three days after the said patent issued to said Bell, he obtained for the first time articulate speech by an electric speaking telephone. This success was not obtained by any device or apparatus described in the said Bell specification and patent, but on March 10, 1876, was obtained with the liquid transmitter, or water telephone, described in Gray's caveat, and a knowledge of which said Bell derived from the wrongful communication to him, as before shown, of the contents of the Gray caveat.

Your orator is informed and believes that the said Bell was not able to get the said devices shown in his patent, or any of them, to transmit and deliver articulate speech up to the time of filing his application, on the 14th of February, 1876, and he did not intend to so operate them, nor was he aware that they would do so.

Your orator is informed and believes that there is not now and never was in use an electric speaking telephone made in accordance with the alleged invention or discovery of said Bell, as shown in his specifications and claims of February 14, 1876, or in his patent issued upon the said specifications and claims of March 7, 1876; that the telephone instruments now in use by the defendant, the American Bell Telephone Company, were not invented or discovered by said Bell, nor did he invent or discover any essential part or principle of the same. On the contrary, as your orator is informed and believes, they are combinations of the inventions of other persons, some of which were made before and some since the alleged discovery. Your orator is informed and believes that these facts showing fraud, collusion, and overreaching in the obtaining of the said Bell patent long remained artfully concealed from your orator, and have only recently been brought to your orator's knowledge and attention.

IV. And your orator further shows that even if the said caveat had not been filed as aforesaid, and the said patent had been properly issued as for the improvement in telegraphy described therein, it nevertheless was and is void and ineffective to secure any exclusive claim for the broad art of transmitting articulate speech by the process as set forth in said fifth claim or otherwise, which alone gives it any significance or importance, because each and every claim of said patent No. 174465, dated March 7, 1876, is bad in form and substance and is void as matter of law.

And your orator also says that the fifth of said claims, which is, in substance, for the method of and apparatus for transmitting vocal and other sounds telegraphically by causing electrical undulations similar in form to the vibrations of the air accompanying the sounds, is also void, for that the words "method of" merely describe the function and mode of operation of the machine. The claim for an "apparatus" is void, because no mechanical device is specified therein. The claim of causing undulations in a particular supposed form is a mere matter of speculation, and is not the subject of a patent. The transmission or reproduction of vocal sounds by electricity was notoriously old, and there is no attempt to claim a more perfect transmission or reproduction of human speech electrically.

Your orator further shows and charges that the said patent bearing date March 7, 1876, is void, because it does not point out and distinctly claim either a new and useful art or a new and useful machine, a new and useful manufacture or a new and useful composition of matter, but is an attempt to include in one and the same patent and in one and the same claim the alleged invention of an art and the alleged invention of a machine or apparatus, and to combine two statutory classes of inventions in a single patent and a single claim.

The said patent is for the function which it is alleged is performed by an apparatus described in the specification of the said patent, and is an unlawful attempt to cover by letters patent of the United States the function performed by an apparatus, and one of several steps and stages of a process, all of which are necessary to effect the result aimed at. (The said patent is also the result of an attempt to cover and protect by letters patent of the United States an abstract principle and law of nature.)

And your orator further says that the said patent, and each and every one of said claims, is also void, because the same constitutes a fraudulent attempt on the part of the said Bell to so frame his descriptions and claims as to extend them over the whole field of invention to which the same relate, and to enable him and his assigns, under the color of subtle and adroit phrase and vague and general descriptions, to avail themselves of subsequent discoveries and inventions that might be made by other persons, and to prevent other meritorious inventors and discoverers from having and enjoying the just fruits of their inventions and discoveries.

Said Bell nowhere in his patent or claims describes or sets forth any apparatus for or art of transmitting human speech electrically; but as many efforts were then notoriously being made in the inventive world to devise an apparatus for that purpose, as aforesaid, said Bell, in pursuance of his said fraudulent design and intent, artfully introduced into said patent such phrases as would afterwards enable him to claim, as in fact he has since done, to be the first and original inventor of every means of transmitting human speech by electricity, contrary to the facts and the justice of the same, and this under a covert claim of an improvement in ordinary telegraphy.

That if it be true that articulate speech can only be electrically transmitted through and by the agency of the electrical undulations described or sought to be described in said patent, then the method of causing, producing, regulating, and using such currents or action of electricity so as to intelligibly transmit articulate speech is not obvious or plain either to the ordinary mechanic or to persons of very considerable knowledge of electricity or applied electricity; yet the said Bell, in his specification and claims, did not and does not point out or describe any device, apparatus, mechanism, or means of carrying his pretended invention or process into effect in such form and with such clearness that the same can be constructed and operated by others, without the intervention of further actual invention on the part of the persons seeking to practice the art of electric transmission of speech or sound by the method as claimed by the said Bell in his said patent.

KNOWLEDGE AND PUBLICATION.

V. Your orator, upon information and belief, further shows that the said Bell was anticipated in the discovery of the electric speaking telephone by Phillip Reis, Cromwell Fleetwood Varley, Antonio Meucci, Elisha Gray, Thomas A. Edison, Asahel K. Eaton, and many others, as will appear by reference to the schedules made a part of this bill, and to be more particularly mentioned hereafter.

That this valuable discovery is either the property of some one of these prior discoverers, or, having been abandoned by the first and original inventor or discoverer to the public, is now free to be used by all the people of the United States.

That telephone instruments of many prior inventors, which were made before the alleged discovery of the said Bell, are now in existence, and are electric speaking telephones, and can be made to demonstrate, and do demonstrate, by the transmission and delivery of articulate speech, that they are such telephones.

That all of the alleged inventions and discoveries in said patent of the said Bell mentioned, described, and claimed, and all substantial and material parts thereof therein claimed as new and original, had been, long prior to said invention and discovery thereof by said Bell, made known and described in various printed publications both in this and foreign countries, i. e., in the printed works and publications named, set forth, and described in schedule 2 annexed to and filed with this bill of complaint, and made part thereof to the same extent and effect as if the same had been written herein in extenso.

That the said alleged invention or discovery in said letters patent mentioned, described, or claimed, as well as each and every substantial and material part thereof by the said Bell claimed as new and original with him, had been, long prior to the alleged invention or discovery thereof by the said Bell, mentioned, described, or claimed in various and divers patents granted and issued to divers persons, and, among others, to the persons named in the patents respectively dated and numbered, set forth, and contained in schedule 3 annexed to and filed with this bill of complaint, and made part thereof to the same effect and extent as if the said schedule had been written herein in extenso.

And your orator therefore alleges, on behalf of the people of the United States, and for the restoration of their common rights, that the said patent No. 174465 was irregularly, fraudulently, and unlawfully issued from the Patent Office by the means above set forth, and ought, by a decree to be made in this cause, to be canceled and made void.

VI. Your orator further shows, on information and belief, that said Bell, well knowing that he was not the inventor of the art of transmitting speech by an electric speaking telephone, and also that the patent of March 7, 1876, neither in the drawings, specifications, nor claims in said patent, described any apparatus or device by which articulate speech could be transmitted through the instrumentality of electricity as perfectly or as well as articulate speech had been transmitted prior to the alleged said invention, through the instrumentality of electricity, by the use of well-known pre-existing methods and apparatus, sought to fortify himself in his wrongful claim and more completely to secure to himself the monopoly sought to be described in said patent, and further imposed upon your orator and the Patent Office, and to that end, on or about January 15, 1877, made another application for a patent to be issued to him, upon which application a patent was issued, No. 186787, dated January 30, 1877, which said patent purports to be granted to him for specific devices and apparatus for the transmission of articulate speech through the instrumentality of electricity. That the application for the said patent, together with a full record of all writings filed and proceedings had thereon leading to the issue and delivery to the said Bell of the said patent, and also the said patent, are all of record in the Patent Office of the United States, and to which, as to all matters therein contained and found, your orator refers for certainty, and prays that a copy of the same herewith filed marked Exhibit D may be taken and considered a part of this bill the same in all respects as if the same were set forth herein in extenso.

Your orator further shows, on information and belief, that at the time said Bell applied for said last-mentioned patent he well knew that every material part, portion, and device and apparatus set forth and described in his said patent and specifications were not his invention, but the several elements, considered either separately or combined, were taken bodily by him from well-known and existing apparatus, devices, and plans invented and contrived by others for the purpose of transmitting articulate speech by means of electricity.

Your orator is further informed and believes that, not content with the wrongful claiming for himself the apparatus, combinations, and devices of others, he, and those claiming under him, used his said last-named patent to fortify and protect them in their monopoly of the transmission of articulate speech claimed to have been granted to said Bell in said former patent, and he so framed the several claims in said patent No. 186787 as on the face thereof to give him and his associates the practical monopoly of well-known and essential devices used and combined in all instruments for the transmission of articulate speech by electricity; and now those claiming under him hold forth both of said patents as not only giving them a monopoly of the broad art of transmitting speech by electricity, but of all the essential parts of any apparatus by which the transmission of speech by electricity can be effected and is at the present time accomplished, basing the claim to a close and complete monopoly upon the said two patents. A certified copy of said patent No. 186787 is hereto annexed, marked Exhibit B, and made part hereof.

VII. Your orator further shows, on information and belief, in addition to the above-stated grounds for the invalidity of said patent No. 186787, that said Bell procured his last-named patent by fraud upon one Amos E. Dolbear, professor of physics at Tufts College, in Massachusetts, in the manner and under the circumstances following, to wit:

The said Dolbear did discover and invent the magneto-telephone now used as a receiver by the American Bell Telephone Company, being the same as that embraced in the said patent issued to said Bell on said January 30, 1877, and made and exhibited a complete, perfect, articulate speaking telephone on September 20, 1876, combining all the appliances now used in the modern magneto telephone used by the American Bell Telephone Company, professedly under the said last-named patent, and began to take steps to secure to himself, his heirs and assigns, a patent for the said invention from the Government of the United States, and to that end communicated his invention to a friend, one Percival V. Richards, who was assisting him to secure a patent for his said invention.

That said Richards was also a friend and associate of said A. G. Bell, and, while proceeding to procure a patent for said Dolbear for said invention, he inadvisedly communicated the fact of said invention of the said Dolbear to the said Bell, and also communicated to him a description of said invention of Dolbear; whereupon and soon after he was informed by one Gardner G. Hubbard, who was a near connection of and associate with the said Bell, that said Bell had invented and secured a patent on said devices and invention of said Dolbear over two years previously, which untrue statement was communicated to said Dolbear, who believed the same, and thereafter ceased for a long time all further efforts to secure a patent for his said invention.

That said Bell and Hubbard, as soon as they had gathered and secured the details of said Dolbear's invention, proceeded forthwith to the city of Washington, and then and there applied for and secured said patent No. 186787, for the invention of said Dolbear.

Your orator further says that at the time said Bell made oath to his application for said invention he well knew that his oath was not true, and that not only he was not the inventor thereof, but that he had appropriated the invention of the said Dolbear.

VIII. Your orator further says that said Amos E. Dolbear, soon after making said invention embraced in said patent No. 186787, entered into a contract and bargain with the Gold and Stock Telegraph Company, a corporation existing under the laws of the State of New York, controlled by the Western Union Telegraph Company, to manufacture, use, and sell his said invention, which said corporation had exclusive control of said invention, and made, used, and sold said telephones of Dolbear for the space of nearly three years, when the said American Telephone Company and the said Western Union Telegraph Company, in a litigation then pending between them in what is known as the Dowd case, agreed to compromise their differences, and appropriate to themselves the entire profits arising from telephony in the United States, and suppressed the fact as to the said invention of said Dolbear of said devices, and that said Bell had appropriated and patented the same.

Your orator further says that said American Bell Telephone Company and said Western Union Telegraph Company, in order further to suppress the fact and deceive the public, caused a collusive interference case to be begun and prosecuted in the United States Patent Office between said Bell and said Dolbear, wherein said Dolbear was not represented except in name, and wherein his assigns, the said Western Union Telegraph Company, the American Bell Telephone Company, and A. G. Bell, were the real parties and were all in one interest; which said interference case was prosecuted so as to suppress the fact that as against Bell said Dolbear was the inventor, the attorney for said Dolbear's assignee being in fact one of the counsel for and in the pay of said American Bell Telephone Company; the testimony also being taken by apparently opposing counsel for opposing interests, but in fact for the same parties and for the same interests; and that accordingly, in the said case, it was decided that the defendant Bell was the discoverer and inventor of said device.

And your orator charges that for the fraud aforesaid the said last-named patent, No. 186787, was invalid, and ought to be canceled and made void by the decree of this honorable court.

IX. And your orator further says that the said patent issued to said Bell on January 30, 1877, purports to be for improvements in electric telegraphy, and that each and every claim of the said patent is bad in form and substance and is void as matter of law.

Your orator further says that said Bell was not the first inventor of said device patented by him by said patent No. 186787, that the same had been used by the persons and at the places stated in the schedule No. 1, hereto attached, and that the same had been published in the newspapers and periodicals and issued to the world in printed form, also set forth in the schedule hereto attached marked 2.

And that the said invention patented to said Bell by said patent had been patented by the patents numbered and set forth in schedule 3, which three schedules are made a part hereof as much as if herein copied in extenso.

Your orator further says that this is true especially of a patent of the United States issued to David Hughes, January 25, 1859, No. 2277; also a patent of Great Britain, No. 32287, to A. G. Holcombe, June 4, 1861; patent of the United States granted to Royal E. House, No. , 1868.

And especially is it true that said invention was known, used, and published by James W. McDonough, of Chicago, Ill., before January, 1871, and by one Antonio Meucci, of Staten Island, New York, from 1856 to 1870, and by him published in the "Eco d'Italia," published in New York about September, 1860, and August, 1865, and in "Il Diritto," a newspaper published in Italy in 1865; and that said Meucci, in order to secure his invention to himself, his heirs and assigns, on the 26th day of December, 1871, filed a caveat for the same in the Patent Office of the United States, and renewed the same on the 28th day of December, 1875, which said caveat of said Meucci on his said invention is still of record in the Patent Office of the United States, to which your orator refers as a part of this bill.

X. And your orator shows to your honors that by mesne assignments in writing, in due form made and executed by the said Bell, and duly recorded in the Patent Office of the United States, the said Alexander Graham Bell transferred the said letters patent to the American Bell Telephone Company, No. 174465, dated March 7, 1876, and also the said letters patent No. 176787, dated January 30, 1877, and each of them, and has become divested of all right, title, or interest therein, and has transferred his title in and to said letters patent, and in and to the matters and grants therein contained, to the American Bell Telephone Company.

That your orator has made the said Alexander Graham Bell defendant in this bill not by reason of any interest, right, or title in said patents, as he has become divested of all right, title, or interest therein, but that he may, if he so choose, appear herein and assert any pretended claim, right, or interest which he may believe himself possessed of, and be heard herein.

Your orator further shows that the said defendants, the American Bell Telephone Company, duly incorporated under the laws of Massachusetts, and the Central Union Telephone Company, a corporation duly chartered under the laws of Illinois, and the Erie Telephone and Telegraph Company, incorporated under the laws of the State of Massachusetts, and the Central District and Printing Telegraph Company, incorporate under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, and the Cleveland Telephone Company, the City and Suburban Telegraph Company, the Miami Telephone Company, and the Buckeye Telephone Company, the latter four incorporated under the laws of Ohio, and the defendant, Alexander Graham Bell, all of whom are made defendants to this bill, are present and are found and have property and do business in the State of Ohio, within the jurisdiction of this court, and are now engaged in carrying on the business of telephony and maintaining a close monopoly thereof in the said districts, that is to say, in said eastern and western divisions of said southern district and in said northern district of Ohio, under and by virtue of said patents to said Bell and by the means and in the manner hereinafter set forth.

Your orator further shows that the defendant, the American Bell Telephone Company, owns all the telephone instruments used in the business of telephony in the United States conducted under the authority of its patents, and especially all those used by said defendants, or any or either of them, in the State of Ohio; the said instruments that are used by them in said State being in number over 20,000. Its local associates and copartners, the said companies, respectively, own their wires and poles and contribute the same as their shares, respectively, of the capital of the business, whilst the American Bell Telephone Company furnishes the franchise and exclusive right of said patents, and the telephone instruments, together with a contract stipulation with each of said local companies that the American Bell Telephone Company will also supply counsel and maintain all suits and do all things to make the business an exclusive and close monopoly, without charge or burden to the local company or copartner.

That the local association, copartnership, or joint-stock company thus formed divides the profits of the business between the American Bell Telephone Company and the said local association, on terms agreed upon between the parties, and the share of the American Bell Telephone Company, as your orator is informed and believes, is set apart weekly and accounted for by said local company, and is collected by agents of the American Bell Telephone Company who visit said local company for that purpose, or otherwise paid to said American Bell Telephone Company.

That the telephone being a necessary agent in conducting commercial and business affairs, the said business is carried on, in the manner hereinbefore stated, in every city and town of any importance in the United States, and between cities, towns, and places in different States, and is so carried on by said defendants in the eastern division of the southern district aforesaid, and in the western division thereof, and the northern district of said State.

And that the said other defendants or sub-companies are part owners and copartners, agents, and representatives of the said American Bell Telephone Company within each of the divisions and districts aforesaid of the State of Ohio, and that the said American Bell Telephone Company is entitled to and has an interest in all and singular the property, rights, and business of the other said defendants.

That the said American Bell Telephone Company does business in each of said divisions and districts by the sale and grant of licenses to use said patents; by the renting or lease of said telephone instruments, by sharing in the earnings and the profits of each of said local companies, by holding stock in the same; by having an interest in the rights, property, and business thereof; by supporting and maintaining each of said companies in litigation; by the employment of officers, agents, and servants in each of said divisions and districts; and by divers other means and devices.

Your orator further alleges, on information and belief, that said alleged invention of the telephone is of great public interest and importance; that the telephone has become a commercial and practical necessity to the people of the United States; that the said defendant, the American Bell Telephone Company, by virtue of its said patents, No. 174465 and No. 186787, have received and demanded, and are still receiving and demanding, and threatens to so continue to receive and demand, large sums of money for the use of the telephones alleged to be covered by the said patents, so as to establish a monopoly and grievously to oppress the people of the United States upon what are, as your orator is informed and believes, invalid grants, and have brought and are carrying on a multiplicity of suits against divers citizens of the United States as alleged infringers of said patents.

And that the amount involved in this action exceeds $10,000.

XI. Your orator is advised that no suit or action can be instituted or prosecuted by any private citizen to determine whether the said patents, or either of them, were fraudulently or unjustly obtained as against your orator, or whether the same, or either of them, should be vacated and declared null and void as against the people of the United States, or should be reformed so as to grant such exclusive rights only as the said Alexander Graham Bell was lawfully entitled to receive from your orator at the times when he applied for the patents aforesaid, respectively; and your orator is advised that it is the right and the duty of your orator to submit its case in the premises to the judicial department of the Government of the people of the United States, to the end that, after due hearing of the parties in interest, and in the lawful and orderly course of the administration of judicial remedies by courts of the United States having jurisdiction in equity, it may be adjudicated by judicial decree, binding as well your orator as the said Alexander Graham Bell and his assigns, whether or not the said patents have been issued by fraud, accident, or mistake, or are for any other reasons void and voidable, and should be wholly or in part canceled, reformed or limited.

In consideration whereof, and inasmuch as your orator inadvertently, and by mistake induced, caused, effected, and brought about by the frauds, concealments, imposition, and false suggestions aforesaid, signed, sealed, and delivered said letters patent in error as aforesaid; and inasmuch as said letters patent now still remain of record in your orator's Patent Office, appearing on the face thereof to be valid in form; and inasmuch as the original thereof is out of the hands of your orator, and was wrongfully and in error and mistake delivered to the said defendant, Alexander Graham Bell, and has by him been transferred to the possession of the said defendants, the American Bell Telephone Company, your orator is remediless in the premises under the rules of the common law, and can only have relief in this form of proceeding.

XII. To the end, therefore, that the said defendant, the American Bell Telephone Company, and the said other defendant companies, and the said defendant, Alexander Graham Bell, if he elect to appear herein, may, if they can, show why your orator should not have the relief herein and hereby prayed for, your orator prays that the said defendants may be required to full and perfect answer to the premises, in writing, make, the oath of said defendants to said answer being hereby expressly waived.

And your orator further prays, the premises considered, and due and regular proceedings had as prescribed in the rules and regulations governing this honorable court in proceedings in equity in like causes, your honors will adjudge and decree that the said two supposed patents described and set forth in this bill of complaint, being patents of the United States, the one, No. 174465, bearing date March 7, 1876, granted to Alexander Graham Bell, for alleged new and useful improvements in telegraphy (as stated and set forth on the face thereof), and the other, numbered 186787, bearing date January 30, 1877, granted to Alexander Graham Bell, for alleged new and useful improvements in electric telegraphy, are now, and they, and each of them, at all times since the date of the sealing and delivery thereof, has, and have been, null and void, and of no effect.

That said patents were, and each of them was, wrongfully procured to be issued by means of fraud, false suggestion, concealment, and wrong on the part of the said Alexander Bell, the grantee named in said patents, respectively, and that there is nothing in said patents, or either of them, named, described, contained, or disclosed, or in any manner set forth, either in said specifications or in said claims, for or by reason of which the said letters patent, or either of them, could have been lawfully granted, sealed, and delivered to the said defendant Bell, as relating to or securing to him in any manner any monopoly of any patentable invention or discovery whatever, and that the said Bell, and all other persons or corporations who at any time had, or pretended to have, any right, title, or interest in and to said patents, or either of them, or any grant or feature thereof or therein, have at all times known and had full knowledge of the premises and of the defects and nullities hereinbefore set forth and alleged in this bill of complaint, and at all times ought to have known, and did know, that said patents, and each of them, is and are, and at all times has and have been, null and void and of no effect.

And that your honors further decree that the said patents, and each of them, be in all things recalled, repealed, and decreed absolutely null, and that the record thereof, and of each of them, as the same remains and exists in the Patent Office of the United States, or in any of the archives of the United States, be in all things expunged, erased, and obliterated, and that your orator and all the people of the United States be in all things restored and reinstated, as near as may be, to the actual condition and state existing prior to the inception and execution of the said scheme of the said Bell to unjustly obtain the issue and delivery to him of said wrongfully obtained letters patent.

That your honors make such further and other order and decree, and take all such just and proper proceedings, as shall compel the said defendant, the American Bell Telephone Company, and the said other defendants, to surrender and deliver to this honorable court, to be canceled, the said original letters patent delivered to the said Bell, and each of them, in order that the seal of the Patent Office thereon may be removed or destroyed, or said letters patent, and each of them, otherwise rendered void and of no value as evidence of any supposed grant or right whatever.

And your orator prays that if this honorable court shall determine that the said patents are not wholly void, and not deserving to be wholly repealed, but that they are, or either of them is, void and repealable in part, that then a decree be made repealing only such part or parts of the same as the court shall deem to be void and repealable, and that the said patents, and each of them, be treated as contracts, and be reformed, limited, and modified as in equity and good conscience they ought to be.

And that your honors further grant and allow to your orator the most gracious writ of injunction, directed to the said defendants, each, every, and all of them, perpetually prohibiting, restraining, and enjoining them, and each and every one of them, their several agents, solicitors, attorneys, workmen, and servants, from in any manner setting up any pretense of right or claim under and by virtue of said supposed letters patent, or either of them, or of any matter or of any thing therein contained, and from alleging the same in any court within the United States as evidence or pretended evidence of any grant, right, or privilege conferred upon the said Alexander Graham Bell, or any of his assignees, or the American Bell Telephone Company, or any of the said defendants, in any judicial proceedings, bill, answer, plea, or issue made or pleaded in any court in the land.

And may it please your honors to also grant unto your orator such other and further relief in the premises as the nature of the case may require and as to your honors may seem meet and just, and to the end that your orator in all things may be relieved in the premises according to equity and good conscience.

And may it please your honors also to grant unto your orator the most gracious writ of subpoena of the United States of America, to be directed to the said American Bell Telephone Company, the said Alexander Graham Bell, and the other defendants hereinbefore named, and to any confederate or confederates when discovered, therein and thereby commanding them, and each of them, at a certain day, under a certain penalty therein specified, personally to be and appear before your honors in this honorable court, and then and there to answer all and singular the premises, and stand to and abide such order and decree herein as to your honors shall seem meet and just and agreeable to equity and good conscience, and to grant to your orator any other lawful and appropriate process or orders of publication to effect the appearance of said defendants, or any or either of them.

And your orator will ever pray, &c.

Letter from Gardiner G. Hubbard.

Hon. C. E. BOYLE,

Chairman of the Telephone Investigating Committee, Washington, D. C.:

DEAR SIR: I can best answer your letter and questions by giving you a history of the matters you inquire about.

In 1874 Mr. Bell was working at a system of harmonic multiple telegraphy, in which he had made some progress. He had no means, and Thomas Sanders and myself (being his intimate friends) agreed that we would advance the money needed for experimenting, taking out patents, and developing the invention, and that we three should own in common all the patents that he might take out relating to said inventions. We did not know whether or not he would ever succeed in inventing anything practically useful, though we believed he would. Our arrangement did not contemplate a speaking telephone, though I believe Mr. Bell had then some ideas on the subject. In the course of these experiments a speaking telephone was made, and it was concluded that it fairly belonged to the three. It was patented March 7, 1876. About a year was spent in improving the apparatus and determining the best form for commercial use. Mr. Bell made many public exhibitions in Salem, Boston, Cambridge, Providence, New York, and at the Centennial Exhibition in July, 1876. In the spring of 1877 we began to put out telephones for commercial use. The first was on a line from the office of Stone & Downer, State St., Boston, to the house of one of the members of the firm in Somerville.

In the summer of 1877 a conveyance of the titles of the patents was made to me as trustee, and I executed papers stating that I held the patents and all the other property in the business in trust for the holders of the shares; that there were 5,000 such shares, and that A. B. was the holder of a specified number of them.

The shareholders of this association, called the Bell Telephone Company, were myself, my brother, Mrs. Alexander Graham Bell (who was my daughter), Mr. Bell, Mr. Sanders, and Mr. Thomas Watson.

Mr. Watson was the machinist who had assisted Mr. Bell in his work, to whom we had given a one-tenth interest, in partial compensation for his services. No capital was named, as it was not an incorporated company. The money which was paid in was not paid in as a stock subscription, but Mr. Sanders and I furnished all the money that was needed, both for original experiments that I have spoken of and to start the business, except that my brother received a few shares in payment for professional services. I do not know exactly how much we furnished, but it was upwards of $50,000.

I cannot tell the amount we paid for a call bell. We made a great many experiments to get one that would meet the necessities of the case, and found unexpected difficulty in getting one that satisfied us. I was mistaken in saying $50,000, as we did not spend so much upon the bell alone. All the money we expended was paid out to strangers, and none of it was paid to ourselves, excepting a salary to Mr. Watson, and to the best of my recollection there was no royalty or other payment of money, or none of great importance. Up to this time no money had been paid in except by Mr. Sanders and myself.

I think this answers your first, second, third, eighteenth, and nineteenth questions.

After the business had grown, we determined that it should be transferred to a corporation.

There was first formed the New England Telephone Company in the beginning of 1878, to carry on the business in New England. The New England company was a corporation formed under the laws of Massachusetts, and had a share capital of $200,000.

In the summer and fall of '78 the Bell Telephone Company was formed under the laws of Massachusetts, with a share capital of $450,000, for the rest of the United States.

These companies bought from the old association the two Bell patents, the right to all Mr. Bell's future inventions in the same line, some other patents, and all the telephones, property, business, good-will, and other assets of the association. The capital of these two companies added together was $650,000. Of this, the original holders of the patents (that is, Mr. and Mrs. Bell, Mr. Sanders, Mr. Watson, my brother, and myself, and our families) received $400,000, in shares, and I conveyed the patents held by me in trust. The other $250,000 of stock became the property of some gentlemen who had arranged to put in, and did actually put in, $100,000 in cash. By midsummer of 1878 the patent was over two years old, and there were in use, bearing royalties, about 10,000 telephones.

This represents the actual transaction between the parties.

As a matter of form in organizing the company, the property of the association was put into the two companies at $550,000, and the other $100,000 of stock sold for cash; but in order to induce the purchasers to make this arrangement the old associates gave them also $150,000 in stock. This valuation ($550,000) was believed to be the actual fair value of the property turned over. Under the laws of Massachusetts the capital of a corporation must be paid in either in actual cash or in property at its actual value. This law was complied with, and in each case the valuation of the property was fixed by the commissioner of corporations of the State of Massachusetts, as required by law.

The new stockholders were Hon. Chas. S. Bradley, of Providence (formerly chief justice of Rhode Island, and then a practicing lawyer), and his family and friends, about thirty persons in all.

I think this answers the fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth questions.

In the beginning of 1879 the business had increased so rapidly that more cash was needed. In order to obtain it the National Bell Telephone Company was organized with a capital of $850,000. It purchased all the property of the Bell Telephone Company and the New England Telephone Company, and the owners and stockholders of these companies received for these properties $650,000 in shares. The remaining $200,000 of stock was sold from time to time for cash and actually realized more than $400,000. By which I mean that those who bought this stock paid into the treasury of the company upwards of $400,000 in cash, to remain in the treasury and be used for the general purposes of the corporation.

When the properties (which at that time included the Bell patents, the Blake transmitter patents, and a considerable number of other patents relating to telephones, bells, switches, &c., and which also included all the assets of the company, such as telephones, lines, franchises, cash, &c.) were turned over to the National company, they were considered to be intrinsically worth the sum I have named, viz., $650,000, and the price at which they were put in was examined by the Massachusetts commissioner of corporations, under the law I have referred to, and decided by him to represent that value. At this time the business was well established, extensive, and earning money. There were about 30,000 telephones owned by the company and in actual commercial use, earning royalties.

The gentlemen who bought new shares were chiefly Mr. William H. Forbes (who became president) Messrs. Lee and Higginson (bankers, of Boston), and their friends.

Of the stock in this company, Mr. Sanders, Mrs. Bell, and myself and our families had, in the way I have mentioned, received for our original ownership of the Bell patents, and the money we had ourselves put in, 4,000 shares. All the rest, to wit, 4,500 shares of stock, was held by gentlemen who had paid in cash for it, and the amount of cash actually paid in by all was over $575,000.

By the spring of 1880 the business had become firmly established, was growing fast, and needed a great deal more capital. A contest against Elisha Gray and the Western Union Company, known as the "Dowd" suit, had come to an end, and the stockholders in the company, and those who knew of it, felt that the examination of the patent made by these opponents and their submission to it authorized us to believe that the patent was valid for all that we claimed for it.

We then determined that the property should be sold to another corporation in such a way that a large amount of cash could be added. The legislature of Massachusetts passed a special act (March 19, 1880) authorizing us to organize under the general laws with a capital of $10,000,000.

Before this organization was effected, and before the sale to this new company was made, the property of the previous company (the National Bell) had greatly increased in value (the stock had sold as high as $1,000, on the stock exchange), at such a rate and in such a way that the stockholders of the old company actually received six shares of the new stock for one of the old. The property was on the face of the papers put in at a somewhat higher valuation, but that valuation was less than the market value of the property as shown by the sales of stock in the stock exchange and was approved by the commissioner of corporations as not exceeding its actual value. At the date of that valuation and sale the company owned about 90,000 telephones in actual use earning royalties.

In this new company (the American Bell) the 4,000 shares originally held by Mr. Sanders, Mrs. Bell, and myself, as representing the original partners and owners of the Bell patents, were increased six times, that is to $2,400,000 of stock, or in other words, that was the amount which we received for our original ownership and all the money which we put into the first association. On the $10,000,000 capital stock of the American Bell there has been actually paid into that company in cash, $4,900,000, and about 3,000 shares remain to be sold. The property which it purchased from the previous companies also contained the results of about $575,000 of cash actually paid into the various early organizations. Besides this there were all the earnings and interest of the money from the beginning, no dividends (except one small one by the New England company, of an insignificant amount) having been paid.

This stock has been very widely distributed, and is held by nearly 2,000 shareholders. The stock which produced this $4,900,000 was sold to and paid for in part by old stockholders and in part by strangers, none of it was sold at less than par, and part of it has been sold at above par. You will perceive from this that the actual issued capital of the American Bell Telephone Company, $9,700,000, represents upwards of $5,475,000, say about five and a-half millions of cash paid in, the Bell patents for which $2,400,000 has been received in shares by the original partners, which the remainder represents, five years' earnings before dividends were paid, and the general rise in value of all the property of the company.

The amount representing the original partners, in which Mrs. Bell owns the share formerly belonging to her husband, Mr. Bell, is $2,400,000, and her interest would be, if she had never disposed of any, $800,000.

I think this answers questions ten, eleven, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, and sixteen.

In my testimony before the committee I stated that the Bell company was not incorporated, but was a joint stock company. By reference to these answers it will appear that there were two Bell companies, the first a joint stock company, the second an incorporated company. When I gave my evidence I had forgotten the existence of the second company.

The questions sent to me by the chairman were forwarded by me to Mr. Forbes, the president of the American Bell Telephone Company, and he caused these answers to be prepared from the original papers and books.

These answers, to the best of my knowledge and belief, are correct.

GARDINER G. HUBBARD.

WASHINGTON, May 20, 1886.

The committee then adjourned to meet again upon the call of the chairman, to prepare their report to the House of Representatives.
